In the contest between the Harvard and the Oxford crews, August 27, the latter won the victory. The race began at 14 minutes 6; seconds after 5 o'clock, and lasted 22 minutes and 40; seconds. It would give us the greatest pleasure, of course, to be able to announce a different result. But next to the pleasure of claiming a victory is that of yielding the praise to our rival.

But though we have to chronicle a defeat for the Harvard crew, it is not a diagraceful defeat. The gain of less than two boat-lengths in four and one-quarter miles—or, if we consider time, the gain of six seconds in thirteen hundred and sixty and a half seconds, while sufficiently de-sixty and a half seconds, while sufficiently deciding the contest, affords no basis for extrava-gant exultation on the part of the victors. The Harvards had the choice of position, and they took the outside of the semicircle. The boats started at 5 o'clock 14 minutes 6; seconds

PRINCE ARTHUR, OF ENGLAND .- (PROTOGRAPHED BY W. NOTHAN, MOSTREAL.)

P.M. The Harvards gained the lead from the start, and kept it until passing "Chiswick Ais," two and a half miles from the starting-point. From this stage onward the Oxfords gained. We had before the race made arrangements to give the best possible illustrations of so interest-ing an event. We accordingly had selected views of the most critical points along the Thames ho-tween Potney and Mortlake. Two of these views —Hammersmith Bridge and Chiswick—we give on vace 585.

on page 585.

The boats have been put in to correspond to the telegraphic account, which was received in New York several hours before the time (in Lon-

New York several hours before the time (in London) set for the race.

The Harvard crew used the Ealsorr boat, which they had brought with them from America. So that the rivalry was not simply one between two crews and two distinctive styles of rowing, but also between the boats used.

At all the principal points along the river, from the starting-point to the goal—at Putney, Hammersmith, Chiswick, Barnes, and Mortlake—the banks were lined with spectators, wearing either the Oxford or the Harvard colors. It is believed that no crowd so immense ever before gathered on the banks of the Thames. on the banks of the Thames.

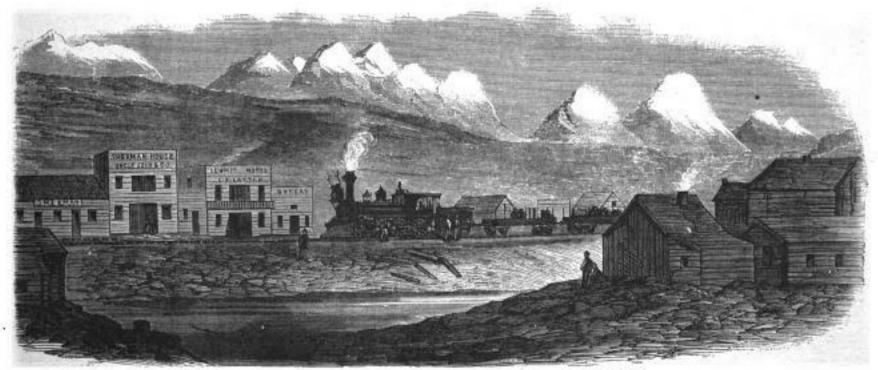

We gave last week portraits of both the Ox-ford and Harvard crews. The crews, as we gave them, were those that contested the race. Fax and Lyman remained as substitutes for Bass and Rack in the Harvard crew.

We will not be so ungracious as to add any thing to excuse our defeat, or expatiate upon the disadvantages under which the Harvard crew habored. A better knowledge of the Thames, or the adoption of their own style of rowing without also might have changed the result. So also might any one, probably, of one hundred things that might be mentioned. We were besten, and acknowledge our defeat.

The first telegraphic dispatches indicated that the Oxford crew reached Mortlake three or four boat-lengths ahead. But a later dispatch informs us that the judge at Mortlake decides that the bost-lengths ahead. But a later dispatch informs us that the judge at Mortlake decides that the actual difference was but one length and a half. The time of the race, according to the Trilense correspondent, was 22 minutes 20% seconds, as taken by Frodesta's chronograph, registering fifths of seconds. The Oxford crew were in perfect condition, and after the race they rowed back to Putney, keeping pace with the Press steamer. After the race the two crews dined at Mortlake with Mr. Phillips, who had invited a large party to meet them. During the dinner the Oxford men, in their speeches, said that the race was, if not the hardest, at least as hard, as any they had ever contested, and praised the pluck and work of the Harvard men.

The London Times, in its comments, said that the Harvards failed in a most pardonable point—the steering; but added, that the ground lost by the coxswain was not enough to account for the distance between the boats at the end of the race.

The race was well contested, and the Harvard crew met with perfectly fair play. Were the Oxford men to repeat the contest on American waters they would meet with a similar reception.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD-SHERMAN STATION, WYOMING TERRITORY.

DEOUGHT.

The can uprises, large and red,

The dawn is lost in a sultry glow;
Like a fi-mace roof is the beaven o'erhead,
Like tinder the thirsty earth below;
Hushed is the grateful voice of streams,

The famished fountains and brooks are dry;
And day by day do the burning beams

Four from the pittless sky.

All things languish and fade and pine;
Buds are withered before they bloom;
The blighted leaves of the window-vine.
Chase each other about the room;
Vapors gather, then melt in light;
Rain clouds possible, then born away;
And all hearts faint as the sultry night.
Follows the sultry day.

Sally adown the orchard lines

The apples shrivel and shrink and fall;
The cannty clusters among the vines

Wilt, half-sipe, on the scorching wall;
The peaches perish before their prime,
The trim espaliers are bare and lorn;
Dry and doad, as in winter time,
Stand the ranks of the carling corn.

No longer the cool and gurgling songs
Of warblers freshen the lifeless air;
The simesering noise of the insect through Sounds incessantly every where;
The ringing rasp of the locust comes Pierring the sense like a wedge of sound;
The wasp from his next in the gable hums,
And the cricket shrills from the ground.

The hard dry gras-hopper, snugly hid,
Grates his sharpest and thinks be sings;
The custanets of the ketydid
Chime with the rattle of sharded wings;
Blandering, beaming, the beetles pass,
While hats flit silent as daylight dies;
And loud in the tangles of seedy grass
The prevish cut-bird cries.

Open-billed, with his wings a-droop,
The wren sits silent, and seeks no more
The half-built nest in the sunny stoop,
Or the children's crumbs by the open door;
Recelling with dend and brittle stalks
The paths of the garden are thick with dust;
And the rows of flower beds down the walks
Are baked to an ashy crust.

Purched to blackness the roses die, Nobled of sweetness and form and bue; Vainly the languid butterfly Seeks, as of old, their garnered dew; Vain the humming-hird's sweet pursuit; The honey-bee's quest is sparely crowned; lingly the mole that grows a root in his cool nest underground!

The fields all burren and bure and brown,
The fields all burren and bure and brown,
The rity's suffering multitudes,
The purching roofs of the thirsty town,
The berds which small at the yellow grass,
The loaves which open their palms in value,
The rout that mirrors a sky like brase—
All these do pray for rain.

FLORENCE PERCY.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1869.

A LAUGHING POLITICAL PULOSOPHER.

12 Vell, action of the late Democratic Conventhe in Massachusetts is but another proof . I the party has no common principle, exogt - - sition to the Republicans, and no natimes a dey whatever to prepose. In Vir-. ... at Tennessee the Democrats vote for suffrage; in Pennsylvania they denounce In (Ois they demand that the bonds shall h mid in greenbacks; in fown they insist upon in same letter of the contract. In California they declare for a white man's government, and in Messachasetts they sequieses in results. Wash the Republicans they every where desense extravagance and demand economy, Indeed, whatever may be said of the Repubdem justy, however justly it may be reproachof he the unworthy members who always folhas success, and for such faults of administrato as may be fairly charged upon it, it is weeky reasonable to suppose that the pubin weifare would be promoted by the success of are opposition which has no common principle

The Democratic candidates further illustrate the condition of the party. In Pennsylvania the basner-benrer is Mr. Asa Packer, a gentlemen of whom it is actually impossible to say may thing but that he is very rich, and belongs to the Basnbon using of the party. In Ohio, Mr. Presugarous is a gentlemen of education and ability, an original Secessionist, and the representative of the repudiating policy in timence. In Massachusetts, Mr. Jous Quisery Arassi is a gentlemen also of education and ability, who can not conveal his sense of the experience comedy of his position; a langhing Republican of vesterday, the Democratic guide, philosopher, and friend of to-day. A steady Republican and earnest supporter of the war, Mr. Anasa differed with his party upon the policy of reconstruction; and with no respect for the Democratic party, or faith in its doctrines, but apparently supposing that not to approve the Republican policy is necessarily to become a Democrat, upon the principle that what is not whise must be black, he suddenly makes his bow as "the rising young Democratic statesman of New England," telling his followers that if they would win the battle their arms must have new locks, stocks, and barrels.

A. C. C.

The situation is evidently as amusing to Mr. Anams as to every body else. It is as if our excellent and honorable friend, Mr. Woonroup, the late Lieutenant-Governor of New York, should suddenly appear as the chief sachem of Tammany, directing the serene Mr. Tildes and his fellow-statesmen, Sweeker, TWEED, and HALL, what they must do to be To complete the entertainment at the Massachusetts Convention, Mr. WOODBURT, the President, announced that the Democratic party, the party of JAMES M. MASON, JEFFER-SON DAVIS, and WADE HAMPTON, the party whose chief leaders fought desperately to over throw the government in order to perpetuate and extend human alarery, "had always but-tled for human rights." No one enjoys a joke more than Mr. ADAMS, and we can fancy the smile upon his face as he listened to this daring flight, just as he was about to begin his own speech by telling his new pupils that they must blot their record as fast as possible. Mr. Anaus's vote will probably be larger

Mr. Anama's vote will probably be larger in proportion than usual because of the prohibitory movement. In his speech he evaded meeting this question fairly; and the best part of his remarks was the shrewd satire upon the vituperative style of the temperance advocates. Mr. Anams said that the prohibitory law is an invasion of personal liberty; but whether it be not one of the legitimate invasions of that liberty for the common welfare, which is the ground upon which its friends place its justification, he did not say, but,

"Smiling, put the question by."

There is no doubt, however, that the langhing Republican gave the Democratic party very sound advice. If it would prosper, it must stop talking about its battling for human rights to a generation which has won the victory of human rights in the teeth of Democratic ballots and Democratic bullets. It must prove its honorable acceptance of the situation. It must present some policy that will lighten the financial burden of the nation more speedily. It must cradicate its inhuman and bloody traditions from the memory of the American people; and it must cense to attract to its support the ignorant and the vicious. When it has done all these things, and in consequence nominates thereful Republicans like Mr. Adams, the Democratic party may reasonably expect some favor from the country.

IS CUBA IN THE MARKET?

"RELIANCE authority" is very busy with the Cubon question, and the English and French papers are disclaiming in advance any jealousy of the new bond which may be formed between Cuba and the United States. Meanwhile the Albany Aryus naïvely suggests that independence is one thing and annexation another. How different is evident from the unanimous resolution of the revolutionary Congress at Sibancon on the 13th of April, General Cuspenus presiding, that Cuba is fighting for independence of Spain and annexation to the United States. The most persistent and really interested workers for the Cuban cause in this country aim at annexation through independence. The proposal of the purchase of the island is transparent. The guarantee of Cubar bonds is merely the form of a mortgage. If any such armagement as is spoken of were made with Spain, does any body suppose the interest would be paid by Cuba? We should fulfill our guar-antoe, and to whom and to what should we look for reimbursement? General CESPEDER, who is the Revolutionary chief, declares for annexation, and the lenders unanimously approve, that look like an independent Cuba? If the proposition has been made to the Spanish Government by ours that Cuba shall buy itself for a certain sum, it is merely an offer of the United States to buy the island for that precise price.

How much, then, is it worth while for us to pay for Cuba and Porto Rico? What advantage will it be to this country to acquire two millions of a foreign race speaking a foreign tongne, a third of whom are slaves just emancipated? Will such an increase be chean at ten millions of dollars? Is it necessarily an advantage to a nation to absorb a tropical state which seeks the Union because it is unable to govern itself? These are inevitable questions, although the annexation may be no less inevitable. It is undeniable that the hold of Spain upon her colony is so relaxed that it ean hardly again be established. Six months ago one of the shrewdest and most conservative of European diplomatists said that Spain had lost Cuba. La France, a French journal, says that the sale is the only way for Spain to save some fragments of the wreck. The colonial tenure is an inevitable question to every politically roused and reflecting nation, and the disturbances in Spain will gradually develop a party of separation there. There is as yet, however, as we write, no authentic account either of a proposal from the United States or of its consideration by Spain; and until something is known, it must be conceded to be extremely doubtful whether Spain is likely to renounce her traditions, and consequently whether the Cuban revolution will not, like the South American revolt of fifty years ago, amoulder indefinitely unless we should interfere.

If the United States should offer to mediate and the offer were rejected, public opinion would undoubtedly soon afterward demand that belligerent rights should be conceded to the Cubans, followed in due time by recognition. If the offer were accepted, and a sale proposed upon the terms already published, which should not be agreeable to Spain, the result would be the same. If the terms were agreeable, however, we should virtually buy Cuba. If not, the recognition of Cuban belligerence or independence would naturally occasion complications which would lead to war, a result in every way undesirable, for it would be a war in which we should be the vulnerable combatant. It is in this view that the policy of the Administration has been so sagnetions. It has refrained from choosing that time to insalt Spain in which Spain most appealed to the sympathy of all generous bearts, but a time in which also her power of mischief is evident. And in the spirit of that policy the Administration should persevers. Neither deluding Cuba nor defying Spain, conscious that there is no general interest in the country upon the subject, and that the acquisition of the island is not an advantage, however unavoidable, we trust that the Administration will continue to respect the best Amer ican traditions, and to justify American good faith and sagacity.

EAST INDIAN COTTON.

TRAY English manufacturers should feel and express a lively interest in the quantity and quality of the great staple received from the British empire in the East is natural enough, and that we on this side of the Atlantic should attentively observe the extraordinary efforts which the government of India is making to increase the cotton export is not surprising. There are, however, one or two facts which are apt to be overlooked by those writing of the probable effects on American industry of the success or failure of the East Indian experiments.

In the first place, whatever may be the total amount of cotton raised on the plains of Hindostan in any one year, even if it were 6,000,000 of bales, there is a native population in that and adjacent countries capable of absorbing the entire quantity: 200,000,000 of people, clothed solely in cotton, for the most part fabricated in their own primitive looms.

In the second place, the better price the Indian ryot receives for his cotton the more money he is able to spend on his own clothing, thus increasing the demand for cotton on account of home consumption.

In the third place, after experiments extending over thirty years, all authorities concede that Indian cotton can not be raised in any quantity to compete with American in length and strength of staple.

In the fourth place, however the production of India and America, Egypt and Brazil, may increase, the demand for cotton to supply the ever-increasing number of spindles and looms more than keeps pace with the product of the raw material.

It may be stated in general terms that the Indian cotton crop is raised on farms varying in extent from three to twenty acres, the cultivators of which are mostly very poor, and gen erally in debt to the village shroff (or banker), to whom the cotton is mortgaged so soon as sown. Our space will not admit of entering into a detail of the effects of such a state of things. Formerly the result was evident in the dirty condition of the product when offered for sale in the market of Bombay. This evil was the first seriously taken in hand by the government. Inspectors were appointed with power to scize, confiscate, and burn all cotton unfitted for export by reason of excessive dirt or willful negligence in the removal of the wool from the seed. This supervision, with the partial introduction of the American saw-gin, in ten years, from 1850 to 1860, raised the price of the best Surat (Dhollerah) from 31d. and 4d. per pound to 5d, and 6d, per pound in the Liverpool mar-ket. Our war, and the consequent scarcity, gave an immense impetus to the Indian cotton trade, and Dhollerah cotton was sold in 1864 as high as 24d. per pound. This enhanced value must have greatly benefited the Hindoo farmer, who, with such inducement before him, in succeeding years would naturally sow an increased brendth of land with the now valuable crop, the reasons for this increased domand being yet utterly unintelligible to him. But in two years, 1866 and 1867, his cotton had fallen in value sixty per cent., from causes as completely beyond his comprehension as those of its sudden rise. He found his viscous of wealth dissipated; the extra pair of bullocks his prosperity had induced him to buy on credit unpaid for; and he returned to the sowing of jowarree and linseed, more firmly clutched than ever in the vampire embrace of the village usurer.

This is the reason that the East Indian cotton crop does not keep pace with the demand. The cultivators are poor and ignorant. They can only comprehend that their cotton is subject to fluctuations over which they have no control, and that when sowing it they have no data to guide them as to its probable value at maturity. The fall of one cent per pound is a very serious matter to a farmer of five acres, four of which he has planted with cotton, mostgaging in April, when prices ruled high, to resp in November for a market that had fallen thirty to fifty per cent. It is true that railways and good macadamized roads to the interior have brought, as a recent writer says, "the ryot face to face with the foreign dealer;" but what good does that face do the farmer if the hand does not hold the money which the needy farmer was led to expect for his crop?

All that legislative enactments, model farma, improved seed, and improved apparatus for cleaning and haling can do has been done, and the success, so far as the increased value of the crops is concerned, is very great. Twenty years ago New Orleans cotton commanded fifty per cent. higher price than the best samples of Surat. In June of this year the quotations in Liverpool were: New Orleans Middling, 11 id. per pound.—a difference of only sixteen per cent.

This rise in the value of Indian cotton may be attributed, apart from the increased cleanliness of the wool, to the fact that during the "famine" tens of thousands, probably millions, of spindles were altered to suit the short fibre of the Indian plant, and manufacturers, constantly excited with hopes of an increased Indian supply, have more and more directed their mechanical ingenuity to the use of it in their looms.

After all, the English would appear to be very short-eighted in their attempts to foster the Indian cotton trade at the expense of their cotton trade with this country. It is universally known that for every pound of Surat landed in Liverpool an equivalent in hard cash must be sent to India, while imports from the United States are paid by exports of manufactured articles. During the cotton famine years the balance of trade with India amounted to seventy-five millions of dollars in gold annually, since then the average drain from England has been nearly fifty millions of dollars. It is all very well for individual manufacturers to obtain cotton a cent or two per pound cheaper from one country than another, but if this accommo-dation to one class is to be accompanied by injury to many others, as must be the case by such continued depletion of the precious metals, we should think that some political economist might be found to warn his countrymen of the suicidal nature of the policy now pursued,

The truth is, English manufacturers have an insane belief in the possibility of supplying the two hundred millions of Hindoos with "domestics," "long cloth," and "mull-mulls" woven in England from cotton raised in India. For more than forty years the English manufacturer has had the Indian market open to him, and with what result? To-day England does not send to India sufficient cotton cloth to make a turban for every wearer of that head-dress. The total English exports to India are £29,-000,000 sterling, and that is only equivalent to one half-dollar for each inhabitant. A total change must come over the natives before this is much increased.

What of English manufacture does a Hindoo farmer require? He does not use knives or forks or spoons. He would not know what to do with a pin. He does not wear boots or shoes. A stove would in all probability be taken as the model of a Christian church. Brummagem razor is about the only thing that would sell on the plains of Hindostan, and a market might be found for one in every large village. The Hindoos are utterly beyond the temptations of trade. They have no wants beyoud food, clothing, and shelter; and of these clothing is the one thing possible to be supplied by their English masters; and that more of this is not supplied the manufacturers of Manchester have themselves to thank. Their own dishonesty is the stumbling-block in their path. Common native-made cloth may be rough and dirty in appearance, but it is honestly made and will so wear. English cloth looks better, but "won't wash." The lime or chalk with which it is finished does not stand the daily ablutions of the Hindoos, who, having on an average about twenty-four dollars to find food and raiment for a whole year, are naturally rather particular about the serviceable nature of the cloth they purchase.

Before a revolution occurs in Hindoo nature and consequent habits new markets will have opened all over the globe, and whether Indian cotton can ever fully compete with American will be—indeed now is—a question of no moment to us as a nation. We shall always find ready purchasers for every pound of cotton wa can raise, even were the amount increased five-

LADY BYRON'S STORY.

SINCE "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Mrs. Srown has written nothing that has made so great a sensation as her late article upon the separation of Lord and Lady Bynos. It has been discussed with as much feeling as the event itself when it occurred; and from the tone of many of the remarks upon the subject it might be supposed that Mrs. Srown had been guilty of e very grave offense in making public Lady Byrox's statement-as if the truth, however shocking, must not be told of Lord Bynon because he was a great poet and has been long

Lord BYRON, one of the most worthless and unprincipled of men, always asserted that he did not know the cause of the separation. He did not hesitate to overwhelm his wife with satire and ridicule before the world. No man with the least pretense to the character of a gentleman and man of honor was ever guilty of more wanton and disgraceful conduct toward a silent and defenseless woman, and she his wife, But her very silence was imputed to her as a crime. Not to contradict the "ten or twenty" different explanations that MACAULAY says were offered, and which bore heavily upon BYRON, was declared to be malignant persecution upon her part, Was it also malignant persecution to endure, in the same silence, his sneers and calumnies?

Having been reviled for keeping silence, Lady Byzon is now reviled for speaking. It was cold-hearted malies not to speak before; it is odious slander or insanity to speak now. The fact is, that if her story be true her silence during the life of Lord Byron and Mrs, LEIGH was the purest humanity; and it will be very difficult to disprove the story of that one of the two most interested persons whose word must necessarily be preferred to that of the other. And in saying her story we do not necessarily mean Mrs. STOWE's version of it-the general accuracy of which, however, we have no reason to question, for the facts of Lady Bynox's representation were written by Mrs. Srows from memoranda; but we mean the reason that Lady Bynos gives for the separation. Evidently this is not now told for the first time, although it is now first made universally public. Mrs. Stown says it has been long known to many persons in England. Dr. LUSHINGTON, of course, knew it. The writer of an article in the Temple Bar Magszine for June knew it. The editor of the Na rios says that he heard it differently told ten years ago. And we know it to have been told at a literary party in Edinburgh more than thirty years ago by a gentleman of some literary distinction. But it was hooted by the company, and the gentleman was judged to have mmitted a great wrong in repeating the etory.

The disclosure is shocking, as that of all enormous guilt is-but there is nothing in it which is essentially improbable; and if the charge were true of any man of his time, of me was it more likely to be true than of BYRON. That Lady BYRON believed it, there can be no doubt, and as little that it was the substance of her statement to Dr. LUSHINGTON; nor is there any doubt that he believed her representations. In his letter to her, written in 1830, he does not say that he qualified his advice by any it's or buts, "When you came to town-in about a formight or perhaps more after my first interview with Lady Nort. [the mother of Lady BYRON -I was for the first time informed by you of facts utterly unknown, as I have no doubt, to Sir Ratru and Lady Nozz. On receiving this additional information my opinion was entirely changed-I considered a reconciliation impossible. I declared my opinion, and added that, if such an idea should be entertained, I could not, either professionally or otherwise, take any part toward effecting it." Here is not the least intimation of doubt. It is evident that Dr. LUBHINGTON believed what Lady Bynon told him; and, as we have said, there can be no doubt that she told him in 1816 what she told Mrs. Srown in That Lady Bynon was deceived is most improbable; for Dr. LUSHINGTON would not have spoken so peremptorily until he had thoroughly cross-questioned her, and satisfied himself that she told the truth. If that truth was the present story, Dr. Lusuinoron's letter disposes of the theories that Lady BYRON was jealons or of failing faculties,

Apart from this, Lady Byron's direct assertion must outweigh her husband's professions that he ardently desired an investigation, and that he had not the least suspicion of the cause of the separation. Lady BYRON's statement fully justifies her silence, and explains the life that Bynox led after leaving England. The chief difficulty in Mrs. Stown's report of the circumstances is, that Lady Brace is represented as living with her husband after she knew the intrigue, and as actually discussing it with him. That she loved him devotedly is unquestionable, and that love suffereth all things is true; but the version that the editor of the Nation heard seems, at least, more probable, that Lady Bynox knew nothing of the until her child was born, and that then she believed her hushand to be deranged; which explains her consultation with Dr. Ball-

LEE, and the light tone of the letter which she wrote after leaving London.

On the other hand, Mrs. STOWE's statement of the reasons why Lady Byron was willing that the truth should be finally known must be received as satisfactory; and, although that was not her object, every honorable mind will be glad that she, who, by the accident of her relations with Lord Byrow, must be always conspicuous so long as his genius enchants the world, will not live in the immortality of ridicule with which that genius had invested her, It is desirable that all the truth should be known even about great men. If Shake-SPEARS had committed a brutal murder nothing could be gained by concealing it; and if the charge were now first made, the weight of the evidence should be regarded rather than the enormity of the accusation, once heard a very distinguished poet rating Mr. Parros soundly for saying in the North Asserious Review that DANIEL WEBSTER Sometimes appeared upon the platform evidently the worse for liquor. But CROMWELL was wiser, who told the painter not to omit the warts in taking his likeness. We should not consider the writer a hyena rooting among graves who should give us a solution of the relation of Swift and Strika as authentic as that which Mrs. Srown has given us of the Bynox sepa-

INDUSTRY AT THE SOUTH.

Upon the whole, the most copious and admirable report of the condition of the cotton culture and cultivators in the Southern States is that just issued by Messrs, LORING & ATkenson, cotton brokers of Boston, who sent several hundred circulars to intelligent cotton planters every where in the South, and who now publish a careful digest of the answers. The report is a neat pamphlet of nearly two handred pages, and it may be very profitably studied as a faithful representation both of facts and feelings.

The general testimony in regard to the cotton culture is, that there must be more and better labor. That is imperative. One correspondent says that Georgia alone could produce two millions of bales. But the colored laborer is now showing the results of slavery. An unnatural system will sooner or later revenge itself. The mortality among the negroes, according to one account, has been at least three hundred per cent, greater since they were made free than before, and it is the general estimate that it takes three freedmen to do the work of one slave. These, of course, are the opinions of those who are probably generally in favor of coerced labor; but there can be little doubt that the colored population is very rapidly reduced by the greater recklessness of living and negligence of disease, which naturally follow emancipation, and by the increased unwillingness to bear children, which is universally remarked. The women, too, are largely withdrawn from field labor, and the shiftlessness and willfulness of those who in a warm climate have been bred in ignorance and degradation, and are suddenly thrown upon themselves, are also apparent with unfortunate consequences. Indeed, there is a general impression upon the part of the writers, evidently with certain Jamaica precedents in their minds, that the negroes will gradually or even rapidly relapse into barbarism,

The truth probably is that, as the worse and weaker part of the laboring population perishes, the necessity of the case will replace it by the most vigorous part of the present stock, and by copious immigration. "The South" is pecul-iarly adapted for the growth of the best cotton in the world. Yet the area now devoted to it is not more in proportion, Mr. EDWARD AT-KINSON tells us, than one square to the whole checker-board. The crop of this year may be 2,500,000 bales, an amount which one State alone might produce. But it is not the character of the laborer alone which must and should change; it is the system of labor. However satisfactory the material result of the slave cotton culture in contrast with the present temporary and experimental and disturbed system, yet slave labor was always most slothful, wasteful, and stationary. With the introduction of free labor the proved conditions and resources of free labor must also be introduced: small farms, improved implements, and intelligent and interested industry. It is among the economical follies of slavery that it can not avail itself of intelligence; and he was an unnecessary cotimist who imagined that men spoiled by being deprived of freedom would, upon regaining it, simultaneously regain all the faculties, sagucities, and impulses of free-dom. When a man's leg has been broken, it is with infinite pain that he puts it again to the ground, even when the bone has knit. But to expect of the just freed slave the work of the freeman is to expect a broken-legged man to run as nimbly as his sound neighbor. Patience is the chief moral element of political and industrial reconstruction.

To adopt a Coolie system would be the reurce of impatience, and therefore unwise. The labor situation at the South springs from coerced labor. To introduce a system of peonage, or modified slavery, by filling the cotton fields with new harbarians would be to prolong the system of vast plantations, of want of machinery, and of all improvements, and to multiply ignorant and degraded labor. In every way this would be intolerable. The testimony of the circular is quite conclusive that intelligent labor upon small farms will harvest the best cotton crop, both in quality and quantity. Nor is negro labor indispensable.

It must be constantly remembered that the great want of the South is not primarily the development of the cotton fields-it is that general intelligence which understands the relations of things, and which sees that schoolhouses, churches, milroads, machinery, and the spirit that fosters these, are essential to the best and increasing cotton crops, Tranquillity and security are the indispensable conditions of industrial improvement, and therefore the general disgust with "politics" expressed in the letters is welcome as a sign that this is becoming generally understood. Persons like WADE HAMPTON and JOHN FORSYTH are the real enemies of large cotton crops; for they promote the agitated condition which deters farmers with brains and capital and improvements and intelligence from occupying the fields which languish for them.

TEXAS.

The mask of "Conservative Republicanism" is pretty well stripped off in Mississippi; and it is now evident that the nomination of Judge DEST, if it should be made, will be morely an attempt of the opponents of the Administration, and of the Republican principles and policy, to obtain control of the State. The case is the same, if not as yet so well understood, in Texas. In that State there are two candidates for Governor. General E. J. Davis is supported by the Republicans and the great body of the Union men. General A. J. Hast-illow is supported by the Democrats and a few Republicans, the hope of the mass of his supporters being to demoralize and destroy the Republican organization.

The platform of the Republicans is firm and sagacious. It accepts heartily the conditions of reconstruction; it pledges the party to the support of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amend ments; it denounces any evasion of the strict obligation of the debt: it recommends the ratifleation of the preposed Constitution because it secures equal civil and political rights; it favers internal improvement and immigration, and cordially confides in the President and in Congress, and especially commends the spirit of Carl Schung's Amnesty resolutions at Chicago. The platform is wholly free from a proscriptive spirit, and is such as every truly intelligent citizen would most heartily appro

General Hamilton stands upon no platform, and represents no principle nor party. He is sustained as the opponent of the organized Administration party; and it is for every man to decide whether it is better for Texas and the Union that those who have so long kept the State in a condition of anarchy shall obtain legal control by his election, or whether the recognized and organized Republicans shall succeed. The prosperts of the Republicans and General Davis are most promising. It is estimated that the registered vote will be about 120,000, of which 70 per cent, may be cast at the election, making 84,000 votes. Divided into sections, it is computed that Western Texas, the home of General Davis, with the German, colored, and Union strength, will give him a majority of 9000. Middle Texas, with 5000 colored majority, will probably give 6000 Ropublican majority. And Eastern Texas may give Hamilton 4000 majority. This calcula-tion concedes in the State 35,000 votes for Hamilton, against 49,000 for Davis. There is no disfranchisement issue in the election, and the unfortunate personal habits of General Hamilton are openly discussed in the papers, While, therefore, all the Democratic votes cast will be for him, it is very doubtful if he polls the full Democratic strength,

In the Galveston Congressional district General W. T. CLARK has been unanimously nominated by the Republicans, and has accepted in a manly, generous, and discreet letter. eral CLARK was the beloved personal friend and chief of staff of General M'PHERSON, and is one of the kind of men who will give a new and better life to his adopted State. He and his friends in Texas, who are trying to secure at the polls what they won in the field, are most worthy the hearty sympathy and material assistance of Republicans every where.

NOTES.

THE World, which exhausted the resources of

THE asmouncement that Mr. G. W. Cuntis will be a regular contributor to the new College Review is a mistake,

THE story which was recently so widely circuthe story which was recently so whelly circulated of the meivil recopition of the President at the office of the District Attorney in New York, upon which the pross sharply commented, and which served "An Old Buchelor" in Harper's Brear as the text of a short sermon upon monners, is wholly unfounded, as the President himself has stated.

THE "Seven Curses of London," by JAMES GREENWOOD, just published by the HARPEES, is a carious and painfully interesting recentling of some of the durkest mysteries of London life, Its facts are very valuable, and they are present-ed graphically and simply.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The Massachusetts State Democratic Convention met at Worcester, August 24, and nonhaded John Quincy Adams for Governor, S. C. Lamb for Lieutenant-Governor, John K. Tarbox for Secretary of State, and J. G. Abbot for Attorney-General. Assacs the resolutions adopted was one denoming the prohibitory lopper law.

It is estimated that the value of boots and shoes manufactured in Massachuse and shoes hibitory liquor law.

It is estimated that the value of boots and shoes manufactured in Massachmeetis the present year wild exceed $24,000,000. The wholesale dealers in Roston are forming a Shoe and Leather Dealers' Exchanges Since January 1 nearly $80,000 cases of goods have been shipped from that city, an excess of fully thirty-three per cent, over the corresponding period last year.

three per conds of the State Department show the following regarding State action on the Pifteenth Amendment to the National Constitution:

Complete Ratification—North Carolina, West Virginia, Massachusetts, Whecomin, Maline, Louisiane, Michigan, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Arkmurae, Cramericat, Florida—12.

Defective Ratification—Kansas, Missouri—2.

Rejected in Delaware and Kentucky—5.

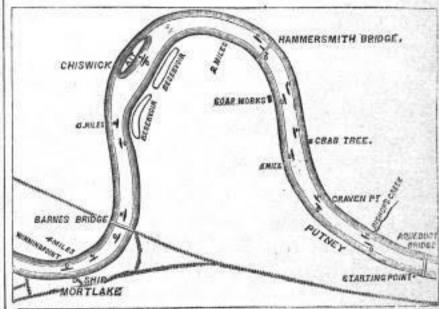

FOREIGN NEWS.

Dunise a violent storm in the harbor at Cronstant, Ruesia, August 18, a monitor broke losse from her anchorage and ran into a screw frigate, sinking her almost fastautly, and drowning sixteen of her creu. Salvatori Patti, the father of Adolina and Carlotta Patti, died in Farls on the 12d of August. A colliery explosion took place a few roles from St. Etterne, France, August 14. Function persons were killed.

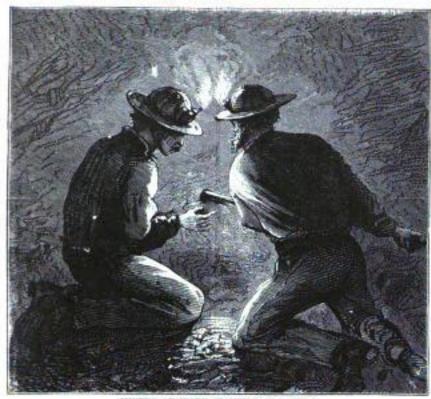

St. Esteron, France, August 24. Purifices persons were killed.

A tologram from Paris, August 25, states that a complexity had been discovered on bound the United States frigate Sabins, now lying in the post of Checkeng. Some of the crew, to revenue themselves us their offices, alternated to set fire to the powder migration, and blow up the ship. They had proceeded so far as to light a few communicating with the magnatic, who discovered the burning fare. It was found that twenty-two enforce were implicated in the piot, not they were put into bross. Seven have since because, demand to death, and hanged at the yard-urn.

A meeting of 900 persons was held in Berlin, August 29, and resolutions were afopted califur for the ampreciation of convents and the expansion of Jentin.

MAP OF THE THAMES, SHOWING THE POSITIONS OF THE OXFORD AND HARVARD BOATS DURING THE RACE FROM PUTNEY TO MORTLAKE.

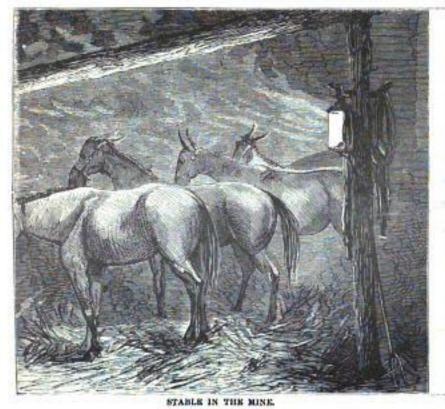

MINERS AT WORK-TAMPING A CHARGE.

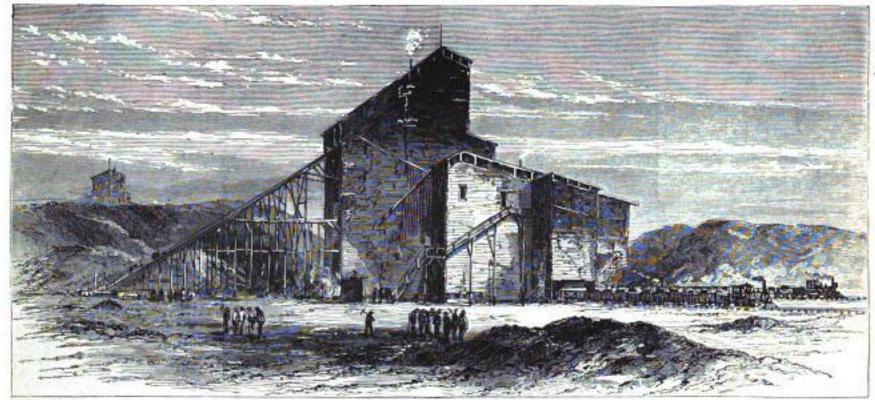

MINERS AT WORK-MINING AND LOADING COAL

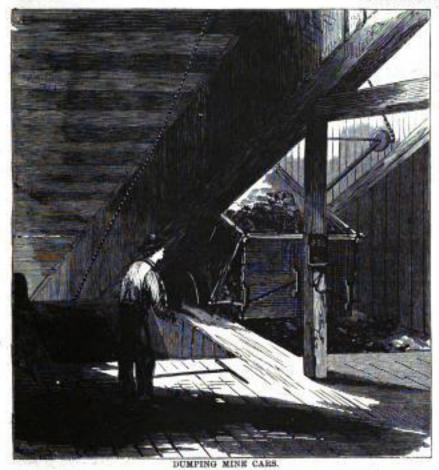

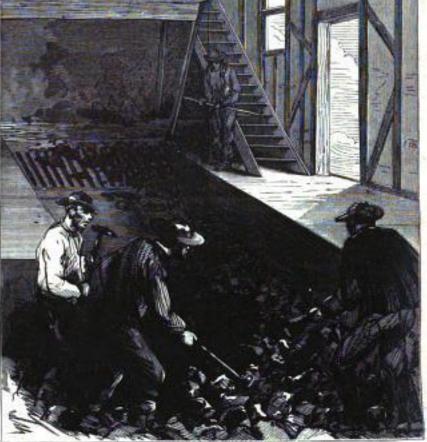

THE COAL-MINES OF PENNSYLVANIA-MINING THE COAL-SECTION BY THEO. R. DAVIS.-[SEE PAGE 583.]

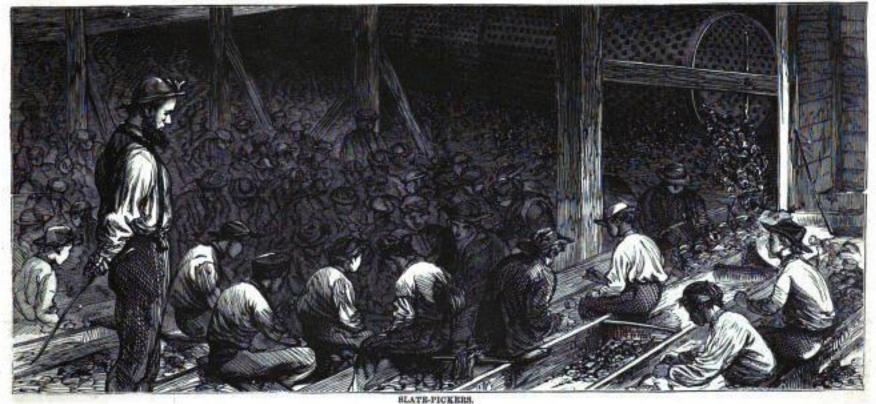

HONEY BROOK BREAKER, No. 4.

SEPARATING THE DIFFERENT SIZES OF COAL

THE COAL-MINES OF PENNSYLVANIA-PREPARING THE COAL FOR THE MARKET, SKETCHED BY THEODORS R. DAVIS, -[See Page 583.]

LALAGE.

- I cocup not keep my secret Any longer to myself;
- I wrote it in a song-box And Inid it on the shelf-
- It lay there many an idle day, I was covered soon with dust: I proved it on my sword-blude,
- Iwas caten by the rust:
- I told is to the zephyr them, He breathed it through the morning, The light leaves rustled in the breeze, find romances scorning;
- I told it to the running brook With many a lover's notion;
- The gay waves laughed it down the stream, And flung it in the ocean.
- I told it to the raven sage; He crooked it to the starling: I ball it to the nightingale; He song it to my darling.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In gibe Books .- Book E.

CHAPTER V.

AN INVOLUNTARY GUEST.

By this time Mrs. Sheardown had enveloped besself and Bubby in water-proof wrappings. Mand Desmond was waiting warmly protected by a thick showl, at the vicer's olbow. Herbert Proves shut and locked the harmstiam. Every one was preparing to depart.
"Vermica!" called the vicar.

Miss Levincourt was still conversing with Mr.

1'lew.
"Veronica!" repeated her father, impatiently, "are you not coming?"

She turned round at the summons, giving her hand in a farewell growp to the doctor as she did

She was very handsome.

The first thing that struck you on looking at her fare was its vivid coloring. Her skin was of a clear, pule, brown tint; and on each smooth check there glowed a rich blash like the heart of a dune most. She had large, dark eyes, fringed mand with thick lashes, and surmounted by semiround with these listics, and surmounted by semi-circular cycleours, black as chony. Her hair was also black, shining, and very abundant. It was dispersed in claborate coils and plaits, which displayed its luxuriance to the full, and was brought down low on the forchead in crisp wayes. Her lips were very rod and her teeth very white. There were defects in the form of her face. But The brilliant eyes, glancing under their arched beauty, so attracted attention to themselves that few observers were dispossionately critical enough to observe that the lower part of the face overledness the upper; that the nose was insignificant; the month so full as to be almost coarse; and the cheeks and chin so rounded as to threaton to lose all comeliness of outline, and to be-rome heavy in middle life. Now, however, at nineteen years of age, Veronica Levincourt was a very beautiful creature. But there was somealyzed by a casual observer as the form and color of it. There was a dissonance in it somewhere. Most women perceived this. Many men did so also. But they perceived it as a person with a good ear, but ignorant of harmony, perceives a falle mote in a chord. Something jars: what he known not. The skilled musician comes and part his tinger on the dissement more.

When Veronica laughed her whole countenance grow harmonious at once. And herein lay the key to the puzzle.

The halatual expression of her face in repose The halifual expression of her face in repose tremed to controllet the brilliant glow of youth and health which made her so strikingly beautiful. The rich gipsy color, the ripe red lips, the speckling eyes, the gleaming teeth, seemed made to tell of light-hearted, abounding, girlish happings.—

But the expression of Verenica's face when she let it full into its habitual lines was ui-rful, sad, cometimes almost sullen.

For the rest, her figure was slight and straight, and she carried herself with an erect and yet casy grace. "Coming, page," said she, enrelessly. And then she gathered about her shoulders a sentlet clock with a bood to it.

"You should have had your shepherd's plaid, Versien," said her father. "That red thing is not nearly warm enough for such an evening as

"th, it is se becoming to Miss Levincourt," said little Miss Turtle, the governess. She and her posids had been watching Veronica unwinkingly all the afternoon, as their custom was. The chair of St. Gildas dispersed. The Sheardones drove away in their little pony-corriage, carrying with them flethert Snowe, who usually aid with them on Saturday evenings. Miss Twelle took her pupils, one on each arm, and her gray clock and shabby hat with its black tracker disappeared down the lane. The vicur, with his word and his daughter, walked in the experite direction toward their home.

The nearest way to the virarage-house was neroes St. Gildre's church-yard. But the melt-ed soon lay in death-cold pools between the willing grave-mounds; and although the lanes storded no good walking in the present state of encather, they were jot rather better than the

by the church-yard. Mention has been made of a by-road through the village from Shipley Magna which skirted the garden wall of the viranage. Mr. Levincourt fast-gathering dusk a figure, which had evidently been on the watch for them, start and run toward them very swiftly.

"I do believe it is Jemmy Sack!" exclaim
Mand Desmond.

Jemmy Sack it was, who presently came to a sudden stop in front of the vicar, and began a breathless and incoherent speech. "Dunnot ye be frighted, please, Sir, Joe Dow-sett says. They ha'n't a took him into the house, please, Ner. And it's the same un as I seed tum-tic off afore. On'y this here time he's in a reglar swound like. But Joe Dowsett says as ye bain't to be frighted, nor yet the young ladies nayther, please Sir.'

Long before the combined cross-examination of the vicar and the young ladies had succeeded in eliciting any explicit statement from Jemmy, they arrived at the garden door, and then the matter to a certain extent explained itself.

A man in a searlet hunting coat thickly crust-A man in a scarser mining cost total covered with mind lay on his back in the road beneath the garden wall, and close by a heap of flint stones piled up for the use of the road-menders. On to these be had apparently been flung, for his face was cut, and a thin stream of blood trickled slowly down his forehead.

The received was trially insensible. His

The prostrate man was totally insensible. His head was supported on the knee of Joe Dowsett, the vicar's gardener, groom, and general factotem, who was endeavoring to pour some brandy down his throat. A carter, in a smock-frock, held a handsome horse by the bridle. Three of the village boys who had been practicing in the school-room stood at a little distance looking on, and two frightened women-servants, with their aprons huddled round their shivering shoulders, peoped nervously from the garden door, and plied Joe Dowsett with shrill questions, of which he took no notice whatever.

A clamor of voices arose as soon as the vicas A clamor of voices arose as soon as the vicar was perceived: but a few words will suffice to put the reader in possession of the facts of the case. The fallen man was the same gentleman whom Jemmy had seen thrown earlier in the day. The day's sport had terminated at a considerable distance from Shipley Magna. The gentleman was a stranger, had probably missed his way, and gone by roundabout reads. He had evidently at last been making for Shipley Magna, having struck into Bassett's Lane, as Magna, having struck into Bessett's Lane, as the by-road was called. His horse and he were both tired out, and he had begun to feel the effects of his first fall more severely than he had felt them in the heat of the chase and at the be-ginning of the day. The carter had perceived the gentleman's horse stumble, and at the same stanting or the day. The care has a the same instant the boys returning from the school-house had appeared shouting and whooping at the end of the lane. In a moment the gentleman had been pitched heavily off his horse, and had fallen on the heap of that stones. The carter couldn't say for sure, but he believed that the horse stumbled before the lads startled him. And now what was to be done? This question was put by Joe Dowsett, looking up at his master with the brandy bottle in his hand.

The first thing to be done was to send for a doctor. Mr. Flow would probably not have reached his own home yet. Jemmy Sack was dispatched to fetch him, and set off running at a famous rate, throwing out his long legs, and followed by the other boys, to all of whom the occasion second to be one of intense and concentrated cestary.

trated cestary.
But pending Mr. Plew's arrival, the swooning man could not lie there, with the night falling fast, and a bitter wind blowing from the marshes, that was fit, Joe Dowsett said, to freeze the very marrow in your bones. There was no other house at hand. The vic-There was no other house at hand. The vicarrage was a lonely, isolated dwelling. Joe Dowsett and the carter, with a little assistance from Mr. Levincourt, carried the stranger into the house. The women hurried to take from an old oaken press blankets and coverlets for the spare bed. A fire was lighted in the great's chamber—a room on the ground-floor, looking toward the garden. For that night, at least, the injured was more romain at the giveners.

injured man must remain at the vicarage.

Mr. Levincourt was very uneasy, and asked Joe over and over again if he thought it was serions. To which queries Joe invariably replied that it might be or it mightn't, but that for his part he didn't think 't wouldn't be much: an oracular utterance in which his master seemed to find some comfort. Veronics sat at the win-dow, straining eye and ear to catch the first signal of the docto of the doctor's coming. "He's quite old, this poor man, isn't be, papa? snid she, with her face pressed against the glass. "Obl? No. What do you call 'quite old?" It is difficult to judge under the circumstances, but I should say he can't be more than fifty."

Ah! well—that's what I meant. Here Mr. Plew at last! I hear his step on the gravel, although I can't see him yet."

Mr. Plew's opinion was not very reassuring. If the patient were not better by to-morrow, he should fear that he could not safely be moved for a day or two. Meanwhile Mr. Plew would like Dr. Gunnery, of Danecester, to be called in, in consultation When Dr. Gunnery arrived on the following afternoon he shook his head very gravely, and said that he had no hope of the patient being able to leave his bed for some weeks. Even if able to leave his bed for some weeks. Even if-and here Dr. Gunnery lowered his voice, and reversed the movement of his head: nodding it up and down instead of shaking it from side to side—even if he pulled through at all!

CHAPTER VI. SUSPENSE.

THE vicar's first thought on hearing Dr. Gunand the two girls had not gone many paces down this by-road when they perceived through the vicar) to communicate with the family of the stranger whom Fate had thrown—literally thrown—into the midst of the quiet household at the vicarage. As it was, they could hardly have known less about him had he dropped among them from the moon, instead of from the back of a startled horse.

But for many hours the injured man was in-capable of communicating with his bost. Fever set in. He became delirious at intervals. And on no account must he be disturbed or annoyed by questions. Dr. Gunnery confirmed Mr. Plew's first statement, that no irreparable injury had been done to the stranger by his fall.

"But," said be, "he is a bad subject. If we had a young constitution, or even a sound constitution for his years, to deal with the whole affair would be a mere trifle. But in this case it is very different."

it is very different."

"Very different, indeed," assented Mr. Plew.

"No stamins," continued the Danecester physician.

"The whole machine is in a worn-out condition—constitution gone to the dence."

"To the - shem! quite so!" assented Mr. Plew, again.

"Then, Dr. Gunnery," said Mr. Levincourt, nervously, "do you mean to say that he is in danger? Dear me, this is dreadful? Really dreadful!"

But to so direct a question Dr. Gunnery could, or would, give no direct reply. He merely re-peated that, in his epinion, Mr. Levincourt ought to lose no time in communicating with the sick man's family. And then, saying that he would return the day after to-morrow, and that mean-while the patient could not possibly be in better hands than those of Mr. Plew, the great Danccester doctor drove away.

Beyond the facts that had come under his own eyes, the vicar knew but two circumstances regarding his involuntary guest. The first cir-cumstance was that he had been staying at the Crown, in Shipley Magna; the second was that Lord George Segrave was said to be a friend of

Mr. Levincourt dispatched a note to Lord George, and ordered Joe Dowsett (to whom the note was intrusted) to ride on from Hammick Lodge to Shipley Magna, and tell the people at the Crown what had happened.

From Hammick Lodge, Joe Dowsett brought back a very polite note.

It appeared that the acquaintance between Lord George Segrave and the stranger was of the slightest possible kind. They had met in Rome one season, and had hunted side by side on the Campagna. Lord George knew nothing whatever of the gentleman's family. His name was Gale, Sir John Gale. Lord George was deeply distressed that the vicar of Shipley and his family should be so seriously inconvenienced his family should be so seriously inconvenienced by this accident. At the same time he could hardly regret, on Sir John Gale's account, that the latter should have fallen into such hands. Lord George would do himself the honor of calling at Shipley vicarago, and, meanwhile, he begged to know if there were any way in which he could be of service, either to Mr. Levincourt or to the invalid, under these painful circum-

This note, although extremely civil, left matters pretty much as they had been before. But from the Crown Inn Joe Dowsett brought back something more tangible and unexpected.

He brought back, that is to say, Sir John Gale's foreign servant, who announced himself as "Paul," and who immediately took upon himself all the duties of waiting on the sick man.

"If you will permit, Sir," said Paul, in very good English, "I will have a mattress laid by the side of my master's bed for a few nights. When Sir John gets better, and needs not to have me all night, I shall find to sleep at the village. There is a small cabaret there, as I have informed myself."

The arrival of this man, which was at first looked upon with dismay by the inmates of the vicange, proved before long to be an inestimable comfort and relief.

In the first place, he essed the vicar's mind

ble comfort and relief.

In the first place, he eased the vicar's mind by taking upon himself the responsibility of communicating with Sir John's friends. Or rather he proved that no such responsibility c sisted. Sir John had, Paul declared, no relatives. He sir John had, Fall declared, hother nor eister, uncle nor cousin. He had lived a good deal abroad. Paul had not been with Sir John in England before this winter. He would write to England before this winter. He would write to Sir John's agent and man of business. That was all that would be necessary.

Mr. Levincourt, never unwilling to shift re-sponsibility on to the shoulders of others, told Pwel that he must do as he thought best. There was something in the grave, steady aspect of the little man that inspired confidence. Then Paul took upon himself the whole business of the sick-room. He waited by day, and watched by night. He administered the medicines. He re-ported progress to the doctors with an intelli-gence and accuracy which won those gentlemen's good opinion very soon. He relieved the vicar's servants of all trouble as regarded Sir John Gale. He even went into the kitchen, and, with a certain grave tact which characterized him. won over old Joanna to allow him to prepare sundry articles of invalid diet for his master. He was always at hand when wanted, and yet entirely unobtrusive. He was never tired, nev-er sleepy, never sulky, never indiscreet.

In a word, before many days of his sejourn at the vicarage had passed over, the whole household began to wonder how they had managed to get through the few hours that had inter-vened between the accident and the arrival of the admirable Paul.

He very soon contrived to let it be understood that money expenses would not at all events be added to the burden thrown on the vienr's family by his master's accident and illness. Sir John was rich: very rich. No expense need be spared. If, even, it were deemed necessary to send to London for additional medical assistance, they need not hesitate to do so. This, however, did not appear to be desirable. And as soon as Sir John was enabled to understand his own condition be expressed himself entirely satisfied with the side. satisfied with the skill and care of the doctors who were attending him.

who were attending him.

Lord George Segrave fulfilled his promise of calling. Lord George was a bachelor. He was a great sportsman, and some folks said that he was too fond of other pursuits which persons holding strict views could not approve. Leed George was well known on the turt; and in his youthful days had been a patron of the Prize Ring. Without belonging to the category of those whose lives were openly scandalous, he yet was a man whose acquaintance could by no means be taken to be a certificate of good character.

Retired as was Mr. Levincourt's life at Shipley-in-the-Wold, he yet knew this much of the present occupant of Hammick Lodge, and the knowledge had not served to make Sir John Gale's enforced presence beneath his own root the more agreeable to him.

But Lord George Segrave soon made it ap-parent that his acquaintance with Sir John was really and truly no closer than he had stated in his note. It need scarcely be said that Lord George had no idea what a signal service he was rendering to the invalid in his host's opin-ion by disclaiming any thing like intimacy with Lord George was rather good natured, and extremely selfish, and he desired that it should be at once clearly understood that, while he was willing to send his servants scouring the country on any errand for Sir John that the vicar might suggest, he (Lord George) by no means intend-ed to put himself to the personal inconvenience of making frequent visits of inquiry at the vicarage.

"Pray, command me, Mr. Levincourt," he said, as he took his leave, "in any way. I quite feel what an uncommon here this business must be for you. Though, as I said before, Gale may think himself in luck that he didn't get spilt on think himself in luck that he didn't get spilt on any other heap of flint stones than the one at your door. I'm sure I hope he'll pull through, and all that sort of thing. You know I had only just a kind of bowing acquaintance with him in Rome. And then he hailed me on the hunting-field at Stubbs's Corner the other day, you know, and—and that sort of thing. Hammlek Lodge is twelve miles from Shipley as the crow flies, you know, and—and so I'm afraid I sha'n't be able to look him up myself very often, you know. But I hope you will do me the favor to command me if there's any thing in the world my follous can do, or—or that sort of thing."

And then Lord George Segrave departed, feeling that he had done all that could reasonably be expected of him.

Dr. Gunnery came again and again. And Mr.

Dr. Gunnery came again and again. And Mr. Plew was unremitting in his attention

The house, always quiet, was now hushed into stillness. The piano remained closed. Joe Dow-sett ceased to whistle as he worked in the garden. The servants stole up to bed past the door of the

The servants stole up to bed past the door of the guest-room, making every board of the staircase creak under their elaborately soutious footfall. Paul's noiseless step glided through the passages, and he came on you like a ghost.

Riot and merriment are contagious. So are silence and the hush of suspense. But though the vicarage was stiller than it was wont to be, it was less dull. All the household was conscious of a suppressed excitement, which was merely stirring, and did not reach to pain. Every day. of a suppressed excitement, which was mercy stirring, and did not reach to pain. Every day, every hour of the day, presented a question whose answer was deferred—Will he live or die? And on the answer to this question bung no agonized human heart—none, at least, within that house. Was there any where a breast fluttered by hopes, oppressed by fears, for the sick man who lay feverish and uneasy on the stranger's bed in Shipley vicarage?

No letters came for him. No friends inquired.
He was discussed in the vicarage kitchen, and in other kitchens in the neighborhood. He was discussed in the village ale-house, in the farmhouses, in the tap-room and the stables of the Crown at Shipley Magna. He was spoken of, once or twice, at the different meets of the West Daneshire hunt. Lord George Segrave men-tioned that he believed Gale was going on all right, you know, and that sort of thing. That was a niceish nag of his, not the one he had been riding when he was thrown, you know; no, that little chestnut. Lord George wouldn't mind having him. He wondered what the figure would be. If Gale's horses were still at the Crown he good mind to go over and have an look at the chestnut, and to ask Gale's groom whether he thought his master would sell him. He supposed that Gale had had enough of hunt-ing in England. He was doored sorry for him, you know, and that sort of thing, but what the — could be expect? With that seat he (Lord George) only wondered how Gale had been able to stick on his saddle five minutes! And most of the field wondered too. For it has been ob-served that of all the trials to which human candor, modesty, and magnanimity are ordinarily apt to be subjected, the trial of comparing your own riding with another man's is the one that most frequently develops mortal frailry.

There was probably not a man who habitually hunted with the West Daneshire who did not seeretly nourish the conviction that his own seat on horseback was admirable, and that the majority of his friends and acquaintances rode like

Little it mettered to Sir John Gale what was said of him in parlor, kitchen, stable, or huns-ing-field. Little, perhaps, would it ever master to him more. For although, as Dr. Gunnery had said, the absolute injuries resulting from the accident were triffing, and to a young and vigorous constitution would have be of small importance, yet in this case there seemed to be no elasticity or power of rebound in the sick man's frame. A low fever took hold of him: a dreadful insidious fever, that might be figured as a weird phantom, invisible to the eyes of men, but with two bony, cruel hands, whose touch was terrible. Of these hands one was cold as ice; the other burning, like the heart of a furnace. Alternately the viewless fingers stroked the sick man's body, drawing long shuddering shrills through every limb, or clutched him with a lingering gripe that made his very heart sick. he was consumed with scorching beat; anon he shivered to the marrow of his bones.

Mr. Plew did not trouble his brain—or perhaps it were better to say his beain was not troubled; seeing that such funcies come to a man, or stay away from him, without any conscious exercise of his will-with any fantastic embodiment of a Fever Phantom. But he reported day after day that Sie John was in a nasty low wa -a re-ry so-asty, low way -and that he couldn't get him to rally.

"Do you think he is troubled in his mind?"
"I Mr. Levincourt. "Is his heart ill at ease?" asked Mr. Levincourt. "Is his heart ill at ease? He is perfectly conscious now; and, I think, clear-headed enough to give orders. And yet Paul tells me that his master has entirely ap-Pour tests me that his master has entirely ap-proved what has been done, and what has been left undone. He desires to see no one, has re-ceived no letters—except, as Paul tells me, one from his agent sent to the Post-office at Shipley Magna—and, in short, appears to be singularly isolated in the world, for a man of his wealth and position. I should fear his life has not been a very happy one."

"Well," said Mr. Plew, musingly, "I don't know, of course. But-but he doesn't seem to be at all that sort of man."

Mr. Plew's statement was vague enough; and the vicar did not care to be at the pains of prob-ing the little surgeon's meaning. Yet the latter ing the little surgeon's meaning. Yet the latter had a meaning, although he would have found it difficult to put it into clear words.

His meaning was this; that from his observa-tion of Sir John Gale he had, half-instinctively, drawn the conclusion that his rich patient was not a man to allow sentimental troubles to prey on him.

Wounded love, tender regrets, affectionate yearnings after a lost friendship, or a longing for softer tendance and closer companionship than could be had from servants and strangers, did not seem to Mr. Plew likely to enter into the category of drawbacks to Sir John's recovery. Material comforts, nay luxuries, he did not lack. As to sentiment—Mr. Plew of course had encountered ailments arising from purely spirit-ual causes. Very troublesome ailments they were, and very inefficacions proved the power of physic to cure them. He remembered a say-ing of an old clergyman who had been a tamous preacher in the days when Benjamin Plew was walking the hospitals in London. The saying was to the effect that the bodily health of half the world would be marrelously improved if a mechanical, cunningly contrived piece of granite could be substituted for a heart of flesh in the human breast. "We might defy the doctors then," said this old clergyman, "and—life would not be worth having!" But of Sir John Gale, Mr. Plew nor the reader as yet know enough to enable him to judge whether the barquet's heart be of flesh or of stone.

A fortnight passed; three weeks; a month had nearly dragged itself away since the accident, when the doctors pronounced that Sir John was somewhat stronger.

phantom hands, the hand of fire and the hand of ice, slowly relinquished their prey. By degrees the intervals between their alternate touches grew wider. At last they ceased. Danger was over; and from the beginning of March the invalid began slowly, but surely, to mend.

COAL-MINING AND THE COAL MARKET.

LUZERNE, Carbon, Schuykill, Columbia, Northumberland, and Dalton counties comprise the authorcite region of Pennsylvania, and, so far as has been discovered, this is the anthracite coal-field of the United States. Previous to 1860 the price of coal from these mines did not average, at wholesale. 25 per ton, if we except the year 1855, when the price rose to $5 40 per ton, by the cargo, which, at that time, was an unprec-edentedly high figure. During the present month (August) store coal is quoted, in New York, at $8.50 per ton, the consumer paying a very considerable advance upon this price before it is leaded in his collection. it is lodged in his cellar,

The Honey Brook Mines are located at a point where the counties of Carbon, Luzerne, and Schuykill meet, this point being the highest in Pennsylvania, if we except the treaty ridge a mile distant, which is 50 feet higher. The coal mined here is of excellent quality, and the mines may be regarded as fair specimens of the best style. They are managed closely by men of ex-perience and excellent judgment. The names perience and excellent judgment. The name of four hundred men and one hundred and twen ty boys are on their pay rolls. With this force a thousand tous of coal per day can be mined, prepared, and shipped, when the mines are worked up to their full capacity.

It would seem best to describe a visit to the mines by showing the coal first in its native state, and then following it from the "basin" to the car in which it is shipped to market. Accompanied by the superintendent and the mining engineer, we step into a coal car and are lowered down an inclined plane of 35° for a distance of 1500 fees, when we are at the bettom of the "basin," where but for the fazing lamps attached to the miners' hats the darkness would be impenetrable. There is activity every where: loaded cars going up, emptied ones descending, and cars moving hither and you, drawn by quick-stepping mules; miners and laborers hastening to and fro; the boom and reverberation of the "shots" that are displacing coal, the quick clip of the miner's drill, and the thad of his pick; and above all this the cries of the miner who has lighted his match and is ficeing to a place of safety, crying fire! fire! to warn those near of It takes but a few moments to bethe danger. It takes but a few moments to be-come used to these noises, and as you trudge dong in the darkness you grow aware of the perfect system that prevails. On all sides the min-ers are at work drilling with their sharp crow-bars, or ramming home the powder which is to blast out tons of coal if the charge has been well placed.

THE STREET WATER ON THE

At another point is the miner arranging his cartridge of brown paper, the edges of which he scaps to keep the powder dry after the charge is placed. His mining chest has a keg of powder in it, with oil, wick, tools, fuses, and blasting barrels, not to mention various other articles necessary to his operations. Near at hand you see the miners at work in a great cave leading from the gangway in which the tracks are laid for the transit of the coal cars which are being quickly loaded by the miners' laborers. During your peregrinations you will visit the stables— caves cut out of the solid coal—and finally, after a long walk, will reach the slope where the coal cars are ascending and descending, and the same bustle is going on that you noted on your first arrival from above. Jumping into a coal car, up you go again to the dazzling glare of day-light. Possibly you smile at the swarthy coun-tenance of Mr. Horkins, the superintendent, as you do at your own when you reach the hotel.

The breaker, "as the huge wooden structure in which the coals are prepared for market is des-ignated, is better described by the illustration than is possible by the pen. To the top of the breaker you make your way by means of stairs much worn by the tread of many feet; and here you may see the cars arriving from the mine hundreds of feet below, drawn up by means of a stationary engine and windless. The cars are dumped by mechanical means, and the coal commences its descent toward its market. Before the car starts on its return to the mine a wooden tag is removed, and hung upon a neil corresponding in number to that on the tag. This is the miner's mark, and the number collected indicates that of car-loads of coal sent up with the miner's name.

The coal damped from the car passes down an inclined plane, which at one point has a floce-ing of iron bars placed a sufficient distance apart to permit quite large lumps to drop through; the rest passes on down the slope to the cars which are to convey it to market. Such lumps as may be deemed too large are broken with hammers in the hands of men who are stationed at a point just below the bars, and at this place the inclin is less precipitous.

The smaller lumps—those which have dropped through the bars—pass into a huge cylinder, in which revolve great iron plates; and this is, prop-erly speaking, the breaker. From thence the coal passes into a cylindrical screen, which is placed at an inclination of about ten degrees, and revolves slowly through this affair. The coal is passed and washed, different sizes of coal falling through the apertures of the screen into inclined troughs beneath. It is there that the coal is handled, nearly every piece being inspect-ed by the smutty young blackbirds that perch on the sides of the slides of the wooden boxes through which the coal descends. You will see the urchins throw away what you take to be coal. This is simply slate, and these are the slate-pickers, who are throwing away about one ton of slate to every ten of coal that passes them. This is a loss to the mine owner, or operator, but not to the miner.

From this place we proceeded to the office of the superintendent, who placed his books at our disposal for inspection, and volunteered any information that might be asked for. After care-ful examination it seems to us that the average to the miner for each car of coal out of the mine is 43 cents. This includes powder, oil, wick, tool-sharpening, and the cost of the laborer, and must be deducted from the $1.18 which is received by the miner for each car-load of coal, It would seem from figures shown upon examination to be correct, that upon every ton of coal sold at present at Elizabethport for $5 there is a loss of a trifle over fifty cents to be by the coal operator. At $6 per ton there is a profit , but this is cut down considerably by an arrange-ment known at present as the basis of agreement between the miners and the operators

The paper reads as follows, and does not materially differ from the accepted basis through out the anthracite region:

COTT.

Articles of Agreement made this day, July 2, 1899, be-tasen Honey Brook Coal Company and the Working-men's Innecolont Association of Audentied.

these Hensy Brock Coal Company and the Workingmen's Renerolant Association of Audientical.

It is hereby understood and agreed, that whenever the average price of coal at Elizabethport advances beyond $6$ per ion, then the pay per ton shall be advanced to the extent of 13½ per cent, on the follar of all such advance of price over and above any advance that may have taken place dering the month in transportation beyond 1½ cents per ton per mile; and in the same way, when the average price of coal at the above-named point falls again, then a proportionate reduction per ion shall be made.

It is hereby understood that 58 per ton for coal at Elizabethport, and 59 cents per ton, or $1.18 per drift tar, lowest price. Miners, per week, $10. Inside Iabor, $14 per week. Platform men, $15 80. Ordinary contaids labor, $11 30. Dockage only in extreme cases —the ticket boss to be the only judge. Tardace for Walness weis North Pinch, $2 per yard (all other wages in proportion), and shall at all three be considered the minimum price at which operations shall be continued. Below that price, all running, prepar-ing, and shipping of onal shall be stopped.

The published rates of Lettigh coal dealers in New York to be rated as the standard of prices.

No interference with the employ or discharge of men or management of the coillery to be allowed—it being understood that no person is to be discharged for the sole reason of his being a member of the As-sociation.

BONEY BROOK COAL CO., Per-W. H. Herniss, Asp's. W. R. BEVAN, GROUGE ROBERTSON, GROUGE ROBERTSON, W. B. Ane'n. GRORGE ROSERTS DENNIS BYRNE, JAMES CASTLES, HOGE JONES,

In conversation with the miners they state the case thus: "It seemed to us that the operthe case thus: "It seemed to us that the oper-ators arranged things so that when the price of coal was up we could work at fair wages; if coal dropped, our wages fell to such an extent that we felt obliged to stop work, and that was a strike. We proposed to meet the operators and arrange a basis upon which we could work regularly. The operators did not choose to accede to our proposition; therefore we made the hasis above given. We permit no miner to send out of the mine more than six car-loads (12 tons) per day, though be may mine as much as he chooses. By this arrangement we expect to keep up a steady supply of coal with-out bringing on the 'glut' in the market that has heretofore occasioned our strikes. Each miner must pay his own laborer, and we expect all inside men to join us. Our Union was es-tablished in 1868, about the time of the eight-hour movement, and thus far, with 30,000 members, we consider it a success."

The miners employed in the Honey Brook mines are principally Welsh, and the community is as peaceful a one as can be found. There is neither lawyer nor justice of the peace within three miles, and the jail has not been in use for a year. A tolerably comfortable house is to be reuted for six dollars per month, and besides this a ton of coal per month is furnished by the company. Nearly every family keeps a cow, which grazes in any pasture the owner may select. Married men pay 75 cents, and single men 50 cents per month to the resident surgeon, who for this attends to all cases of sickness, fur-nishing his own medicines and surgical supplies. The wages paid are $15 for bottom-men and bankmen; $14 for laborers; $12 50 for drivr boys; $6 for door-boys; and $4 for slate-pickers.

The best men among the operators aver that they would greatly prefer to have coal fall to $6 per ton at Elizabethport and remain stationary, The retail dealers say that people do not pay each for coal, therefore they charge a sufficient price to secure a fair interest on their money, And, speaking of interest, it is a well-know fact that there is no business that necessitates so large an amount of ready capital as the coal busi-ness. The men are paid once a month. The railroad freights are cash, as are also the canal tolls and other expenses. In former years the miner was content to work for $9 per week, and week, and the labors for $6. Coal was cheep then. Will it be so again? Every one is holding off for a fall in price. The operators do not bring it for-ward for the reason that there is no sale, and they can not afford to pay freight and storage. They say that when the rush does come that coal will be higher than in the memorable year 1865. Railroad freights are fully $1 per ton higher than in 1868, and canal tolis in the same proportion Experienced operators say that the consumption of coal will be less by a million of tons than it was during 1868.

The total amount of coal mined in the United States in 1868 was 28,048,410 tons. Nova Scotia and Cape Breton could produce (they do not, however) 800,000 tons per annum, and that small supply could be sold "along side" in New York, duty off, for a trifle over five dollars per ton. This would be a small quantity to be sure, but it would bring back some of the trade that went hence upon the abrogation of the treaty three years since, and which has not returned.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Tue National Association of Wool Manufacturers and Wool Growers design to hold a joint Expos in this city, under the anspices of the American I The Skating Rink, corner of Sixty-third Stree Third Avenue, is now open for the reception of hinery. The Exposition will be open to the pub machinery. The Exposition will be open to the pu-lic on the 8th instant. All American manufacturers of goods composed wholly or in part of wool, and or supplies, machinery and tools used directly in the wool manufacture, are invited to exhibit samples of

The Isle of Wight Times, published at Ryde, gives a full account of the recent fatal accident which caused the death of Mr. Cornelius Grinnell. It appears that Mr. Grinnell had just been admitted a member of the Hyde Victoria Yacht Club; and after dining with the Club returned with two friends to his lodgings. He had been making arrangements to provide eleeping accommodation for his friends, when one of them left the room and went down stairs. Mr. Orinnell, fearing be was going to look for another room, said to the continuous with him. If well along out on the help the gentleman with him: "I will step out or cony and speak to him ; and drawing up the Venetian blinds, he threw open the window and stepped out. There was, however, no balcony there; and the unfortunate gentleman fell to the ground, a distance of over 50 fort, and was instantly killed.

Leaping from railroad trains when they are going at lightning speed is a species of gymnactics not yet in common use. But the other day the conductor of a train near Memphia, Tennessee, forgot to leave a negro woman at her stopping-place. He was first conscious of his neglect on seeing the woman rushing through the car, and when she reselved the platform she jumped off without further ceremony. The horrifod conductor stopped the train, and backed up to the place where it was expected the mangled remains of the unfortunate female would be found. It was all a mistake, however. The "remains" were not manyled at all. She was stronged a little, and there was an swful dent in the ground where she jumped; out no further damage appeared. She was soon "all right," and was able to walk of as if nothing had happened.

Paullies in Lawrence, Massachusetts, do not appear to be particularly small. A policeman in that city inte-ly found a two-year old child on a door step at two by teams a two-year out cann on a neor-seep at two-o'clock in the morning, crying because he could not get into the house to go to bed. The parents had neglected to count their broad when they retired, and neglected to count their broad when the the little fellow had been overlooked.

Science has at last achieved a wondrons or producing a knife which cats so rapidly that the per-son operated upon feels no pain! The inventor was anxious to try an experiment upon his own body, but was prevented by the breakage of the instrument.

Goestp, in the city and at the sea-shore, on the mountains and at the springs, has centred on the recent meeriage of Commedices Vanderbilt. The lady, a daughter of the late Robert L Crawford, of Mobile, Alabama, is said to be about thirty years of his years rest lightly upon him, and he appears as are years rest tigatly upon him, and he appears as well preserved as many men of fifty. The acquaint-ance began—so says report—at Seratoga Springs; and very untrasily the bridal party turned their faces Saratogaward immediately after the marriage occu-

Oil is not well adapted to swimming purposes. workman, employed in an oil manufactory at Nice, fell into a tank of olive-oil nine feet deep. He was an expert awimmer, but the oil did not afford resist-ance enough to keep him afford, and he eark to the bottom at once, and was only saved from drowning by the timely aid of a comrade.

Once in a while there is a woman who can by no means be called the "weaker vessel." of one young New Yorkess are thus stated, and indi-cate muscle and endurance: She went to the theatre and two parties in one evening, and carried on three directions at each. The next day she refused three offers of marriage, accepted two, and broke off three previous engagements, read four novels, wrote two letters and one hundred notes of invitation, practiced her music lesson, made hersoif a new waterfall, ato breakfast, lunch, and dinner, took a walk on Fifth Avence, bought two pounds of French candy and ale it, rode to the Central Park with one of her lovers, and walked home with the other.

A remarkable case is reported from Lancaster, Penn sylvanta. A Mr. Herr, aged about sixty, has not had half an hour's continuous aloep for four years. The extraordinary wakofulness which afflicts him came on after many weeks of watching at the bedside of a cick langhter, and a long illness of his own which fullowed, preventing natural sleep for three or four months. Since then Mr. Herr has failed to obtain rest from sleep. Opiates, which have been prescribed by physicians, have no effect upon him, even when taken in large doses. Ills health suffers greatly, and he is now unable to perform any kind of physical

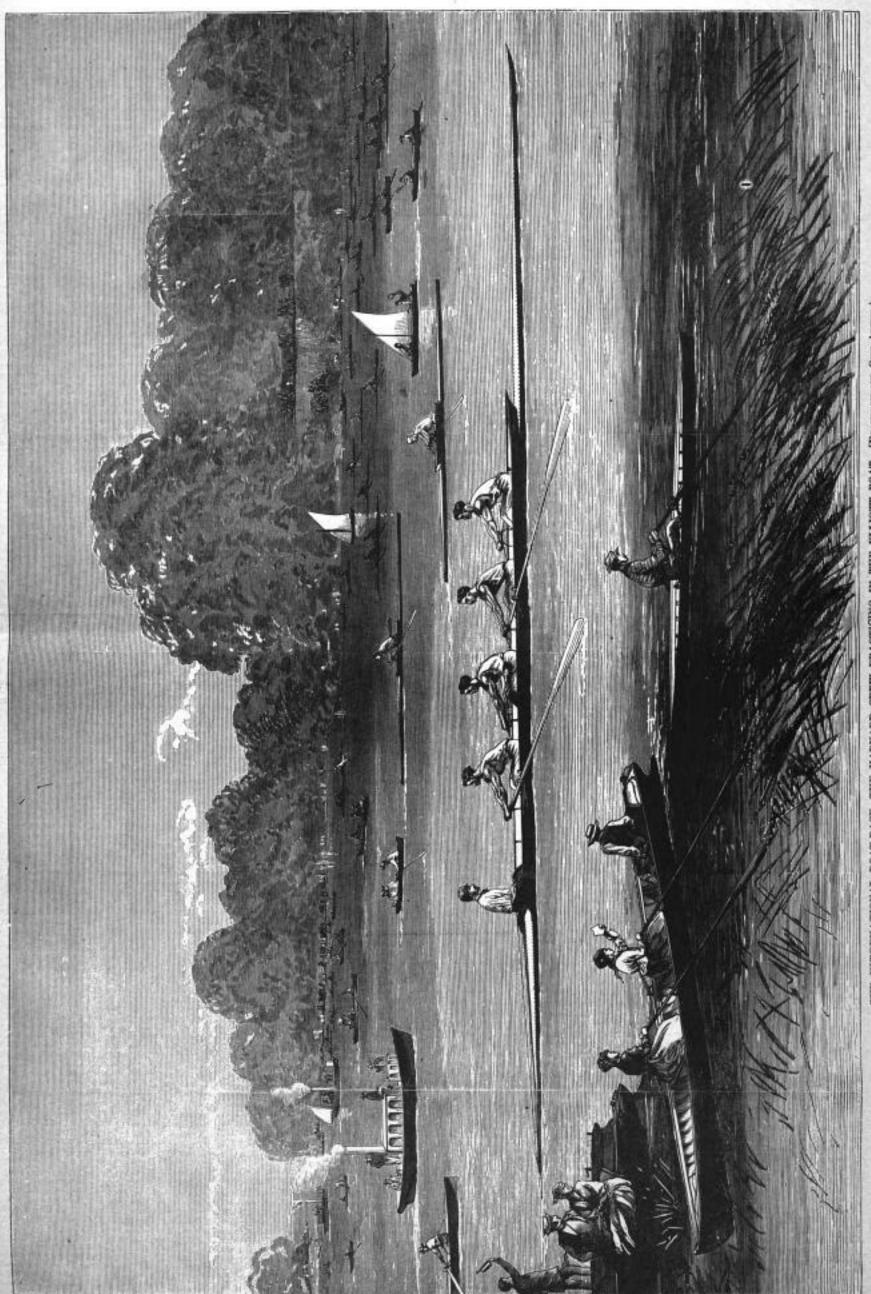

Two gentlessen, who were recently riding in the Boston city care, entered into a discussion on Woman Suffrage. One was a lawyer, the other a physician, Said the lawyer: "Would you wish your wife to mix with low, rude men, in public; to witness all the drunken coarseness and low ribaldry of town-nect-ing day; would you not be ashamed of her in such a place?" "I should be ashamed of the men," was the loctor's quick reply.

A friend who visited the Catakill Mountains a few A friend who visited the Catakin Reumanns a sew weeks ago related to us the following characteristic incident, which came under his personal observation: While the stage-coach was slowly wending its way up-toward the Mountain House one of the inside passen-gers—s young man whose general appearance indi-cated that he should have known the usages of good cased that as seems have known the sanges or good society—lighted a cigar and began to encoke. "Ton are not going to smoke here, with ladies inside?" do-manded a gentleman. "Well, yes," responded the youth, languidly, "I generally smoke whenever I get a chance;" and he continued politing. Presently the gentleman who had spoken tailed for the driver to genteeman was not special tasted for the driver to stop. "Now, young roan," said he, "I'll give you just one minute to get out!" The youthful smoker, looked his opponent in the eye, saw be had found his match, and silently get out and climbed to an outside seat. Next morning the gentleman not the young man on the plasma of the hotel, and, after plannarily saluting him, remarked: "I see from the book that you are from Philadelphia." "Yes, Sir," responded you are from Philadelphia." "Yes, Sir," responded the youth, evidently desirous the interview of the provious evening should not be recalled. "And do you expect to go through New York on you way back?" "Yes, Sir," again was the reply. "Well, young man," continued the gentleman, "from what I have seen of you, I think you will get into trouble in New York, and you may like to call upon me, so I will give you my card," whereupon he handed him a bit of pasteboard, on which was the name of John A. Kennedy, Surserinardant of the Matropolitan Board of Police; Superintendent of the Metropolitan Board of Police

A melancholy little incident is related of the ex-Empress Charlotte. This unfortunate Princess has been staying for some time at Spa. The other day she insisted with such vehernesse on playing at rou-istic that it was impossible to restrain her. On ap-proaching the table she deliberately placed a gold place on the number 19. The Emperor Maximilian was shot on June 19. The wheel turned, and, though thirty-seven chances were against her, she won. She led sadly, took up the money, and quietly left the On her way out a poor man perced by. gave him all the money, with the injunction that he was to "pray for him." It is known that the Empresa Charlotte never pronounces the name of Maximilian.

Another new invention from France. What can be more convenient than a handsome little table churn, by means of which persons may make their butter at the table while breakfast is going on? It takes but 'time, and the machine is gorgeous with cut glass and silver.

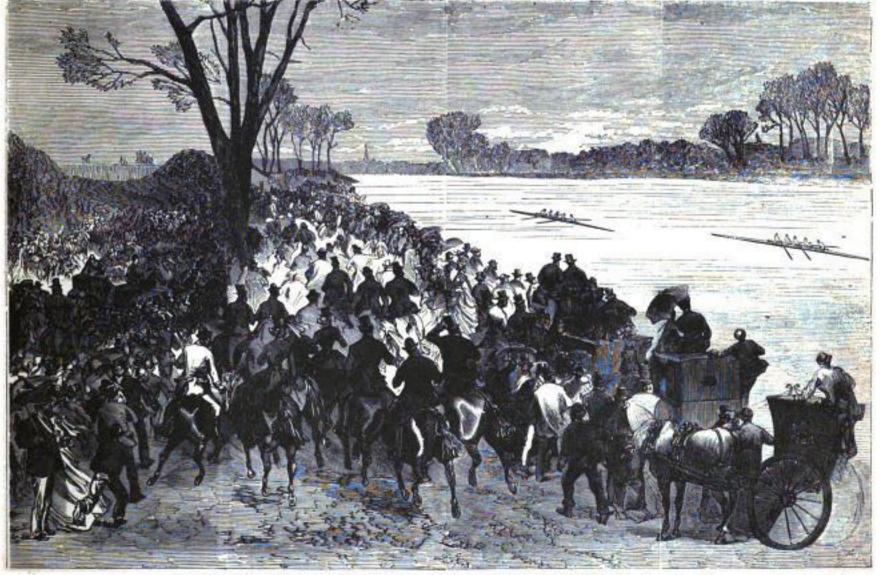

English papers report that a change has come over the Princess de Metternich. Once she couried popularity: now she seems annoyed when her name is mentioned in the papers. The invitations to her entertainments are quietly given, and the number is re-stricted more than formerly. The Princess has even changed the color of her carrieres: insread of being yellow picked out with black-ever the most con spicnous in the Bois de Boulogue—they are now black picked out with yellow: but this change of coor does prized out with yellow: but this change of coor does not prevent them from ranking among the bandsom-est equipages of the city. Likewise the Princese has entirely changed the style of her toilets, and now ap-pears in all the simplicity of a school-girk.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-BACE-THE HARVARD CREW PRACTICING IN THE ELLIOTT BOAT.-[DEAWS BY OUR OWN ARTER.]

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE-HARVARD LEADING, AT HAMMERSMITH BRIDGE.-[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

THE INTERNATIONAL BOAT-RACE-OPPOSITE CHISWICK, OXFORD LEADING. -[SEE FIRST PAGE.]

MEMORY'S IDYL

the low brown bouse, I see it now; thrandmother, with her knitting, A holy calm upon her brow, In shaded porch was sitting.

All down the path the poppies flamed, Stiff box made green the border, And small blue violets, half ashamed, Grew low in sweet disorder.

I had been reading in the porch, Alond, in Revelation; it seemed like Sunday, and like church, With two for congregation.

The birds called loud from ash and fir-I could not be unheeding; I plucked a sprig of lavender, To keep the place in reading.

I wandered down by balm and rue, And clumps of China-aster; I thought-well, Jack, I thought of you, With heart-beats somewhat faster

Do you remember how the vine Grew close o'er all the arbor? It was a favorite haunt of mine, A dear secloded harbor.

So in I strolled, and there you were, In all a dreamer's glory!

Ah, you remember? Tell it, Sir!

Ay, dear, you end the story.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER XLIX.

A STRICKEN CONSCIENCE.

LADY DIANA rend the letter of Robert Doughe with a look of strange perturbation in her face. In this letter, written under the influence of strong feeling, Douglas had departed from the form of enlightsphy which for a long time past had been adopted by him, and these char-acters resembled some which Lady Diana re-membered to have seen many years ago.

As she held the letter under the lamp, that she might discern the words more clearly, a throb of fear came to her heart, and the fingers holding the paper trambled exceedingly. Doubt did not strengthen into conviction until she turned over the letter mechanically and caught sight of the seal on the envelope. For a mo-ment or so her eyes stared at it with painful intensity; then she moved quickly toward an alcove and seated herself on a sofa, for her feet second failing her, and she felt a proud horror of letting her suffering be even guessed at by the

She knew the seal well; she was only too sure she did. She had a keen memory for trifler, and she remembered how, when, in the first sweet hours of their wedded life, she tried to wile his signet-ring from her husband's finger, he had laughingly repulsed her, saying that "not even Ann should deprive him of his fa-ther's last gift."

There are many things pleasant enough to have recalled to one's mind in a chance pang of recollection—the air of a sweet old tune associased with a vanished hour of jubilee—the smile of your lover when he turned his head to give you that parting look—the crow of your lube when it welcomed home your fire—the last wonls of your first love-letter;—each of these reminiscences is fraught with an exqui-site delight; but to believe for a long nameber of years that you are eternally free of the compan-ionship of one whom you had feared rather than loved—to be seized by a fearful suspicion that the indoved dead are not, in fact, sugine in death's helplessness, but live—live to judge, to condemn, and perhaps avenge!

Lady Di was brave even in this extremity. She nerved herself to answer with apparent gay-ery the light remark of one of her admirers who presently approached her. She accepted his es-cort to her carriage, and she gave him a parting smile of such sweetness that he involuntarily stopped to look at himself in a mirror on his way back to the ball-room.

Although some knew, and many suspected, that the news of some affliction had come to Lord Onne that night, no one guessed what a terrible auxiety was consuming this fair, gaymannered woman. "I must make sure-wake save," she iterated. in the solitude of her own chamber, "Another mon might inherit and wear that ring; but how should any other possess his trick of handwrit-the sighed beavily as she dragged berself towant her bod.

"I have a great mind to say my prayers," she said, roefully.

Habits enforced in early youth frequently recur, after long disuse, in hours of treable. Lady Diann lad been taught by her good old nurse nluave to pray fervently when my affliction im-pended over the bousehold, that it might be averted.

She could not sleep. The pillow might have been bristling with spikes for all the comfort she could find in it. In repose the dread seemed to greer stronger, the fear bigger. With a groun, she wose from her bed, and paced up and down the room. She caught sight of a dim, ghastly face as she passed by her mirror, and shuddered to think how soon such wearing anxiety would make her old and ugly.
"I must ascertain the truth," she muttered.

Suspense is the worst phase of sorrow. Tomoreow-or rather to-day, for those wrangling church clocks are all chiming five together-1 will go down to Auriel, and see this Robert

There was something Roman and heroic in her, after all. She preferred to invoke her own fate to waiting for the creeping progress of Atropos's scissors.

CHAPTER L.

MOWREAT.

WHEN Captain Mowbeny left Lady Di Merton's presence, he walked down the stairs at Orme House feeling very much as if some one had dealt him a blow in the face.

"Idiot! fool that I was ever to dream that woman could have even an interval of veracity! n her!"

His heart felt very sore as he looked up at the brilliantly lit windows, and imaged to himself how she, who caused his grievance, was proba-bly breathing more freely in his absence.

I do not expect the reader to sympathize with his pain; in novels we only condole with the sorrows of the virtuous; but the sorrows of the vicious are none the less acute for the absence

Thurstan had simply forgottes his beautiful young wife during the fluctuations of his hopes and doubts concerning the evil-hearted siren who had wiled him away from the thought of Assica.

He felt additional bitterness when he reflected on that useless journey to Paris. "So expensive, too, and one can't get railway tickets on credit," he growled. To do him justice he would not have gradged his last sovereign (pennics do not enter into the calculations of spendics. shrifts) to secure him the woman he longed for, but the most extravagant do not like to feel that they have thrown their money aimlessly at a phantom target.

Thurstan did not go back to barracks at once; there are moments when solitude is the most grateful salve that can be applied to a sore heart; so be turned from the lights of the town and set so be turned from the lights of the town and set his face toward the sea.

"I'll go to Azalea," Captain Mowbray said, suddenly. "She will be glad to see me." It was always "me," with Thurstan nowadays. So Captain Mowbray thought of Azalea, not as one injured, but as one who was to comfort him for his injury. His letters had not been for-warded to him from London. He remembered this now, and remembered to curre the club resthis now, and remembered to curse the club por-ter for having failed to send them on; not that ter for having failed to send them on; not that it was of so much importance after all: he could calculate tolerably well as to what description of missives awaited him; a tender little coo from Azalea, several sulky croaks from irritated creditars, a duty letter from his sister, hoping that he was well, commenting on the weather, and sending him a good deal of italicized love.

With a sudden blank he thought,

Without will he no letter from her"—"ther"

"There will be no letter from her"-"her' meaning Lady Di. However, he kept to his decision about going to Auriel, if only for a few hours; he thirsted for the solace of Amilea's presence, a presence which was in itself a caress. His wounded vanity yearned for the balm of her devotion; he looked on her in the light of a superior seet of cigar, something to sooth his irritation and dull his pain.

"Yes, he would go to her." He imaged to himself how she would glow at his approach, how she would run to welcome him with eye, lip, and voice! He knew nothing of that freshraised mound in the Auriel church-yard; he could not guess that the color had gone out of her cheeks forever, and that a narrow strip of moonlit earth, slaming between two sullen stunt-ed cypresses, shielded her from further unkind-

The wind rose and the sea grew more troubled. He turned his steps homeward; and as the clouds thickened over the moon's face he could no thickened over the moon's face he could no longer see his way clearly, but moved through a dark guideless space which was filled by wild hints of stoem and shipwreck. He was glad when he had got away from that dismal shore haunted by cold touchest of spray, by the brack-ish scent of deep-colored sea-flowers, by the ceninous mean of the rising wind, and by the sting of the pang which he had brought with him to the water's edge.

The more he pondered over the wrong done to him, the stronger grow his longing for her to him, the stronger grew his longing for her who was to pulliate the smart. "I will run down to Auriel to-morrow," he thought; but the next morning, when he was on the point of starting for the station, the serv-ant of a brother officer came with a message, nsking him to be so good as to step in and see the Major before he went.

The Major was Major Welter, the "Gentle-man Jock" of the regiment, and one of its most of the regiment, and one of its most popular officers; young (as majors go), handsome, ber a broken nose, honorably gained in a fall over a stiff flight of post and mils; rich and popular. What more could a man desire to in-sure his happiness? Major Welter did not desire more; but to be something, or rather some-what less, was necessary to his peace of mind; he had an unhappy propensity to grow—not fat according to the lianting standard, but heavy in a bandicap point of view.

On this particular morning any one uninitiated in racing mysteries would have viewed the gallant Major's appearance with concern and alarm, fearing that he was the victim of some prostrating distemper.

When Thurston entered the room nothing was visible of his friend save the tip of a damp-looking nose. The mother that bore him would scarcely have recognized her son in that beaving mass of yellow finnels which represented, or rather mis-represented, the manly outline of John Welter. Mowbray exhibited neither surprise nor commiseration. He was accustomed to these desperate attempts at liquefaction of the "too solid flesh" of thirteen-stone men.

"Been wasting, I see. brought it down to?" What have you

A faint voice answered from under the blank-ets, in a Desdemons-like tone of pathos, "It's no use, Mowbray. Five pounds off yes-terday, four pounds off to-day, but there's still eight pounds too many on me which I can't get Just case ou one of the blankets, will Mowbray obeyed his friend's beliest, and the voice was heard rather more distinctly. "I've tried all I know. I've shut my eyes at mess so that I shouldn't be tempted by the joints; I've resisted my liquor; I've qualified for an anchorite, by Jovel I've walked, looking like an animated turnip, until I nearly dropped; and now, after all my exertions, after all my abetinence, I weigh, and find myself eight pounds too beavy. It's enough to break a fellow's heart!"

And something like a tear shoue in the eye which peoped out above the shining nose. Scoff him not ye who have never known what it is to strive against the misery of "superincumbent flock."

strive against the misery of "superincumbent flosh," not to fail in the strife.

"I was going to ride my chestnut horse, Pist Paff," the Major continued, dolorously. "I've backed him for a heap of money. You see he's such a queer-tempered beast I couldn't put an ordinary amasteur on him. I wish you'd ride him, Mowbray."

"When is it to come off?"

"To-morrow; it's the Wharneshire Hunt Steeple-chase. The borse will go on to-night; we can go down to norse was go on to haght; we can go down to morroing; and if we catch an early train back we'll have such a joily dinner in town!" And the speaker's eyes glis-tened once more, this time with pleasurable emo-

"I'll ride him for you with pleasure," Mow-bray said; "but I shall have to leave town in the evening. I am going down into the country."

Captain Mowbray's heart was still very sore,

Captain Mowbray's heart was still very sore, and as he had not fasted he did not feel that a dinner would afford him any especial consola-

After a brief consultation the friends arranged that they would go together to Wharneshire that night, and that Captain Mowbray's servant should call in town for his master's letters, and follow the latter down to the race meeting on the fol-lowing morning. Was there in Thurstan's mind a lingering hope that Lady Diana might repent her decision, and dispatch some sign of grace in pursuit of him? If he did nourish any such hope it was faint and fine as a spider's thread, and he himself was hardly conscious of its subtle existence.

"That boy, young Orme, is going to ride a mare of his own, which he has hunted once or twice. I do not fancy his father knows he is out on this occasion. Belton of ours is up too, out on this occasion. Belton of ours is up too, and Flitter rides Antelope."

Flitter was a professional; and be, the Major added, with solemn emphasis, "was dangerous."

CHAPTER LL. THE STEEPLE-CHASE.

At an early hour on the following morning six men might have been seen studying the to-pography of the Wharneshire Hunt Steeple-chase pography of the Wharneshire Hunt Steeple-chase course with somewhat of the solemnity of chiefs of an army surveying a proposed field of battle. These were Mowbray and Course Orme (riding under the name of Emro to evade paternal scrutiny), Major Welter and Captain Belton, Flitter the "dangerous" and Mr. Knowhon, a well-known performer in the pigskin. Four of the faces looked anxious. Major Welter's alone was screne; he was not going to ride, and the fences didn't look nearly so hig to him as they did to the others. the others.

"Do you think your little mere is up to this, Orme?" Mowbray asked, anxiously, of Courad Orme. "And won't there be the deuce of a Orme. "And won't there be the deuce of a row when your governor hears what you are going to do?"

"If the governor chooses to quarrel with me I can't help is," young Conrad said, grandly; "a man must have his amusements, and I've every confidence in the mare."

"Rather creepy, don't you think?" Captain Belton suggested to Flitter, with a look of sick aversion at a wide double.

"Not a bit of it, Sir," the perfessional said, not understanding the speaker's meaning as to the danger's making his flesh croep; "as nice a flying country as you need to ride over."

His cheery voice was felt as an insult by the others as they gloomily accurinized a stiff flight of posts and rails.

"Piff Paff, if I remember right, gave me a crumpling over a low gate last year, when I rode him to bounds for you," Mowbray said, with an uneasy twist of his neck, and a vivid recollection of the full which kept him silly for ten days after. Yes," Major Welter answered, gayly; "and I got over so well on my second horse."

Captain Belton looked uncomfortable, and sugd an adjournment to the paddocks, and to gested an adjourn brandy and sods.

It was not until an hour or two later, when Captain Mowleny had been lifted on to the queer-tempered chestnut, that his servant made his appearance, holding in his hands his master's letters and papers.

"Clear the way!" the rider cried, angrily, as "Hear the way: the finer tried, enging, or Piff Paff essayed to go out of the paddock hu-man-wise on two legs. "I can't look at them now; or stay" (the "queer-tempered" had al-tered his tactics, and preferred to stick his forefeet into the ground, with a look of stolid determ-ination in his wicked-looking eyes and ears); "I might as well see the outsides."

Thurstan hastily scanned the handwriting on the various envelopes. There was none from Lady Di; and in noting the omission he felt conscious of feeling a little more heavy at heart than he had done two minutes before. There was, however, an envelope marked immediate, and this he tore open, taking advantage of the chestnut's temporary quiescence.

Major Welter coming up to give his friend various hints as to the best modes of outwitting, coercing, and cajoling Piff Paff, was struck with consternation at the sight of the rider's face; all the bloom of color had died away from it—it was dall and heavy-looking as load; his head drooped on his breast; his hands were trembling; his eyes glazed. Had the chestnut but known it, he might have shaken his rider from him as though he were a dead leaf.

"Surely be don't funk," the Major muttered, in his disc

Here, Mowbray, shall I bring you some brandy?"

"Yes, brandy!" Thurstan echoed, mechanically.

But the brandy did not bring the color to his checks nor the light to his eyes.

checks nor the light to his eyes.

"There are some things brandy can't get st," the Major said, reflectively; "funk is one of 'em; but I never should have believed Mowbray could lose his perve."

Here Piff Paff, tired of a resolution which no one tried to induce him to alter, began to walk quietly forward, and Mowbray was awoke by the movement to the necessities of his position. "Ilon't be afraid—I'm not nervous," he said, in answer to his friend's saxious glance; "only I have some bad news, and it rather upset me;

that's all."
"If he makes a mull of it I shall have to bolt over seas," Jack Welter thought, sadly; and then he turned and looked at the rival mounts

There was Conrad, the feather of the race, who at ten stone, and in the airiest of breeches and the most impossible of gossamer boots, so fragile as to put a thorn or a rough bush out of the question, was to ride his own little mare, Prim-rose, and we may be sure that, with all the lad's faults, he will ride beldly if not well; Captain Belton was there, adjusting his horse Greyling's double bridle with a somewhat tragic expression

"I don't fancy myself a bit," he explains, candidly, to Flitter. "This violent, lurching brute will never get round the first turn, but will bolt away Heaven knows where.

Mr. Knowlton looks at his sweet-tempered Madonna, and inwardly passes a vote of confidence in her. She and her rider are well acquainted, and have mutual trust one in the other.

The glare of the white booths, the guy colors, the discordant sounds, the course itselfposts with blue flags—the eager faces of the crowd, the dark, shining shadows which seemed like horses passing out of the paddock in line— for an instant or so all these appeared blurred and confused to Mowbray; he was blind and doaf in the first sun of that grievous surprise.

"She is dead!" be muttered; "abe is dead, and I have killed her!"

For Douglas had not spared him the truth in the brief letter in which he told him of Azalea's

"She is dead, and you have murdered her. I have seen a letter you wrote to that soomen. She your wife—had seen it; it appears that you accidentally lost it at Auriel; Azolea saw it, and the neuron consed to see it until the died; the thought of you troubled her to the last. I am thankful that her pain is over."

The sound of a crazy bell now compelled an interval of natural attitudes on the part of the acrobats, silenced the voices of the itinerant musicians, and that of the gipsy who was promising immense returns in the shape of blue-eyed sweet-hearts and large families for the small outsweet-hearts and large families for the small out-lay of one sixpence. The last old woman has been run nimbly off the course by the assistance of two policemen, when Captain Belton comes sailing along on Greyling. He has his hands full, and is doing all he knows to restrain his impetuous brute, who, feeling the curb brought to bear, answers by mad plunges and bounds in the air; by dint of hauling his excited head round till it almost brushes his rider's knees, Captain Balton at length reduces Greyling's Captain Belton at length reduces Greyling's movements to a rational canter, and the house subsides into a walk, just as the rider, his arms cramped and numb with pain, is mentally yow-ing Greyling as a sacrifice to dogs.

Meanwhile, Conrad and Knowiton have taken their canters past the stand and over the bushed hurdles in front of it, their nags going finently and easily, Courad a little excited, and eager to be first over, his bright boyish face and yellow carls making him the especial favorite of the la-

Flitter now catches hold of Antelope; he is a little anxious to know what sort of a performer he has under him. The horse and the rider have never met before to-day; but experience is the schoolmaster of sympathy, and the jockey feels, rather by instinct than any thing else, the almost imperceptible protest lodged by his lean, wiry-looking thorough-bred against the object

A firm vice-like hold of the horse's head, and A firm vice-nee note of the horse's head, and a sudden grip from the knees, and Antelope is brought up to the hardle wish such a determined rush that he gives up all idea of his meditated rebellion, and flies his obstacle in such style as (combined with his rider's close seat and steady hands) confirm him more strongly than ever in his position of first favorite.

Lastly came Thurstan Mowbray-his check was flushed now, and his eyes bright with un-natural excitement. He meant "to ride like the devil," he told himself. He shouldn't care

If he got spilled, or even had a very bad fall; the world was a bothering world after all. At an event he should get free of the burden of inversible self-repressible. He dare not dwell too long on the horror of that letter, he feared he might been his head altogether. As it was, Azale... white, dead face kept rising before him, and once he even lifted his hand to put it gently

"I wish you'd take it away until the rare is over," he murmared, half aloud; and Major Welter, thinking his friend alluded to the brandy flask, put it out of sight; and perhaps it was well he did so, for Captain Mowhray had already con-sumed a considerable amount of its contents.

At present, however, his judgment was not one whit impaired by the stimulant he had taken, nor by his mental distress. The force of taken, nor by his mental distress. The torce of habit is a strong controlling power. It is said that men in battle sometimes sit their horses with consummate grace and skill, even while Death is in their hearts. Mowbray, with a growing madness in his brain, sat said handled the uneasy beast he rode with all his usual ability. He walked Piff Paff slowly up to the hurdles, and district the brain leaves more his neck with all the rocks.

and flapping the reins loose upon his neck, tried to put and talk the chestnut into a belief that motody wanted him to jump.

"What's your jock about, Welter?" asked a horsey-looking man, clad in the costume sup-posed to be identical with a taste for sport-i. e., tight trowsers and stunted cost.
"Can't tell, can't tell," was the burried reply.

"Never interfere with another man's riding, especially when he knows as much as Mowbray

Meanwhile, Mowbray having approached as near to the hurdles as he dared, veered his horse round, and picking up his roins, quickly darted off in an opposite direction for a brushing spin. The spectators looked blank at being balked of the anticipated jump.

He of the tight trowsers, who had watched the recentling with pudicariand proceeding with undisguised scorn, shouted in "Five to one against Piff Paff." "Put it down to me, Sir," coolly rejained

Major Weiter.

"To a £100, if you like," said the other.

"It's a bet," replied the Major; adding to a keen-eyed bookmaker standing near to him—

"I only got four to one from you."

"No, Sir, and I wouldn't give you three to

The horses now walked quietly down to the post, where Lord Pastern, who, as the "correct eard" affirmed, was acting as starter, had already arrived.

Come back behind the post!" shouted my lord, who had taken some lessons in the art of starting; "I won't start you till you're all be-hind the post. Now, Captain Mowbray, why are you hanging back? Come up, come up!" I'll Paff makes a few steps in a forward di-rection, and Course, taking this as a hint to be off, digs his spars into Primrose, and jumps away; the others, infected by his example, also spring forward till they have gone about two hundred yards, when Flitter, who feels rather than sees there is something wrong, pulls up and returns. Conrad Orme and Knowlton soon follow his example, and so would Captain Belton if Greyling permitted it; but the latter bolts as far as the stand, where he stops short, like one of those willful toy-mice, which, when once wound up, run their own way or none at all.

"Get inside him, Captain. "Really, Sir, how much start do you want?" Amidst such like derision, Captain Belton "winds his solitary way" back to the starting-

"What, Flitter, you here?" cries Lord Pastern, as the jockeys rejoin him. "Why, what on earth makes you poke your nose in here, as the doves in the dove-cot said to the eagle, 'I suppose you've got a certainty?" What's your ring?"

"He's a four-year-old, my lord," whispers Flitter, mysteriously. "He's by Thunderbolt; they tried him to be a fairish borse last year;
they tried him to be a fairish borse last year. but he turned cur, so they put him to cross country work. He's as clever a fencer as ever wore a bridle, but I'm sadly afraid he'll cut it to-day, if there's any thing good enough to stretch his neck. Still his owner has backed him for a heap of money."

"Well, he has to carry ten pound extra for professional assistance, Flitter; but I fancy you can give away that little lump."

can give away that little lump."

"Not to Captain Mowbray, my lord. I don't know who can give him weight over a country be knows as much as most of us."

By this time the borses were nearly all in a beap, and Lord Pastern dropped his flag with a hearty "go!" The three bounded away in close order an! kept pretty well tegether until the hordles at the stand, a quarter of a mile frum the starting-post, were nearly reached. from the starting-post, were nearly reached, when Captain Belton shot to the front, and with outstretched neck and star-gazing head his brute, never rising, smashed through the hurdle in front of him; almost simultaneously, Courad, Flitter, and Knowlton topped the gorse, while Mowbray quietly slipped through the pas-sage cleared by Greyling. Passing the stand and betting ring, the riders eatch occasional shouts of five to four against Antelope, two to one against Piff Paff, and poor Captain Belton, if he were still within ear-abot, might have beard the mocking cries of fifty to one against Greyling; the latter never slackens as he draws near the fence in front of him, but taking off out of distance crashes down to the bottom of the ditch and there reposes. His jockey has just time to arise and swear that he is a dead man, when Conrad, by this time two lengths ahead of the running horses, hurries down to the obstacle; Mowbray and Knowlton take the jump shoulder to shoulder; while Flister, easing his mag, shaves the flag in cutting off the corner. A beautiful piece of sound turf suc-ceeds, and the four sail away as if the field had no boundary, Flitter holding Antelope hard by the head, as much as to say"Now, this is the finest fun in the world, and if you don't take care I won't let you have the spree of going at all."

Thereby deceiving the wily nag and infusing courage into his cowardly heart.

The exit is at last arrived at, and a trumpery little thing it looks—so insignificant that Con-rad's mare blunders on to her head and throws him on to her neck, so that he has to work back by degrees and fish uncomfortably for a lost stirrup, which seems like a stirrup possessed, and flies up and down, banging his log thinly encased in his riding-boot. Seeing the consequence of Primrose's inattention to the ditch, Knowlton pulls round Madonna opposite to a small thorn-bush which he thinks will make her rise.

His ruse succeeds. Meanwhile Piff Paff, who is in an unwontedly gracious mood, thanks to the scothing influence of Mowbray's delicate yet firm handling, simply strides away, and secunot to see the gap he flies over; while Flitter, with a "Come up, horse!" also follows in safety. They now cross a deeply-plowed fallow field, which necessitates some holding together, albeit the land is so dry that the horses more in a cloud of dust; and Flitter, who is lying back, blinks his eyes uncomfortably at the showers of clods and small stones thrown up by his predecessors.

Antelope also shows his disgust by shaking his head from side to side. Catching sight of a cross-furrow, Knowlton drops Madonna into it, and, feeling the relief of coming on to firm going, sends her along at a rattling pace, imme-diately followed by Mowbray. The mishap at the gap had dispossessed Courad of the lead; but he now works his way to the front, and pounds along, regardless of the furrow, think-ing only how to regain the foremost place, which object he achieves, not without trying poor Prim-rose severely. The fallow runs out into a green lasse, seatched by an encampment; and the tawny rose severely. The fallow runs out into a green lase, patched by an encampment; and the tawny children, who resemble the received notion of imps, shout with gles as Primrose, springing to the summit of the opposite bank, disappears in Madonna, Piff Paff, and Antelope follow, and the pace improves with the horses' approximation of the elastic sod.

"Hang it!" ejaculates Conrad, "what a deace "Hang it!" ejacuases Conras, "wast a desce of a wind there is!" The lad thinks he is in a gale, from the pace at which he is tearing along; but, in fact, there is not a breath stirring. "I must keep my mouth shut," he thinks, "for my tongue feels like leather. What wouldn't I give for a wine-glass of water? Hold up, old woman!" he cries to Primmes, who is certifur careless in he cries to Primrose, who is getting careless in her fatigue, and, pusting her foot into a water furrow, threatens to somerscult.

The game little mare cheers up at the sound of his voice, and changing her leg, gathers her-self together for the post and rails, which now show new, hard, and forbidding at the bottom of the pasture.

"Well, there's no breaking theu," thinks Flitter; but he yet resolves that the other three shall have the first chance.

Mowbray clenches his teeth as he mutters, 'I wonder if—" and sits back on the chestnut, prepared to rouse him with the spurs at the very Yoi, over!" screems Knowlton to Conrad whose answering cheer rings in the air as he lands well in the next field, succeeded by Ma-donna, both horses performing faultlessly. Mowdonna, both horses performing faultlessly. Mow-brny draws Piff Paff nearly into a trot until close up, when he drives the sluggard at the timbers vigorously, his tactics serving him so well that he gets over with a bang which reminds the horse that oak rails carry not me tangers plainly on "Lucky I didn't lark over those hurdles at the stand," thinks Mowbray. "He'd have been sure to sweep them away, and to have tried the same game here."

Flitter, not daring to check his uncertain Antelope too much, rises simultaneously with Mow-bray and gets over with the same luck. The brook is swung over without a mistake, greatly to the disappointment of the crowd. Steeple-chase brooks are not as hunting brooks, and afford no fair trial to a hunter's water-jumping abilities. In the steeple-chase brook the take off and the landing are insured sound, and a low flight of gorsed hurdles conceals the sheen of the water from the horse until it is too late for him to retreat. A few more fences, chiefly bank and ditch, and the competitors near the stand once more. Flitter glances his eye along the cords to catch the eye of Antelope's trainer, while Mowbray listens mechanically to the changes in the betting. The twenty to one against Primrose conveys no warning to the excited Conrad, who can not resist urging his mare to "leave those duffers standing, and win in a walk. Poor lad, poor horse! She does try her best; but though her rider has sense enough to save her a little by selecting the sound furrow in the fallow field, and although he does continue to load first out of the lane, this time lined with the noisy expectant children, the jaded mare reels over the bank, and is passed immediately by the other horses. Ah! Primrose passed by those you led so gallantly, who shall tell the pein you feel?

Mowbray now takes up the running: he conjectures that to tire faint-hearted Antelope will be his most workmanlike plan. He sees Madonna has done her best, and that henceforth the race lies between Piff Paff and the favorite. Calculating with reason that the previous bruises over the timber have taught his horse a lesson, he faces the posts and rails confidently, and gets over claverly, succeeded by Antelope, who rape all fours, and Madonna, who follows suit. Con- ing boy, yearning for one look, one word of rec-rad comes laboring on, the more straggling painfully to keep her companions in sight,

"I may yet do it," the lad thinks; "they may all come to grief afterward; and if I can but get over this, I may win even now. For-rad, formd!" he cries; "once more, old girl,

And hand and heel go desperately to work.

Primrose looks helplessly from side to side as though seeking an alternative, and then, game to the last, although she feels her strength is utterly spent, she gives a pitiful spring, catches both fore-legs on the top rail, and crashes headlong down on the grass beyond. Presently the exhausted mare struggles up again, but the rider does not move. The ladies in the stand see through their foryusties that a huddled heap of pink and white hoops is lying like a crumpled rag on the green meadow, but fortunately for them they can not distinguish the face of the pretty boy-jockey.

The sun shines down fiercely on him, but his upturned eyes do not shrink; awe-stricken men whisper questions to him, but he preserves an ominous silence; his cheek is stained by some thing redder than a blush, and his features have their shape under the imprint of his borse's

But just now and he had flashed through sur and shadow a gracious living presence; now be lay stiff and ungainly with the ugliness of death creeping on him. A few moments' since and he had passed the grand stand a any-hearted lad, his checks glowed by the wind, his bright short curls glistening in the sun, and with no more solemn thought in his mind than that, "If he won, perhaps the governor would not so much mind his having ridden."

Now he was something which could not even think; something with a face which was a fearful parody on humanity; something which every instant was going further away from the world without being able to breathe it a farewell.

"Breathing still, but senseicss, breathing ster-torously," as the doctor expressed it, who is one of those quickly collected round the fallen youth; some half a dozen men take off their coars with some man a cosen men take off their coats with eager kindness, and stretching them over the hard bars of a neighboring gute, carry the body to a farm-house, where the doctor and a few of the farmer's friends keep watch over the unfor-tunate young gentleman, living still, but too true a prophet when he shouted to Primrose, "For the last time." the last time."

Unconscious of Conrad's fate, the other three pursue their way; Thurstan increasing his lead, Flitter waiting with the bravest patience, for he knows he dare not press Antelope, and Knowiton gradually tailing off; the arymetres at the stand can now discern the state of the race, and the most practiced eyes begin to discredit Antelope. "The favorite's beat!" roar the bookmakers, Piff Paff scaller in," they add.

But Mowbray is not yet over the brook, and nearly as he thinks of it he would be more cautious and less confident if he saw a staring white greyhound, which, pazzled at the numbers of propies and the open space left for the steepic-chasers, comes bounding along and arrives on the opposite bank just as Piff Paff is making his spring. It is too late to make any effort to avert the catastrophe, and in an instant dog, horse, and rider are rolling in the mud. Thurscan holds on the the river and taking them over 150 Reff. to the reins, and taking them over Piff Paff's ears strips off the bridle, but rising immediately throws his arms round the horse's neck, while a by-stander assists him in readjusting the bit.

In the interval Flitter gets over the water, fol-lowed by Madonna, and dreading Mowbeny's reappearance, makes play at the best pace his tir-ing horse can raise, having too a conviction that even the slow but honest Madonna may, if she can only get alongside of him, snatch the victory in the last few strides, Layers look black, and backers rejoice. "The invocite wins easy!" thinks the crowd, and in that moment of excitoment even women forget to wonder if that dear little boy, carried away on the litter, was much injured.

"Is the other fellow coming on?" sh Flitter to a countryman, staring with all his Flitter to a countryman, staring with all his might at the closing issue of the race. But Antelope has swept yards away before the meaning of the query reaches the stupefied yokel.

The other fellow is coming on, hand over hand, knowing his horse will try, and that Antelope will show the white feather if Piff Paff can but collar him. Mowbray does all he knows, and clearing the last fence is soon within fifty yards of the leader. Carching and passing the beaten Madonna, he crosps up inch by inch; at the distance he is within ten lengths, and resolves to wait to the last. They are now close to home. Antelope gives an uneasy whisk of to home. Antelope gives an uneasy whisk of his tail, a symptom of defeat not lost on Mowbray, who calls on his horse with all the power he is capable of. Flitter finds Antelope sinking, and almost against his better judgment, pickup his whip; he finds no response from his ex-hausted nag. Giving in at once on the exhibihausted nag. Giving in at once on the exhibi-tion of punishment Antelope lets up Piff Pull, whose final rush lands him at the post, a clever winner by half a length.

"You have ridden magnificently, my boy," Major Welter said, shaking his jock's hand energetically, "and by Jove! it's the making of me, Mowbray."

Later he added, "Don't go down into the country, Mowbray; stay and make a night of it in town with me." it in town with me.

"No," Thursten said, with an odd look on his baggard face. "I sha'n't go down into the country, I'm going abroad, Welter. Between you and me, there was a dead woman holding her face close to mine during all that race, and I want to get away from her. I shall go home

Late that night Lord Orme bent over his dy-ognition, but "For the last time, for the last time," was all that Courad said; and these piteous echoes of his fatal encouragement to poor Primrose were the only coherent words that passed his lips.

When the sun next dawned the lad was at peace, and Lord Orme, bitterly stricken by the unexpected anguish of this last misfortune, kiss-ed the poor bruised lips with his face stream-ing with tears, and asked himself if this were retribution!

THE AUSTRALIAN REPUBLIC.

WE have received a printed document setting forth sixteen reasons for the independence of the six Australian colonies, and their federation in the form of a Republic. The reasons are good, and the result aimed at is merely a question of time. We have only room for the following extime. We have only room for the following ex-tract: "As Australia and New Zenland, with tract: "As Australia and New Zeoland, with area and capabilities for supporting a population of 50,000,000, count as yet less than 2,000,000, their first great vital 'want' is, of necessity, the want of more people, the want of that more expital and labor, energy, enterprise, art, and skill, ever, by the goblen stream of emigration, flowing from the Old World to fractify the Next. That in the last fifty years, while only one mill-ion British emigrants have settled in British colsties in America, four millions have settled in the adjacent United States, and that as German and Continental emigration have been wholly to the latter, it may fairly be estimated that, in the last half century, for every one emigrant family settling in America under the British flag, six have chosen to settle under the Stars and Stripes. That as the natural advantages of large portions of the British colonies in America are as great as those of the United States, this sixfold superiority of the latter over the former in popularity and repute, as an emigration field, proves that, politically and socially, an independent Republic of British origin and genius is vastly more attractive to the emigrant militions of the Old World than an independent of the Old World than are subordinate British colonies, and that this pregnant fact alone might wisely desermine Australiain to cease to be the ene, and to be-come the other."

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

ANY THESE SET & FIGTION-IN-LAW-A Mother-in-

May a glass of spirits taken in a garret be called a rese-attic performance?

A "HANDY" Green-A blind man's dog.

The Earl of _____ of pumposes notoriety and paret-mentous collebrity, superintends personally the prod-uce of his dairy, and not unfrequently sells the rolls to the village dublers with his own hands. One mern-ing a proity little girl presented her penny and her pitcher to his lord-ship for mills. Pleased with the ap-pearance of the child, he pathed her on the head and gave her a kiss. "Now, my pretty has," he said, "you may tell as long as you live that you have been kissed by an earl." "Ah! but," replied the child, "you dook the peane, though !"

John Smith fell in love with a maid; Each night 'neath the window he stood, And there, with his soft accrease, He wakened the whole neighborhood! But valuely he tried to accesse. Her sleep with his strains so bewitching; While he played in front of the house, She slept in the little back kitchen.

An old lady was asked what she thought of the cellipse. She replied: "Well, it proved our thing; and that is, that the papers don't always ite."

A quack medicine vendor at the South heads one of his advertisements as follows: "Sick Babies Want-ed."

APOLOGETIC. APOLOGIETIC.

I'd offer thee this hand of mine,
If thee but hadst the direce,
But purses short and blim as thine
Won't do for these hard times.
I leave thee in thy wreethedness,
As one too poor to mate,
For love, you know, can only bless
When based on real estate.

Mark Twain at the Town or Aram.—"The temb of Adam! How touching it was here in a land of strangers, for away from home, and friends, and all who cared for me, thus to discover the grave of a blood relation. Thus, a distant one, but still a relation. The unerring instinct of nature thrilled its recognition. The sunetain of my filled affection was sirred to its profoundest depths, and I gave way to immittations emotion. I leaned upon a piller and hores into tears. I deem it no shame to have wept over the grave of my poor dead relative. Let him who would sneer at my emotion close this volume here, for he will find bettle to his taste in my journeyings through Holy Land. Noble old man—he did not live to see he shift, Ad I—i—alas I did not live to see him. Weighed down by sorrow and disappointment, he died before I was born—alas it with fortlinde. Let us trust that he is better of where he is."

A WHEELOCIPEDE.

It has only one wheel, Neither treadle nor saddle; It has only one wheel, Neither treadle nor saddle;
It is built in such shape
That you don't have to straddle.
The man who propole it Takes hold with his hands of two parallel hars,
And on the ground stands:
Puts his feet in motion,
One after the other,
While the vehicle gree
Without any bother.
This funny mechline
Has no painting or gilding;
It is useful to carry Material for building—
Shingles and shavings,
Brick, hune, and plaster—
And the lighter the load
It can travel the fastor.
It is better than a bicycle,
Por it len't so marrow;
And our whoelectpede
We call as wheel-barrow!

"Bridget, what became of the tailow I greated my boots with this morning?" "I fried the buckwheats in h." "Ob, I was afraid you had wasted it."

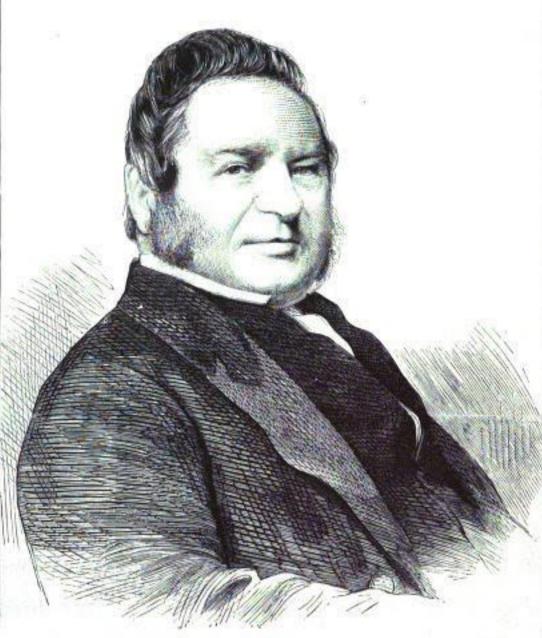

REV. F. J. JOBSON, D.D.

Ar the opening of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference at Hull, En-gland, early in August, the Rev. Prenence J. Jorson, D.D., was elected President of the Conference during the twelvemonth ensuing, and received from Mr. Hall, the and received from Mr. 15.11., call retaining President, the official seal of the Conference, and Jones Wastar's pocket Bible. Dr. Jones was born at Lincoln in 1812; and, having received a good education, was articled to learn the profession of an architect, with Mr. Williams, F.S.A., of Lincoln, While living under his master's roof Mr. Jouunder his master's roof Mr. Jou-son received much literary instruc-tion from the Roman Catholic clergy who frequented Mr. Witt-son's house. But he remained a Protestant, and entered the Wes-leyan Ministry in 1834. From that time to this be has been un-trion in his services to the Church tiring in his services to the Church of his choice. He has been stationed in some of the most important circuits in the Methodist conant circuits in the Methodist connection, including the First London, First Leeds, Fifth Manchester, and Bradford Circuits. He was also appointed by the Confercase to visit the Methodist Episcopal Chirch of Amorica, in company with Dr. HANNAH. While in America he expressed his humane sympathics with the negro race, and declined to be serarated from and declined to be separated from them either in traveling or at the American universities that he got the degree of D.D. Dr. Jonson has published several works which has published several works which have attained success in Methodist literature; among his other works are "Australia, with Notes by the Way;" "A Mother's Portrait," and "A Tribute to the Memory of Dr. Bunting," He is one of the best preachers in the connec-tion; and his conduct as President is distinguished by satisfy invantial. is distinguished by strict impartiality and amiable manners,

THE WAR IN CUBA.

It is impossible even yet to as-certain the precise situation in Caba, as between the Spaniards and the Patriots. But, whatever may be the result of the conflict, there can be no doubt as to its devolution observed. The recture desolating character. The picture desolating character. The picture which we give on this page is a characteristic representation of the Vandalism to which both parties seem to have abandoned themselves. Confiscation and despellation are the order of the day. Such events as that illustrated have frequently occurred

REV F. J. JOBSON, D.D., PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN METHODIST CONFERENCE, ENGLAND.

HON. FOSTER BLODGETT.

FEW men of any age or country have been the object of more unmerited abuse and persecution,

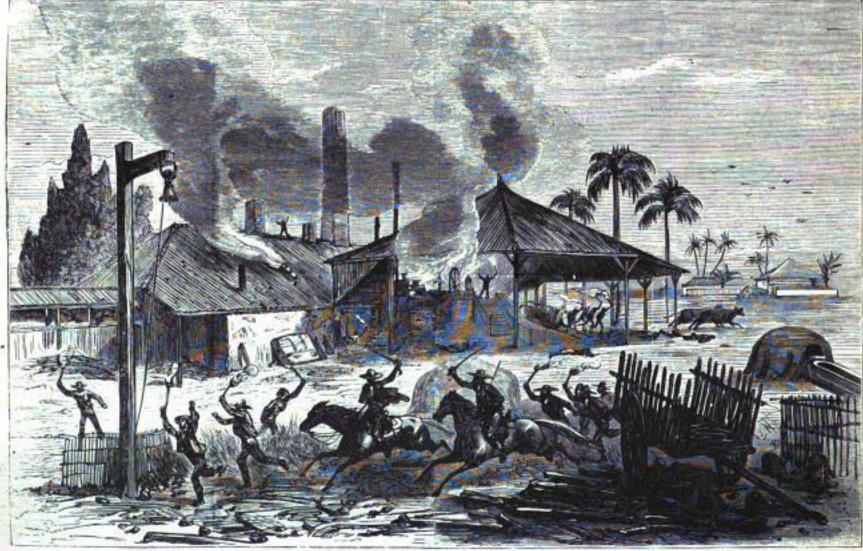

FOSTER BLODOKET, Chairman of the State Central Committee of the Republican party in Georgia. A man of strong native intellect, a bold

May, 1860, and which nominated Belle, of Tennessee, and Evekery, of Massachusetts, as candidates of the Whig-Union party for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency of the United and original thinker, independent in character, sincere in his convic-tions, ardent in devotion to prin-ciple, and uncompromising and de-termined in the execution of his plans, Mr. BLODGETT has long been regarded as a representative man of his State, and one of the most formidable opponents of the pro-rebel Democracy of his native pro-rebel Democracy of his native section. That such a man should be assigned leadership in his own party, and thereby excite the bitterest animosities of his opponents, is not unnatural. The first public man in Georgia to openly advocate the organization of a political party in the State looking to the overthrow of the old sectional hierarchy, and the restoration of the State to its proper relations with the Union, upon the basis of Republican principles, he early en-deared himself to the Union men of his section, and he also called down upon his head the anathemas of the decaying political dynasty of Georgia. Mr. BLODGETT was born in Augusta, Georgia, January 15, 1826, and is consequently now in his forty-fourth year. He was edu-cated in the common schools of his own State, and entered the arena of politics as a Union Whig of the HENRY CLAY school-thus beginning his career as an uncompromising opponent of the domin-ant party of his State. Only three months after attaining to his ma-jority he was elected member of the Common Council of his native city, and served in that capacity for several years. At the age of twenty-four he was elected Bridge Keeper, and to that position of Keeper, and to that position of trust and responsibility was annu-ally re-elected for five successive years, when he refused longer to be a candidate for the place. In 1856 he was elected Judge of the Probate Court, and School Com-missioner for Richmond County; and the appreciation of his services in this capacity was shown by his re-election in 1860. In August, 1859, at the age of thirty-three, he was chosen Mayor of the city; and the Augusta Water-Works, which have been carried on so successfully, were played by him. successfully, were planned by him, and completed during his adminis-tration. In 1800 he was again the choice of the people for Mayor. He was also appointed a delegate for the State at large to the Con-

May, 1860, and which nominated BELL, of

THE CUBAN INSURRECTION-THE PATRIOTS BURNING A SUGAR-MILL IN LOS INGENIOS, NEAR TRINIDAD.

States. It was during this memorable year that he presided, at the hazard of his life, over the last Union mass meeting held in Georgia previous to the outbreak of the rebellion; and it was from this date that those persecutions by secession leaders commenced, which have steadily pursued him to the present moment. At one time, during the progress of the war, these persecutions became so bitter and relentless as to victimize him under the military exactions of the Davis government, and force him for a time into the rebel army. He succeeded, however, in so far extricating himself from the military shackles as to return to his family with an honorable discharge, without ever having fired upon orable discharge, without ever having fired upon his country's flag. After the surrender of the rebel forces he was appointed, by President JOHNSON (June 25, 1865), Postmaster at Au-Joneson (June 25, 1865), Postmaster at Au-gusta. Refusing to become a party to Mr. Joneson's defection, he was suspended from the functions of his office, January 1, 1867, but was restored by the Postmaster-General, March 31, 1869. On the 1st of May, 1868, and dur-ing the period of his suspension by Mr. Jones-son, he was appointed Mayor of Augusta by General Pore, then Commandant of the Third Miller Description of the Augusta by Military District-a position which he held until December, 1868.

Mr. BLODGETT was President of the first Re-Mr. Blodgert was President of the first Republican Convention ever held in Georgia. This occurred on the 4th of July, 1867, and will be long remembered as the opening of that memorable political campaign which, for bitterness of invective and malignity of personal hatreds, stands almost unparalleled in the annals of partisan warfare. It was, in very truth, "a time to try men's souls." Inspired by the audacity and leadership of the old secession magnates, and encouraged by the defection of Georgeon Jun. encouraged by the defection of Governor Jus-kins and the obstinacy of President Johnson, the Democratic press of the State teemed with the grossest personal abuse of the more promi-nent leaders of the Reconstruction movement, nent leaders of the Reconstruction movement, and sought to manufacture a public sentiment that would rigidily estrucize every man suspected of "Radicalism," and even encourage wives to leave their husbands, and justify assassination itself for political opinions' sake. So terrible was this storm of malevolent invective and de-nunciation, so rigid the social estracism it occa-sioned, that many true Republicans lacked the moral courage to assert their honest convictions; and, rather than subject themselves and their and, rather than subject themselves and their families to such an ostracism, abandoned the field, and, in some instances, publicly recanted their faith! It was under such circumstances as these that FOSTER BLODGETT-a Southern man-took a bold and determined stand for the Hight, as against the clamor of a turbulent mob, and thereby became the central figure in this momentous drama. His election to the position of Chairman of the State Central Executive Committee seemed less a matter of form than neces-sity; and under his able administration confidence was restored in the Republican ranks, and the Convention was called by a respectable ma-jority of the registered voters. As a member of the State Constitutional Convention he was active and vigilant, originating many of the most important resolutions and ordinances that were adopted by that body. At the close of the campaign, and after the new State government had been inaugurated, Mr. BLODGETT received the nomination of his party for the position of United States Senator; but, through the defection of one States Senator; but, through the defection of one or two Republicans, who essayed to become "respectable" with the pro-rebel faction, he was defented in his election before the General Assembly, and Dr. H. V. M. MULLEH—the representative of a compromise between the Reconstructionists and the Democrats—was elected over the regular Republican nominee. As a delegate to, and one of the vice-presidents of, the National Republican Convention at Chicago that nominated Guant and Colfax to the Presidency and Vice-Presidency, Mr. Bloogers was active and conspicuous; and few men in the South contributed so much of time, energy, and personal sacrifice to the interests of the Republican ticket as he did. At present he is Treasurer of the Western and Atlantic (State) Railroad—the great railway thoroughfare of the State, —the great railway thoroughfare of the State, northward, to the Tennessee Valley—a position of great trust and pecuniary responsibility, to which he was recently appointed by Governor BULLOCK.

HON, FOSTER BLODGETT.

In person Mr. BLODGETT is of medium height In person Mr. BLODGETT is of medium height and size, slenderly but compactly built, and pos-sesses extraordinary powers of physical and men-tal endurance. His moral and intellectual facul-ties are well developed; in temperament he is nervous-sanguine, and walks erect, with a light, elastic step. In manner he is quiet and engag-ing; in conversation ready and always interesting. His words are generally few and well classen, and never fail to elicit attention, whether spoken in a tumultuous assemblage or in the more quiet detumultuous assemblage or in the more quiet de-corum of the committee-room. He is eminent-ly one of the representatives of the "self-made men" of our times; and has attained to great political influence n his section, without appear-ing to have sought it, or to have suspected that he possessed it. he possessed it.

RAKING FOR CLAMS.

The fleet of boats engaged in the clam business in Prince's Bay, south of Staten Island, numbers about one hundred and fifty vessels, of from two to twenty tens burden, and manned each by two or three men. This fleet sends to the New York markets during the summer season between 300,000 and 400,000 clams per week, and during the fall and winter seasons about double that quantity. The clams sell at the boats for about $5.50 to $4 per thousand. Our illustration on this page is from a charac-teristic drawing by Mr. Eawas Formes.

RAKING FOR CLAMS, PRINCE'S BAY .- [DRAWN BY EDWIN FORDER.]

A VERY SMALL COLONY.

WHEN the great Napoleon was conveyed to "Wild St. Helens," there to wear out his giant heart chafing against the iron rule of Sir Hud-son Love, the English placed a garrison on the little island of Tristan D'Acunha, thirteen hundred miles to the south of the sentry-girt Long-wood, to not as "contpost," or picket, to the na-val guard around St. Helena.

The Conqueror of All releasing in a few years the whilem master of Europe, the garrison was withdrawn from Tristan D'Acunha, and three men-o'-war sailors were left undisputed masters of this bright little gem of the sea

When H.M.S. Gorgon visited the group of islands of which Tristan D'Acanha is the largest and only inhabitable one, the approach to the shore was found difficult; indeed, it would be inaccessible were it not for a beautiful and curious provision of Nature, which has erected on the northeast side a natural breakwater of giant sen-weed, which makes the water as quiet as a mill-pond. The Goryou was boarded by six strapping scames, who came off in a very fine whale-boat, and accompanied some officers on shore.

They found there about a dozen buts, all built of solid stone, evidently the work of much patience and labor, but necessary to withstand the furious northerly gales. These little stone boxes are built here, there, and every where, more de-tached than one would think they should be for society's sake. Each has its little garden of po-tatoes, "cask" kennels, mongrel Newfoundland dogs, and substantial pig sties. The inhabitants of the island were, in all, forty-three-men, wo-men, and children. They are all related, but it is difficult to say how, as they have intermarried with each other until a few years since, when a Mr. Taylor visated them from the Cape of Good Hope, and for the sam of $ 5000 (which a philanthropic old Englishman left for the purpose) remained five years, improving and training their morals, etc.

This should be a happy family, but, strange to say, they are quite the centrary.

The patriarchs, at the period of the Gorgon's visit, were Thomas Swain, agod eighty-two, and Alexander Cotton, seventy-time, both old manof nar's men, discharged from the service half a century before to settle on this island.

The inhahitants subsist mainly on their land productions, having heris of tire sheep and bullocks, but obtain their luxuries by exchanging the monsters of the deep with masters of ships calling for water. During the months of Feb-ruary and August considerable numbers of secobspliants are eaught, the larger of which yield about four barrels of oil each. The tooks are small and of finite value. The islands also swarm with scals, from two thousand to three thousand having been seen in one year.

Whales are also caught, but seldom. The sea alone would make this dienry colony rich had they a good, stirring Yankee population, the present possessors making no exertion until a ship arrives; then the wholing, sealing, etc., com-morees. They barter all they eatch for English and American goods, and then they lie on their wars instead of laying in stocks of valuable oil. skins, tusks, corned beef, etc., ready for the next ship, the sure sale of which would specify en-rich them, and enable them to return to their lather-land with independent fortunes.

THE SOLAR MUTABILITY.

Seriesce is every day teaching us to think of the son, and what have now been so long called the "fixed" stars, with less and less of that souse of fixing which their enormous importance planetzer benees would seem to render desirable. Not only have we learned that all these so-called fixed contros of separate universes are themselves traveling in different directions (dragging their planetary systems after them), with chormons speed, though their distances from our own system are so great that, in the few centuries we have lead to study them, the change has not become very apparent to ordinary perceptions; but we have also learned that many of them are "va-riable" stars—our own sun among the number becoming beighter, and again less bright at fixed intervals of years: that some of them have broken up and disappeared some years (or perhaps thou-sends of years, before the blank raused by their disappearance rould have struck the bosson reti-New more, we now know that our own sun (re-embling in this probably most other solar badies of the same kind; is in so highly fluid and excitable a condition as to be constantly sending authors forked tomours for of miles in extent) of inflamed hydrogen gas, like the thickering streams of light from the stars of a street illumination; and, moreover, as to be subjest to great periodical disturbances, now called "acquetic storms," which are in all probability race of by certain condition in the movements of those little solid besites, on one of which we live, round the sun. Even now one such epoch of magnetic storm secus to be thought pretty near at hand. The sun has been lately exhibiting the most surprising forms of disturbance, and presenting to scientific eyes less "fixin" of essence than ever. Spots so vast that we must estimate their dimensions by millions of square miles have broken out from time to time. have presented rapid changes of figure, indica-ting the action of forces of inconceitable intensity. Chietors of smaller spots, extending over yet vaster areas, have exhibited every form of disturbance known to the solar physicist, and every degree of light, from the apparent blackness (in reality only teletive) of the nuclei, to the intense brilliancy of the faculous ridges.

And we now know that these appearances are not merely matters for the curious, with which,

as they happen at a distance of above ninety millions of miles, practical men need not concern themselves. In point of fact, it is by no means impossible that the issues of peace or war, of a financial crisis, or a religious agitation, may be chosely bound up with these phenomena—if not, indeed—which is also quite possible—the sadden disappearance of our whole system after the fishdisappearance of our whole system after the fash-tion of other solar systems which have thus dis-appeared. This much, at least, is certain, that the vast changes now going on in the physical constitution of the sun are changes which do most powerfully affect the electric condition of our earth, which have in former years caused the most violent disturbances in the various artificial as well as natural electric apparatuses of the world we live in, and which, to speak of the least of all its possible effects, might, just as well as not, happen some day to throw the electric condition of every telegraphic cable on our planet, under the sea or above it, into the most dire con-fusion, and send down telegraphic companies' fusion, and send down telegraphic companies' shares to zero in a lump, even if they did not contrive to telegraph to us, after some strange inarticulate fashion, that shares in all public companies, even in that very limited public company, the human race, are, in a physical point of view, of very doubtful value indeed. Let us explain briefly to what we allode. briefly to what we allode.

On September 1, 1859, shortly before noon, two astronomers—Mesers, Hodgson and Carring-ton—one at Oxford, the other in London, were at the same instant serutinizing a large group of sun spots. On a sudden two intersely bright patches of light appeared in front of the cluster. So brilliant were they that the observers thought the darkening se eens attached to their telescopes must have become fractured. But this was found not to be the case. The bright spots indicated some process going on upon the sun's surface a process of such activity that within five mina process of such activity that within the min-utes the spots traveled over a space of nearly 31,000 miles. Now, at the Kew Observatory there are self-registering magnetic instruments which indicate the processes of change by which the subtle influences of terrestrial magnetism wax and ware. At one time the line traced by the pointer will be marked by searcely perceptible undulations, indicating the almost quiescent state of the grant terrestrial magnet. At another, well-marked waves along the line exhibit the pulsations of the magnetic system, influenced in a number is yet unintelligible to the physicist. And then there is a third form of disturbance the sharp, sudden jerks of the pointer exhibiting the occur ence of those mysterious phenomena tenced "magnetic storms." When the records of the Kew Observatory came to be looked over, it was found that at the very instant in which the brilliant spots of light had appeared to Messrs. Hodgson and Corrington, the self-registering instruments land been subjected to the third and most significant form of disturbance—a magnetic storm begon, in fact, as the light broke out on the sun's surface. But this was not the only evidence of the sympathy with which the earth responded to the solar action. It was subsequently found that soon after the spots of light had appeared the whole frame of the earth had thrilled moder a mysterious magnetic influence. At the West Indies, in South America, in Australia, wherever magnetic observations are sys-tematically made, the observers had the same sto-ry to tell. In the telegraph stations at Washing-tomand Philadelphia the signalmen received strong cheetic shocks. In Norway telegraphic machinchemic shocks. In Norway telegraphic machin-ery was set on fire. The pen of Bain's telegraph was followed by a flame. And wherever telegraphic wires were in action, well-marked indi-cations of disturbance presented themselves. Even this, lowever, was not all. The great negocitic storm was not a more instantaneous electric three. Hours passed before the dis-turbed earth resumed its ordinary state. And thus it happened that in nearly all parts of the earth wide. Sill while the storm was to reearth night fell while the storm was yet in prog-During that night magnificent aurona spread their waving streamers over the sky, both in the northern and the southern hemisphere. As the disturbed needle vibrated, the colored streamers waved responsive, and it was only when the magnetic storm was subsiding that the auroral lights finled from the beavens,

Now, it is evident that these phenomena show the most intimate relation between these peculiar disturbances in the sun and the magnetic cur-rents of our own earth. Directly one of these changes takes place upward of ninety millions of miles away, the electric condition of our planet is changed in some mysterious way, of which our instruments, and even the co-lines of our sky, bear record. The pens of all our telegraphic wires may some day trace in flame a handwriting some of human destiny handwriting which during Beishazzar's feast traced a warning on the wall of the full of the Balalosian dynasty. Moreover, note this, that these changes in the condition of the sun take place at intervals of about eleven years. The variable star which swings us round it, as well as anpplying us with light and heat and (apperentningnerism, clouds over every eleven years with these spots, so that it seems most likely that every eleven years certain magnetic conditions recur which have not occurred in the interval. If so, perhaps, the magnetic excitement of 1850 will revue, and it may be in much greater force, next year—in 1870. And if it does, how are we to say what may or may not recur with it? is quote possible that those periods of speculative founcial excisement—which are also said to follow a periodic law of something very like the same period-may be more or less dependent on the nugnetic condition of our planet, that so mean a phenomenon as speculative frenzy on the varions stock exchanges of Europe may be more or less connected with these wonderful discharges of voltair batteries in the sam. Is it quit impossible that the electric political condition of Europe in 1848—and again, at an interval of eleven years, in the year of Italian revival and revolution, 1859—may not recur after one more period of eleven years, in 1870, in consequence of the returning epoch of magnetic excitement in the sun? It would be ridiculous to affirm that there could be no connection between the moral excitability of nations and electric phenomena on so grand a scale as this; nor would it in any degree be a grossly materialistic explanation of moral and spiritual changes, any more than it is a materialistic explanation of moral and spiritual a materialistic expansation of moral and spiritual changes to say that starving people are deficient in moral spirit, and that a storm of rain depresses the most gallant army that ever fought. Could we really establish any periodical law of electric excitement on the earth, it would not be irrational, but in the highest degree rational, to expect marked human phenomena in connection with it—either a great concurrent depression or a great concurrent stimulus to the energies of the buman beain.

The second secon

But, after all, what strikes our imagination most is the curious insight we are beginning to glean of the highly susceptible and sensitive constitution of the sun. That a mass but little denser even as a whole than water, nearly four times as light, bulk for bulk, as that of our own earth, but we would not be the proper of burning again. light, bulk for bulk, as that of our own earth, and sarrounded by an envelope of burning gas, which is by comparison with the intense heat and light of the proper surface of the sun itself mere cold and darkness—that a mere wandering flame of this kind, shooting rapidly through space, an iron-smelting furnace throwing out tongues of fire on all sides, and so highly susceptible to external influence the toertain combinations of planets which, when as thrown into the same scale. ets which, when at thrown into the same scale, would make up only an infinitesimal portion of the sun's mass, cause the most marvelous disturb-ances in his physical constitution, and lead to magnetic storms such as we have described on his surface—that such a body as this, we say, should yet for thousands of years exercise so orderly, continuous, and consistent an influence over the development of our terrestrial world and our human affairs, does seem truly marvelous. Can any thing be conceived less apparently likely can any thing be conceived less apparently inkey to lead to fixity of tenure in our universe than a centre for it such as this—a great boiling furnace of forces enveloped in an atmosphere of flaming gas, and subject to the most violent superficial excitements under the most apparently insignificant external influences? The old Hebrew conception of an earth "founded on the seas and established on the floods," which had been made so fast that it "could not be moved," was a conception of perfect solidity compared to that heliocentric basis of our universe—a harricane of fame the disturbances of which might perhaps be best represented to our imaginations by the occasional explosion of a planet or two of nitroglycerine, which we are compelled to substitute, Yet hence proceed attractions of gravitation which have not sensibly altered during the life of man have not sensitly aftered during the life of man upon the earth—waves of light indicating by their spectra the burning of the very same substances in the sun as were being consumed in all proba-bility when the words "let light be" were first registered—and, as we now appear likely to learu, periodic magnetic impulses, recurring with the constraints of secretary and solitons certain to be punctuality of seasons and eclipses, certain to be full of import for us, and yet not improbably of the same nature as those greater hurricanes by which other same have perished. Is it possible to conceive a more apparently unstable centre and fountain of a universe of law and order? Is it possible to conceive a more impressive lesson on the words, "He maketh his ministers a flam-

Drawersia Tanters cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Pifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Wattawe, 671 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, PRECKLES, and TAN from the face, use PERRY'S MOTH AND PRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Perry, & Bond St., N. Y. Hold by all Druggiets.

PRINT, 49 BORG SL., N.Y. Sold by all Drugglets.

NEW INDESPENSABLE HAND BOOK. For Hence Improvement for both Young and Old.
HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE, and HOW TO TALE, HOW TO BUSINESS.
In one handsome volume of 600 pages. Sent by first post for $2 Z, by S. R. WELLS, 369 Broadway, N. Y.

Also, Just Published:
WEDLOCK; es. Thus Resert Relations or the Sexies. $1 50; Extra Gli, $2.—HOW TO READ CHARACTER, a Self-Examiner, with 170 Illustrations. $1; in Muslin, $1 20.—OLATORY, with a Chairman's Guide. $1 50.—NEW ANNUAL of PRIES.
NOLOGY for 1870. Only 35 cents.—Works on Short-liand, the Natural Sciences, &c. Agents wanted.

URNITURE.

We invite buyers to visit our extensive warerooms and examine our large stock of Suites for Parlors, Chambers, Dinling-Rooms, Librarios, &c. Manufac-tured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every particular

With unequaled facilities and a ripe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promlie too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be beaten in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers and Dealer
25 and 77 Spring Street, corner Crosby.

THE BEST WRINGER, THE RELIANCE,

With Keyed Bolls and Spiral Cog wheels, manufac-tured by PROVIDENCE TOOL CO., Providence, R. L. NEW YORK STORE, 20 BEEKMAN STREET. Also, Heavy Hardware, Suit-Chardens, and Sail-Marries Goods, &c., &c. Manufacturers of

PEABODY BREACH-LOADING FIRE-ARMS.

THE ESTEY COTTAGE ORGAN is the best and chempest. Contains the latest improvements... For Humana and For Jubilente. J. ESTEY & CO., Sole Manufra, Brattleboro, VL.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

"Unquestionably the best sustained work of the kind in the world."

Harper's Magazine.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1869:

CONTENTS FOR CHPTENERS, 1969;

PHOTOGRAPHS FROM THE HIGH ROCKIES, Linewtattors.—Traveling above the SnowLine.—The Photographer's Outst.—Gold Hill and Sliver City.—The Nettle.—Pyramid Leke.—
Birange Tufa.—The Carson Sink.—High Water.—
The Ruby Hange.—Calon in the Imby Range.—
Shifting Sand Mounda.—Above the Shoehone
Falls.—Natural Bridge.

Falls.—Natural Bridge.
THE ETE AND, THE CAMERA.

Larreramona.—The Photographic Camera.—
Photographic Operating Room. — The Inverted Image.—The Byeball.—The Dark Chamber.—Section of the Ryo.—Reversed Image in the Dark Chamber.—The Three Aspects of the Hand.—
Taking Stereoscopic Picture of Near Objects.—
Storeoscopic Camera.—Siding Stereoscope.
OUT IN THE STREETS.
BOADDER BYMINISCHACOR.

BORDER REMINISCENCES,

ILLUSTRATIONS.—Dismounted Cavalry.—A De-moralized Negro.—"Look-s-yere, Mister I"—A Scene in Court.

SUMMER FRIEND. A HEALTH TRIP TO BRAZIL.

Litervariosa - Street Scene, Pernambreo.—
Charlotte Amelie, St. Thomas.—Hanling in a Indphin.—Fara, from the River.—The Environs of Fara.—Scales Merchant.—Monkeys for Sale.—
Pernambreo.—Street in Pernambreo.—Ox-Cart.
—Pack Horses.—Fleet of Jagandas.—Sphurbs of Fornambreo.—Bahla, from the Bay.—Avenue of Palms.—Market Scene, Bahla.
8, WHITE. BOB WHITE.

MRITE.

LIGHTER, Busting Bob White.—The True Quall.—Bead of Bob White, Life Size.—
Cover Alarmed.—Bead of California Valley Quall, Life Size.—Head of California Mountain Quall, Life Size.

IN QUIET DAYS.

A BRAVE LADY. By the Author of "Jone Hand-par, Gentleman."

ILLESTRATIONS. — "Mamma, you being Good News."—"Marriage is a Great Mystery."

AN AUTHOR'S MEMORIES OF AUTHORS. ILLUCTRATIONS .- S. C. Hall, -- Mrs. S. C. Hall. THE POSTER-BROTHERS.

TOO CLEVER BY HALF. THE PROGRESS OF ELECTRICITY. LEANDER DOOLSTILE.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By JOSTIN M'CARRIEV.

MY ENEMY'S DAUGHTER. By JOSTIS M'CARTHY.
CHAPTER XXVI. Lills gode.
CHAPTER XXVII. The Conspirator.
CHAPTER XXVIII. "Ah, bear in Mind that Garden was Enchanced."
ILLOSTRATION.—Salastis and I.
GOING OVER TO THE ENEMY.
THE PURITAN CAPTAIN.
THE NEW TIMOTHY. PART X. EDITOR'S RASY CHAIR. EDITOR'S BOOK TABLE. MONTHLY RECORD OF CURRENT EVENTS. EDITOR'S DRAWER.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harper's Weekly.

AN ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER.

This paper furnishes the best illustrations. Our fu-ture historians will enrich themselves out of Hauvys's Wassex hong after writers and printers and publishers are turned to dust.—New York Evengelist.

Harper's Bazar,

An Illustrated Weekly Journal of Fashion, Pleasure, and Instruction.

A Supplement containing numerous full-shed Pet-terns of useful articles accompanies the paper every fortnight, and occasionally an elegant Colored Fastion Plate.

Plate.

Harren's Bazan, far from being the trivial paper that one might hasfily suppose, is so excellent continue on the periodicals which the Harrens publish, it is almost ideally well edited, and the class of readers for whom it is intended—the mothers and daughters in average families—can not but profit by its good sense and good taste, which, we have no doubt, are to-day insiding very many house happier than they may have been before the women began taking leasons in personal and household and social menturement from this good-natured mentur. Then, sport from its claims to feminina respect and liking, the more important part of humanity and creation may properly be much obliged to it for its services to the great came of dressing well and naticularly for helping on the cause of dressing well at not too great an expense. No doubt, a certain appreciable percentage of the beauty which to-day makes American women the enery of the foreign feminine world, and a chi-flory of our native land, is due to little thint that they get from the Bazan. Of the Westers and the Moornary there is nothing that our readers need to be told.—The Assises (Fully 1986).

TERMS FOR HARPER'S PERIODICALS:

poetage.

In remitting by mall, a Post-Office Order or Braft, payable to the order of Hanesa & Raormean is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without lose to the sender.

Trees for Advertising in Harper's Personnelle. Harper's Hauseine. - Whole Page, $350; Half Page, $18: Quarter Page, $70 - each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Washy. - Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Pages, $2 00 per Line; Cottide Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Easer. - $1 60 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 30 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

MOUNT HOPE NURSERIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

(Revallemen 1841.)

Generalizes improving their grounds, Oscializetes, Labouage Gamesens, Nonscreens, and Dealers in Trees, will find our stock of Frest and Ornamental Trees the largest, and the collection the most extensive and complete in the U.S.

sive and complete in the U.S.

All orders, large or small, will receive prompt and careful attention. Packing for distant points performed in the most skillful and thorough manner. Small parcels sent by until when so desired.

Descriptive and Hinstrated priced Catalogues sent prepaid on receipt of stamps, as follows:

No. 1.—Fruits, 18c. No. 2.—Crommental Trees, 10c.
No. 5.—Green-House, 5c. No. 4.—Wholesale, Pars.
Address Address.

ELLWANGER & BARRY, ROCHESTER, N. T.

August, 1969.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY.

OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street). OFFICERS:

OFFICERS:

EDMUND DRIGGS, President,
WM. J. PRASE, Vice-President,
WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer,
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary,
A. S. JARVIS, HERVEY G. LAW, JOHN I.
VAN ALST, ALFIERD M. WOOD, Trusteen,
N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

The Climax Knitter!!

The Climax Knitter!!

This is, without question, the best Family Enitting Machine ever invented. It is small, light, next, simple of construction, durable, works very rapidly, has but one seeds, makes the old-fashioned knitting-needle stitch (and two others) with light of heavy, single or double yarn, sets up and fasishes its sees work, and needs no weights. It knits close or loose textures, hollow or fish web, large or small fabrics—anything that can be knit by hand, and in a much better manner. A child one readily operate it, and can learn to do so much sconer than to knit with ordinary seedles. There is nothing to be done but to thread a needle and turn a crasts, ustil the heel is reached, which is formed to perfection, with this trouble and no sewing; the same is the case with the toe.

The price of this Entirer is but $20 00, which places it within the reach of every family. It is destined to be very popular, and we can offer agents, general and special, exceedingly liberal terms for engaging in its sale. Send for Circulars.

Address ESSICE ENITTING MACHINE CO.,

Address ESSICE ENITTING MACSINE CO., S. W. corner 18th and Chestnut Sta., Philadelphia, Pa.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminism Bronze is a metal differing cutirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been decayed. It has sertionally occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only called forth the eulogiums of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well for

The movements are well fu-shed, perfectly regulated, and as all those goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

warrant them as excellent Unio-Respect.
Pulos ruos $16 to $22.
Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.
Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges.
Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

AGENTS WANTED, Local and for the New American Patent Meat and Vegetable Chopper. The best thing in the market, without exception. For Out of Machine, Terms, &c., address D. A. NEWTON & CO., 88 Cortlandt Street, N. Y.

SEND ONE DOLLAR, and get by return mall one of LORING'S DOLLAR BOXES of el-egant Franch Nata-Paper, with your luitial. Address LORING, Publisher, Boston.

$25 A DAY. - IS new articles for Agenta Sumples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Mo.

EMPLOYMENT (Aut paps. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratilebors, VI.

"As natural as Thackeray, and more real than Dickens."

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, have just published:

My Daughter Elinor.

A NOVEL

8vo, Paper, $1 25.

A good American povel, presenting life and society A good American novel, presenting life and society in the United State—the life that we live und the society of which we are a constituent part—has long been the desideratum of publishers and the despair of sovel-readers. * A story in which the characters are types of the American people at large, differing from the same social representatives of other countries, is rarely issued from the press. Such a story is "My Daughter Elinco," which is destined to attain a wide popularity, because delineating with naturalness said vertisalilitate the life that is around us. It is from such books that the historian gathers the habitates of the age of which he writes. In Mr. Grey we have the portraiture of the accomplished politician; in "My Daughter Elinco" we have a real woman of feeth and blood, such as many a reader has made love to in the days of premiers jecuses. The style is easy and upaffected, at times straining overnuch at epigram, and again running a little into slipshod; and the dialogue is rapid and effective, never intering with obvious comment or bearing with inevitable inference. Mrs. Hacknyt is a fresh and delightful Mrs. Malaprop, and Tad Tilman is an original drawn from nature. The reader must learn the plot of "My Desighter Elinco" from the novel theif,—N. Y. Essening Pest.

The etyle is clear and vigorous, the dialogues are

Peat.

The style is clear and vigorous, the dislogues are snimated and interesting — X. Y. Herald.

Sent by wall, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of $1.25.

THE CELEBRATED

GOLD WATCHES. IMITATION

SPECIAL NOTICE,
Our superior Grotde Watcher having recommely been indicated, and worthless Watcher sold in New York, Bosson, Chicago, and either cities, represented as our manufacture, we havely contion the public against them, and give notice that we are in no way responsible furthers begus concerns, and only those purchasing directly from us can secure a genoise Watch of our manufacture. We have recently grantly improved our desich in appearance and durability; and, to protect the public from supersition breafter, have named it the "COLLINS METAL," and we give notice that any one making use of this name will be presented to the strient of the law.

This metal has all the brilliancy and durability of Gold; can not be desiringuished from it by the best judges; retains its color till worm one, and is equal to gold excepting in intrinsic value. All our Gentlemen's Watcher are Fail-Jesoid Faited Leave; those for Ladies an inspired Recapement, better than a Lever for a small Watch; all in Hunting-Cases, and fruity guaranteed by special certificate. The gill Watches are qual in zenifine fields, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch rooting gibt. Those for gibt are of extra fine fields, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch rooting gibt. Those for gibt are of extra fine fields, and are fully equal to a Gold Watch rooting gibt. Those for gibt are of extra fine fields, and are fully equal to gold in appearance of Fellow and Mascult Plus, do., and felly equal to gold in appearance of Fellow and Mascult Plus, do., and file intent and most desput styles, and felly equal to gold in appearance, herefore, have the benefit of our lowest prices. Parties in New York or elsewhere representing themselves as our agents are swindles. The genine Collins Watches can only be and at our office in New York City. Contoursers are requested not to send money in letters, as we will send goods to any part of the United Biales to be poid for when taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. In ordering, wite paid f

No. 335 BROADWAY, corner Worth Street (Up Stairs), New York. C. E. COLLINS & CO.

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUPACTURING CO., SO BESKMAN ST., N. Y.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-House

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.
Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable assortances, very low for cash.
Apples—including most magnificent stock of yearluge: also hardy Northern sorts, such as DuchesOldenburg, Hislop, Transcendent, and other Crab Appice—1, 2, and 3 year.
Peachet, Pears, Cherries, Plana, Quinou, Grapes, Perest and Recryster Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osape Orenge Hislop Planis, Ross, own roots; Tulps, Hysechia, Nurciseus, Ivis, Spetills, Lilies, Specioures, Auralian, &c.
Also superior colored plains of Fruits and Flowers.
Bend 10 casts for Catalogues.
F. K. PHENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

SWEET
QUININE.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SUBSTITUTE OF THE STATE OF THE STATE

"FOLD HIS HANDS GENTLY."

This beautiful new Song was written on the occaslop of the death of a most derling child, and many parents who have been similarly bereaved will be impressed with the touching pathos of the words, and extreme simplicity and appropriateness of the music.
Copies will be mailed, free of postage, on receipt of the price, So. CORY BROTHERS, Publishers, Proviousos, R. L.

Florence Marryatts-new novel, "VE-RONEQUE," is nearly ready. Mise Marryat eags: "It is my favorite of all I have ever written." Price is cents, in paper covers.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus earling much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Speciment-tooks of types, ents, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents, ADAMS PRESS CO., 58 Marray Street, New York.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To apents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. States alide on both side. First methics on trial. For further particulars, address.

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Press MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY.

Price of Presess, $8, $12, $14. Offices, $15, $20, $20. Send for a circular to LOWE PRIESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

DSYCHOMANCY, Fascination: or, Science of the Soni, as applied to the purposes of life. 466 pages, Cloth. By Hansaux Hannrox, B.A. A curious hook for inquisitive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wonderful power over men or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stamp and address to T. W. EVANS & CO.,

41 South 8th Street, Philadelphis.

T I L T O N B

Pashlonable Initial Note-Papers
and Envelopes,
Nestly put up in Bollar or Half Bollar Boxes, and sext at wait, restrain, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Send for a box to

J. E. TILTON & CO., Boston,

THOY FEMALE SEMINARY, This in-stitution offers the accumulated advantages of over 50 years' secressful operation. For circulars, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Trey, N. Y.

$9 A DAY FOR ALL. Address A. J. FULLAN, 650 Broadway, N. T.

HARPER & BROTHERS' SPECIAL TRADE SALE, 1869.

FROM AUGUST 16 TO SEPT. 25.

FRANKLIN SQUARE NEW YORK, August, 1869.

We invite the attention of Booksellers to our Special List of Books, which we will sell on the following terms, for Cash, from the 16th of August to the 25th of September, after which our terms will positively be as heretofore.

On Orders of $ 200 at one time, 25 per cent. discount: $ 500 " 30 " $1000 " 33 " $2000 " 35 "

And an additional deduction of Five per cent. for Cash. We shall not sell at any of the Trade Sales this Fall. The Special List will be furnished to Booksellers on application to the Publishers.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. The Noveley is the best Press ever invented with which to do your own printing, and is second to some for the use of General Job Printers.
Price of Presses, $15, $20, $22, $20.

Bostou, Mass., for descriptive circular containing testimonials from all parts of the country, with specimes of work done on the press, and specimes sheets of Types, Cuts, Borders, &c.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Priors greatly reduced for Cast. New Seven-Octave France, of first-class makers, for $505 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Seconds hand Flance, Melideons, and Organs from $40 to $175 at 461 Broadway, N. Y.

HORACE WATERS.

IDA LEWIS. — Just Published: The Resour Peaks Mazousa, for the Franc, with full-size lithograph Picture from He, on title-page, of Miss Ha Leest, the Heroine of Line Rocks Light, Kew-port, in Contains of the Research Conference of the Research of March 19th, 1889. Copies mailed, free of postage, on receipt of price, 4 ents. CORY BROTHERS, Movie Dealers, Provinces R. L.

NTED AGENTS.—$75 to $396 per month, overy where, male and female, to introduce the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thing, with the latest improvements. Prior for Hand Machine, $35; with Table and Foot power, $25. Sand for Circular, with Cut of Machine and terms to Agents.

Address. W. S. Hill, Manchester, K. H.

WATCHES FOR THE MILLION.

The Gerat Trans-Israeveners Assessation (Incorporated by the State) sell Phys Goth and Solan Silvez Waveres, upon the one-price general-average system, at $10 cach. Be care to obtain a circular before buying elsewhere. Agents wanted.

Address MICHELIN & CO., Managers, Broadway, cor. Pulson St., New York.

WANTED AGENTS To sell the Ameri-can Knitting Machine, Price Sis. The simplest, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever in-versed. Will knit 20,000 stitches per minute. Liberal independents to Agenta. Address AMERICAN ENIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

A LL that is required of SASH FASTENERS, A Walker's Patent will do, They never get out of order. St per don.—FELIX WALKER & CO., at Whitlock Expectice, 15 Park Place, N. Y.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wooderful inven-tions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Bich.

DARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entire-try of Metal; Holler and Furnace complete; will work for hours if supplied with water, &c.; free from danger; a child can work it. Sent five, with instruc-tions, for $1.00; three for $2.50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 102 Nassen Street, New York.

WANTED ON BALARY - Repertured Traveling
WAGENTS for the NEW MASONIC WORK, For Members of the Preternity this is a rare chance. Send for Circular. M. W. REDDING, 697 Broadway, N. Y.

Use B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1818; or, illustrations, by Fest and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Brawos J. Lossmon, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Bevolation." With 888 Historialous, engineed on Wood by Lossing & Barrit, checky from Original Sketches by the Author. Considers in One Volume, 1981 pages, here five. Price, in Clock, §7-90; Sheep, 88-50; Fall Rose, 59-90; Half Calf or Half Mesocco extra, $39-96.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By Junes Gudanwoon, the "Amaler Carust," Acthor of "The True libstery of a Little Ragramuffa," "Replies Ber-riger," "Whit Sports of the World," &c. Bro, Pa-per, 25 conts.

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By B. R. Fox Bogsess. With Portrait of George Penhody and 26 Elizatrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journallet is Europe. By Eng age Gools Brown. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TRACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Nathanial Sands. See, Clock, $1.06.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Tretiful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Fresh and Less as involved in Ameter Farming, with moch Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Pinces in the Rural Districts, Sy Bouer B. Rooswett, With Characteristic H-instrations. 12mo, Cloth, $150.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagreess and Suggessive Pictures. By Figure etc. A. Marcu, Professor of the English Linguister and Comparative Philology in Linguister College, Anthor of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 1800s, Cloth, 60 cents.

RBETORIC: a Text-Rook, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Hawas, D.D., Ll.D., Provident of the Northwestern University. 17me, Cloth, $1.50.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The land of the Orang Une and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Aurana Russia. Wattan, Author of "Travels of the Amazon and Rio Negre," "Pain Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Sec. Cloth, $8.50.

PISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Genio C. Soors. With 190 Hustrations. Crown Sec, Chair. $4.50.

TERRE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Cultare: Vine Discuss and its Care: Wine-Making and Whose, Red and White:
Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Morais. By Wineman J. Placo. Films, Cloth, $1.50.

BARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR TRAVELLERS
IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Guide through France, Beigner, Holland, Gernany, Austria, Risly, Egypt, Spria, Turkey, Greece, Switzer, land, Tyrol, Rossis, Dennark, Swelos, Spain, and Grest Biffain and Ireland. With a Rathroad Map corrected up to 1866. By W. Prannoux Permind. Revised Edition: Righth Year. Large 18mo, Leather, Pocket-Book Form, $7.56.

HARPER'S PHRASE-BOOK; or, Head-Book of Travel Talk for Travellers and Schoole, Joing a Guide to Conversations in English, French, German, and Hallan, on a New and Improved Method. In-tended to accompany "Harper's Hand-Book for Travellers." By W. Prasmann Perfection. Assistance by Professors of Heldelberg University. With con-cise and explicit Roles for the Promocipilon of the different Languages. Square 16mo, Flexible Cloth, 31 56.

The New Novels

PRINCIPALISM BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

META'S PAPER. A Novel. By the Author of "St. Glave's," &c. 680, Paper, 50 cents. PAISE COLORS. A Novel. By ASSET THOMSE, STO, Paper, 50 cents.

HETTY. By HENRY KINGSER. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 25. STRETTON. A Novel. By HESEN KINGSLEY. 6vo.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Dadge Club." Blustrated. Seo, Paper, 75 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1808. By James Da Manas, Author of "Cord and Crosse," &c. With 100 Hinstrations. Svo, Paper, 75 course; Cloth, $1 25.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Hustrations. VANITY FAIR. 35 Dustrations. 8vo, Paper, 50 cts. THE VIRGINIANS. 180 Hinstrations. 8vo, Paper, 50 cfs.

THE NEWCOMES, 168 Illustrations. *-- Price, THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait
Author and 64 lilustrations. 8vo, Paper, 56 cm EF HARRE & BROTHERS will form transdictely New Editions of Thankreng's other Novels, Eliminated by the Author, at correspondingly low prices.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS: HARD CASH. Hinstrated. Svo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT: or, Jeniousy. Illustrated. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. See, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Sto, Pa-

POUL PLAY. Swo, Paper, 95 cents.
WHITE LIES. Swo, Paper, 15 cents.
EST In he followed by Charles Rende's other Notice.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: FILINEAS PINN, the Irich Member. Illustrated by Millais. Svo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 75.

HE KNEW HE WAS RIGHT, Complete. With 54 Historicans by Marcos Stones. See, Paper, 84 0 -: Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separatory, Paper, $2 cmix. FF HARRY & Burrary will send any of the above only by mail, postage free, to any part of the United takes, on receipt of the prior.

THE DEMOCRATIC SCAPE-GOAT.

"The Twentieth Ward Jackson Club, presided over by Mr. Thomas Costigan, adopted the following Resolution, on motion of Mr. John DELANY, at their meeting last evening. Resolved, That the farther continuance of Mr. AUGUST BELMONT in the chair of the National Democratic Executive Committee is fraught with great peril to the existence and Salutary Influence of the party; that, masmoch as he is lethargic in the performance of his official duties, wavering in his political fidth, and distasteful to THE ISSER SECTION OF THE DEMOCRACY, that he be forthwith requested to vacate his position."

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Plance is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to · guit any who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Surrn & Nixon, Chicago, Illa : H. N. Haurer so Saith & Mixon, Chicago, 188.; H. N. Henr-stran, Milwankee, Wis.; Lotts Taitr, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClutz, Nashville, Tenn.; Kunckei, Bros., St. Lovie, Mo.; J. R. Jackson, Sandesky, Ohio; J. E. Goule, Palisdelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Blutze, Pittsburg, Pa.; Brandard & Sone, Cleveland, Ohio; Clutter & Sone, Albany and Troy, N. T.; J. T. Hammon, Rhine-beck, N. Y.; J. H. Histermineres, Ithaca, N. Y.; Whitz, Saith, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Mayuntas Gaav, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Muncu, Cincinnati, Obio; C. M. Loome, New Haven, Conn.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water tures all diseases of the Kidneys, Skin, and Blood more presuptly than any other known remedy. EF Call for Travisionians or Corna. Sold by Druggists.

Can thon.—All genuine bears our trade-mark, and the bottles and corks are branded "Nature's Remedy."

Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Trans. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Or, S. H. Scripture, 122 Broadway, New York,
General Agent.

Kellinger's Linesent.—A time-tried and reliable Bennedy for Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all pains. May be used incumatate or extrematate. Beware of Imitations. The genuine is signed "De Witt C. Kellinger." Price 250, 560, and 81.

Kellinger." Frice SSc., 58c., and 31.
Bold by all Droggists, and may be had wholesale of Jones P. Huser, No. 5 Contain: Place, New York, at the Great United States Family Medicine Warehouse.

STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

With Detachable Shoulder Rest.

Most popular arm made for Sporting and Target Shoulder. Serrin & Wranson's Reverture, in any quantity, for cash, at hundred price.

AMSON'S DEVANCED A. AND A. STORIES & CO., WIT'S Apenda.

222 Broadway, New York.

4 PHOTOGRAPHS of the ECLIPSE, and fall Report of all Government Expeditions, in Philadelphia Photographer for September. Just out. Postpaid, left, per copy. Trade supplied. BENERMAN & WILSON, Publishers, Seventh and Cherry Six., Philadelphis, Pa.

HINKLEY KNITTING MACHINE.

Agents wanted. Knits every thing. Send to of-Sec, 176 Broadway, for Circulus.

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUPACTURERS OF

IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE, WITE

PURE STERLING SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-saving machinery, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in

ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BEAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY,

Can not be Excelled. All goods bearing our trade-mark,

"Improved Electro Treble Plate," ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED;

and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded. OFFICE AND PACTORY, WALLINGFORD, COMP.

54 MPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y.

SCHREIBER CORNETS BAND INSTRUMENTS.

The most splendid In-struments ever made. We are manufacturing all styles, and can readily sup-ply all orders for seas. Send M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 680 Broadway, N.Y.

ANTED - AGENTS - $75 to $200 per mouth, every where, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stritch here, fell, tack, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $100 for any machine that will see a sirenger, more beautiful, or more elastic seem than ours. It makes the sew a sirenger, more beautiful, or more elastic seem than ours. It makes the cat, and still the cloth can not be pulled apart without barriag it. We pay Agents from $13 to $300 cm which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMI & CO., Pressesson, Fa., Bosros, Mass., or Sr. Leon, Mo. CAUTION,—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthese cast-from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genuine and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE ECLIPSE
in lows, including totality and all phases. Stereoscopic, the each; large, $2, postpaid. Trade suppiled. WILSON, HOOD, & CO., Photographic Suppiles, 833 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PRETTY WOMEN.-A comparatively few ladies monopolize the beauty as well as the attention of society. This ought not to be so, but it is; and will be while men are foolish, and single out pretty faces for companions.

This can all be changed by using HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM, which gives the bloom of youth and a refined, sparkling beauty to the complexion, pleasing, powerful, and natural.

No lady need complain of a red, tanned, freckled, or rustic complexion who will invest 75 cents in HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM. Its effects are truly wonderful.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lrow's KATHAIRON.

Sarcaro will make Tine resemble Sliver.
Use only Sarotro to clean White Paint.
From Marble Sarotro removes all Stains.
For polishing Knives Sarotro is ensurpassed.
For polishing Knives Sarotro is ensurpassed.
For cleaning Brass Stair-Rode Sarotro has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, use Sarotro.
Sample cake sent by mail on receipt of 50 cents.
Enoch Morgan's Seos. Sil Washington St., N. Y.
Soape of the finest kinds for family use.

Retablished 1809.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 118 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LASTERNS and STREED/PTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 54 pages.
JAMES W. QUEEN & OO.
994 Chestnat St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, 18" Send for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

Potaax & Son, Manuf'rs of Genu-ine Meerscham goods. Stores: 519 Broadway, under S. Nicholas Botel, & 37 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholesale or retail circular to Letter-Box 5846. Repairing and Boiling also done.

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK, Have just published;

META'S FAITH.

A NOVEL.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ST. OLAVES," "JEANIES QUIET LIFE," &c.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

The perusal of "Meta's Patith" has afforded us wholesome pleasure. The tale creates strong interest by the naturalness and force of its delineations of character, —London Athenorum.

This book deserves much praise, and will well pay perusal. —British Quarterly Review.

A very interesting and attractive story, worthy of the accomplished author of "St. Glave's." Every character has a distinct individuality. —London fus.

This book contains many of the excellences of the better novels of the class to which it belongs. It is fairly readable from first to last.—Setwedsy Review.

EF HARRE & Bacrezza will send the above work by read, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GOING UP TOWN!

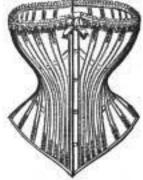

On the 18th of August we removed to 747 BROADWAY, near 8th St., ed now offer our present stock of CHINA, GLASS, AND FANCY GOODS at very low prices.

Davis Collamore & Co., 479 Broadway, near Broome St.

THOMSON'S

"GLOVE-FITTING"

The Most Popular Corset ever introduced into the American Market.

The strongest peoof of the excellence and popularity of this Cornet is found in the numerous attempts to paim off northiess institutions as the persons imported "Glore-Pitting." We therefore call special attention to our stamp, which is always to be found on the pensions of the pension

TRADE MARK THOMSON'S PATENT CLOVE-FITTING

N.B.—All infring-ers of Patent or of our Copyright in Name, "Glove-Pit-ting," will be pros-

THOMSON, LANGDON, & CO., 391 Broadway, N.Y., Sole Importers and Patentees for the United States

Pratt's Astral

PERFECTLY SAFE.

Circulars.
OIL HOUSE OF CHAR PRATT,
108 Fulton St., N. Y.

Life is the Gift of God.

When we are sick this life is obscured, under a cloud, oppressed with humors. Experience has taught us certain means which never fail for their removal. The child receives with his life toe seeds of his death. It may take one, or one hundred years, before the da bear their sad fruit, but just as sure as the seeds of death ripen, life ceases. Purging is the grand eafe-guard, because then what feeters the seeds of death are taken away, expelled from the body.

Govern Yourselves by Experience.

My child, aged five years, had scarlet fever, and for five days had constant fever. By order of the doctor I gave her sirup of rhubarh; she took nearly a pint, but her boweis continued closed. On the fifth day the doctor said her bowels must be opened or she would be lost. I proposed Brandreth's Pills. To this be would not consent, saying she was too weak. I consulted with my buseaud, and we concluded to give her three pills. In about four hours they operated, filling half full a common chamber. After that operation the fever left her, and she rapidly recovere -Reference, 506 Clermont Avenue, Brooklyn.

TO SPORTSMEN!!

A very superior selection of fine Breech-Loading SHOT-GUNS, RIFLES, and PISTOLS, of our own Manufacture and Importation. PIBHING TACKLE, POCKET CUTLERY, and Sportanen's Articles. Sels Agents for W. R. PAPE'S Celebrated Muzzle and Breech Loaders.

MERWIN & HULBERT, Circulars supplied.] 285 Broadway, N.Y.

Of all Hygelan Waters that bubble from the earth, that of the Seltner Spring in Germany is held to be the best cathartic, corrective, and restora-tive. But it has some impurities, all of which are ombited, while all its peculiar virtues are intensified, in Tannant's Suttree Argener.

SOLD BY DECOGNETS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.

ARPER YOURNAL OF CIVILIZATIO

Vol. XIII.—No. 664.7

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE NEW MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

THE new Mercantile Library Building, San Francisco, California, is considered the finest building of the kind in America. This is conceded by even Bostonians who have visited San Francisco. It is located on Bush Street, near Sauson, and was completed in December of last year. The building is three stories high, with an attic. Its frontage is 60 feet on one street and 136 on another. The style of architecture is the modern Italian, with a Mansard roof. The front, rising 65 feet to the cornice, is largely composed of cast and wrought iron, and the de-signs are elegant. In the rear, on the first-floor, there is an extensive lecture room. On the second-floor is the library, smoking and chess room, ladies' parbor, and apartments for the use of the Li-brary Association. Above, on the third story, is the reading room, museum, and art-gallery. The attic is divided into twenty-five rboms, and is let for various pures, many of the apartments being used as studios by some of the leading San Francisco artists.

THE PLACE OF ARMS, HAVANA.

THE beautiful situation of the chief city of Cuba, on the western shore of a magnificent landlocked harbor, from which it slopes into the luxuriant uplands, clothed with dark verdure of the cocos-nut palm groves, and adorned with numerous villas, has often been described. villas, has often been described. The interior of Havana, with its mean and narrow streets, except in one or two modern quarters of the city, is scarcely worthy of its com-mercial and political importance. The Flaza de Armas, shown in our engraving, is tolerably handsome, with several public edifices around it, and with two broad streets in-tersecting each other in the middle of the square, dividing it into four pleasant gardens or shrubberies. In the centre is a statue of Fer-penals VII., King of Spain, over-topped by four majestic palms. The palace of the Captain-General, or Viceroy of the island, fills one side of the square. Opposite to this stand several palaces, and a chapel is erected on the spot where, at the first founding of the city, the first mass was celebrated, under the shade of the celba-trees, some of which still sain. To the sinks on which still exist. To the right are the Intendencia and other govern-ment buildings, and to the left is a line of houses and shops. During the daytime the burning heat of the tropical sun drives the Hayana population into the shade of their own houses, or of the narrower and cooler streets; but in the cool of the evening the out-of-door life be-gins again. The military band performs every evening on the Plaza, and crowds of people swarm m to th streets are thronged with the ele-gant "Volanti" and "Quitrini," the characteristic national equipages, filled with ladies in brilliant toilets, while the promenaders enjoy the cool air beneath the starry sky or in the clear anconlight until the cessation of the music gives the sign for the gradual dispersion of the groups. Such is the aspect of the Plaza de Armas in peaceful times; but we had occasion, not many weeks ago, to give an illus-tration of a very different scene, when the Governor's palace was attacked at midnight by a mutinous mob of Spanish volunteer soldiery, whom the regular troops did not venture to disperse, so that General Dunce was forced to leave the island. Under the more vigorous gov-ernment of his successor, General CARALLERO DE RODAS, the city of Havana is again tranquil; but the Cuban revolt is not yet subdued.

IMPORTED POULTRY.

The attention paid by farmers and poultry-raisers to imported breeds recently introduced into this country was illustrated by the interest manifested in the sale of fowls at the rooms of the American Agriculturist on the 18th of Au-gust. These fowls were sent here by JAMES C. COOPER, of Cooper Hill, in Limerick, Ireland. Specimens of the lot are given in our illustrations

Decimens of the social given in our industrations on page 604.

Each of the different "fancy breeds" has its peculiar and special merit. They are all valuable for their size, delicacy, and laying qualities. Perhaps the most generally and deservedly popular fowl is the Houdan, ansurpassed even by the Dorking for quality of flesh or for size. They are very hardy, and good winter lavers. Their image is a mixture of black and white in large ingles. They are of French origin, and, like the Dorking, have five toes.

The duck-winged game are birds possessing elegance of form and beautiful plumage, yet they are the best of layers, and the flavor of their flesh is beyond comparison with that of any other

wi. They are small eaters. The dark Brahmas are bred beavier than any other, single specimens having been known to weigh thirteen, fifteen, and even eighteen pounds. The pullets lay when six mouths old, and usually from thirty to forty eggs before they are inclined to hatch. They often begin to lay in autumn, and continue without a single day's interruption The black, white-created Polands weigh from five to six pounds, have an erect and bold car-riage, and their creats are large, full, and reg-

The Crevaceurs and Cochins are greatly preferred in France for the quantity and quality of their flesh. A full-grown cock often weighs ten pounds. They are easily raised in confinement, mature early, and lay large eggs. The Cochin chickens, though they feather slowly, are hardier than any other breed except the Brahmas, and will thrive where others would perish. They grow fast, and may be killed when twelve weeks old. They are gentle, can not fly, and the hens are unsurpassed as setters and mothers.

The silver-spangled Peland is a most benutifal breed. It is bred to a very good size—six to seven pounds in the cock and four to five in the ben being the average weight. The Poland is an affectionate bird, In favorable localities it is a prolific layer, and its ities it is a prolific layer, and its flesh is remarkably good.

The La Fleche is a French vari-ery peculiarly adapted to our South-ern and Southwestern States. In colder climates they require great care, but they well repay it. The Spanish breed, from which probably the La Fleche proceeds, is also sensitive to cold and damp-ness. They lay large white eggs, and, in moderate wenther, very abundantly.

The Dorkings are an artificial and celebrated English breed. They are unsurpassed as table-fowls, combin-ing the flavor and delicacy of game with an abundance of mest, and that in the choicest parts—the breast, merry-thought, and wings. The hen is an excellent setter and mother. The Dorking is a poor layer, especially in winter, and is difficult to raise in confinement.

The game Bastams are a com-paratively recent variety of that breed, but they are hardier than any of the other varieties. They are delicate as food; there seems to be a peculiar closeness of texture in their ment, greater than in that of even their larger progenitors. The Sebrights are a beautiful and ornamental variety, which may he recommended for exhibition, as well as for its intrinsic value.

AFTER the expenses of the very elaborate machinery of a company of Government merchants is defray-od, a quarter of the profits of the trade is credited to each district, to be again distributed among the natives. About $55,000 is the average amount derived from the sale of the oil, walrus, and narwhal ivo-ry, whalebone, seal-skins, etc., in Copenharen, and Copenhagen; and supposing the share of the profit from this falling to the settlement of Egedesininde to be $230, which is, I suspect, more than the average—it would be distributed in the course of the year by a sort of hyperborean Par-liament called the Partisok. This assemblage is composed of repre-sentatives chosen by universal suffrage from all the little Esquimaux fishing stations, each outpost re-turning one member — generally some talkative old fellow, not of much use as a seal-hunter, but who is intimately acquainted with every body. The president of this body is the governor, and the priest, doc-tor, and assistant trader have also scats in it. All the native mem-bers wear a scarlet cap with a white hand, with the badge of the Royal Board of Greenland Trade in front —a bear rampant, its bead sur-mounted by a crown. They meet generally in the winter, when traveling from settlement to settlement over the frozen sea is easy. Then assemble from all the outposts the claimants-the clients of the Partisok. A widow will say that her husband is dead, and it is now time that her | war, and the election of General GRANT was boy should learn to kill seals in his kayak; but she can not afford to pay any body to teach him. The Partisck in its wisdom votes the munificent sum of five rigidaler per annum for that purpose, Then a young fellow comes-blushing through the alenginous dirt on his checks-and avows that he is going to be married, and has not money to purchase a musket or a kayak; and, with a deal of good advice from the assembled sages, he is lent the money for a term of years, family is in poor circumstances, the scalcatcher of the family being sick, and to them a sum for their immediate accessities is voted; and so on until the balance is expended,

NEW MERCANTILE LIBRARY BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA .- [SERIORED BY L. R. TOWNSEND.]

594

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1869.

D Persons desiring to senew their Subscription to this Paper will much oblige the Publishers by sending in their names as early as commented before the Espiration of their present Subscription. This will obvious the delay attendant upon re-rutering names and mailing back Numbers.

THE DEMOCRATIC BOURBONS.

W E have already mentioned the struggle in the Democratic party between the old and the new spirit, between the dogged retention of the old doctrines and policy and the sagarious adoption of new measures in harmony with the actual situation. The signs of the contest abound on every side. The different tone of the platforms in the various States, and the character and antecedents of the candidates of which we spoke last week, all reveal the want of a common conviction and a common purpose in the party. It begins to appear, however, that the progressive wing of the party yields to the Bourburs, and that one more effort will be made to prolong the angry debate out of which the war sprang.

This contest in the Democratic party began with its organization under Jackson. General Jackson was substantially a Jeffersonian. He was in favor of a restriction of government to the lowest terms, and although he approved a tariff for defense, he was opposed to a national system of internal improvements and magnificent enterprises. Long before General Jack-son thought of the Presidency, Mr. Calmous, whose general political philosophy was much less sound than Jackson's, had fixed his heart ppon it. His instinct indicated to him his rbief rivel, and during the Presidency of Mornon Mr. Catanous was bestile to "the who did not suspect it. Jackson's election presently made Calinous his open enemy. The first contest between them was the nullification movement of 1832. JACKSON was isonestly a Union man, and heartily despised as well as disbelieved the Southern theory of the government. His proclamation was as admirable and sound as Wanstran's speeches, and he mode preparations to keep the peace and enforce the law. In the latter resolution his porty supported him. But in his Message of 1832, previous to the proclamation, he virtually recommended the policy that Carmons demand From that moment the Cannoes element in the Democratic party grew stronger, until it absolutely controlled it, and the war that was plways latent in that element broke out.

The conduct and event of the war proved that the people rejected the Carnous theory while they destroyed slavery, for whose protection the theory was urged. The Democratic porty, as a party, possively apposed the war; and at its end the party organization remained. The internal conflict was therefore inevitable, There were the party traditions, the Southern alliance, and the hatred of the negro, with the old party leaders, applicates of slavery, and supporters of the Virginia and Kentucky reso-Intions-in fact, the Carmors men, on one side; and on the other, the fresher element of the party, young proselytes who held philosophically to the limited functions of government, and who insisted upon abandoning the pinintly closed issues of the kest generation. Of this wing the New York World became the organ; a journal skillfally and intelligently managed, but whose time of light mockery has always paralyzed its influence and distrayed its power,

In the Democratic National Convention of 1869 the two wings of the party met and tried conclusions. Cannot y reappeared in the flesh BE WARR HAVITON, and he swept all before him. The New York managers had secured the meeting of the Convention in Tommany Hall itself, and intended to secure their preference in the re-orination. But the willer the New York plotting the more conspicuous was the triumph of South Caredina. One of the abiest and most honoralde of New York Demoersts, Hessey C. Memour, reported the platform, and the New York trick of numinating the New Yorker, Honerto Savsona, sucreeded. But Mr. Muzray's platform was repudiation, and Mr. Severese, who had opposed repudiation at Tweddle Hall, accepted as his own the repudi-nting plasform of Tammany. The question of the campaign, therefore, was simply whether the people would surrender the results of the the answer.

The progressive wing of the party was compelled to submit to the Bourbons of the Convention, and their hopes of the prompt abandonment of old issues and a bold dash at the future in the nomination of Mr. Chase being baffled, the progressives made a show of falling into line; but after the premonitory thunder of Maine and Pennsylvania the World called for a change of front, which was a confession of inevitable defeat. It came, and the new men naturally supposed that it would instruct the Bourbons. But they forgot that nothing can instruct the Bourbons. The World hailed the nomination of General ROSECRANS in Ohio, urged that of General HANCOCK in Pennsylvania, and rejoices over that of Joux Quincy Aroms in Massachusetts. It has stringently set forth that common-sense demands acquiescence in what is actually accomplished. But it pleads in vain. The Bourbons conquer. General Roszczaks, in declining, echoes the World; and the Bourbons nominate in his place VALLANDSGRAM'S condidate, PENDLETON, the chief national representative of repudiation; and in Pennsylvania Asa Packer, an extreme Bourbon; and answer Jour QUINCY ADAMS'S speech, advising a general renunciation of old issues, by the stolid declaration of the platform that they charge nothing.

Not content with condemning the war by replacing Rosecrans, a Union general, by PEK-HERTON, a VALLANDOORAM Copperhead and repudiator, and by preferring PACKER to HAN-COCK, the Bourbous now begin to demand the head of the Chairman of the National Committee, who opposes repudiation. They will not demand it in vain. Every where, also, the Bourhous insist upon opposition to the Fifteenth Amendment, and the refusal of equal rights to the colored citizens. It is the reaction nationally attempted last year at which they now aim in the separate States. And so complete is their victory that the World itself, whose one principle of party action since the surrender of Lau has been the abandonment of issues that were plainly settled, attempts to prove that Mr. PENDLETON'S proposition to pay the bonds in currency is not had faith, and that the pegro contest must be continued. The passage of the Fifteenth Amendment, which the World opposes, would formally close the great debate of the last generation; and the acquiescence in equal suffrage in this State by the adoption of the new Constitution would open the way for the consideration of new The Bourbons have conquered the World, which has surrendered every advantage that the result of the Presidential election gave it. It harrahs for PENDLETON and harrahs for Adams. It is like hurrahing for Jackson and then for Calmous. As for its Democratic readers, "Gentlemen, you pays your money and you takes your choice."

The question for the country then is, shall we put the negro out of politics by completing the work which is nearly accomplished of socuring his equal rights? Let the voters in this State, and in every State, remember that the Bourbons insist upon fighting the same old battle over again. We fought it in a way that they remember in 1860, '64, and '68. Let us show in '60 that there can be no radical change in parties until the question which divides them is settled.

THE LARGE WHITE WIG.

In one of his private letters Mr. WEBSTER speaks of a gentleman who had "the Presiden-When Mr. Buchanan, who, as Minister in England, had been known to expectorate spon carpets, was elected President, there were those who were delighted that there was at lost 'a gentleman" in the White House-Mr. Bu-CHANAN'S claim to that distinction apparently residing in his white cravat. When Mr. Lixcoan succeeded Mr. Bucuanas there were sunny Southern "gentlemen" who could easily break an oath to the government, but who bitterly regretted that such an "uncouth boor" was made President. Undoubtedly there are many persons who take great comfort in Turveydrops, and in what may be called a grandiloquent deportment; and Mr. Chann Romisson, in his lately published "Diary," speaks of a elergyman who "was a gentlemanly person, and inspired respect—especially by a very large white wig."

It happens that President GRANT does not wear a very large white wig of any kind whatever, and for that reason, apparently, he forfeits a good deal of respect in certain quarters. The great constituency of Bancombe, for instance, is in high wrath. Here is a President who is one of the simplest of men. He does every thing in the quietest manner. He takes no attitudes, rolls off no resounding twaddle, but tranquilly and officiently attends to his duty as a modest and faithful officer. "Is this brilliant, is this splendid, is this the Presidential air?" rours indignant Buncombe, with one accord; "where is the very large white wig, pray ; and how can a President inspire respect without it?" The prestige of his administration, we are more soberly told, is declining, and, absurd as it may be, simply from the absence of the great white wig.

This is very possible. There is such an immense quantity of white wig in our politics and statesmanship that its absence may really appear to some persons to be the absence of wisdom. If General GRANT had only followed the counsels of Buncombe-if he had staid steadily in the White House, and had made solemn speeches to complimentary delegations-if he had surrounded himself with reporters, and loudly expressed declarations of doing this and that-if to all invitations he had replied in fine flights of epistolary elequence instead of by a plain yes and no-if he had only worn an immense white wig that could be seen from every corner of the Union, even the Turveydrope would have conceded to him the Presidential air, and his administration, being, as it is, really efficient and economical, would have been saluted as splendid.

The truth is, that we Americans like rhetoric and fisp-doodle, and what is very commonly and expressively called "squirt." Our representatives talk to Buncombe, not to the House. The very nature of our political debates in late years has increased this tendency, because they have dealt with the rights of human nature and with moral duties. Before this debate fairly began the questions at issue also admitted of magnificence in the treatment. After the war of 1812 there was the tariff, "the American system," internal improvements, and a national university. Thus President Jons Quiscr ADAMS, unlike his grandson, amplified the functions of government. A classical scholar and well-read in history, he enriched his messages with allusions to the monuments of Rome, the aqueducts, the highways, and he filled the national imagination with the vision of a vast system of explorations, and structures, and institutions, vaich were all words, but such amazingly fine words that they did duty for things, No President ever wore a more enormous white wig than the excellent Jour QUINCY ADAMS. General Jackson's was as large, but it was very different. Ignorant, imperious, violent, and vindictive, he destroyed the bank and removed the deposits, and whatever he did was done with such a slsp and a bang and a "by the Eternal" that delighted Buncombe was in raptures over the hero as an "old Roman" of the purest Republican type. General Jackson anderstood the use of the large white wig as well as any General GRANT utterly despises it. He and his Secretary of State are two of the least bewigged personages that American politics have produced. They do their work with so little swagger that those who confound bluster with business suppose that it is not done. The President leaves the White House in the summer. as most Presidents have done, and as all ought to do. Instead of going to the Soldiers' Home in Georgetown he moves leisurely from point to point, not far away from Washington. He travels as quietly as he can, not making a progress as so many Presidents have done, and very properly, if they liked it. He has a most edifying and amusing contempt for the gibes that are thrown at him, conscious that none of them can really injure him so long as he is not trant from his duty as well us from the White House. The Springfield Republican says that to while away the time is the task of kings, not of Presidents, and advises the President, if he must travel, to go to the Southern States, and learn to distinguish his friends from his enemies. To such a sneer the conduct of the President is sufficient answer, There is not a man in the Southern States who does not know with which side are his sympathies, nor does the Republican show in the least point how his absence from the espital has injured the public welfare. If the supremacy of the party, as the Republican alleges, is fast passing awny, it certainly is not because the President passes the hot weather at the sea-side rather than in Georgetown. And if there is a feeling that his administration disappoints expectation, it is not because of what it has done or failed to do, but of its total want of swagger, its unprecedented freedom from large white wig-

THE FALL TRADE.

The diffusion over the South of a much larger portion of our credit eleculation than they enjoyed last year has had the same effect upon the Northern and Eastern States, from which the drain proceeded, as if the currency had been to that extent contracted. The South thus strengthened, have powerful reasons not only for holding all that they can, but for obtaining, as the fruit of the crop of cotton now about to be gathered, as much money as may be necessary for the convenient prosecution of all their various industries-an object which can not be regarded otherwise than with favor, as the strength of a part is the strength of the

This policy restrains speculation, and induces great caution on the part of buyers. The transfer of capital from the Northern to the Southern section has made money less plentiful; but yet there are many reasons for the confidence still felt that the fall trade will be considerable and remunerative.

The freights to Chicago, ria the Eric road, were raised from 38 cents per hundred to 43 cents for first-class goods; but this, which is the rate on other lines and very nearly the measure for other points, is so far below the combination rates which lately prevailed that it still stimulates to activity in the hope of moving goods before the expected advance in freight occurs. A low rate by one line controls the price by the other great lines, and it may be that the Eric, which acts capricionsly and scarcely at all with a view to remonerating its stockholders, may for some time obstruct any complete arrangement. There are intimations of a moderate advance next week.

So far as dry-goods are concerned, their price turns largely upon that of raw cotton, present and prospective; and it is to the judgment which individual buyers of dry-goods form on this point that they are free or cantions purchasers. The price of raw cotton is still maintained in foreign and home markets at a high figure—higher than is warranted by the interests of manufecturing industry here and abroad,

It would seem from the experience in the trade which we have lately had that more looms for both cotton and wool have been running than can be supported by consumption, and that this excess of production has not been corrected by the necessary suspension of work in England and in this country. This species of property feels the effect of this condition of the trade, and must continue to do so until a proper adjustment has been reached between what is produced and what is consumed, and between the price of the raw material and of manufactures. That such an adjustment must take place is very evident, accompanied with important effects.

It is thought to be somewhat singular, in the face of these facts, that the English are complaining of an insufficiency of the raw material, and are making powerful efforts to increase the growth of cotton in their Indian possessions; but they suppose that the present high price of cotton limits consumption, and that if it were reduced, the use of manufactures would increase in the same proportion.

Our means of testing the accuracy of this theory are fortunately less ample than theirs, for we are in the midst of thriving populations not required to look to the cost of necessaries with the care to which older communities are condemned. In England there is a large population on the verge of pauperism, to whom any advance in the price of commodities is a hardship which must be met by economy. We produce in this country a large portion of the staple, and we share more in the advantage of a high price for it than do the English, who must pay the foreigner the whole excess.

The greatly improved condition of the Southern States is a contribution made from the manufacturing industry of the whole world, and is a fortunate result of circumstances not likely to be of long duration. The sale of the last year's crop has been managed with great adroitness from a clear comprehension of the whole situation, on the part of an intelligent body of planters and merchants, who have undoubtedly combined to produce the result. The tendency hereafter will be in the direction of more reasonable rewards; but it is safe to say that cotton in the South can not be produced at a loss as long as the opinion prevails among British manufacturers that the whole production is inadequate. The means do not exist for an immediate extension of the cultivation in India. Expensive irrigation, model farms to instruct the Ryots, and a large increase of railroad facilities, are the means recommended at Manchester; and these require time for their development. It is safe, therefore, to urge uson Southern planters to go on vigorously with this great industry.

Until the new crop begins to come forward, it is thought, from the combined influence of the present deficiency in middlings of good quality and the resort on the part of mills to short time, that the price of cotton fabrics will continue very firm. The recent activity in the dry-goods trade is due in great part to this cause, but also to the fact that country distributors have light stocks.

A meeting was recently held in Liverpool to encourage a direct trade with the Southern States, and cut off New York from the advantage of being the chief importer and distributor for the whole Union. A planter from Memphis urged this policy, which had its advocates before the war as part of the scheme of independonce which was formed for the protection of the peculiar institution of the South. If it was impossible then to secure this change it must be so now, when the chief object of this isolated policy no longer exists. The eminence of New York in trade is not due to circumstances that can be controlled. The business of importation and distribution can be done cheaper by New York than by any Southern port; and it is this which will prevent its transfer to any other lo-

The Board which was convened to listen to the Memphis appeal would, perhaps, from some little jealousy of the growing influence of this city, aid the scheme if it were possible; but the motives for building up a direct trade between the South and foreign parts have been so much weakened by recent events, and the motives for a more perfect union are now so powerful, that it may be safe to predict that the loss attending such an attempt will not now be incurred.

SENATOR BROWNLOW AND THE TENNESSEE ELECTION.

In the Knoxville Whig of August 31 Senator BrownLow makes a courteous reply to our suggestion that he should explain why he wished "a sound and reliable Republican" to be elected Governor by those who will not elect such a Republican Senator.

The Senator says that the Convention having failed to nominate, he was at liberty to choose between the two Republican candidates, and he believed Mr. SENTER to be the befler man. Personal jealousy had nothing to do with his As to the franchise, he thought it decision. safe and necessary to restore it to those who had forfeited it by rebellion, and among the considerations that influenced him was the fact that the Supreme Court had restored some twenty thousand, including most of the lead-ers, and he saw no reason for further excluding the rank and file. Yet he thought it should be done in a constitutional manner by a conven-tion. For "jumping the question" by improperly manipulating the registration, however, the Senator claims that he is not responsible. He is of opinion that SENTER'S Republican vote would have been larger except for the inter-ference of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster-General, but that his Republican vote is too large to be disregarded. For the possible action of the Legislature in electing a Democratic Senator and rejecting the Fifteenth Amendment, Senator Baowskow declines to be held responsible. Should it do both, he says that his action in the premises will be determined by his convictions of duty.

The Senator thus rests his support of Mr. SERVER upon his personal knowledge and pref-But when the registry was "manipuinted" under the auspices of Mr. SENTER, in what Mr. Brows Low believed to be an unconstitutional manner, was it not plain that the candidate whom he preferred was willing to be elected by unconstitutional means, and by the votes of those who were unfriendly to his professed principles and to those of Senator Brownnow; and was it not equally plain that Mr. SENTER'S election under such circumstances, although he was personally a Republican, could not be considered a Republican victory, and must necessarily give the Legislature and the Senator to the Democrats and defeat the amendment? Is it surprising that, under such circomstances, Republicans out of the State who comstances, Republicans out of the State who knew the Senator's fidelity thought that he should postpose his personal preference to the general advantage? However wise and desirable the removal of disability may have been, the Senator himself concedes that the registry was "improperly manipulated." He thus aided a result which was due to questionable means, and which gives him an opponent of the Admin-istration as a colleague. Senator Bnows.cow certainly has the right to vote for the candidate whom he prefers. But a party man must see that when a Republican supports the candidate whom all the Democrats support he is helping to bring the Democrats into power. This he will of course do when he prefers the Demo-cratic policy. But as we can not see that Mr. SKNTER's success was essential to general enfranchisement, we must regret that the Republicens did not leave him to be elected, if that were inevitable, by the "manipulated" votes.

THE CHINESE TROUBLE.

Ma. J. Ross BROWNE, late Minister to China, denies that he has opposed the ratification of Mr. BURLINGAME's Chinese treaty, or that he has stated that it would be rejected. But Mr. BROWNE's reply to an address of the British and American merchants in Shanghai shows that his view of the true policy to be observed toward China is radically antagonistic to that of Mr. BURLINGAME. The treaty negotiated by the latter was an arrangement between two absolutely independent and sovereign nations. Mr. Baowse, on the contrary, says that in his judgment Chine should be treated as a power sovereign in its political aspect, "but possessing an organization incompatible with absolute "We carry on business here," says Mr. BROWNE, substantially, "by force and against the will of the Chinese; it is, therefore, child's play to profess to respect a sovereignty which we practically disregard. It may be necessary, for our interests, to regulate the internal affairs of the country, and we had better not say in advance that we will not do so." In fine, Mr. BROWNE would have us treat the Chinese just as the Europeans treated the West Indians-that is, make our pleasure and interest the law of the country. In this spirit he virtually says to Prince Kung, the Chinese Minister, that he must hasten to do certain things or they would be done for him.

This policy seems to us neither honorable nor wise. Nothing, certainly, can be more disgraceful than the old British policy in China; and really it is not easy to see how it differed from this. Its principle was that the Chinese were barbarians in possession of a vast country, some of whose productions were desired by En-gland, and should be had at any cost. Suppose that England were to inform us that our tariff was a barbarous Chinese policy, that Chinese policy was distasteful to England, and that if we did not "hurry up" and establish free trade she would do it for us, as she was resolved to trade with us upon conditions agreeable to herself. If China is to be treated as an incompetent child because of her barbarian exclusion of the rest of the world, why is not this country equally childish and barbarous in the degree that it excludes the rest of the world? Mr. BROWNE will see that there is a sad confusion of beams and motes here. His policy is untenable. We ought to trade with China upon terms agreeable to China, not upon such terms

If, indeed, we deny the right of "an igno rant pagan nation," as Mr. BROWNE calls the Chinese, " to do as it pleases, " of course a treaty like Mr. BURLINGAME's is ridiculous. But by what right does Mr. BROWSE make the supposed pecuniary interest of what he is pleased to call a Christian nation the measure of its duty? Which was the more admirable, the conduct of Christian and intelligent England making war upon China to open a market for opium, or that of the ignorant pagan nation refusing to submit? If England can not carry on an opinm trade with China except at the cost of war, is that trade so essential to Christian civilization that the war is justifiable? And if Chinese pagans do not choose to sell tea and chow-chow to Christian Americans, shall we cut their pagan throats by way of persuasion?

If, as Mr. Brown alleges, there is really no authority in China to enforce treaties, that is a good reason for not making them. But that has nothing to do with ignorance and paganism and our right to do what we choose with ignorant and pagan nations. In the eye of what are technically called Christian nations, Turkey is both ignorant and pagen; but we contrive to maintain equal and friendly relations with the Sublime Porte. If it be a fact that the condition of China is such that foreign merchants can only protect themselves by training guns upon the local authorities, then it is certainly not a country to which we should send a minister any more than to New Zealand or Madagascar. But we ought certainly to come to ome conclusion. If Mr. BROWNE'S statements are correct, we ought to withdraw from a treaty with a government that can not protect our citizens, and which is, therefore, of course, incompetent to observe the stipulations of a treaty.

NOTES.

It has never been surprising to those who knew that Mr. Balmonr was a gentleman of ample fortune that he was made Chairman of the National Democratic Committee. But there is evident discontent in a part of the Democratic happy family. There are those who think that the other statesman, Mr. William M. Tweed, would be a more successful manager. Perhaps it would not be so easy to furnish majorities for the whole country, upon information by tele-graph, as it is to the State of New York, but what could be done in that direction Mr. Тweed is unquestionably the man to do. Yet there are skeptics even among his party friends. Just be-fore the nomination of Mr. Horario Surmour and General FRANCIS P. BLAIR we met one of the sturdiest of Democratic hunkers from the ru-ral districts. Speaking of the impending nomina-tion of the Chief Justice, which Mr. Tween was supposed to favor, we remarked that it would be editying to see so unmitigated a Hard-Shell as our interlocator voting for so original an abolitionist as Mr. CHASE. The sturdy hunker, with certain forcible epithets, replied, "I've just seen Bill. Tween, and I told him that he could man-age this city very well, but that the United States were too (compound expértice) big for him!" They certainly were so for the present honorable

THE course of Philosophical and Literary lectures proposed by the new President at Harvard College is not only sure to be most attractive and valuable, but it is a sign of vitality and resolution to keep pace with the rapid movement of the times. Mr. Emansos lectures upon "The Nat-ural History of the Intellect," by which we understand him to propose a series of discourses upon memory, imagination, etc., which will be treated not from the point of view of any "school," but by the insight of genius. Profes or Bowen lectures upon Locke and the Philosophy of the Sixteenth Century. P. ofessor Helsen, a most admirably accomplished scholar, upon Theism, Pantheism, and Atheism. two new names in this department are J. Ellor Canor upon "Kant," and John Fisske upon "The Positive Philosophy." Mr. Canor is a scholar of very remarkable and various acquirements, thoroughly familiar with the German philosophy, as with other and wholly different departments; and Mr. Fiske, a younger man, is known as the author of a reply to Mr. Parron's pamphlet upon smoking and drinking, and of the more elaborate literary reviews in the World, among which a sketch of Greek life published last winter was a very striking paper. Mr. France, scholarship is extensive and accurate, Börnun, upon the French Comedy of the 17th Centary; "History and Relations of the German Language," by Professor W. D. Whither; "Goethe and Schiller," by Professor Curlum— all of whom have the best reputation in their deall of whom have the best reputation in their de-partments. There are then "English Poetry of the 13th and 14th Centuries," by Professor Francis J. Cett.D, who is unquestionably the master of American, and certainly the peer of En-glish, scholars in that subject. It is to Professor Cat.D that we owe the recovery of the original Percy manuscript, and from him that the best edition of Chancer is expected. Professor James Russers, Lowis, between upon "Farly Italian RUSSELL LOWISLL lectures upon "Early Italian and Spanish Literature." Those who have heard him upon Dante know with what wealth of knowledge, what delicacy of insight, what subtlety of humor and fine imagination, what deep and no-ble sympathy, what generous wisdom, he will treat his subject; while the "New Italian Lit-erature" will be presented by William D. How-ELLA, whose articles in the North American upon the other short the stream familiaries with it xi.i.s, whose articles in the North American upon the subject show the utmost familiarity with it, and are full of that thoughtfulness, tender grace, and sweet, sparkling humor which are displayed with inexpressible charm in his two books of life in Italy. The Literary course begins on the 18th of September, the Philosophical upon the 14th: the fees for both courses will be $300, and they are open to all "competent persons, men or wo-and the second of the second o

THE Secretary of State has written an admi-rable letter to the Vice Consul-General, at Ha-vana, upon the abuses of American citizenship. Certain Cubans have been naturalized in this country, and returning to Cuba have concealed the fact, and even accepted offices that can be conferred only upon Spanish subjects. Of course, when some duty to the Spanish Govern-ment was to be enforced at personal cost, these persons declare that they are citizens of the United States. Mr. Fish states that both native and naturalized citizens are entitled to the same protection from this government, but that it is very possible for any of the latter class to return to their native country and pass for native subjects or citizens with improper inten-tions. He instructs the Consul to use his discretion in case of all such applications, and to interfere only when he is convinced that the ap-plicant has in good faith maintained his allegiance to this country. We hope that this is not to be considered another illustration of the base truckling of this government to the bloated desposism of Spain. Upon the face of it, it seems as fair and honorable as enforcing the Neutrality laws. But when Spain once has a nation under her thumb, as it is declared that she has had us throughout the Cuhan business, every action of a subject Secretary must be suspiciously scruti-

Ma. Losstag's "Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution" is universally known as one of the most delightful and valuable of histories for the most delightful and valuable of histories for the family library. It was the result of careful study and personal exploration with pen and pencil in hand; and it was so warmly received that the author naturally continued his work, and the Harrens have just issued the "Pictorial Field-Book of the War of 1812," which resumes the national story where it was left by the first work, and brings it down to the pence of 1815. Beginning with a faithful sketch of the 1815. Beginning with a faithful sketch of the condition of the country after the Revolution. the rise of parties, the war with Barbary, and the European wars, it proceeds to develop the causes of our second war with Great Britain, which it then describes in most ample and in-teresting detail, with every kind of quaint and attractive illustration, and in a familiar and simple style. The research and labor in both these works are very great, and they are treasuries of important facts. Both books are most entertaining to readers of all agos, however fa-millar with the leading events, and are indispensable to every library.

Tun system of Lyceum lecturing has now be-come so extensive and complicated that a Bureau for conducting correspondence has be both a necessity and a convenience. The American Literary Bureau in this city has engaged in this work for three or four years with such success that it has now upon its list a great number of lecturers, among whom are some of the most desirable in the country. The value of the system adopted by the Bureau has long been proved in the Western States, and Lyccum committees will save themselves a great deal of trou-ble by putting themselves in communication with the American Literary Burenu, 132 Nassau Street.

It is time that the stockholders and directors of the city horse-cars heard the very general complaint of the cushioned seats which are sur posed to be infected with disease, and known to be infested with vermin. The clean seat of nar-row slats is universally demanded by intelligent public opinion. And who will doubt that Companies so eager to accommodate the public as the ese-ear Companies are, which always forbid crowding their cars, for instance-who, we say, will doubt that, within a month, all the uncleanly cushions will have disappeared?

A CLEEGYMAN in England lately published a work called the "Perfect Man," which the Syrc-mor praised, but said that it had its origin in Ecce Home. The author thereupon wrote to the editor that his book was chiefly composed of sermons written during the year 1865, and was then laid by. Yet at the time he had written for it as a good title "Ecce Home," which, of course, Ecce Homo. The author thereupon wrote to and he has proved his power to deal vigorously and brilliantly with his subject by two articles in the English Fortsightly Harting of Lot year. In the Literary course the names are Professor is another curious illustration of the apparent plagiarism and imitation of which literary his-

As ingenious gentleman, signing himself President, bespeaks our sympathy in his proposition to establish the "Order of the Eagle," the object of which is to be "the saving of our country by the purifying of politica." Each member is to swear that he will support the Constitution, yote for the best candidate, and take no bribe. These are most excellent purposes, but as every honorable and intelligent citizen virtually takes this oath, as fast as he perceives the situation, the Order of the Eagle is already very much larger than its President is probably aware.

THERE is a new singer, and her name is GI-ULIA MARINORI. She appeared at Milan last year, and has been singing in Sweden this year. Did Sweden wish to prove if she could rival "the Swedish nightingale?" With what curious memories JENNY LIND would listen! A correspondent writes to the Tribuse that in an experience of twenty years he recalls no debutants who units so many excellences and charms as Madame Marinone. Indeed, he calls her an imminently formidable rival of Nilsson and

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

ATTORNET GENERAL Hoan has given an opinion as to the administration of the test oath to the Virginia Legislater. He says that the Legislature must, as a presequisite, submit the Constitution, and their action thereon, to Congress for approval. In this the test oath will not be required. If the Constitution and the action of the Legislature be approved, the Legislature of the State of Virginia, and the provisions of the Constitution fixing the qualifications of members of the Legislature necessarily prevail—the requirements of the reconstruction acts being thus supersected so far as Virginia is concerned. But before such appears by Congress, Virginia not being in all respects a State of the Union, the Legislature, as a provisional body, can not peasing the institution of the foreconstruction acts require the satisfication of the Union, the Legislature, as a provisional body, can not peasing the test cath. The reconstruction acts require the satisfication of the United States before the Blate can be admitted to representation is Congress.

The diminution of the public debt during the month of August was over the and one-hold millions. The reduction since March I has been $20,500,188.

From April 1 to August 31 24,378 immigrants arrived at Toronto. Of these only 1318 remained in Canada, the others coming to the United States.

the others coming to the United States.

The Thomton property, one of the old colonial extracts of Virginia, lying on the Alexandria, London, and Hampshire Railroad, and containing 1500 acres, has been sold to a Northern company for $150,000 in the divided up into email farms, and colonists from the North are to settle upon it.

On August 31 there was a fire at Cape May, which desiroyed servent hotels, including the United States and Atlantic, and numerous other buildings, havelying a total loss of over a quarter of a million of dollars. The fire broke out at there o'clock is the morning, from the store of Boyton, known as the "pearling," who was arrested during the day, charged with incendiarters.

The election of a Democratic Lastatance to Out.

with incendiariem.

The election of a Democratic Legislature in California will probably postpone the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment by that State.

The Republican State Convention of Wisconsin on the 1st Instant nominated for Governor Lucius Fairchild, the present incumbent.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The monument commemorative of the Council, submitted to the Pope by his architect, Count Vespiguani, has been approved. It will consist simply of the column of African marble from the emperium, raised on the faces, with bas-ecticils, representing the five of its faces, with bas-ecticils, representing the five parts of the world, while the sinth face will bear the arms of Flus IX., and the date of the opening and close of the Council. The column will be surmounted by a states of Pins IX. pronouncing the benediction arise of the Wall of the Council in St. Peter's, and evinced the greatest interest in every detail. The Pope has decided that the universal Catholic arhibition of 1870 shall be opened on February 1, and closed on June 1, and is reserving a large sum for the prices and other expenses. Tur monument commemorative of the Council, sub-tion of 1870 shall be opened on February 1, and closed on June 1, and is reserving a large sum for the prince and other expenses.

The German Governments are cridently seriously moved by the projects imputed to the Pope. They believe that the Chemonical Council will modify the syllabors on an increase to the state all control over the Catholic deergy. So grave is this dauger considered, that the Bavardan Government has entered into a league with the Procedon to resist any innovation to this sense, and Prince Hodenlote is furiously attacked in Boure as a traitor to Catholician. It is afferned semi-ufficially that the league covers all Germany, and that the Governments are determined not to recede one step. According to the Roman correspondent of the According to the Roman correspondent to a continuent to the Roman correspondent to the Roman correspond tion, but they dread, and will, we imagine, secretly resist, the first. An infallible priest might authorize resistance to a civil law.

The story of the imprisoned run of Cracow has led to a very important anti-civical agitation, both in Austria and Hungary. In the latter country, especially, it has given additional strength to the opposition which has for some time been graving up there against the preteasions of the Boman Catholic Church, and the Hungarian press now not only demands the suppression of all coursets and monasteries, but also the abolition of the celibary of the clergy. The laity of the bishoptic of Treves have politioned their hishop in reference to the Grumenical Council, asking for the abolition of the Index Librorum Frobibitorum. The people want to read what they choose without pricetly dictation.

On the 1st of September Prince Napoleon made an important ejeech in the French Semie upon the Sentant Councilum, in which be gave expression to very libered views, calling for additional reforms.

The French Emperor is reported to be in a very illiberal views, calling for additional reforms.

The French Emperor is reported to be in a very critical condition of health.

The Prench Senace on the 4th, by a vote of 115 to 9, rejected an amendment to the Senatus Consultant proposing liberal reforms in the constitution of the Senate. Prince Nepoleon seconded the amendment.

A thermometer which has been kept for seventy-five years in the vanits of the Paris Observatory, at a depth of ninety-core fact below the surface, has not varied more than half a degree during the entire interval.

The great ship-canal which is to connect Ameterdam with the North Sea, at a cost of $1,000,000 guilders, is now once more in progress, the Government of the Notherlands having relieved the contractors of certain difficulties which for a time hindered the work. The casal will be about affects miss in length. The opening of the new port as a harbor of reflage will be a boun to all the mariners who navigate the North Sea.

BOAT-HOUSE OF THE LONDON ROWING CLUB, ON THE THAMES .- [SKETCHED BY OUR OWS ARTIST.]

VIEWS ON THE THAMES.

THOSE of our readers who have perused the ecounts which have been given of the late international boat-race between the Harvard and Ox-ford crews will be interested in the views given on this page. They are views upon the Thames along the line of the race. One of them repre-

we gave inst week several equally characteristic representations connected with the great race. Before this reaches our readers the Harvard crew will have returned home

THE CRAB-TREE INN, ON THE THAMES.-[SERFCHED BY OUR OWN ARTIST.]

A SUMMER SUNSET.

Gazza islands in a golden sea,
With amethyst cliffs that melt away
At every wash of the sleepy wave,
White towering Alps that great the day;
And still through rents in the further spa
Glimpess of distant ocean bed,
Burning with restless changeful light,
And velaced with finishes of glory specad,
Far as the living are from the dead,
Par as the blessed are from hell's night.

Then the islands grow to radiant realms,
And shoot forth golden tongues of land,
And the Alpe fade down to a level plain,
Where monetors troop in a threatening band;
Then marky towers, where ghosts can reign,
Rice like a wissed's dying dream;
While low in the west in a narrow vein
There specads, through the duck, one golden beam,
Like heaven's last and linguing gleam
Seen through hell's vista by those in pain.

Nature is changeful, and, like the sea. Has its autumn cbb and its summer flow. Cloudlets of morning pass with dawn; Who can tell where the sunbeams go? Dead flowers turn to mere earth at last, Earth to blossoms breaks forth in May, Life and death are ever at war. Life and death are ever at war.
On this great chameleon world, I say;
Yet cloud or river, or leaf on the tree
Is not so changeful, it seems to me,
As a woman's mind—that a feather can eway.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In fibe Books .- Book #.

CHAPTER VII.

MR. PLEW.

Ar Shipley-in-the-Wold people dined at two o'clock, and took ten at six or seven. "Ten time" was the vicar's favorite hour of the twen ty-four, especially in the winter season. The work of the day was over. The fire blazed up companionably, and filled the pauses of conver-sation with light and warmth. And if a forlorn wind went meaning without upon the "gloom-ing flats," its voice only heightened, by imagined contrast, the comforts of the ingle nook.

The family sitting-room—named in Daneshire parlance, the parlor—was no exception to the assertion that Shipley vicarage was an ugly house. Yet even here the magic of the leaping flame and glowing coals worked wonders. It sent flickering shadows to play over the bare ceiling; it made the glass panes of a tall book-case sparkle with flashing rubies; it found out every gleam of gilding on the tarnished bindings of the well-worn books; is mellowed the bue of the fided crimson window-curtains, subdued the staring pattern of the wall-paper, and made the old-fashioned chintz covering on the furniture seem rich and harmonious as an Indian carpet.

"Give me another cup of tea, Vercoica," said the viear, sitting in the parlor on a drear March evening.

His daughter and his ward were both with him. On each of the three faces there was, for once, a look of cheerfaltess. That morning their guest had been prenounced ont of danger. The shadow which had darkened the house was passing away.

"Give me another cup of tea," said the vicar once more, rubbing his hands together. And then he pursued the discourse which his demand had interrupted. "Yes; and I assure you I am very much pleased with Sir John altogether. Nothing could be better chosen than his manner of expressing himself."

"What did be say, papa?"
"Oh, well! I can not recollect word for word. Thanks, of course, and gratitude, and—and so on. But not overdone. Very earnest and gentlemanlike. He appears to be a man of the world, yet not exactly worldly. He has, in short, I should say, a great deal of savoir vivre."

"Savoir vivre!" repeated Mand, musingly.

"That would be an art to learn; how to live!

"The quintessence of all arts, Maudie," "Yes; and it would include—would it not?— how to die; if one did but consider aright."
"Mand!" cried Veronica, with a little shudder, "I do beg of you not to be solemn. Don't talk of such things. It makes me cold. You are worse than a northeast wind blowing over the snow-drifts."

Veronica inherited from her mother a mon than childish horror of death. The slightest al-lusion to it suffeed to cloud her bright face and make her irritable.

Well," answered Mand, quietly. "Sir John Gale is not going to die just yet, they say, so there is no need to be selemn, as you call it. It is to be hoped he will give up hunting, or learn to get a better seat on horseback. Joe Dowsett says that that hunter of his is as gentle as a lamb, and has such a mouth that a baby might ride him. And yet Sir John could not contrive to stick on his back."

"That's not quite fair, Mand," observed the vicar. "When Sir John was thrown opposite the garden gate he was in a helf-fainting condition, you must remember. But it was not then that the mischief was done. It was an ugly fall begut earlier in the day from a fresh, hot-tembeast. He changed borses afterward, and persisted in continuing to 'assault the cluse,'as Mugworthy says. So I do not think we are justified in concluding any thing to the disadvantage of his horsemanship."

"But don't you know, papa," Veronica put in, "that Joe has inoculated Maud with the true Daneshire notion that only Daneshire folks, born and bred, can ride?"

Maud smiled and shook her bead.

"Sir John charged me," said the vicar, "with a thousand heart-felt thanks to my amiable daughters.

Thanks?" exclaimed Veronica. "Truly we have done nothing for him. Faul takes care that his master shall lack no service. So, then, Sir John thinks that Maud is your daughter a well as I ?"

"I suppose so. It matters nothing. In a short time he will go away, and in a—perhaps— rather longer time, will have forgotten all about is; so that it was very unnecessary to trouble him with family details.

"If he forgets all about you, it will be very ungrateful, Uncle Charles," said Mand. From the earliest days of her coming to the vicarage, Mand Desmond had been used to call Mr. Levincourt and his wife "uncle" and "aunt;" although she was, of course, aware that no relationship really existed between them and herself.

"Ungrateful? Well, I don't know. It would scarcely have been practicable to leave him out-side the garden gate all night. Do you know any one who would have shut the door and gone in quietly to bed under the circumstances?

"Forget us!" cried Veronica, with an impa-tient shrug of her shoulders; "no doubt he will forget us! Who that once turned his back on Shipley would care ever to think of it again?"
"I would," replied Mand, very quietly.
"Would you? I am not sure of that. But "I would," replied Mand, very quietly.

"Would you? I am not sure of that. But at all events the cases are widely different. Six John is wealthy. He can travel. He has seen many countries, Paul says: France, Italy, the East. He can go where he pleases; can enjoy society. Oh, Shipley-in-the-Wold must be a mere little ugly blot on his map of the world!"
The vices sighed, uncrossed his legs, and

The vicur sighed, uncrossed his logs, and stretched them out straight before him, so as to bring his feet nearer to the fire.

"What made him come to the little ugly blot, then, when he had all the sunny places to ci from?" demanded Mand, indignantly. "He came for the hunting, I suppose."

"He came for the hunting, I suppose."

"Very well, then; you see there was something in Shipley that he couldn't get in his France, and his Italy, and his East!"

Veronice burst out laughing. She seated herself on the rug at Mand's feet, and leaning back looked up into her face. "What a child you are, Maudie!" she exclaimed. "His France and his East! Yes; I suppose rich people find good things every where—even in Shipley."

"And they get pitched off their horses, and are bruised and cut, and hurnt by fever, and prostrated by weakness, in spite of their riches," observed Mand, philosophically.

"Children," said the vicar, anddenly, "do you want to go to Lowater on the nineteenth?"

"Of course we do, papa. What is it? Have

"Of course we do, pape. What is it? Have you had an invitation?"

Vercenica's eyes sparkled, and her rosy lips smiled, and she clapped her slender hands to-gether joyously. Mand, too, looked eager and interested

"Yes," answered Mr. Levincourt; "I have had an invitation for us all to dine with the Sheardowns on the nineteenth. It is their wedding day.

How exquisite!" cried Veronica, seizing one of Mand's hands that rested on her shoulder, and squeezing it hard. "A dismer-party! A well in the desert! A tuft of palm-trees in a barren

"I suppose we must go," said the vicar, plaintively.

1 'suppose we must,' indeed. Why, papa, you know you like the idea of it as much as we

"I am always charmed to meet Mrs. Shear down and the captain."

"No doubt of it," cried Veronica, now in a full glow of excitement. "We know that you are Mistress Nelly Sheardown's most devoted cavalier. But it isn't only that, pape mio. You like the idea of a change, a break in the monotony, a peep at something beyond Shipley. You would like to go, if it were even to dise at Haymoor with old Lady Alicia. And quite right

The vicar made an attempt to assert his pre-rogative of victim-bood, but in vain.

The varying thermometer of Veronica's spirits had risen to fever heat, and she rattled on volubly, speculating as to who there would be at Lo-water; whether Mrs. Sheardown would contrive to give them a dance in the evening; what she should wear (exhaustless theme), and so forth. At length the stream of words slackened, and then ceased. The rival merits of scarlet and amber ribbons demanded an absorbed and silent

"Don't you think, Uncle Charles," said Mand. "that Mrs. Sheardown is the sweetest woman on ever saw?"

"She is charming, in truth; charming and excellent; and, moreover, possesses a mind of a very superior calibre."

"Bravo, Uncle Charles! And then she isin my eyes, at least-so pretty. That quality must not be omitted in the catalogue of her perfertions.

"I am not quite sure on the point, Mandie.

Is she very pretty? I don't think that any man would ever have fullen in love with Mrs. Sheardown for her beauty."
"Perhaps not. And if so, all the better.

Sure I am that any one who once loved her would never cease to think her beautiful."

Verenica looked up. "All true," she said. "I agree with your enlogism. And observe know that to Mrs. Sheardown I am not sim-

"Simpatica! Nonsense. Whenever you use an Italian word where an English one would serve, I know that you are saying something that won't bear daylight. Why should not Mrs. Sheardown like you? Veronica clasped her hands behind her head, and rested both head and arms on Mand's knoc.

Then, with her eyes cast contemplatively up-ward, "Because I am not good," said she. The vicar's brows contracted into an uneasy pucker as he looked down on his daughter's packer as he looked down on his daughter's beamtiful face.

"Veronica," he said, almost sternly, "I wish you would not say such things."
"Very well, papa; I won't."
"Still more, I wish that you would not think such thoughts."
"Ab questo poi..."

"Ah, questo poi--"
"If you please, Sir," said Catherine, the maid, putting her rosy face into the room, "here is Mr. Plew."

Mr. Plew was hospitably invited to enter. Mr. Frew was nosposory invited to enter. The surgeon of Shipley was a small man, with a fringe of straight, light hair round a bald crown. His eyes were of a weak blue tint, his skin conally pale yellow. On the present occasion, however, it burned with a fiery red, in consequence of the change from the piercing outer air to the temperature of the vicar's well-warmed and welllighted parlor. His eyes watered, and his frost-inflamed nose glowed like a hot coal, above the whise woolen comforter that enveloped his throat,

"I fear I am intruding at an unseasonable hour," said Mr. Plew, speaking with a strong provincial accent and a gentle, deprecating man-

"By no means. Pray come in. It is our idle hour, you know. Veronica, ring for a clean cup, and give Mr. Plew some tea," said e vicar.

Not any, thank you. Pray don't move, Miss erincourt. I have just left our patient's room. "Not any, thank you. Pray don't move, Miss Levincourt. I have just left our patient's room. I could not resist coming to congratulate you on the favorable verdict that Dr. Gunnery pronounced this morning. Paul told me. I was unable to be here earlier in the day. But from my own observation of Sir John's condition this evening, I am quite able to indorse what Dr. Gunnery said. Danger is over for the present."

Mr. Plew spoke in a rather hesitating, shy way. And, although he seemingly tried to control his wandering giances, he could not help turning his eyes at every minute toward the turning his eyes at every minute toward the hearth, where Misa Levincourt still remained in hearth, where Miss Levincourt still remained in her nonchalant attitude on the rug.

"Voronica, get up," whispered Mand.

"Why? I am very comfortable. Mr. Plew is an old friend. We don't treat him with cere-mony; do we, Mr. Plew?" said Veronica aloud.

"Oh dear, Miss Levincourt, I trust not. I heg—that is—I hope you would not think of disturbing yourself on my account."

"Then you must neek another enshion," said

"Then you must seek another cushion," said

Mand, bluntly. "I am weary of your weight. You are as well able to support yourself as I am support you."
With that, Miss Desmond rose, crossed the room, and took a chair beside the vicar. Mr. Plew's face untered a mute and disapproving commentary on the action.

Veronica caught his look, and instantly an-

Veronica caught his look, and instantly answered it by speech.

"Is Miss Desmond bound to give way to my whims, pray? I have more selfishness in my little finger than she has in her whole composition. She is worth three times my weight, in pure gold. Ain't you, Mandie?"

"I should say," answered Mand, stiffly, "that a discussion of our comparative merits would be highly uninteresting to Mr. Plew."

Mr. Plew looked amazingly uncomfortable, "The view came to his rescue.

The vicar came to his rescue.

"We are much obliged to your unremitting attention, Mr. Plew. And to it is owing, under Providence, the happy issue of this affair. venture to say that Sir John is very sensible of his debt to you. I have seen and spoken with him to-day for the first time."

"Oh, indeed, Sir?" "Oh, indeed, Sir?"

"Yes; a very agreeable man, Sir John."

"I dare say he is, Mr. Levincourt. But you know the circumstances under which I have seen him have not been favorable exactly." Here Mr.

Plew tittered faintly.
"H'm! Not a good patient, eh?"
"I won't say that, Sir. But I should say he had not been accustomed to be restrained in any way. His servant manages him, though."

"Paul is a capital fellow; one of those excellent servants that one never finds in England." Indeed, Sir?

"No, our soil won't grow them. Or, if one is to be found here and there, they are, at any rate, not indigenous to Daneshire."

"Daneshire people, high or low, are not re-markable for civility," observed Veronica.

"Nor servility," added Maud.

"I suppose we shall soon be losing our great," resumed the vicar. "He spoke to-day of re-lieving us of his presence, et cetera. The fact is, that to us personally his stay involves scarcely any inconvenience. But he will naturally be anxious to be gone as soon as may be. How soon do you think he will be able to travel?"

Mr. Plew could not tell. He would be able should have left his couch. He anticipated that Sir John would find himself very weak. There had been much prostration.

"I hear," proceeded Mr. Plew, "that Sir
John Gale's groom and three hunters have been "I agree with your enlogant. And observe that it is pure magnanimity which prompts me to do so. For sweet Mistress Nelly does not like me one bit."

"Oh, Veronica!"

"Oh, Mand! It is so. I have a sixth sense which never deceives me in these matters. I He is immensely rich, from what I can gather."

As thus Mr. Plew gessiped on, in a monoto-neus tone, the vicar listened, or seemed to listen, with half-closed eyes. His thoughts were in reality harking back to Veronica's phrase that Shipley must be "a mere little ugly blot" in Sir John's map of the world. And then the vicar included in some "sweet self-pity;" contrasting his days spent among Daneshire hinds, and un-der Daneshire skies, with the brightness of his three years' sojourn abroad. And yet those years spent in foreign lands had been haunted by the ghost of a lost love, and by a vain re-gret.

Presently Mr. Plew's talk turned on the choir of St. Gildas, the progress it had made, and the desirability of introducing still further improvements. Then Mr. Levincourt roused himself to attend to what was being said. He began to talk himself, and he talked very well. Veronica and Mand sat a little spart, away from the glare of the fire, and held a whispered consultation as to their toilets on the nineteenth.

Maud had her share of natural girlish interest in the topic; but she tired of it long before her companion. With a quiet movement she drew a book from beneath a heap of colored wools and canvas in her work-basket, and began to read, almost stealthily, half hidden behind the vicar's arm-chair. Veronica advanced to the hearth, drew her chair up opposite to Mr. Plew, and disposed one foot, coquettishly peeping from under the folia of her dress, on the polished steel har of the

Mr. Plew stumbled, stammered, and lost the thread of his discourse. "I beg your pardon," said the vicar, "I don't the partial of the following serious comprehend your last remark. I was saying that there are some pretty quaint bits of melody in those scenars of Kozeluch. Miss Desmond plays the piano-forte part. Bring your flute some evening, and try them over with her. The piano-forte may be unlocked again now, I suppose. When I said that Sir John's stay involved no retracted incomprehence to us. I recleased on our personal inconvenience to us, I reckoned on our being allowed to hear the voice of music once

"Mr. Plew's flute has the softest of voices, paps. I am sure its serial breathings could not penetrate to the blue chamber."

penetrate to the blue chamber."

"Ah, there, now—there, Miss Veronica—Miss Leviacourt—you're chaffing me."

"Eh?" (with wide-opened eyes and super arching of the brows.)

"I beg pardon—laughing at me."

"How can you think so, Mr. Plew?"

"Oh, I know. But you are privileged, of course."

course Am 17"

"I mean young ladies in general are privi-leged to say what they please. I'm sure, now, that you don't really care about my flute playing. would not like to hear it."

"But it is papa and Miss Desmond whom you play for. If they are satisfied, all is well. I don't pretend to be a virtuosa. And I will say this for your flute, Mr. Plew—it is very unob-

The sparkle of raillery in her eyes, the saucy smile on her lip, the half-disdainful grace of her attitude, appeared to entrance the little surgeon. His eyes blinked as he looked at her. There was no revolt in his meck soul against the scare ly disguised incolence of her manner.

The vicar was a man of fine breeding. His daughter's behavior to-night jarred on his taste. Mr. Levincourt did not usually trouble himself to observe, still less to correct, such shortcom-ings. But his interview with Sir John Gale had awakened old associations. He was conscious of the impression which his own polished address had made on his guest. When Mr. Plew had departed the vicar said, in a tone more of complaint than rebuke: "You should not tease that mild little man, Veronica. He does not understand raillery, and will either presume on it to become familiar, or else suffer from wounded feeling. Neither alternative is to be desired."

"Papa mio, he likes it!"

"But I do not. Besides, it is of you that I am thinking. Flippancy in a woman is of all things the most detestable. Not to speak of the matter on higher grounds" (the vicar habitually avoided all appeal to "higher grounds" in his non-professional moments), "it is utterly in had ste—mauvais genre." Veronica floabed high with anger, for her amour propre was stung; but by the time that she and Maud retired for the night the cloud of temper had dispersed. Veronica came into Maud's room, and began chatting guyly about Mrs Sheardown's dinner-party.

"Maud," said she, "Maud, I have decided on amber—a good rich amber, you know. I shall wear an amber satin sash with my white dress, and a streak of the same color-just a band of it—in my hair."
"Very well."

"Very well? Are you in one of your frozen moods, Maud Hilda Desmond? If so, thaw as quickly as may be; I want to talk to you."

Maud wrapped a white dressing gown around ber, seated herself by the fire, and proceeded to loosen her straight silky hair from its plaits. After a pause she said: "I do not wish to be frozen, Veronica; but your sudden changes of tremperature are fatiguing. Just now you were like a brooding thunder-cloud. At present all is sunshine and blue sky. Do you suppose you are likely always to find persons able and willing to follow these capricious variations?"

Veronics took this speech very meekly. "I can't help it, Maudie," said she.

"Yes, you can; you can command yourself when there is a sufficient object in view. You don't exhibit these vagaries in the presence of people whom you desire to charm."

"I wonder why I let you talk so to me. I um your elder by two years, you little solemn

Mand quietly released the last coil of her hair from its bonds, and said nothing. Suddenly Veronica knelt down by her companion's side and clasped her arms round her waist. So she still and silent, for some minutes. Then she slid down into her favorite posture on the rug, and exclaimed, without looking up, "I wish I could be good like you, Mand!"
"Nonsense! Good like me? I am not very good. But we can all be better if we try hard."

"I can not. No; I can not. I-I-want so many things that good people despise-or preto despise.

What things?" "Oh, I don't know; all sorts of things. Is there nothing you want?"

"Plenty of things I should like. But I don't see how wanting things should prevent your being good."

"But I want vain, wicked, worldly things,

"And do you think vain, wicked, worldly things would make you happy?"

"Yes, I do. There! Don't look so scared, and open your eyes so wide, white owl. That's the truth. You always advocate speaking the truth, you know. Good-night."
"Good-night, Veronica. You are in one of your perverse moods to-night. There is no use in arguing with you."

"Not a bit of use!"

"But you are wiser than your words. You

'That's the worst of it! I wish I didn't know better. The fools are never troubled by knowing better. I know the better and want the worse. There, now, you are frozen into an icemaiden again!"

Mand remained pale and silent, gazing straight before her.

Veronica waited a minute, lingering near the door, and then, with a little defiant toss of the head, shrugged her shoulders and left the room without another word.

The house was still; the vibrations of the last stroke of eleven, boomed out by the deep-voiced bell of St. Gildas, were dying away; the glow of bell of St. Gildas, were dying away; the glow of the fire had died down to a faint red glimmer, when a white figure glided noiselessly to Maud's

"Mandie! Mandie! Are you asleep?"
"Veronica! What is it? What is the mat-

"Nothing. Kiss me, Mand. I can not sleep until you have done so.

Maud raised her head from the pillow and kissed the other girl's cheek.
"Good-night, dear Veronica," she whispered.
"God bless you, Maudie!"

VACCINATION.

Ir Chinese chronicles tell the truth, mankind had been scourged by a loathsome disease, which maimed the few whose lives it spared, for nearly whose lives it spared, for nearly three thousand years before an obscure medical practitioner in Gloucestershire atumbled upon a neans of palliating, if not altogether an its ravages. To be more precise, the existence of small-pox in man is traced back in the records of the Celestial Kingdom as far as 1122 years before Christ, and in 1798 Dr. Edward Jenner published an unostentatious essay setting forth the results of several years of careful investigation into what at first seemed a rustic superstition, and modestly expressing a "hope of its becom-ing beneficial to mankind." This superstition was, that cow-milkers who contracted sore hands was, that cow-mixers was contracted sore hands from cows suffering under a peculiar and then prevalent eraption on the unider, were thereby given immunity from small-pox. Jenner heard the village goesip, had his attention drawn to certain corroborative facts, pondered the matter, tested it in various ways, and finally promulgated his scheme of "Vaccusaryov." his scheme of "VACCINATION.

In connection with Jenner's researches, and as showing his superior perspicacity, two circum-stances are noteworthy. The first of these is, stances are noteworthy. The first of these is, that a popular belief in the protective power of the infection, derived from this peculiar kine disease, was not confined to Gloucestershire, but existed in the dairy districts around Göttingen, where acute medical observers have never been wanting. The second is, that the similarity be-tween the "epizootic" in cattle and small-pox in man was noted by Italian writers before Jenner announced his belief that the two maladies were identical. Subsequent experiments have conclusively proven the validity of this hypothesis. Small-pox was transmitted from the human subject to the cow and other animals in 1801; and in 1836 a Russian physician named Thiele pro-duced on cow's udders, by inoculation with the the cow and other animals in 1801; and virus of human small-pox, the characteristic vesicles of the kine-pox proper, and found that the lymph from these retained its specific power after seventy-five successive transmissions through human subjects. Among the results of other interesting experiments it may be stated that hu-man small-pox has been transmitted through the horse to the cow, and from the latter children have been vaccinated with genuine cow-pox and furthermore, that when a cow is inoculated with roccise matter from a human arm, the lymph produced in her has comparatively little activity, but gains intensity by successive transmissions through human subjects.

It seems certain, from these and other data, that the same cause which produces small-pox in man gives rise to a specific disease in cattle, but that in the latter the vivus undergoes a modifica-tion which renders its manifestations much milder, without, however, destroying its essential attributes; in other words, by vaccinating a child we communicate to it a very light form of smallpox, and thereby prevent it from contracting a graver form of the same malady.

That this protective power is really exerted by vaccination, statistics show beyond the possibility of dispute. In England, during the last half of the eighteenth century, out of every 1000 deaths 96 were caused by small-pox, while in the half century from 1800 to 1850 the rate was relevant at 25 1, 1000. reduced to 35 in 1000. In the German States vaccination reduced the mortality due to smallpox from 66.5 to 7.26 in every 1000 deaths. Every where experience has shown that the more thoroughly vaccination is enforced the fewer deaths occur from small-pox. Thus, in Glasgow (when vaccination was voluntary and rure) this disease killed 36 out of every 1000 deaths, while in the Rhenish Provinces (where vaccination was compulsory) its ratio was but 3.7 in 1000. During the twenty years from 1817 to 1837 several epidemics of small-pox visited the West Indies, but among the British troops stationed there (an aggregate strength of 86,661 whites and 40,934 blacks), out of a total mortality of 6803, there was not a single death from that disease. Statistics of this several minds to added above the statement of the several statement. tistics of this sort might be adduced almost ad injustum, if it were requisite to give further evi-dence of the safeguard afforded by vaccination. Strange to say, in the face of all these facts,

Strange to say, in the face of all these facts, there has been, since Jenner's time, a dogged spirit of opposition which has periodically manifested itself against his discovery; and at the present day, more particularly in England, not only the ignorant classes, but even many persons of intelligence and culture, have declared open and organized hostility to vaccination, and accuse it of committing ravages worse than those of the disease which it supplants. According to popular belief, scrofuls, consumption, fevers of various kinds, erysipelas, and indeed nearly all the ills that flesh is beir to, are transmitted by vaccine lymph; the more intelligent opponents of vaccination, among whom are included a few medical men, confine their argument to the pos-sibility of communicating syphilis and certain forms of skin-disease. The first of these theories is thus chearly answered in the recent work of Professor Niemeyer, than whom no higher authority on such subjects exists;

"Leaving out of consideration certain foolish objections that have been advanced against vaccination, it can not be denied that it sometimes endangers life, and in other cases leaves permasent impairment of health, especially outaneous eruptions and other scrofulous affections. The hypothesis that scrofula was transferred by the vaccination from one child to the other is false, however, as can be proved. Sometimes children become scrofulous after vaccination, although become scrotulous after vaccination, although the lymph have been taken from the arm of a perfectly healthy child; and sometimes chil-dren remain perfectly healthy after being vac-cinated with lymph from a decidedly scrofulous child. The occurrence of scrofula after vaccina-tion seems to be due to the debilitating influence of the fever accompanying the vaccina, and the prominence of the exanthema among these scrof-ulous affections appears to depend on the disorder of the skin, artificially induced at the point of vaccination. At least, other febrile diseases, as well as all debilitating affections occurring in young children with a tendency to scrofula, have the same influence in developing this disease that raccine has. And we know that blisters and other irritants to the skin not only induce in-flammation at the point of application, but also increase the predisposition to other cutaneous affections. Many children who have never previously suffered from any exanthema are affected for months with moist ecrame of the feet months with moist eczema of the face after having their ears pierced, as well as after vaccination. But it is only in rare cases that the occurrence of scrofulous affections is due solely to vaccination, and is not influenced by other causes, such as weening and teething, which usually take place about the time that vaccination is done; and it is still rarer for life to be endangered by the operation. Complete ignorance of statistics of mortality, which show a decided decrease of mortality since the introduction of vaccination, must be the only excuse for urging these exceptional cases as grounds against vaccination. It may be readily seen why more children die of messies, scarlatina, croup, and hydrocephalus, since small-pox leaves a larger number for these diseases to attack, as it were. But the slight increase of mortality in bove diseases does not, by any means, equal the diminution of mortality in variola (small-Unless the occurrence of a small-pox epidemic throws all other considerations into the shade, I do not vaccinate weakly children, inclined to scrofula, during their first year, but wait till the second or third, after the teeth have developed, because I am satisfied that, in such children, very much depends on protecting their first development from injurious influences."

With regard to the skin-diseases attributed to vaccination, the common experience of skilled physicians shows that in the majority of such cases the eruption is of a kind not communicable by inoculation, and therefore to be viewed as a previously latent tendency, roused to activity by the vaccinative disturbance, as it might have been by any other exciting influence. To the question: "Have you any reason to believe, or to suspect, that vaccinated persons, in being renless susceptible of small-pox, become more susceptible of any other infective disease, or of phthis; ?"—a question addressed by the English Board of Health to eminent medical men at home and abroad—542 answers were received, all decidedly in the negative. Sir W. Jenner, Dr. West, and Mr. Marson, in an aggregate of 79,000 vaccinations, had not a single case giving color to any suspicion of a taint thus transmitted, and a long list could be given of the most dis-tinguished and experienced members of the med-ical profession who have written to the same

That certain forms of applifitic disease may be inoculated from one person to another is cer-tain, but it seems equally certain that the trans-mission can not take place through vaccination, if properly performed. Just as the virus of scar-let-fever will communicate only scarlet-fever, the contagion of whooping-cough only whoopingcough, as the syphilitic poison itself produces nothing but syphilis; just so the vaccine virus transmits cow-pox and nothing else. The vesi-cle which forms and matures in a vaccinated arm on the eighth day contains a clear lymph which represents the specific virus of the vaccine disease, totally independent of the condition of the tissues which surround it. As Dr. Ballard, in his "Prize Essay on Vaccination," says: "The quality of vaccine virus is not regulated by any healthiness or unhealthiness of the child who furnishes it, in the sense that it partakes in any way of that child's particular constitution. It is the same from a scrufulous or rickety in-fant as from a robust one; it is vaccine virus, weakened and deteriorated somewhat, perhaps, in its energy, but nothing more." Now, if the lymph from this vesicle be procured on the eighth day, we may be sure that it possesses but one specific property, namely, that of reproducing the disease of which it is the product. If we want want the content of the product of th wait until the contents of the vestele have degenerated and become purulent, not only are the results of vaccination less certain, but there may even be an inoculation of something besides vac-cina. If, again—and here is the important point -instead of merely puncturing the vesicle, the surrounding tissues be wounded so that blood be mingled with the lymph, then the use of such lymph becomes dangerous. That syphilis may be communicated by the blood is no longer a matter of doubt; but if we inoculate both blood and lymph it is obviously unfair to impute the bad result to the lymph itself. Such cases, how-ever, are exceedingly rare, and nothing but the most inexcusable clumsiness can cause the dangerous admixture. A. L. C.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

A special Committee of the Prison Association and the Inspectors of State Prisons recently met in the Senate Chamber at Albany to consult in regard to the best methods of discipline in our State Prison. Af-fect considerable discussion a paper was read by one of the Coumittee, in which the opinion was expressed that one of the most successful means of preventing had conduct in value, accessful means of preventing had conduct in prison, encouraging the inmates to one conduct in prison, circularing the inmates to conduct themselves correctly, and proving to them the advantage of good behavior, was the law which rewards them for it, by an abbreviation of their sen-bances. Moreover, that the effect would undoubtedly be marked if had conduct and disobedience of the prison rules should increase the length of senten prison rules should increase the length of sentence in the same proportion as good conduct and obedience now reduces it. If, when sentence was pronounced upon a convict, the Judge should inform him that good behavior in prison would diminish the time, and had conduct increase it in the same proportion, it was thought it would in many cases at once influence the convict in regard to his deportment. It was sho suggested that improper conduct and violation of suggested that improper conduct and violation of prison rules should not be punished by whitpping, showering, and similar physical penalties, which sel-dom have any improving influence, but that the of-fender should be confined alone until he evinced a change of spirit. But it was highly desirable that ev-ery close cell should be well applied but the ery close cell abould be well ventilated, kept free from any foul air, and perfectly clean, that the phys-ical and mental health of the occupants be preserved. It was thought desirable to make a thorough exam-ination of the prisons, and report concerning them. The conference is to be renewed at Sing Sing some time in October.

It is stated that the Right Honorable Stephen Losh ington, who was consulted by Lady Byron in regard to a separation from her husband, is alive, and will doubtless be able to clear po the accelled 100 doubtless be able to clear up the so-called "Byron slander." Dr. Luchington is now eighty-seven years

A sad report is current that Miss Grinnell has be come insane since learning of the recest accidental death of her brother, who was killed by falling from a window at the lele of Wight.

On one occasion during the recent Presidential tour in Vermont, when the President and his wife alighted from the cars, such an eager crowd gathered to catch a glimpse of the General that Mrs. Grant was for a a gamps of the General Lan are, terms, was for a moment lost in the throng. Her simple, unpreten-tious dress and manner prevented her being recog-zized, and she was somewhat amused at being re-quested to "stand back, and let the President's party international boat-race was intense. A public an nouncement was to be made as soon as the telegram was received from England by ringing the fire-bells-S to be struck if the Oxfords were victorious, and 5.5 if the Harvards gained. Many "Harvard boye" had assembled in Boston to obtain the earliest information; and when the heavy $-8 sounded the disap-pointment was great. Yet when faller details of the race cares, many a hearty cheer went up for the plucky

A daugerous new counterfeit $10 greenback is thus briefly described: It is one of the new series, No. 53, letter D. A good test is to fold the note, bringing the two ends together. The counterfeit note is not per-fectly square at both ends, but the genuine is, the being made at true right angles, and when fuldd the discrepancy between the genuine and counterfelt can be discovered.

There must be some chapte of confusion in the books of the Burk of England, there being no less than 5429 Smiths who receive dividends on various some in the public stocks. There are also 2478 Browns,

A povel association has been formed in Portland, Maine - the Aged Men's Society, it is called - and though no one under cirty-five years of age is admit-ted, there are already 111 members. It is stated that Judge Luther Fitch is the oldest member, he being

According to President Woolsey, of Yale College, "Connecticut is at the hottom of the list" in regard to the number of divorces in proportion to the num-ber of marriages. From tables which have been prepared in some few of the States, it has be tained that the ratio of divorces to marriages has annually averaged, since 1860, in Vermont, one divorce to twenty marriages; in Massachusetts, one to forty-four: in Ohio, one to twenty-six; is Connecticut, one to ten. In twenty States the Constitution prohibits to the Legislature private bills of divorce; yet in sev-eral States the courts have power to grant divorces for what shall seem to them "sufficient reasons."

The so-called Professor Jenkins has, according to announcement, crossed Niagara Elver on what was termed a "velocipede," The machine used in this termed a "velocipede." The machine used in this foolish feat was not in any sense an ordinary velocipede, therein a bicycle. The wheels, three inches wide, were made heavy, without threa, but with grooves nearly two inches deep. The connecting-rods were iron, so also the behavior-pole, which was eight feet long and tipped with ten-pound balls, and weighed twenty-eight pounds. The propelling power was a pluton cog-wheel made of brass, about nine inches in diameter. The cable was require featured. inches in diameter. The cable was securely fastened on the American shore, and on the Canada shore colled around a windlass, so that it might easily be cotted around a windnass, so that it night easily be tightened. The front whoel of the bicycle was piaced on the rope, and standards from the under side so ar-ranged as to bring two strong bors of fron on either side of the rope. Every thing was securely fastened, and the whole arrangement each as to throw the en-tire weight of machine and rider under the rope. Some little disappointment was evinced among the 8000 speciators when this was apparent. But, dressed. in costume, the lion of the day slowly started on his ride, the crowd preserving deathlike stillness. When he reached the middle of the abyes he waved his hat, in response to which a faint cheer arose. When, after a passage of eleven minutes, he reached the edge of the cliff, the applicase was load and long.

A story is told in a Paris paper of a new method. for recovering one's febra. A crowd gathered in the vicinity of the Odion round a girl with a wooden leg, whom a gentleman at an edjoining window was aptrophising with load cries and gesticulations. It turned out that the girl was a washer-woman who had gone to the gentleman to ask for payment of her bill, and finding that the money was not forthcoming, she had seized her customer's wooden leg, which was lying in a corner, and had walked off declaring that ab would not return it till she was paid.

A mechanician named Gensoul has invente chine which reports speeches verbatim. The idea is the same as that which governed the "mechanical compositor," from which such great things were once hoped. The reporter sits down before a plane and plays, as it were, upon the keys, each stroke placing part of a word upon his copy. When in fall practics he can outstrip the swiftest speaker, a Corporal punishment is not inflicted so frequently in American schools as in English, public opinion every where out of New England being against its continuance. It is prohibited by law in the case of every where out of Now England being against its continuance. It is prohibited by law in the case of girls, and in night and primary schools. Ten New York schools, with an aggregate attendance of 1600 scholars, recently tried the experiment of doing without it; and it was found that discipline and good order were as effectivily preserved by other means. Another batch of schools was content to adopt extreme moderation instead of total abstincace in this matter, it being resolved only to revert to the black when other means had failed. The result here was that out of nearly 1606 boys only sleven were found impervious to the new method of permasion. It is impervious to the new method of persuasion. It is an interesting question what would have become of these eleves if they had happened to be in the schools where the rod was totally forbidden.

It is said that the thread of a certain species of spider, Sound in the Shouth, emproves a weight of 54 grains. As this fibre is only the one-four-thousandth of an inch in diameter, this is at the rate of 138,407 pounds, or 41% tons, per square fach. Good from wire sustains 57 tons per fach; good steel 66 tons: good gun-metal 60 tons.

Paper garments promise to displace cotton and woolen fabrica one of these days. Moreover, imitation leather is made from paper, which supplies a cheap and useful covering for furniture, and even serves für shoes.

The Grissoffscope is the most ill-natured invention. of the times. The savie de visite of a lady friend, for example, is placed in the apparatus, and she appara distorted in a thousand hideous ways, the innumerable combinations of the kaleidoscope being successfully applied to the art of making ugly one's fellow-

An exchange, evidently regarding Rochester as a monomentar, writes a jocuse half column about the devotion of that city to the famed Century Plant. It develops of that city to the famed Century Finn. It declares that for the last three months business has been entirely suspended in Rochester, and Jack's been stalk has been completely left out in the wet. The language of the people has become so betanical that even at restaurants the bills of fare offer Aloc Soup, Roast Beef with reredute Stigmas, Leg of Mutton reticulated, Lamb with Pericarp Sauce: while Pods, Pistile, Stamene, and Petale come into Entrees; and Baked Cones, Endocarp Pie, Coraline Jelly, and Anricaliste Meriugues help to make up the list of Pastry. Moreover, "seventy-three of the largest lake steamers and all-through railroad lines have been chartered for the transportation of the gigantic Agave to Chicago?"

The cause of "woman's rights" is advancing rapidby in Great Britain. The women of England have obtained the municipal franchise, the Bouse of Com-mons has passed the married woman's property bill, and it has been read a second time in the House of Moreover, the provisions of the endowed school bill will give young women a fairer share of educational privileges than they have hitherto en-worth $220,000,000;" and sugar, wheat, behaven, and other crops which "will bring $150,000,000 more," making a very large income "for a population of making a very large income "for a population of about 11,000,000," Reconstruction certainly has not ruined the South, as was so dereely prophested by many not long ago; and Northern friends will rejoice in what seems to be only the beginning of a brighter

APPARENT DEATH.

CERTAINLY we manage some things better than they do in France; among them being the interval allowed to clapse between death and interment. Still, there are circumstances and cases which, even here, afford matter for serious re-

It will easily be supposed that the dangerous briefness of this interval has been urged upon the attention of the French Legislature, and been ably discussed by the French medical press. In 1866 a petition was presented to the Senate from a per-son named De Cornol, pointing out the danger of hasty interments, and suggesting the measures he thought requisite to avoid terrible consequences. Among other things he prayed that the space of twenty-four hours between the decease and the interment now pre-scribed by the law should be extended to eight-and-forty hours. A long debate followed, in which Cardinal Donwhich Cardinal Don-net, Archhishop of Bor-deaux, took a leading part. He was decidedly of epinion that the pe-tition should not be set aside by the "order of the day," but that it should be transmitted to the Minister of the Interior for further con-Interior for further conséderation and inquiry. Some of the venerable prelate's remarks pro-duced so great an effect on his auditors as to merit particular men-tion. He said be had the very best reasons for believing that the vicwere more numerous than people supposed. He considered the regulations on this head prolations on this head pre-scribed by the law as very judicious, but un-fortunately they were not always executed as they should be, nor was sufficient importance at-tached to them. In the village where he was sta-tioned as assistant curate in the first period of his sacerdotal life, he saved two persons from being buried alive. The first was an aged man, who lived twelve hours after the hour fixed for his interment by the mu-nicipal officer. The secnicipal officer. end was a man who was quite restored to life. In both these instances a trance more prolonged than usual was taken for actual death.

The next case in his experience occurred at Bordeanx. A young lady, who bore one of the most distinguished mames in the depart-ment, had passed ment, had passed through what was be-lieved to be her last agoitered to be hor last ago-ny, and as, apparently, all was over, the father and mother were torn away from the heart-rending spectacle. At that moment, as God willed it, the cardinal happened to pass the door of the house, when in preserved to him to call is occurred to him to call and inquire how the roung lady was going on. When he entered the room, the nurse, finding the body breath-less, was in the next of less, was in the act of covering the face, and indeed there was every appearance that life had departed. Somehow or departed. Somehow or other it did not seem so standers. He re solved to try. He raised his voice, called loadly upon the young lady not to give up all hope, said that he was come to cure her, and that he

The words of hope reached her ear and effected a marvelous change, or rather called back the life that was departing. The young girl sur-vived, and in 1866 was a wife, the mother of children, and the chief happiness of two most respectable families.

The last instance related by the Archbishop is so interesting, and made such a sensation, that it deserves to be given in his own words:

"In the summer of 1826, on a close and sultry day, in a church that was excessively crowded, a young priest who was in the act of proaching was suddenly seized with giddiness in the pulpit. The words he was uttering became indistinct; he soon lost the power of speech, and sank down upon the floor. He was taken out of the church and carried home. Every body thought that all was over. Some hours afterward the funeral hell was tolled, and the usual preparations were made for the interment. His evesight was gone; but if, like the young lady I have mentioned, he could see nothing, he could nevertheless hear; and I need not say that what reached his ears was not calculated to reassure him. The doctor came, examined him, and pronounced him dead; and after the usual inquiries as to his ago, the place-of his birth, etc., gave permission for his interment next morning. The venerable hishop, in whose cathedral the young priest was preaching when he was seized with the fit, came to his bedside to recite the Du Profundis.

The body was measured for the coffin. Night with blue; a thick and yellowish froth exuded

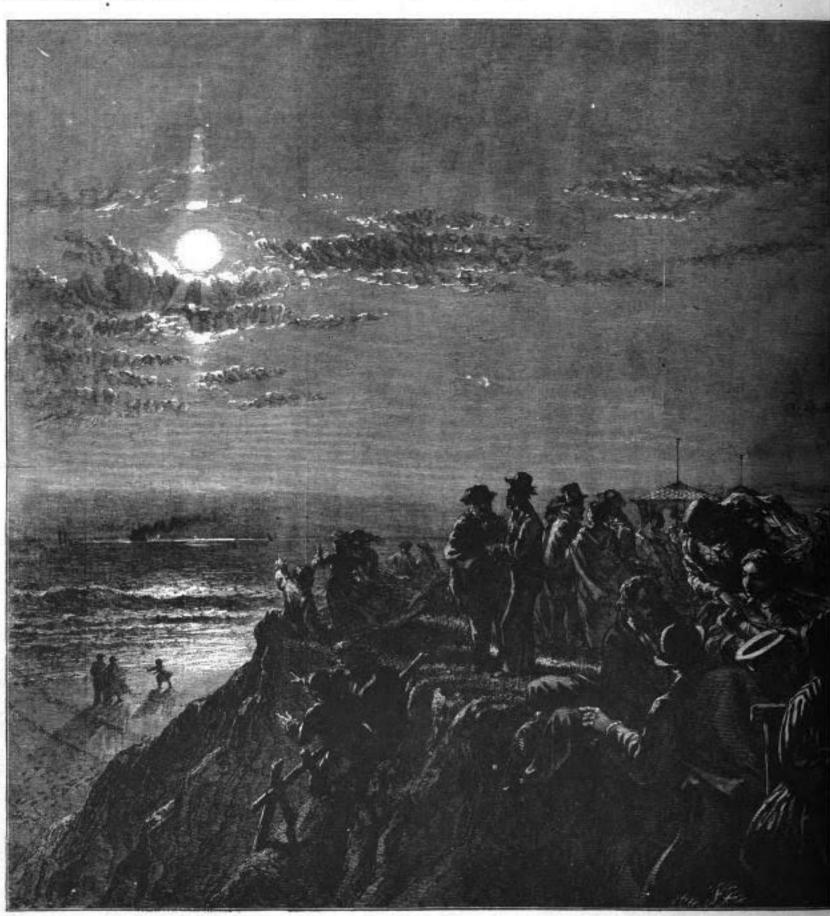

The body was measured for the coffin. Night in the arternoon, near the Post des Arts, Paris, convection than his own would have refrained from making. These facts lead Dr. Londe to death. The most appearable his bring, the conclusion that, every day, dreamed individual strongly built. The corpse was discolored and strongly built. The corpse was discolored and strongly built. The corpse was discolored and tinged gas a rare form of death. It is possible that Apparente, Les Conséquences Réelles des In-humations Précipitées, et Le Temps Pendant lequel peut persister L'Aptitude à être Rappelé à la Vie, by the late regretted Dr. Charles Loude, records accidents which are more likely than the preceding to occur in England. Even were the bathing season not at hand, deaths by drowning are always to be apprehended. We therefore cite the following:

therefore cise the following:
On the 13th of July, 1829, about two o'clock in the afternoon, near the Pont des Arts, Paris, over the inanimate body, with watchful eye and attentive ear, to catch the first rustling of the heart, had left the drowned man, after half an hour's fruitless endeavor, as often happens? The unfortunate young man would have been hid in the grave, although capable of restoration to life! To this case, Dr. Bourgeois, in the Archives de Médecine, adds others, in which individuals who had remained under water as long as any more of the parient taken into the decoration of the left of the limits of the manned under water as long as any more of the results a drowning the results a drowning the results. had remained under water as long as atx mouns were recalled to life by efforts which a weaker conviction than his own would have refrained drooping, the pupils trace either of breathin or arteries; in short, t

"LONG BRANCH BY MOONLIGHT."-[ENGRAVED BY

was about to pray by her side. "You do not see came on, and you will easily feel how inexpress-me," he said, "but you hear what I am saying." The was the anguish of the living being in such Those singular presentiments were not unfound-a situation. At last, amidst the voices marmuring around him, he distinguished that of one whom he had known from infancy. That voice produced a marvelous effect, and excited him to make a superhuman effort. Of what followed I need say no more than that the seemingly dead man stood next day in the pulpit from which he had been taken for dead. That young priest, gentlemen, is the same man who is now sp before you, and who, more than forty years after that event, implores those in authority not merely to watch vigilantly over the careful execution of the legal prescriptions with regard to interments, but to enact fresh ones, in order to pre-from the mouth; the eyes were open, fixed, and motionless; the limbs limp and drooping. No pulsation of the heart nor trace of respiration was perceptible. The body had remained under water for a considerable time; the search after it, made in Dr. Bourgeois's presence, lasted fully twenty minutes. That gentleman did not besion of the lookers-on, tate to incur the derist proceeding to attempt the resurrection of what, in their eyes, was a mere lump of clay. Never theless, several hours afterward, the supposed corpse was restored to life, thanks to the nate perseverance of the doctor, who, although strong and enjoying robust health, was several times on the point of losing courage, and aban-doning the patient in despair.

But what would have happened if Dr. Bour suspended animation may now and then have n mistaken for the absolute extinction of life. Dr. Londe gives an instructive case to the pur-pose. At the extremity of a large grocer's shop a close narrow corner, or rather hole, was the sleeping-place of the shopman who managed the night sale till the shop was closed, and who opened the shotters at four in the morning. On opened the shorters at four in the morning. On the 16th of January, 1825, there were loud knocks at the grocer's door. As nobody stirred to open it, the grocer rose himself, grumbling at the shopman's laziness, and proceeding to his sleeping-hole to scold him. He found him mo-tionless in bed, completely deprived of conscious-ness. Terror-struck by the idea of sudden death, he immediately sent in search of a doctor, who suspected a case of asphyxia by mephitism. His vent the recurrence of irreparable misfortunes." But what would have happened if Dr. Boursuspected a case of asphyxia by mephitism. His seen to move A remarkable pumphlet, Lettre sur La Moet goois, instead of parsistently remaining stooping suspections were confirmed by the sight of a night-opened his eyes, regain able to converse with t his resurrection. Dr. conclusions as before; focated by mephitism when they might be sa We have had cholen have it again. At se hurried interments are almost unavoidable. peculiarities of that for some of the symptoms the coldness, and the d life has taken its dep states, as an acknow pronounced dead of ch outh well supplied ortable store con-al partly reduced immediately had air, and kept on vertical as possir hong loose and conless, with no to Poland to study the cholera) was opening a subject in the dead-house of the Bagatelle Hospital in Warsaw, he saw another body (that of a woman of fifty, who had died in two days, having her eyes still bright, her joints supple, but the whole surface extremely cold) which visibly moved its left foot ten or twelve times in the course of an hour. Afterward the right foot participated in the same movement, but very feebly. M. Traches sent for Mr. Scarle, an English surgeon, to direct his attention to the number of single participated in the same movement, but very feebly. M. Traches sent for Mr. Scarle, an English surgeon, to direct his attention to the number of single participated in the same movement, but very feebly. M. Traches sent for Mr. Scarle, an English surgeon, to direct his attention to the number of the corps in its winding sheet. Suddenly a rattling noise issued from Thérèse's chest. Suddenly a rattling noise issued fro course of an hour. Afterward the right foot directs, with no participated in the same movement, but very said the signs of the heart wall the signs of restoring along while with-tree in the after-dominand exerting and the region grand in the region grand the region grand the patient. Tracket draws the inference: "It is allowable to the patient of the heart foot the same movement, but very the mounts. In Germany coffins, with the corpses laid out in them, are placed in a building where a keeper watches day and night. During the forty years that this system has been in force not a single case of apparent death has been proved to occur. This negative result can not be cited as conclusive, either for or against the system. In a country where a million of people annually die, an experiment embracing only forty-six thousand state of lethargy the pupil, under the influence of a few drops of atropine, dilates in the course of a few minutes; the dilatation also takes place a few instants after death; but it ceases abso-lately in a quarter of an hour or half an hour at the very longest; consequently, the enlargement of the pupil is a certain sign that death is only

This premised, imagine a little camera-obscura, scarcely so big as an opera-glass, contain-ing a slip of photographic paper, which is kept unrolling for five-and-twenty or thirty minutes by means of clock-work. This apparatus, placed Docteur Bouchot has shown that atropine has rolled marks the time during which the experino action on the pupil when death is real. In a state of lethargy the pupil, under the influence of a few drops of atropine, dilates in the course to or one of the notables of every parish. Such a system would silence the apprehensions of the most timid. Fears—natural enough—would disappear, and the world would be shocked by no fresh cases of premature burial.

THE RULING PASSION STRONG IN DEATH.

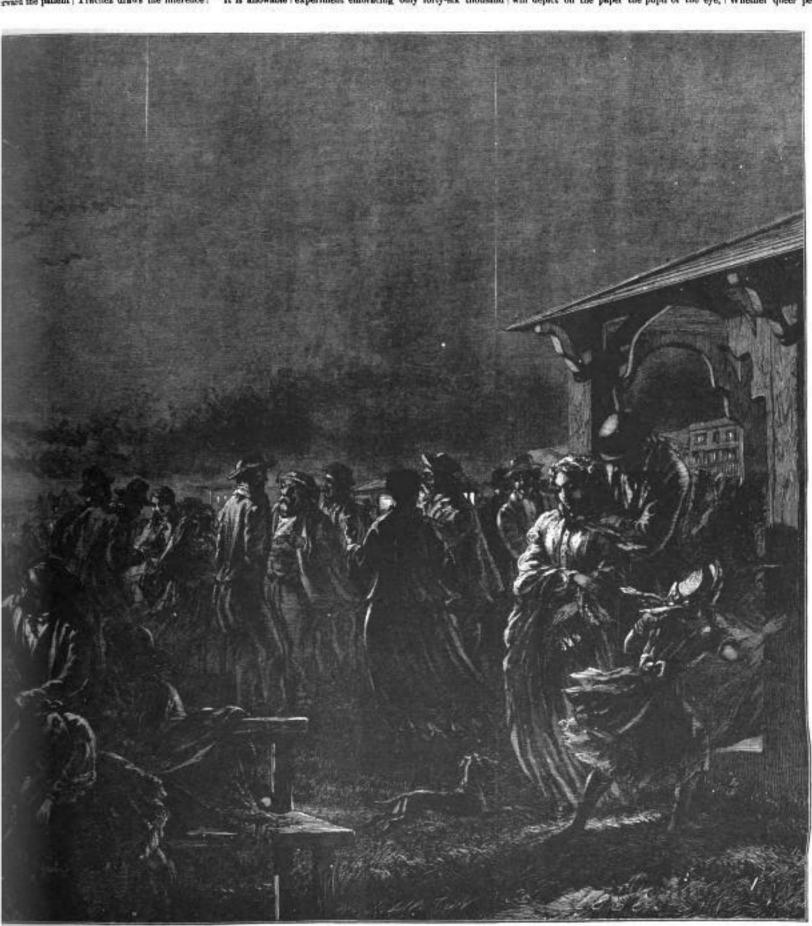

THE innocent eccentricities of certain mem by means of clock-work. This apparatus, placed a short distance in front of the dead person's eye, will depict on the paper the pupil of the eye, Whether queer people were more plentiful in by-gone times than they nre at present; whether the world be less or more fatuous than it was, we have not the slightest totion. As it gets old-or, we should hope it grows wiser; though this does not, in indi-vidual enses at lenst, al-ways follow. But that ways follow. But that we have still eccentrics amongus, persons whose doings are just as outré as any vagaries pre-viously recorded, there seems no reason what-ever to doubt.

The newspapers cently announced that a married lady in New York had left the whole of her property for the purpose of building a church, on the condition that her hody and bones should be made into mortar, in which to lay the corner-stone of the edifics. What a very eccentric lady she must have been! Think of the originality of the no-tices! None but a per-son of irregular mind could have conceived it. Her object or motive we do not and can never know, but her last will and testament is certainly one of the most extraordinary curiosities of testamentary literature on record.

A short time previous-we read that Professor W. B. Powell, an eminent American physician and phrenologist, lately dead, bequeathed his bead to one of his pu-pils, a Mrs. Kinsey.— The executor of the decensed employed Dr. Curtis, of Cincinnati, to take off his head, which is now in the possession of the fortunate legatee. What will she do with what will she do with it? We never heard of a foot being bequenthed by any body. There is, however, the legacy of a hand on record. The will of Philip Thick-nesse, Esquire, who died during the last century during the last century, runs thus: "I desire that after my death my right hand may be cut off and sent to Lord off and sent to Lord Dudley, that he may see the hand dead which when living had not only often given him many guinean in his youth, which his father wanted in his age, as well as an expensive education, with a view of what he was to be, rather than what he then was; sineerely hoping thereby that such a deadly sight may awaken his deluded mind, and teach him his duty to God, that he may obtain pardon for his neglect of a fa-ther who once loved him with unbounded affection, and who dying for-

An inhabitant of London, who lived about four centuries ago, left eight shillings to be expended annually in the purchase of fagots with which to burn heresics. John Hodge has kept his name out of oblivion by giving twemty shillings a year to a poor man to go about the purish church of Trysall during sermon-time to keep people awake and dogs out of church. Henry people nanke and dogs out of church. Heavy Green, of Melbourne, Derbyshire, gave his prop-

LANTON, FROM THE URIGINAL PAINTING BY ROSENBURG.]

draws the same that persons saffrequently buried country, and may g times, if ever, sly excusable, but size, one of the se is to bring on the prostration,

Dr. Veyrat, attached to the Bath Establishment, Aix, Savoy, was sent for to La Roche (Department of the Yonne) to visit a cholera patient, Thérèse X., who had lost all the members of her family by the same disease. He found her in a complete state of asphyxia. He opened a vein; not a drop of blood flowed. He applied leeches; they bit, and immediately loosed their hold. He covered the body with stimplant spokesiations. Dr. Veyrat, attached to the Bath Establishcovered the body with stimulant applications, and went to take a little rest, requesting to be called if the patient manifested any signs of life. The New, Dr. Londe night and next day passed without any change, ict, that patients While making preparations for the burial they noticed a little blood cozing out of the lecchbeir limbs after bites. Dr. Veyrat, informed of the circumstance, entered the chamber just as the nurse Moreover, mortnary chambers exist only in a few great centres of population; and it is espein small towns and country districts, where medical men are too busy to inspect the dead, that premature interments are to be apprehended.

M. de Parville announces the possibility of distinguishing every form of lethargy from real death. He professes to place in any one's hands a self-acting apparatus which would declare, not only whether the death be real, but would leave in the hands of the experimenter a written proof of the experimenter a written proof of the experimental states. The doctor and the civil officer are relieved from further responsibility. The paper sesses the property of considerably dilating the pupil of the eye. Oculists constantly make use of it when they want to perform an operation or to examine the interior of the eye. Now M. le gives him, as he does all his coemies, and was to think that many cholera patients have been previously moistened with sons, we dare say, would be inclined to consider the attracted by buried alive."

Corpses is too partial to be relied on as evidence, which will have been previously moistened with sons, we dare say, would be inclined to consider the state of the local st a few drops of atropine. It is evident that, as the paper slides before the eye of the corpor, if the pupil dilate, its photographic image will be di-lated; if, on the contrary, it remains unchanged, the image will retain its original size. An inspection of the paper then enables the experi-menter to read upon it whether the death is real or apparent only.

By this simple method a hasty or careless certificate of death becomes impossible. The in-strument applies the test, and counts the min-bor:

the second second second second tached to his family name that the bulk of his property was given in charity for the support and maintenance of such poor persons in England as shall appear to be of the name of Nicholson—a very carbolic benefaction, certainly. Then we have "The Brown Bequest," published a short time ago. Joseph Brown, Esq., of Goldsworth all, left a splendid estate to endow a hospital in Sillerton for the education of boys of the name of Brown, preference being given to those who combine the prefix of Joseph with the surname. According to one of Brown's executors, the enormous sum of £50,000 is being expended upon the buildings, and all for the accommodation only nineteen boys. We incline to think that so magnificent a fortune might have been turned to much better account. The executors purpose to exhibit "in a glass case, in the great entrancehall of the institution, the original ragged coat in which the founder came to Sillerton, in March, 1794." This story of the tattered coat reminds us of another instance where an extraordinary penchant for present as well as posthumous admiration may lead a man to commit an act of the most egregious folly, vanity, and had taste. In the museum of the Chembers' Institution, at Peebles, which was founded at a cost of some £20,000, there may be seen, carefully bracketed to the wall, a small box or chest, on the lid of which there is an inscription to this effect:

"This box belonged to William Chambers when an apprentice in Edinburgh, between the years 1814 and 1819, and which then contained all be possessed in the world." Incredible as it may seem, the inscription, as we happen to know, is in the handwriting of the founder himself, who is no other than the senior member of the wellknown firm of publishers. Surely this is push ing "Chambers's Information for the People" to the very utmost. While one man endows a college, another provides for a cat. With others the ruling passion has been for dogs, horses, and parrots. Thus the will of Sir Jacob Hanslar, who died so recently as 1867, contained an annuity to his servant, and £10 to provide food for his parrot. Mrs. Hannah White, in 1798, left in trust to one of her servants the sum of £25 per annum for the maintenance of five favorite cats "during the term of their natural lives.

About the same date (1790) we find the Right Hon. Henry Morrice, of Grove House, Chelses, bequeathing his seat to Mrs. Lother, under the following very singular restrictions: All the orses and dogs on the premises were to be carefully fed and attended to until they died a naturul death, and his own servant was to have two rooms in the house as long as he lived. In default of such attention to the animals, Mrs. Luther would have only a life-interest in the prem-ises; but if she fulfilled the intentions of the will estate would be absolutely at her own disposal. All the animals and the servant being doad, the estate was put up for sale in 1819. Begarding Mr. Morrice, Colman, in his "Ranfrom Records," says, "I remember seeing this place, and the then master of it, one morning, when I was a lad. On entering the court-yard we were assailed by a very numerous pack of curs in full cry; this was occasioned by Mr. Morrice's humanity toward animals. All the stray mongrels which happened to follow him in London he sent down to his villa. He had a mare in his stables called 'Carious,' who, though attended with the greatest care, was almost a skeleton from old age. Many of his horses enjoyed a laxurious sinecure. During summer they were turned into his park, where, in sulry weather, they reposed beneath the shade of the trees, when a boy was employed to flap the flies from their hides. The honors shown by Mr. Morrice to his beasts of burden were only inferior to those which Caligula lavished on his charger, The testator, in this instance, showed his : tion for his horses and dogs by conferring annu-ities upon them. A very different feeling, how-ever, operated with the late Mr. Borlase Wing-field. Mr. Wingfield was a wine and spirit merchant near Harwood, where he died in Angust, 1867. In his will be requested that his horse, to which he was much attached, should follow him to the grave, afterward have a good feed of com, and then be destroyed. The injunction was strictly carried out. The horse, with the closed earninge of the deceased, followed in the rear of the hineral procession, and the next day, after being well fed with corn, it was taken to the side of a pit which had been dug in a field adjoining the residence of its late master, and there "blown" by a veterinary surgeon. The operation was performed in the following man-ner: The jugular vein was opened, and an iron pipe having been inserted in the vein, the pipe was blown down until the horse expired, which occurred in about half a minute. Mr. Wingfield had also requested that the whole of his domestic animals might be destroyed at the same time, and buried with the horse. Several ents were accordingly drowned, and the remains of a fairly ful dog which had died alyout a mouth before were exhumed, and all were buried in one granu. The testator left bequests to the whole of his servants, but, as was jorniarly remarked at the time, the servants were not to be destroyed! We have had more than one instance of late of a per-son disposing of his or her surplus rash to found a Refuge for homeless cats; and a few yours ago one of the partners of a wall-known firm of drapers in London left the enormous sum of £30,000 with which to build a Home for stray dogs. The dereased's relatives have been striv ing hard ever since to get the will set uside, but apparently without success.

Mrs. Marguert Thompson's last will and testament is semerbing arrique. Her passion was not for dogs or ents, but for Scotch small. She died at ber house in Boyle Street, Burlington Gardons, in 1776, and her will set forth that as it was usual to put flowers into the coffins of de-parted friends, and she had never found any flowers so fragrant and refreshing as the precious powder, her old and trusty servant, Saral was to take care her body was covered with the best Scotch snuff. Six men, the greatest snuff-takers in the parish of St. James, were to carry her to the grave, each wearing a snuff-colored beaver hat instead of mourning; and the halfdozen old maids, selected to act as pall-bearers, were to be supplied with boxes of snuff where with to refresh themselves on the road. The officiating clergyman was to be paid five guineus on condition that he walked in front of the coffin. and "took a certain quantity, not exceeding one pound" of the same. Sarah got £20 on condipound" of the same. Sarah got £20 on condi-tion that she strewed at least two bushels of the said smuff at the door of the testatrix's residence, and walked before the corpse for the purpose of and walked desore the corpse for the purpose of distributing "every twenty yards a large hand-ful of Scotch snuff to the ground and upon the crowd." Lastly, to every legacy bequeathed by Dame Thompson was attached a gift of one pound of what she called "the grand cordial of nature." The story of another old lady and The story of another old lady and her tea may appropriately follow. Mr. Day, the founder of Fairlop fair, had a housekeeper who had lived with him for thirty years, and was equally eccentric. She had two strong at-tachments; one to her wedding-ring and gar-ments, the other to tea. When she died Mr. Day would not permit her ring to be taken off. If that were attempted, he said, she would come to life again. He directed that she should be buried in her wedding-dress, and a pound of tea in each hand. These directions were literally obeyed. It is a sad reflection on the frailty of human nature that some persons do not allow their resentments to sleep with them in the grave, but leave behind them wills which excite the bitterest animosities among their surviving relatives and friends.

SO RUNS THE WORLD AWAY.

CHAPTER LIL

AND THE WORLD RUNS MERRY AS

It was evening at Auriel; a sad-hued even-ing, full of damp vapors and wan colors; only in the west was the dull, sodden earth glorified, and there every leaf that quivered in the glow of the rosy light appeared a tiny blaze of gold; elsewhere all was desolate-looking; the bare boughs were soaked black by rain, the tawny foliage lay thick over the rose-beds, or made bronze colored circles round the dead-looking

It was very dreary, Lady Diana thought, as she walked up the avenue on her way to the house. When she draw mearer to the huge red building with its long range of windows glitter-ing in these last force beams of the winter sun, she paused with a sudden terror lest eyes by her unseen might be watching her approach from be-hind those uncanny-looking squares, 'Then she reasoned herself into composure.

Who even of her intimates would recognize her thus, muffled up in dark clothes—a thick veil obscuring her face, a black velvet net concealing the brightness of her hair; even her gloves were black, and her pretty feet were disfigured by clumsy-looking sho

She walked on toward the door, but her heart beat so fast as she stood on the threshold that she felt suffocated, and it was some minutes before she nerved herself to give a tap, so feeble that a quick-eared mouse would scarcely have been startled by it, far less the deaf old woman who sat crooning over the kitchen hearth. Find-ing her appeal futile, and dreading, she scarce to rouse the echoes in that wast house, Lady Diana pecred in at the only window through which she saw a gleam of fire-light, and looked intently at the scene before her.

Only one person was visible, and that was old Sally, who crouched over the fire with her hands crossed on her lap; she was half asleep, and her lips were marmoring some little lullaby which had stilled her bube's cry many weary years ago.

"There can be no one else in the house," the watcher thought; "she would not be so still and inactive if she were not alone."

Emboldened by this idea, Lady Dians lifted the latch of the side-door, and finding that it yielded to her touch, she walked in, and, directed by the fire-light, made her way to the kitchen.

Who's that?" the old woman said, saddenly waking up and looking at her visitor with an air of suspection.

"I hope I haven't startled you," Lody Dian-said, kindly. Then she explained that she had been sent to Auriel by some friends of the girl who had lately died. "They wish me to make some little compensation to you for all your trou-"she added, judiciously, producing some gold; and old Sally's confidence was won at once,

"So you're a friend of the poor thing that's gone; well now I've often thought it strange no one come to see the last of her. Ah! how she did suffer, to be sure," the crone said, in a tone of melancholy satisfaction. "And she was carried out, ma'am, by that very door you just come

Lady Diana shivered and looked round imcomfortably.

"Don't talk about it," she said, hastily. "I hate to bear of death.

"Well, it ain't much good shutting your eyes to him when you're sure to see him some day," Sully answered, composedly. "For my part,
I'm rendy for him. P'raps, if you spent fifty years in working to keep hunger from your inside and rheumatics from your limbs, you'd be tired out as I am. Poor Miss Azalea, she used to whirl about the house gay as a kitten, and sing something about life's being beautiful; but, bless you! that's all according to one's weekly wages and state of health. My life's been ugly i enough."

"Did any one but yourself take care of that Lady Diana asked, abrupely, ust make amends to every body, you know."

"There was only the old doctor. Maybe be won't be sorry to have a present for all his new carriage; and there's Mr. Douglas, but—"

"But what?" the other broke in with impa-

"I was thinking, dear," the old woman answered, slowly, "that no one can comfort kin, since not the Great Power of all has done it; he sits there—up stairs where she died—and he sleeps there at night, and sometimes, when I pass the door, I think I hear him calling her name; but softly, as if he feared to wake some-

Is he there now?"

"I count he is."
"Could I look at him? Could I see him "Could I look as name without his seeing me? I should like to carry back word how he looked; they would be serry back word now he souce; they would be serry if he were ill; but I should be afraid he might be angry if he saw me," stammered Lady Diana, "I don't think he'd take notice," Sally suggested, "if you was to go to the door (it mostly stands open) and look at him."

But her companion turned a shade paler un-der her veil, and shook her head.

"I dare not risk it," she murmured.

She had come to seek out this man that she might face the truth; but if her suspicious were correct, she would have met the awful eyes of the arisen dead sooner than his glance.

"He could never forgive, for he can never forget what my fault led him to," she thought. "And so my sin (a venial one after all) is mag-nified by his consequent crime; what a fool he was to come back that night! But what a fool I am—it may not be he after all. I declare, if it is not, I'll put up a memorial window to him in his parish church!"

"If we go to the top of them," Sally said, in-dicating the last flight of stairs, "you can stand behind me, and I warrant he won't notice us."

Lady Diana walked up to a dingy fragment of mirror which hung on the wall, and took heart when she observed how complete her disguise was; at the same time, with a pang of vexed vanity, she noted what an ungainly appearance she made.

"If he did recognize me by any chance," she meditated, "I should pull down my back hair as if by secident, and toss aside this ugly bon-

When they reached the door of Azalea's room she hung back with a desperate dread creeping over her beart.

She experienced that sudden sense of failurefailure of nerve, purpose, and physical power, which sometimes afflicts us when we are brought which sometimes article is when we are prought face to face with the peril which at a far distance we have wood holdly.

4 Then her heart attempthemed with resolution, such resolve as sustains the wretch who welcomes the final agony which puts an end to unavailing torture.

With a long-drawn sigh, and a face contracted with the pain of that moment of sharp anxiety, Lady Diana advanced to the threshold of the room indicated by the old woman, and leaning against the door-post saw into the interior of the chamber; and saw also in the recess of a window the bowed form of the man she sought.

The wan rays of the fading sun fell on his head and face, but not all the glory of full day could have evoked any responsive brightness from the deep gloom of those desolate eyes. He was looking, not at the rosy drift of clouds, nor at the flights of birds that blackened the red face of the sun. There was, in his glance, a certain and wistfalness—the pathetic doubt of one who seeks an answer out of silence, who impiores hope from darkness; but there was no in erest or sympathy expressed in external objects. His countenance was set in the dull immobility of despair—despair such as no human being might remove or console. Lady Diana looked might remove or consose. Lasy Linux con-intently at the gray silken masses of hair, at the deep lines under the eyes, at the ashen checks and withered hands, crossed listlessly one over the other, and breathed more freely. The man the other, and breathed more freely. The man she remembered, the man whom she had feared to recognize to-day, had worn a very different aspect. Stuart Merton's hair was of a sunny brown, his forebead white, and his full lips red; his cheeks had always been pallid, but when they last touched hers in his parting embrace they user touched bers in his parting emboard they were as smooth as ivory, and suscerred by a single wrinkle; he had been tall and broad-shouldered, carrying his head with a certain proud grace, not unbecoming to one whose heart was rich with happiness. This aged and withered man, sitting so strangely quiet in the gathering dusk, bore no resemblance to him whom the sea had sucked down into its depths eighteen years ago.

Some books were lying partially open on the table, and written papers, on which the ink was dry, were sprend before him.

The wan streaks of sunset that were narrow-ing toward the west presently streamed over a vace filled with dead flowers, which stood near him, and over a piece of blue ribbon, which, trailing close to the glass goblet, cast a dim re-flection of its hue on to the slender transparent fiertion of its hue on to the slender transparent stem of the cup.

Glaneing mechanically at the varying color of the glass. Douglas's eyes presently fell on the ribbon, and in an instant the whole expression of his fare changed; the lips quivered, the eyes shone out under a sudden bigs of tears like stars dimened by mist. He took the ribbon in his hands gently, as if it were a living thing which would shrink from a rough touch. As he caressed this with tender fingers, babbling some inarticulate murmur of love, every hard line relaxed as all the tense composure of despair gave way. Something of youth's fire and youth's mobility returned to his face in the sudden storm of passion which swept over it. As the dying light shone on his eyes, all after with the pain of memory, on his lips, tremulous in their struggle to keep grief restrained, his changed expression was revealed to the watcher at the door. She involuntarily shrank back a few steps, and, as she put her hand to her heart, she could scarcely repress a groan, as, with a great throb of terror, she admitted the suspicion that this man's countenance was not, after all, unfamiliar

"I can not tell, I can not be sure," she mounted to herself; "how am I to decide it without risk of detection?"

She stretched out her head, so as to get a faller view of the occupant of the room without obtracting herself on his notice. She did not again stand in the doorway, but peered round with the little grace and attitude of a bird watch-ing an inimical approach; then, with a sudden access of resolution, with a desperate desire to terminate this great pain of doubt, she cronched yet farther out of sight, and called, in a tone strangely hourse and troubled-"Stuart-Stuart Merton!"

She was conscious of his startled gesture; of a pale face looking in the direction of the door; and then, as his tall figure uprose and moved toward her through the gloom of that lonely chamber, she put out her hands with the desire to clutch at those of the old woman who had arcompanied her; praying, in a choked whis-per, "Take me away; keep me from his sight:" but the old woman was gone. She had wearied of standing there in the dark, cold atmosphere, when her little fire down stairs was blazing a welcome for her, and so she stole away while Lady Diana lingured; and the latter felt voice and hands alike become powerless, as with a sick sensation about her heart, and a dull film clos-ing over her eyes, she lost all consciousness, and dropped down in a heap at her husband's feet. When Lady Diana awoke to the pain of returning sense she felt like one who moves in the dull atmosphere of a dream; a dream encumbered by the presence of a hideous terror.

What was this dark chamber illumined only by the fitful blazes of a wood fire? and who he who sat opposite to her, looking intently at the flaring light?

It was not until she saw the sheen of a blue ribbon, which dangled from his neck, that she thoroughly realized the full trouble of her waking state. This was Start, then; the Start whom for so many years she had believed to be physically naught; this was the body which was thought to have resolved into dust; and from his deep-set eyes gleamed indications of the scal which she had imagined to be existent in the realms of unknown beatitude.

She dared not give herself time to reflect, fearing lest her tongue might again freeze with fear, and feminine weakness interfere with what she felt it to be best to do. She was agitated and unnerved by the mental struggle of the last two days. She was in part afraid, and in part re-morsoful. Imagination with her sometimes supplied the place of what in a nobler woman would be called a heart; and a strange pang of repent-ance pierced her; a glow of shame made her cheek hot as she remembered what her life had been since she parted from this man, who sat there motionless in the twilight; the very sight of him, and the memories he evoked, were, in themselves, her punishment and condemnation.

Douglas was wearing the same absent look in his eyes as when she first saw him in the light of the dreary winter sun. He did not notice her return to consciousness, of which, indeed, she gave no outward sign, excepting in the irre-pressible quiver of her lids, and a slight tremulous movement of her pale lips.

For a while she looked at him stealthily, not daring to break the grim silence. Then, with a quick movement of her hand, she disengaged the masses of fair hair from their disfiguring net, freed herself of the beavy shawl which conrealed her figure, and rising up before him, stood for an instant as if irresolute, and then sank down, clinging to his kness, an embodiment of Correggio's Magdalen—a Magdalen in grace of in softness of disheveled tresser which made a glory of soft light over Douglas's black garb and folded hands; a Magdalen in penitence of face and in her shamed attitude; a Magdalen who believed herself to be suffering the pangs of remorse, but who was in reality only writhing under the wound of detection one, in fact, who would sin again as soon as she had secured herself against the mischances of discovery.

Still clasping his knee, she cried out, give! forgive!

She did not venture to lift up her face to his; she did not dare to counterfeit joy in meeting his eyes : she felt that such an assumption would be impossible to her, and would seem incredible to him; she could only wail out all her terror and remorse in a passionate entreaty for pardon.
"Oh, forgive me!" she cried. "Oh, Stuart, speak just one word to say that I need not fear a curse in your eyes."

A flush of color had come back to her cheeks, and her hair gleamed like gold in the light of the fire. Her sleeves had fallen back from her outstretched arms, revealing their fair roundness. As she wound them tighter about his knees, he was reminded of the strange sinuous

"Won't you know me?" she said, at last, in a subdeed, caressing tone. "Have you not one word to give Ana?"

He removed her quietly; not as if she was an object of aversion, but simply as something which inconvenienced him.

"Yes, I know you very well," he said, quiet-ly; "but what then?"

Something in his tone exasperated her.

"Is that all you will say to me?" she answered, with somewhat of reproach in her tone.

A gleam of anger lit up his deep gray eyes.
"I will say, if you will, that you are the devil who led me to do a murder. You have made memory a hell to me...... Do you remember that man who kissed you in the fond conviction that I was far distant and unconscious of my shame?..... Do you ever recall his living face as you last saw it, flushed with the feeling of your parting embrace?..... and did you see your parting embrace?..... and did you see him afterward?"

She shivered, and bent her head lower. "No," she whispered. "I never saw him again. I knew he was there, close by; but I would not look at him."

"But does he never look at you?" Douglas said, his face brightening with nervous excitement. "Do you not see his dim set eyes, his pinched nostrils that never dilate with breath, but which grow every day more shriveled and contracted? Don't you see how all the proud blood had gone away from his wax-like face—all the brightness from his lank, dull hair? Does he never reuroach you in your draams, for Does be never reproach you in your dreams, for not having given him 'more time?'—two bot, angry minutes sent his soul to God. I have thought sometimes, Ana, that those two minutes would be repaid to me by an eternity of bell; but God's mercy is the grand altar, the asylum for those who fly from the ban of their own consciences, and it is my hope that He has let me work out some of my penance here, so that I may yet meet her bereafter."

His voice died away in a murmur of prayer.

He seemed to be appealing for the Divine con-solation of which he had just spoken, and as he communed with Invisible Glory, his withered face became transfigured with a beauty surpassing that of youth.

CHAPTER LIIL

THE END AT LAST.

The woman at his feet felt inexpressibly awed and humbled. Was this the husband who had gone mad for jealousy of her?—who had wrecked his whole because of her sin? Was his great love, and his great wrath for love's sake, all merged into a religious frenzy; or had much sorrow unsettled his fine intellect, making him a prey to all the troubled funcies and weird ter-rors of an infirm imagination?

"Is it you, Stuart?" she moaned, as she still crouched at his feet. "Are you the Stuart I knew—the Stuart who loved me?"

He looked at her with sudden anger in his face.

"Why did you come to torment me?" he said, impatiently. "Have you not worked me trouble enough? Can not you let me be at rest? How can I obtain peace when you intrude on me all the cruel memories of the past? I look me all the cruel memories of the past? I look at you, and I see that dead man's eyes shining in the wicked light of yours. I see your tricks of gesture, your caressing hands; and I am reminded of the lie which blasted my prime of life. I tried to put it away from me—all the old sickening despair, the keen, deep wound of that blighted time. I succeeded so har as you were concerned, as your weeth. concerned; as years went on, and your worthlessness became more evident to me, as the glamour of love died away in my heart, and my eyes saw with the relentless clearness of truth, I loathed you for all the pain you had caused me. I shrank from the thought of you as a prisoner shrinks at the sight of the rack which has tortured his every limb. Passion was wept away in tears; the memory of you was more hitter than gall, and I prayed that your image might never cross my thoughts even in the unreality of dreams.

"Am I so horrible to you, then?" she fid-tered, looking up at him with deprecating eyes. "Can you not grant me one forgiving thought? I was guildees of actual sin, Stuart, I swear it;

"Bah!" he interrupted, impatiently; "what matters it? You were guilty enough to ruin me, and to murder that other. I have no sympathy for those women who desecrate their souls with the assumption of vices of which they are practically free. You feign love in your speech, polluting your lips the while with affirming kisses; you, for mere last of vanity, draw on men toward a hell of temptation which ends in their damnation; your counterfeit love arouses in them all the hot tempest of disordered passions; you inflict real pain, while your assumed emotion is nothing but a pleasant diversion for your idle hours. Such women as you, Ana, are infinitely more contemptible than the poor wretches who grovel in actual sin, to escape the crave of famine and scorch of thirst; or those for the body's pleasure, and who are at least sin-cere in the iguoble indulgence of their brutish animal souls, mere slaves of the flesh, that err

"You are too hard-at least you should hear "I had Diana said, in a low, broken voice.
"I do not care to hear you; I know you,"
the other answered, briefly. Then he looked down on her, and saw by the wavering light of a flame which played on her flushed cheek, and the golden threaded hairs which overswept it, that she was weeping.

"I dare say you think I have spoken too harshly," he said, in a gentler tone. "I have no wish to reproach you with my injuries. I "I have no wish to repreach you with my injuries. I have forgiven them. I had, in truth, forgotten you until you thrust yourself on me to-night -an evil memory of the past; but when I hear you, and such as you, boast yourself guildess, I-can not forbear the truth. I can not think God will hold you innocent. And I would recommend you to spend such future time as He al-lows you here, in endeavoring to secure a hope for the future.

She crept nearer to him, and once more entwined her arms in his in the movement. All the picutoous warmth of her tresses swept like a soft veil over his hands and knees. Then, find-ing that he did not repulse her, she arose for an ing that he did not reputse her, she arose for an instant, and then dropped down on his breast, softly and tenderly, as a bird sinks its bosom over the speckled darlings of its nest.

"Kiss me once before I go," she whispered, "that I may know that you forgive all."

Who can count the various phases of a coquette's nature?

She had sought him in fear and trembling, dreading lest be might burden her present with the old bitter claims of the past. She had encountered this man with the despair of him who turned to confront the awful shadow which dogged his steps, preferring definite misery to that haunting dread. She had thought of him with nervous loathing, and now, lo! she lay with her heart beating on his, her eyes, lips, and arms serving as so many allurements to woo back in his heart some of the old fire of his dead

She had been almost stunned by his indifference. It was so unexpected and so galling to her pride. She had expected reproaches and denunciation; she had not calculated on the contempt of unconcern. It was her exceed-ingly that he should be thus careless of her. Every instinct of her nature rebelled at his disn; her pampered vanity was mortified, and passion; her pampered vanity was mortified, and intuitively she sought to retrieve the mortifica-tion by the aid of her personal charms. "Oh!" she mermured, as she tightened the coil of her fair arms round his threat; "do you forget that you once loved me, that for many happy nights my eyes closed in slumber on your heart? Will you not forgive for the sake. breast? Will you not forgive, for the sake of those memories? Stuart, my husband, you are so dear to me still!" Her voice died away in a sigh.

The fire burned in a level red line in the grate; the wind outside sobbed and plained, like an echo of her grief; the darkness was thick in the room, save where the embers glowed, and her hair made light over his shoulders.

He bent his head down near to her face, his eyes lit with sudden fire; his lips trembled, his hands involuntarily taking such a flerce grip of her arms that she well-nigh wept afresh with pein and terror.

"Oh!" he groaned, "you are a devil, woman!—a deril sent from bell to wake a tempest in my soul. You would fain be omnipotent in your own low degree. You would arouse the gloom of the thunder, the fury of the whirlwind, and the blasting streak of flume, and then, with a light word, bid all be at rest, since you tire of the trouble you have made. When you grow weary, and perchance afraid, of the horror of your work, you cry in vain for heavenly peace, for the stillness of summer and the brightness of sunshine. You fling the fire-brand for the of sanshine. You fling the fire-brand for the brief pleasure of seeing it blaze, and take no head who weeps over the blackened ashes. Do not tempt me to feel the strife of earthly passion once more, lest all my penance be wasted. Take your beauty from my sight, lest I curse it in the name of an utterly lost soil. Go, go!"

He unclasped her lingering arms from around weeping, oh so piteously; and entreating for one lock of kindness—one kiss of forgiveness.

"Give me your pardon," she cried, "or I shall die with the sting of your wrath in my heart. You know, you know, that I did love you, Stuart!"

She sought to twine her hands in his as she spoke; but accidentally she stirred the blue ribbon which shimmered on the deep black of his mourning clothes. He recoiled from her, and pushed her hands away.

pushed her hands away.

"I know that you Re!" he cried, fiercely.

"Woman, you would profane death with dishoner. I am as one dead; I died with one whom I loved more dearly than ever I did you, and now my corpse shall not be shamed. For you, I damned my soul; for her, with God's belp, I will work out salvation through repentance, and thus save my future."

He arose and left her crouching by his seat, her hair bright in the dull red of the fire, her face and clasped hands in dense shadow. He walked to the window, and, throwing it open, looked out into the darkness.

Outside was the lonely-sounding wind, the plash of rain, and the weird sense of measureless gloom; but the rough air was welcome to Douglas after the stifling oppression of her sweet, guilt-tainted breath. Presently a murky bank of clouds drifted away from the moon's face and revealed its pale glory, obscured only by a few troubled streaks of rilvery-gray vapor.

sided and the rain ceased; and in a little while all Auriel was luminous with their weird light.

Douglas's face was turned in the direction of the Auriel church-yard, as though he could see, through the masses of gray woodland, the glimmer of one little grave-stone, near which the winter flowers looked white, like all else in the moonlight.

When he next looked on the woman by the fire his eyes were gentler and his voice less "Ana," he said, "I do not presume to judge I can forgive all, even this last attempted fraud of your guileful nature; but a senson may come when the Master of all Worlds, the Creator and the Preserver, the Destroyer and the Regenerator of all earthly atoms, will grow impatient of your impenitence. Take heed, lest you injure even mercy too greatly to be forgiven. You have lied all your life; you have come to me to-day with your old sins, stronger, and with-out the saving excuse of youthful folly. In earnest of my forgiveness, I ask you to repent: but do not molest me again. In arousing in me human passion, you may invoke the human de-sire of vengeance. I dbure to be left with my God and my memory. Now go!"

She arose humbly enough, and without one more wasted word or gesture, went straight to

She stopped there, and gave him one last look such a one as a chidden bound may turn on the master band. And then, finding her glance was not returned, she slowly passed through the doorway and disappeared in the darkness. As the soft rustle of her trailing robes was heard no more Douglas's face recovered somewhat of the repose which had distinguished it before her voice broke in on the solemnity of his desola-tion. When the trouble of doubt again pertion. When the trouse of course again per-turbed his eyes he turned them upward, and sent the passionate appeal of his broken heart to the world which faith images as the pure soul's reward-

"O God, give me hope!"

.

What hope remains for such as these? I do not set up for a philosopher, and I dislike stories written on purpose to point a moral; but I affirm that life is more sad and more incomplete than writers are apt to admit. In the finis of the novelist we hear often of remorse which is assoiled by penitence, of ambition which seizes its crown, of passion jubilant with success, of bridal bells which clang joy for evermore to the ficti-tious heroes and heroines. But how is it in truth? Does hope always grasp its fruition? Is to repent to forget? Is love an Arcadian pastoral? Is it not rather a splendid tragedy? pastoral? Is it not rather a splendid tragedy? Whether its end be an agony of frustration or the despair of satiety, who can say that such

The motto of life is imperfection. I have ventured to describe some phases of its failure, caused by defect of feeling in some of the personages I have introduced to the reader by excess of feeling in others. But life's soreness and life's delight, life's endeavors and life's indifference, are best embodied in the four lines from which I have taken the title of this story :

Why, let the strucken deer go weep, The hart ungalled play; For some must watch, while some must sleep; So runs the world away.

PRODUCTIVE AND UNPRODUC-TIVE POPULATION.

THAT very industrious statistician, M. Manrice Block, in his latest publication, "L'Europe Politique et Sociale, 1869," enters into some detailed calculations on a minute and curious portion of his subject, which is not commonly taken into account in economical generalization. The birth rate, as we all know, is very different in different countries of Europe, and so is the death rate. France may be taken as an example of the minimum of birth rate, together with a low death rate, though not quite so low as in the United Kingdom. In France, whatever the renson for the phenomenon may be, there are fewer births to a marriage than in any other part of Europe. The numbers vary from 4.77 children to a marriage (Russia) down to 2.55 to a marriage (France). On the other hand, the death rate in Russia is 3.59 per cent, per annum; in France, only 2.31 per cent.; in England, 2.10 per cent.

Now one obvious result of this state of things is the following, that France contains relatively a larger proportion of adults to children than any other European country. To follow again M. Block's calculations: France contains out of 10,000 inhabitants about 3500 only under twenty years of age, nearly 3500 above forty; Great Britain, 4500 under twenty, 2400 above forty; Ireland, nearly 5000 under twenty, only 2200 above forty. France is, comparatively, a land without children; Ireland, a land without old people.

Now, economically speaking, a country with a large number of children is one in which a large unproductive expenditure takes place. Children do not create wealth. M. Block reasons as He supposes that every child under five costs the state $80 per annum, and produces nothing. Every person between five and twenty costs, on the average, $20, after making deduction for what his labor produces. Every person between twenty and sixty produces $200 net. Using these data, and using also those respecting the medium age of each individual of the population, we arrive at the following results: In France, the mean gain of each indi-vidual to the public—his contribution to the na--amounts to upward of $98 60; in Great Britain, to $80 60 : in the United States and in Ireland, only to $72 20.

Of course, the fallacies attending on such a calculation are obvious enough, and M. Block The labor of an makes full allowance for them. individual is more or less profitable to the state, individual is more or less problem to the state, not according to his age only, but according to his skill and energy, and according to the fertility of the soil, the wealth of the mines, and so forth, to which that labor is applied. Tried by these tests, it is very possible that the day's work of an inhabitant of the United States is worth twice that of an inhabitant of France. The mere test of age is, therefore, obviously insuffi-cient. But it does not follow that because insufficient it is useless. Its application shows summers it is useess. Its approximation shows this: costeris periless—supposing, that is, labor to be in itself equally productive—a country like France, in which marriages are late and children few, has a great economical advantage over lands more affinent in young life. In Ireland-to take the opposite extreme—it seems as if a very large portion of the wealth of the country must be spent every year in feeding and bringing to ma-turity children who will emigrate to America when adult, and employ their whose wealth-pro-ducing power to enrich a foreign country. The case is precisely the same as if any given society were to devote its energies to the production of machinery, exporting the machinery when made without any return. There are many causes for the unbappy economical condition of Ireland; but we suspect that this one, indicated by the figures of M. Maurice Block, lies deeper at the root of it than politicisms or economists have conjectured.

STEEL WATCH-CHAINS.

Tun small steel chain which winds round the fusee of a watch is about eight inches in length, and contains upward of five hundred links, riv-eted together. It is not thicker than a horsehair, and the separate links can but just be per-ceived with the naked eye. Modern invention has as yet discovered no substitute for this chain it in slenderness, strength, and flexibility. Most of these watch-chains are manufac-tured at Christchurch, in Hants. The links are penched out by girls from plates of steel, and very young girls pick up the links, and rivet one to the other. Wasch-chain manufacture has been the staple of Christchurch for nearly a century—in fact, ever since pocket watches began to be generally carried.

HUMORS OF THE DAY,

Wear is that which we often eatch hold of and yet ever see !-- A passing remark.

Man is like a potato, never sure when he will get into bot water."

He was a foolish fellow and inclined to go to ex-tremes who, because he had a horror of capital pun-labment, refused to even execute a commission.

Some lawyers resemble folks who can sleep in any position. It is immaterial on which side they lie.

A Fir or Passion-Getting married.

An liftnois editor, speaking of a rogue who lived in his vicinity, says: "The rastal has broken every bank, jall, and Sabbath we have had in this vicinity for the last five years."

CINCULATING MERICH-A clown to the ring.

The good people of R——, a small village not many miles from Cleveland, Ohlo, were talking of moving their church-holiding to a pleasenter location. One Sabbath moving the minister took for his theme the "Eack of Ages," and in the middle of his discourse said, with considerable emphasis, "Who can move its". A little Englishman, who had been uspoing, and was one of those desirous of having the church moved, longed up, and started the congregation with "Fill bring over my yoke of steem and help." The which proposition was subsequently accepted.

The first chapter in a Western nevel has the follow-ing: "All of a sudden the fair girl continued to sit on the sand, gazing upon the briny deep, on whose heav-ing bosom the tall ships went merrily by, feelghed— ah! who can tell with how much of joy and sorrow, and pine lumber and emigrants, and hopes and sait fab.?"

ODE TO A WATER-CART. Sprinkle, sprinkle, water-cart! How I wonder why thou art More preferred than dust that flies Sometimes in our face and eyes!

When the blazing sun is high, When the streets are very dry, Then you pour your drenching food, Changing dust to sticky mod.

Then the traveler in the street Owes to you his dirty feet; He scarce can tell which way to go, While you squirt and drivele so.

Through our crowded ways you dash: Crossings and eidewalks both you splash; For your drivers never care How they make good people swear.

As you really lay the dust— Through you raise my own diagnet-Still, as others take your part, Sprinkle, sprinkle, water-cart!

"But if I got my money in the savings-bank," in-quired one of the newly-arrived, "when can I draw it out again?" "Och," replied his friend, "sure an" if you put it in to-day you can draw it out again to-merow by giving a fectulght's notice."

An old Raptist minister enforced the necessity of An end Hapter interest energies are account of difference of opinion by this argument; "Now, if every body had been of my opinion, they would all have wanted my old woman."

One of the deacons who sat just behind him responded: "Yes, and if every body was of my opinion, nobody would have her."

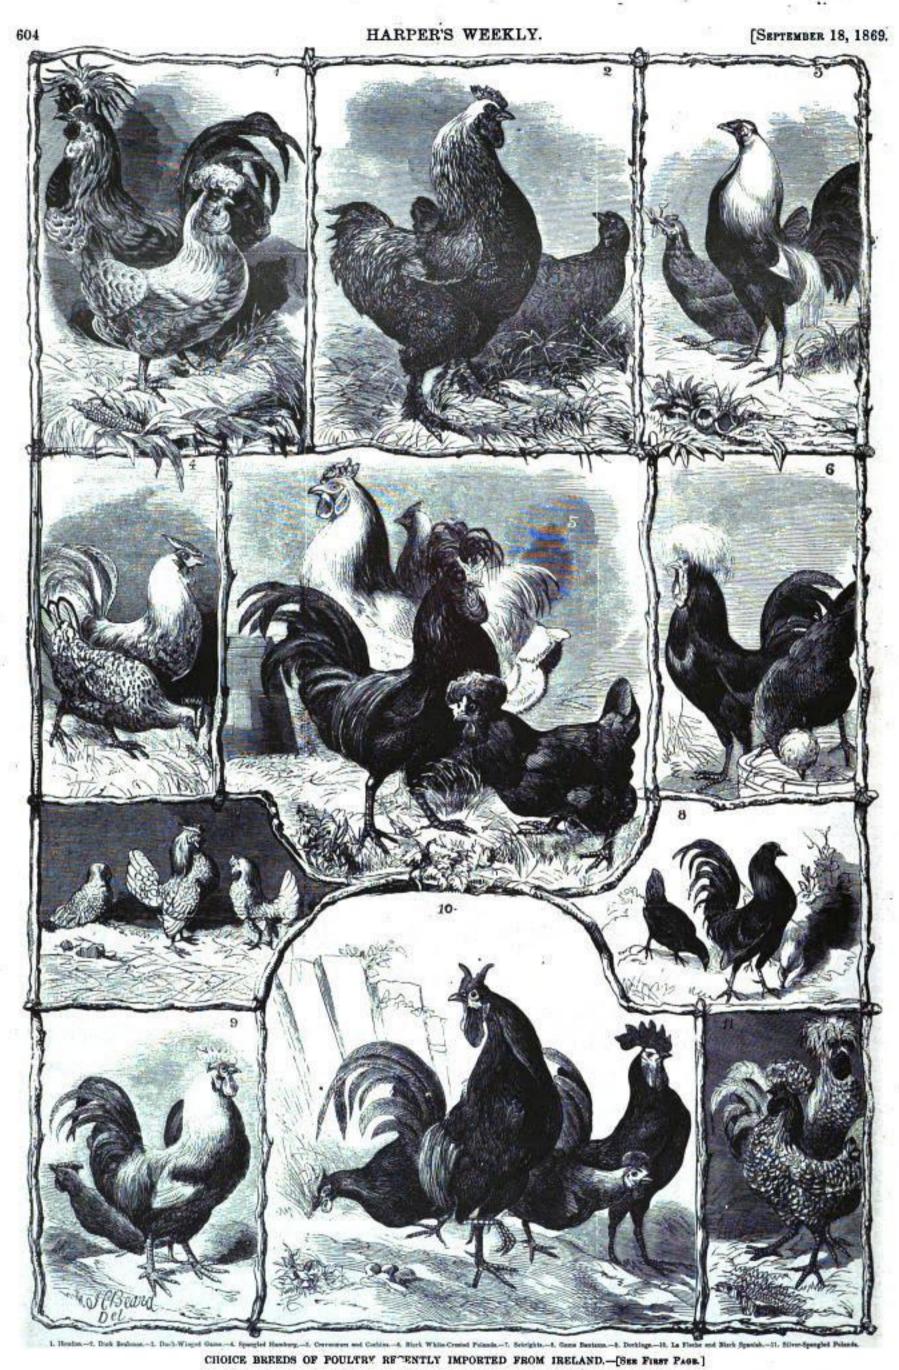

A cockney conducted two ladies to an observatory to see so cellipse of the moon. They were too late: the collipse was over, and the ladies were disappede-ed. "Ob," exclaimed our here, "don't frei: I know the astronomer well; he is a very polite man, and I am sure will begin again."

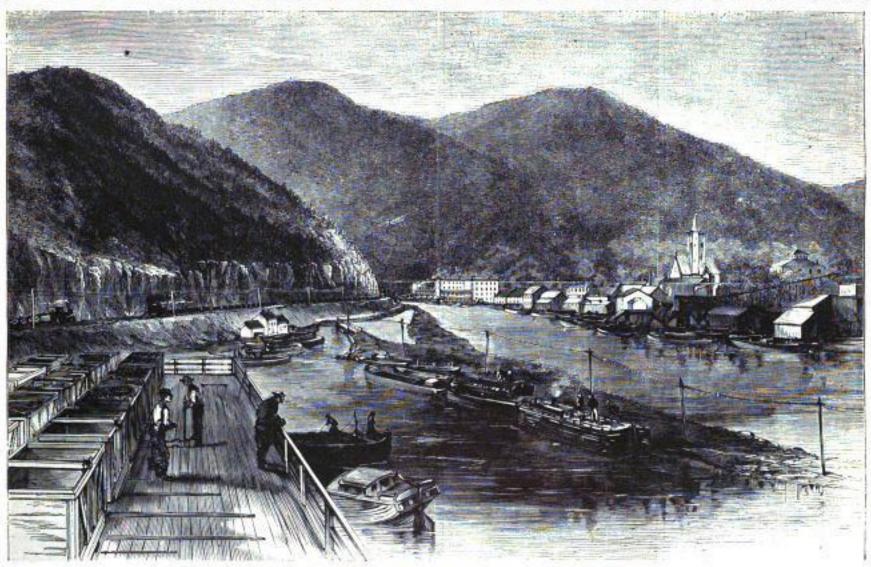

At Brocen recently a valiant officer of the National Guard was decorated by the Emperor. "Sire," be ex-cisimed, with offizion, "I am yours in life and in death: I served your usede faithfully: I have received two wounds, use in the leg and the other at Wa-gram..." Here the Empress giggled antibly, and the voteran's speech came to an abrupt termination

A richly-dressed lady stopped a boy trudging along with a basket, and asked, "My little boy, have you got religion?" "No, ma'am," said the innocent, "I've got potatoes."

At a reliway station an old lady said to a very pempous-looking gentleman who was talking about starm communication, "Pray, Sir, what is seem?" "Steam, ma'ers, is—sh, steam is steam;" "I knew that thep coniden't tell ye," said a rough-looking fel-low standing by; "but steam is a bucket of water in a trumendous pempiration."

A boarding-house keeper in the city has bu'lt him a subtribut critiage. At the breakfast-table last Sunday the question of what it should be called was discussed, when a merry little lady present suggested "flash Villa;" but it wou't be called by that name.

VIEW OF MAUCH CHUNK, CARBON COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA .- [SKETCHED BY THEODORE R. DAVIS.]

MAUCH CHUNK, PENNSYLVANIA.

MAUCH CHUNK, PENNSTLVANIA.

MATCH CHUNK, the capital of Carbon County, is situated on the west bank of the Lehigh River, where that stream passes through the Mahoning Mountain. The town lies on both sides of Mauch Chunk Creek, and between the Mahoning and Sharp mountains. It is a location so contracted in breadth that it is really a long cation. No room is affected for gardens. The hills on either side rise precipitously to the height of several hundred feet; some of them are a thousand feet above the river. The name of the town is Indian, and signifies Bear Monntain.

The narrowness of the valley in which the town lies added greatly to the destructiveness of the memorable flood of 1862.

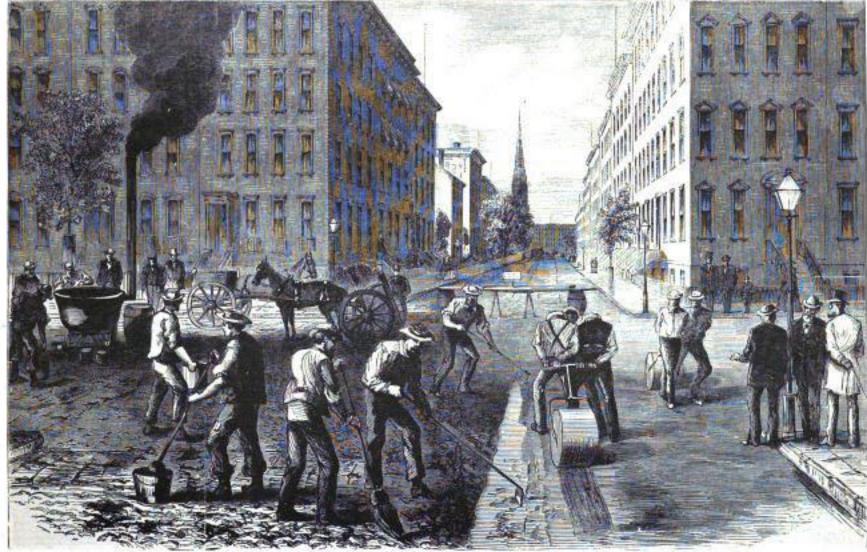

In 1818 the whole country in this vicinity was a complete wilderness. It was known, indeed, that anthracite coal was to be found here, but every attempt to get it to market had been baffed. In 1817 Jossas Watte, accompanied by G. F. Haxro, visited this region for the purposes of reconnoissance, the object of which was to ascertain the feasibility of using the Lehigh River to convey the coal to market. The prespect was any thing but encouraging, but it was determined to commence operations. Accordingly, roads were made from the mines to the Lehigh, and upon the latter were built a series of dams to aid the navigation by slack-water. Thus was established the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company. In 1832 the dependencies of this Company gave work to 400 men, principally miners, who, with their families, made a population of 2000. After passing through many a perilons crisis, and after an expense of $2,500,000, the enter-prise was at last consummated.

The town is at present in a flourishing condi-tion, the coal shipped from this point amounting to some millions of tons per annum. The Le-high Valley Reilrond, which is one of the best-managed roads in the country, affords the trav-eler admirable facilities for renching this region, which is so remarkable for its picture-squeness that it has been termed the "Switzerland of America." America.

Judge Asa Packer, the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, resides at Mauch Chunk; and the grounds around his place, originally laid out by the exiled gardener of Louis Philippes, form one of the chief attractions of the town.

WORKMEN LAYING THE CONCRETE PAVEMENT IN NEW YORK CITY .- DRAWN BY STANLEY FOX .- [SEE PAGE 606.]

The tourist who has not ascended to Mount Pisgah in this region, and taken a trip over the Gravity Roads, has failed to experience one of the most novel of the pleasures incident to mod-

THE CONCRETE PAVEMENT.

THE number of experiments which have been made in the matter of street payements in this city, and the partial or total failure of these ex-periments clearly illustrate the deficiency of the system adopted by our municipal government. This fault cun be repaired only by the establishment of a bureau of construction and repairs, consisting of compesent engineers, not subject to the inserference of the Common Council, except possibly in the matter of expenditure. The suc-cess that has attended the limited independence of the Central Park Commissioners is a proof of the policy and economy of eliminating the ques-tion of politics from the conduct of public works. The statistics of the several kinds of pavement laid down within twenty years, presented by a survey of the city, would stand approximately as 37,000	Square yards.

Bione-block	1,913,545
Nicolana
Fisk concrete (estimated)	5,000
Stafford (estimated)	700
Cubble-stone (estimated)	3,000,000

Since 1866 the cobble-stone pavement has go ont of use. During that year 17,254 square yards were put down—under contract 10,222, and at private expense 7002—but one ordinance looking to the laying of it in any part of the city being passed while the previously mentioned work was going on. This ordinance provided for a cobblestone pavement on Bank Street from West Street to the river. The career of the Nicolson pave-ment began with the disuse of the cobble-stone, in the patting down of 490 square yards on Nassan Street in 1865, of 29,001 in 1867, and of 29,073 in 1868. A contract was also made for laying the Fisk concrete payement along One-hundred-and-seventy-fourth Street, from Third to First avenues, and an experiment with the Stafford pavement was tried at private ex-pense in Wall Street, between William and Hanover. An ordinance in fevor of the latter on Seventh Avenue, between Fourteenth and Fiftyninth streets, was also passed, together with six ordinances, amounting in all to 50,000 square yards, in favor of the Nicolson; six ordinances, amounting to about 60,000 square yards, in favor of the M Gonegal; two ordinances, amounting to 40,000 square yards, in favor of the Brown & Miller; and three ordinances, involving about 20,000 square yards, in favor of the Fisk concrete; fifty-six ordinances, summing about 400,000 square yards of stone-block paversent, complete the provisions for the year. complete the provisions for the year,

It has been estimated that in the course of twenty-four hours 17,000 vehicles pass the Astor House, in Broadway, up or down. This would wear out the stone-block pavement once in every fifteen years. Estimating the number of horses and vehicles in use in this city at 150,000, it is calculated that not less than $10,500,000 might be seved anumally by the adoption of some less grinding substitute for the hard trap of the Russ and Belgian and stone-block superstructure; and the inference may be drawn that the question of expense of construction and re-pairs is not the only important economical ques-tion involved. The relative cost per square yard of the several pavements in use may be averaged as follows:

| Nicolaot: 4 10 | Fisk concrete 2 60 | Stafford 3 50

In Paris, since 1854, a strong preference has been manifested for the asphultum pavement upon a concrete foundation. This pavement is very similar to the Fisk concrete, which is now being laid in the most fashionable streets of this city laid in the most fashionable streets of this city and in Central Park. As a rule, competent en-gineers express doubts as to the merits of the Nicolson and of wooden pavements of all par-terns. The Stafford type of wooden pavement, though later in the field, possesses some advan-ages over the Nicolson, the principal of which are its simplicity and the case with which it may be required. The woselen pavement question has been exhaustively settled in the negative by English experiments during the past twenty years. Its merits are its noiselessness, its reduc-tion of the mortality of houses, its reduction of tion of the mortality of broses, its reduction of the wear and tour of vehicles, and its effecting a utilization of the utmost percentage of draught force, and these are all merits to an equal degree of the asphultic road—may be made merits of any concrete whatsoever. The increased morany concrete whatsoever. The increased mor-tality in horses occasioned by the Russ and Belgian and other stone payements in this city is estimated at 3500 numally—no item of consider-able importance in the discrimination between pavements for thoroughfares. As between the two typical structures, the Belgian and the Nicolom data already supplied, it may be estimated that, with the attrition of Broadway, the former would last fifteen years against a duration of half that period in the case of the latter.

The concrete pavement—the value of which hus been happily settled in Paris-effects a unlon of the better qualities of both the wooden and the stone block, without the objections appertaining to either, and, as the monds of enwill be developed from the present crude concretes.

Our illustration on page 605 shows the manner in which the Fisk concrete pavement is laid. This pavement is composed of gravel, broken stone, cinders, and coal ashes (free from all stone, cinders, and coal sames (not propor-foreign substances), mixed in definite proportions with tar, rosin, and asphaltum. The road-bed, properly prepared, the composition is spread on in layers of moderate thickness, suc-cessively rolled with heavy rollers for uniformity and compactness. These layers form a suffi-ciently strong roadway of from a half to threequarters of a foot in depth, and can be put down at an expense, per square foot, not ex-ceeding the expense of the asphalt road as con-structed in Paris. It remains for years and at-trition to test the practical value of this con-crete; but, in general, it may be remarked, that it is heartily and highly commended by thought-ful engineers as a term in the right directions. ful engineers as a step in the right direction. The sonorousness of the hoof-beat, as enabling the pedestrian to measure the imminence of passing vehicles, is an element of concretes over wooden pavements, illustrated in an eminent de-gree by the asphaltic road, the value of which as a preventive of accidents can not be overestima-This style of pavement has been adopted by the Central Park Commissioners.

THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA BY THE CHINESE.

Was Columbus the first discoverer of America, or did he only rediscover that continent after is had, in remote ages, been found, peopled, and forgotten by the Old World? It is curious that this question has not been more generally raised, for it is very clear that one of two things must be true: either the people whom Colum-bus found in America must have been descended from emigrants from the Old World, and there-fore America was known to the Old World before Columbus's time, or else the aborigines of the western bemisphere were the result of spon-taneous human generation—the development of man from a lower species of animal, or descended from a second Adam and Eve, whose origin would be equally puzzling. Unless we are pre-pared to cast aside Holy Writ, and all our general notions of the origin of the human race, we must believe that there was at one time communication between the Old World and the New.
Probably this communication took place on the opposite side of the world to ours, between the eastern coast of Asia and the side of America most remote from Europe; and I believe it is quite possible that the inhabitants of Eastern Asia may have been aware of the existence of America, and kept up intercourse with it while our part of the Old World never dreamed of its existence. The impenetrable barrier the Chinese were always anxious to preserve between themselves and the rest of the nations of the Old World renders it quite possible that they should have kept their knowledge of America to themselves, or at any rate, from Europe. The objection that the art of navigation in such re-mote times was not sufficiently advanced to enable the Chinese to cross the Pacific and land on the western shore of America is not conclusive, as we have now found that arts and sciences which were once generally supposed to be of quite modern origin existed in China ages and ages before their discovery in Europe. The aris of paper-making and printing, among oth-ers, had been practiced in China long before Europeans had any idea of them. Why, then, should not the Chinese have been equally, more, in advance of us in navigation? stately ruins of Baalbee, with gugantic arches across the streets whose erection would puzzle our modern engineers, the Pyramids, and other such remains of stupendous works point to a state of civilization, and the existence of arts and sciences in times of which European historians give no account,

One fact, corroborative of the idea that the Old World, or at least some of the inhabitants of Asia, were once aware of the existence of Amer ica before its discovery by Columbus is, that namy of the Arabian alcost with whom I have conversed on this subject are fully convinced that the ancient Arabian geographers knew of America; and in support of this opinion point to pssages in cid works in which a country to the west of the Atlantic is spoken of. An Arab gentleman, a friend of mine, General Hussein Pasha, in a work he has just written on America, called En-Nessr-Et-Tayir, quotes from Djeldeki and other old writers to show this.

There is, however, among Chinese records not merely vague references to a country to the west of the Atlantic, but a circumstantial account of its discovery by the Chinese long before Columbus was born.

A competent authority on such matters, J. Hanlay, the Chinese interpreter in San Francisco, has lately written an essay on this subject, from which we gather the following startling statements drawn from Chinese historians and geographers. Fourteen hundred years ago even America had been discovered by the Chinese and described by them. They stated that land to be about 20,000 Chinese miles distant from China. About 500 years after the birth of Christ, Baddhist priests repaired there, and brought back the news that they had met with Buddhist idols and religious writings in the country already. Their descriptions, in many respects, resemble those of the Spuniards a thousand years after. They called the country "Fusany;" after a tree which grew there, whose leaves resemble those of the hamboo, whose bark the natives made clothes giveers and inventors are already beginning to turn in this direction, nothing is hazarded in predicting that the ideal or coming pavement | These particulars correspond exectly and remarkably with those given by the American historian, Prescott, about the maquay-tree in Mexico. He states that the Azzecs prepared a pulp for paper making out of the bark of this tree. Then, even its leaves were used for thatching; Then, even its leaves were used for thatching; its fibres for making ropes, its roots yielded a nourishing food; and its sap, by means of fermentation, was made into an intoxicating drink. The accounts given by the Chinese and Spaniards, although a thousand years apart, agree in stating that the natives did not possess any iron, but only copper; that they made all their tools, for working the contraction of t for working in stone and metals, out of a mix-ture of copper and tin; and they, in comparison with the nations of Europe and Asia, thought but little of the worth of silver and gold. The religious customs and forms of worship presented the same characteristics to the Chinese fourteen hundred years ago as to the Spaniards four hun-dred years ago. There is, moreover, a remark-able resemblance between the religion of the Axtecs and the Buddhism of the Chinese, as well as between the manners and customs of the Axtecs and those of the people of China. There is also a great similarity between the features of the Indian tribes of Middle and South America and those of the Chinese, and, as Haulay, the Chinese interpreter of whom we spoke above, states, between the accent and most of the monosyllabic words of the Chinese and Indian lan-guages. Indeed, this writer gives a list of words which point to a close relationship; and infers therefrom that there must have been emigration m China to the American continent at a most early period indeed, as the official accounts of Buddhist priests fourteen hundred years ago notice these things as existing already. Perhaps now old records may be recovered in China which may furnish full particulars of this ques-tion. It is at any rate remarkable and confirm-ative of the idea of emigration from China to America at some remote period, that at the time of the discovery of America by the Spaniards the Indian tribes on the coast of the Pacific, opthe Indian tribes on the coast of one a man, or posite to China, for the most part, enjoyed a state of culture of ancient growth, while the inhabitants of the Atlantic shore were found by Europeans in a state of original barbarism. If the idea of America having been discovered before the time of Columbus be correct, it only goes to prove that there is nothing new under the sun; and that Shelly was right in his bold but beautiful lines—"Thon canst not find one spot whereon no city stood." Admitting this, who can tell whether civilization did not exist in America when we were plunged in barbarism? and, stranger still, whether the endiess march of ages in rolling over our present cultivation may not obliterate it, and sever the two hemispheres once again from each other's cognizance? Possibly, man is destined, in striving after civil-ization, to be like Sisyphus, always engaged in rolling up a stone which ever falls down Dyspersia Tanisus circ Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Malled for 60; Sold by druggists. S. G. Whilmed, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, FREUKLES, and TAN from the face, use PEREX'S MOTH AND PHECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Pearr, 49 Bond St., N. T. Sold by all Druggiets.

EW INDISPENSABLE HAND-BOOK, For Home Improvement for both Young and Old.

Home Improvement for both Young and Old.

HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BRILAYR, and HOW TO TALK, HOW TO BRILAYR, and HOW TO TALK, HOW TO DO BUSINESS.

In one handsome volume of 600 pages. Sent by first post for $2 18, by S. R. WELLS, 500 Broadway, S. Y.
Also, Just Published:

WEDLOCK: on, THE HOMY BELLYIONS OF THE SEXES. $1 50 EXTRA GOL, $2.—HOW TO READ
CHARACTER, a Self-Examiner, with 170 Einstrations. $1; in Masin, $1 20.—ORATORY, with a Chairman's Guide. $1 50.—NEW ANNUAL of PHRENOLOGY for 1870. Only 35 cents.—Works on ShortHand, the Natural Sciences, &c. Agents wented.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

PARIS AND VIENNA NOVELTIES.

Alex. M. Hays & Co., No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-ricties to be found in the city, and are offered at ter Sign of Gold Telegraph. _#1

FURNITURE.

We invite buyers to visit our extensive wazerooms and examine our large stock of Sultes for Parlors, Chambers, Dining-Rooms, Libearies, &c. Manufactured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every particular.

With unequaled facilities and a ripe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promise too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be besten in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers and Dealers,
15 and 17 Spring Street, corner Crosby.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-can Knitting Machine, Price $55. The simplest, cheepest, and best Knitting Machine ever in-tented. Will knit 20,000 effects per minnt. Liberal beforements to Agents, Address AMERICA. TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo. | United States, on receipt of the prior.

Alaska Diamonds.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quarta, equal in helifina-cy to the real diamond, mounted at our own factory, in artistic diamond settlings, morrosted sold sold, and sold by as of me suited of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrin-sic value.

Cluster Pins, $10, $15, and $15; with shank, $10, $15, and $25.

Cross Pins and Cross Charms, $6, $10, and $15; Sinds, per set, $0, $6, $10, $10, and $20.

We do our business direct from our city, which has a world-wide requisition for its fins jewelry, and are not in sympathy with bogus concerns advertising charp jewelry.

All orders by mail for less than $10 should be ac-companied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount each by express, C.O.D., contoners paying all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade. Call on or address

The STANLEY & WHIPPLE MFG. CO., No. 12 South Main St., cor. College Providence, R. I.

SWEET
QUININE.

SWAPNIA.

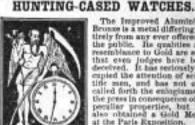

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

SOID by draggists, prescribed by bott physicians.
STEARNS, PARR, & CO., Chemists, New York.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE

The Improved Aluminism Browns is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been develved. It has seriously occupied the attention of selentific men, and has not only called forth the enlogiums of the peess in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factors, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Phose years $15 \tau 826.

Further details will be found in my pamphiet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods semi by Express, C. O. D., with charges, Address JULES D. HUGGIENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY.

OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OFFICERS:
EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President,
WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer,
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary. A. S. JARVIS, HERVEY G. LAW, JOHN I. VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trusteen. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor

SPLENDID PRIZE PARLOR EN-GRAVING, worth at least $10, given as a pre-minm to mak subscriber to Descenar's Movement Managing. Specimen copies of the Magazine, with PERSONAL PROPERTY OF THE PROPE

Two New Novels.

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York, Have just published;

FALSE COLORS.

BY ANNIE THOMAS,

Author of "Denis Donne," "On Guard," "Played Out," "Called to Account," "Playing for High Stakes," "Walter Goring," &c., &c.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

Miss Thomas's writings are fresh and reasonably vigorous. Her sketches of character are clever and well done. Her power of language is strong, and she uses it clearly and definitely.—Cleane Repositions.

Miss Thomas will, we think, rank high among that class of powelsts of whom Miss Evans (George Enot) is the first.—Reader.

IL. FOUND DEAD.

BY THE ATTROX OF "CARLYON'S YEAR," "ONE OF THE PAMILY," "A BEGGAR ON HORSEBACE," &c.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

He is the most humorous of the writers of fection at present, but his fini is always controlled by good tasts, and always sympothetic. Also, his tone of feeling is as rational as it is pure. There is no novelist who more theroughly underestands the ametily and the happiness of the affections in their highest and most virtuous exercises; but there is no sentimentality in his wrisings—not a touch of that subtle kind of false-hood which would give the heart precedence of the conscience, and grait passion at the expense of principle.—Essentier and London Review.

EF HARRE & BROTHERS will send either of the che

HITCHCOCK'S

New Monthly Magazine

CHOICE MUSIC, ART NOTES,

Select Reading for the Family Circle.

CONTAINING

Beautiful Bustrations, Biographical Sketches, Choice Musical Compositions arranged for the Piano-Forte, Poetry, and Notes on Painting, Sculpture, &c., &c., голина д вгланфев

Illustrated Magazine for the Drawing-Room, AND A

Valuable Library of Excellent Music-

It is issued on the 15th of every month. Price, $3 00 per Year, in advance.

Specimen Copies mailed free, on receipt of price,

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 24 Beakman Street, New York.

LF Agents wanted every where. Write for Terms.

Bloomington Nursery. 500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Heuses.
Fruit, Ornamental and Norsery Stock, immense and seliable assortment, very lew for cash.

Apples—including most magnificent etock of yearlings: also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duchees, Oldenburg, Histop, Transcensisut, and other Crab Apples—1, 2, and 3 year.
Frenches, Pears, Cherries, Firens, Quénors, Grapes,
French and Recyreen Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osay Orsings Hodge Finants, Esses, own roote; Talips, Hyaristha, Narviensa, Iris, Sprikla, Idles, Speciaums, Auratum, &c.
Also superior colored plates of Fruits and Fluwers.
Bend 10 cents for Catalogues.

9. K. PHENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., III.

THE BEST WRINGER,

THE RELIANCE,

With Keyed Rolls and Spiral Cop-wheels, manufac-tured by PROVIDENCE TOOL CO., Providence, R. I. NEW YORK STORE, 29 BEREMAN STREET. Also, Heavy Hardware, Buit-Champlers' and Salt-Markers' Godes, &c., &c.

Manufacturers of PEABODY BREACH-LOADING PIRE-ARMS.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus asving beath time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, reconnectations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 19 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 58 Murray Street, New York.

CLYCERINE JELLY

Pood, Nourishment, and Stissolant for Consump-ives and delicate children. Sold by JOHN P. HENRY, N. Y., and Druggiets generally.

Patent Building Paper.

This celebrated article for lining and sheathing buildings, and as a substitute for plastering, is having a rapid sale in this vicinity.

For sale by

B. E. HALE,

22 and 24 Frankfort St., New York.

SOMETHING NEW.—In musical circles the Estey Organs are the rage. They are the most durable and have the finest tone, remarkable for their sweatness and power. The You Brussan and You Jubilante are the graziest novelties and best inventions ever introduced. J. ESTEY & CO., Brancheboro, Vt., Sole Manufacturers.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Flames, of Brid-class makers, for $875 and upward.
New Cabinet, Organs for $45 and spward. Sevendband Planes, Melodeoms, and Organs from $40 to $175, as 451 Broadway, N. Y. BOHACE WAYKIIS.

He: POR LOUISIANA. — For a copy of "New Louisians," zonaining a State Map and full and reliable information about the chemp Sagar, Cotton, Rice, and Corange lands, the unprecedening profits of farming in Louisians, and rare chances for investment of money or labor, rend six cous in poetage stamps to Ba. J. O. NOVIS. Pros't Board Comm. of Emigration, New Orleans, La.

AGENTS WANTED, Local and for the New American Patent Ment and Vegetable Chopper. The best thing is the market, without exception. For Cut of Machine, Terms, &c., aidress D. A. NEWTON & CO. E. Curtlandt Street, N. Y.

A LABY who has been rured of great peryons debility, after many years of misers, desires to A. debility, after many years of misery, desires to make known to all follow-sufferers the seire means of relief. Address, enclosing a stemp, MRS, M. MER-HITT, P. O. Box 1603, Reston, Mass., and the per-scription will be seat free by return mail.

THE Great American Gift Candles.—Each package contains an elegant present of Jewelry. Confectioners. News Agents, and Fancy Goods Beal-ers will find them sturietive and calable. A liberal discount to the trade. Send for sample and price-list. INSCHO & TROMAS, 203 North 9th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

TROY PETALE SEMINARY.—This In-stitution ofen the accumulated advantages of over 60 years' successful operation. For circulars, apply to JOHN II. WILLARD, Troy, N.Y.

A LL that is required of SASH FASTENERS, Walker's Patent will do. They never get out of order. $2 per dex.—FELIX WALKER &
CO., at Whitlock Expedition, 35 Park Place, N. T.

$25 A DAY, - 33 new articles for Accepta.

Samples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, No.

$1140-How I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample mailed free. A. J. Pollans, K.Y.

Use B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

THE WORLD-RENOWNED

FOGGAN'S GENUINE CROIDE GOLD HUNTING - CASE WATCHES

are manufactured on strictly extentive principles, having all the brillows, durability, and soled appearance of right part age having policy for a factoristic principles, having all the brillows, durability, and soled appearance of rights principles, and soled appearance of rights are factoristic of the most cape and contributed in the factorist of the strictly description of the strictly and soled productive if a remainder from the receiver and the later of to be the soled entitles with the most principle and superior of the strictly described with the soled principle and superior of the strictly described with the soled principle and superior of the strictly described with the sole of the strictly described and soled principle and separate surfaces and soled of the strictly described and soled principle and soled

The Editor of the New York Daily Sun says: "Mr. Fuggin has shown us a specimen watch of so close resemblance to gold that some but an expert could tell the difference. The movement is the astne as that of the best gold watches. We see inference that the genuine Groide Gold Metal waters well and does not tarnish.

тнівту-вісити

NATIONAL EXHIBITION of the AMERICAN INSTITUTE.

upened to the public on WEDNESDAY, Sept. 8, at 12 m'clock, M., and tastimud daily, from 9 A.M., to 10 o'clock, P.M., UBIS SATURDAY, Oct. 16, 1680,

At the EMPIRE CITY SKATING RINK,

Third Avenue, between 61d and 66th fitreets. This exhibition will be the most comprehensive and

This exhibition will be the most comprehensive and important ever seen on this consistents, dominating of machinery in species, suggestivest display of move and ingenious irrentions by American Leads and brains, implements of husbandry, products of the soil, the work-bog, and the soil in fabrics of every description manufactored from cotons, flax, and slik. Thousands of other attractive Novesties.

Also, onder the anspices of the Institute, the National Association of Wood Manufacturers will, for the first their in the United States, give a complete exposition of all articles manufactured from Wood. This special department should command the attention of every one Interested in the prospectity of American Labor.

Both Weier will be drawn from Motthewer's Supposbor. Soda Weder will be drawn from Matthewe's Fount-es, and the tentaurants will be under the direction also, and the tenhamants will be under the direction of the well-known career, Downing. Season, Trickes for Geodiemen, $3; for Ledies, $2; Single Adminston, 50 cents; Children under 18 years, $5 cross.

The exhibition is on the line of the Third and Second Avenue Bailmade, and may be conveniently reach-ed by the other city roads.

A MERICAN INSTITUE EXHIBITION.—Adver-tisements in be inserted in the Official Calmingue should be sent in Immediately.

W. H. BISHELL, Publisher.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Sainh after on total and Pirst machine on trial. For further particulars, address
THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio; Bostot, Mass.; or St. Leuis, Mo.

WATCHES FOR THE MILLION.

The Gener Teate-Incomesor Associatine (In-turporated by the State) sell First Goad and South Server Warmers, upon the me-prior general-retage system, at 500 cscis. Be seen to obtain a circular be-fore buying elsewhere. Agents seamed. Address MULIELIN & CO. Managers, Broadway, our. Fulion St., New York.

T I L T O N S

Washionable Initial Note-Papers
and Envelopes,
Neatly put up in Deliar or Half-Bollar Boxes, and saws as made, receivant, to say past of the country, on receipt of price, Send for a box to
J. E. TILTON & CO., Beston.

WANTED AGENTS. —215 to size per month, where trains and female, to immediate the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thing, with the largest impressments. Prior for first Mechine, 255; with Table and Pact power, 252. Sond for Circular, with Car of Mechine and terms to Agent for Circular, with Car of Mechine and terms to Agent Address. W. S. IIILL, Marchester, N. H.

DARLOR STEAM ENGINE: made entire-ly of Metal; Boiler and Furnace complete; will work for home if resplied with stater, Ac.; five from formager; a child can work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for $2 \text{ for three for $2 \text{ So. Address WALTER HOLD, No. 102 Nessan Street, New York.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large composition, to arithmetical inventors. large commission, to self-our new sed worderful inven-tions. Address M. WAGNER & Ob., Marshall, Mich.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any second bair or heard to a permanent Black or Brown. Ger Comb sett by marifer $1. For sale by Merchants & Broggleb generally. Address Hagis Could On, springfield, Mass.

$100 to $250 per Month guaranteed. Sure pag. Salaries paid weekly to Agreeis every where salling our Patent Exertastics White Wire Children Lone. Call st, or write for particulars to the Girard Wire Mills, 161 North 5d St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NOVELTY PRINTING-PRESSES

Send for Circulars and Sperimen-Sheets of Type. EMPLOYMENT that pept. For particulars, address S. M. SPENCER & CO., Bratileboro, Vt.

The Climan Knitter!!

This is, without question, the best Paculty Huiting Machine ever invented. It is used, light, seed, chaple of construction, durable, seeds very rapidly, has but one seeds, makes the old-fackwood knithegacents witch tend two colored with light or heavy, single or double yarn, sets up and fackers for own seed, not needs no wrights. It had no hove or local consents how wrights, It had no hove or local consents, hollow or that web, large or small fabrics—corporation. A child can readily operate it, and ran learn to do so much sooner than to kells with ordinary occules. There is nothing to be done but to thread a needle and turn a crapk, small the heel is enached, which is formed to perfection, with little trouble and no sewing; the same is the case with the two.

The price of this Knitter is but 250 to, which places it within the reach of every family. It is deathed to be very pupilar, and we can ofter agends, general and special, encoedingly fiberal terms for engaging in its sale. Seed for Circulars.

Address ESSICK EXITTING MACRING CO., S. W. corner Hib and Chestnut Ste., Philadelphia, Pa-

QUARTER OF A MILLION PIANISTS are indebted to Richardson's New Method for their ability to play well.

book continues to be the Standard Method of This book continues to be the Standard Method of Plano Intrincible throughout the country. He Easy Lewens, Flening Extraines, and Charming Harrentons, have made it extremely popular, while list restained to all grades of advancement causes it to be not only valuable to a person during his early stade, but for a lifetime, Frice 23.75. Sunt gootspaid. OLIVER BITSON & CO., Publishers, 277 Washington Street, Boston; CHAR E. DITSON & CO., 111 Broadway, New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARCEN'S MADARINE, ODC YORF $4 00 Hander's Washley, One Year..... 4 00 Hander's Bahan, Our Tear..... 4 00

Harren's Manazion, Rampus's Where, and Harren's Banan, to one address, for one year, $16.00; or any two for $7.00.

An Matrix Capy of either the Manazira, Weiner, or Baran will be augusted profits for every Cash of Fire Remonstrates of $4.00 each, in one rewellbases; or, size Capies for $20.00, without entre copy.

The Pestage within the United States is for the Managers 14 cents a year, for the Wanner of Same 20 cents a year, for the Wanner of Same 20 cents a year, persons yearly, settle-perrit, or quanterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Brentines of Chinada payet be accompanied with 18 cents additional for the Manager, or 90 cents for the Wanner or Essal, 50 perpay the United Statespottage.

the Wealth of Baras, so purpay the tillness course postage.

The Volumes of the Masastre trentments with the Numbers for Jape and December of each year. Subscriptions may creament, with any Noteller. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the absorber whate to begin with the first Number of the concept volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Warsaw committee with the year. When an time is specified, it will be understood that the arborriber wishes to compresse with the Number sell after the framps of his order.

Seinersform to the Masaztre, Wessaw, or Baran will find on each wrapper the Number sell after the framps of his order.

Solverivers to the Manazire, Wreszix, or Baran will field on each wrigher the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is atopted when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuative.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Ofice Order or Draft payable to the order of Harran & Boswayas is preferable to Bask Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or scales, it can be renewed without loss to the scales.

the sender,
in ordering the Magazine, the Wessar, or the Bazas, the useus and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERVISING IN HARPER'S PERSONICALS. Horper's Myoacise.—Whole Pare, 2230; Half Pare, 125; Quarter Pare, $10—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Workly-Inelde Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line-each insertion. Harper's Enner.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION Gold Watches and Jewelry.

THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE OROIDE.

The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold once coating $100. Those of extra fine fails, at $20, are not arransed by $300 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, no initiation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the increase value, it is equal to gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS FROM $2 TO $8.

CHAINS FROM $2 TO $8.

JEWELRY.—We are immediaturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Calline Metal.—Pine, Ear-Rings, Sicere-Buttons, Leckets, Studs, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Charton, Cold-Fellow and Masoute Fine, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and faily equal to gold in appearance and war.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the screenth Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United Status by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no agents; orders, theselose, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write points the masse, tear, and there. Customers that the cold will remember that our event orders. write plantic the same have, core, who it had cope states, New York. - C. E. COLLINS & CO.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published;

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Fen and Pencil, of the Bistory, Biography, Semery, Relice, and Traditions of the List War for American Independence. By Baycon J. Losanse, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 88 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Losanse & Berfit, cheety from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in the Volume, 1931 pages, here see Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.00; Fait Ruan, $9.00; Buff Calf or Half Moroccos extra, $55.00.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James GREENWOON, the "Ampleon Chemat," Author of "The True History of a Little Estamatin," "Houthen Dav-bliger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. 4ro, Pa-

FANGUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bonner. With Portrait of George Peabody and $4 lilestrations. Meno, Cloth, $100.

SEGETS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Haward Golla Berryn, 12ma, Cloth, $100.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Navernant Sance. See, Clock, $1.65.

FIVE ACRES TOO MITCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Anatour Farming, with much Vali-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-lug Large or Small Places in the Rural Districts. By Bourn B. Rossewarz. With Characteristic Il-lustrations. Iron, Cloth, $1.54.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Blagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Francis A. Mazza, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Loftspetce College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Consposable Grammar of the Augio Saton Language," J. Bian, Cloth, étentia

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schoole and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. K. O. Baves, D.D. LLD., President of the Northwestern University. Phys., Cioth, $2 58.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Usan and the Bird of Paradice. A Natrative of Travel, with Studies of Max and Nature. By Angure Hussia, Walance, Author of "Travels on the America and His Negro," "Poin Trees of the America," &c. With You Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Stu, Cloth, 22 Co.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Game C. Scort. With 1W Hightralions. Crown Svo, Cloji, $3.50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture: Vine Discuss and its Cure: Wine-Making and Wines, S. d and White; Wine-Drinking as affecting Health and Murals. By Wineraw J. Flaco. 12200, Cloth, 23 50.

HARPER'S HAND BOOK FOR THAVELLERS IN EUROPE AND THE EAST. Being a Gaide through France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Aus-tria, Italy, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, Gercee, Switzer-land, Tyrod, Russia, Boomank, Sweden, Spain, and Great Britain and Ireland. With a Enlived Man-cerrected up to 1869. By W. Pransock Paturou, Bertred Edition: Eighth Fear. Large time, Lesth-er, Packer-Book Form, $2.00.

BARPER'S PHRASE BOOK: or, Band Book of Travel Talk for Travellors and Schools. Being a Golde to Generations in Buglish, French, German, and Bullan, on a New and Improved Method. Intended to accompany "Harper's Band Book for Travellars." By W. Pamaner Fermous. Assisted by Professors of Heidelberg University. With concise and expirely Rules for the Presunciation of the different Languages. Square 18ma, Flexible Cloth, $150.

The New Novels

PERSONAL ST

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Yea, "
"One of the Family," do., See, Proper, 50 cents.

META'S PAITH. By the Author of "St. Olave's," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

FALSE COLORS. By Assis Thomas. 800, Paper,

IUCTTY. By Haway Econstan. Sep. Paper, 35 cents.

MY DAUGHTER ELINGR. A Novel of American. Society. Svo, Paper, 21 to. STRETTON: By Besny Resistant, 500, Paper, 40cts. CORD AND CREESE. By the Anthor of "The Bodge Chik." Biostrated. 4vo, Paper, 18 ccats.

THE DODGE CLUB: or, Italy is 1870. By James De Marts, Author of "Cord and Creece," $7. With 100 Illustrations. See, Paper, Monote; Cloth, $1.22.

THACKBRAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Blustrations.

VANITY PAIR, 22 Illustrations, Sun Pager, 50 crs. THE VIRGINIANS. 160 Islamentions. Sto. Paper, 15 cents.
THE NEWCOMES, 168 Blustrations, 6vo, Paper

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILLIP. Portrait of Author and 64 like-trailors. See, Paper, 50 codes, HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWES. It illustrations. See, Paper, 10 cents.

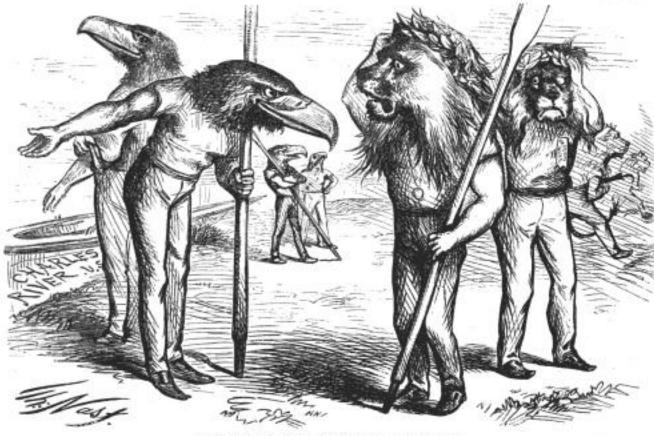

CHARLES READES NOVELS:

HARD CABIL. Illustrated. See, Paper, 25 cents. GINFPITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illustrated.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MENIX. Syo, Paper, SO COMMA. LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 6vo, Paper, 15 cents.

FOUL PLAY. See, Paper, 25 cents.
WHITE LIES. See, Paper, 25 cents.
137 To be followed by Charles Residue other Novels.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS: PHINKAS FINN, the Irish Member. Hinstrated by Millain. Sen, Paper, $1 tb. Cloth, $1 Tb. HR KNEW HR WAS MIGHT. Complete. With 44 Hinstrations by Marcus Stone. See, Paper, $1 to.; Cloth, $1 50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 crats.

"ONE GOOD ROW DESERVES ANOTHER."

HARVARD. "Can we have the Pleasure?" etc.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fail to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information sent on application to HAINES BROTHERS.

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Savra & Nixos, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Hezrsrear, Milwanker, Wis.; Louis Terre, Leuisville, Ky.; J. A. McCeure, Nashville, Tern.; Kuweker, Baos., St. Louis, Mo.; J. R. Jacasson, Sandusky, Ohio; J. E. Goren, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Berns, Pittsburg, Pa.: Baatwann & Sows, Cleveland, Ohio; Ceurer & Sows, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hammer, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Hawrennever, Rhines, N. Y.; White, Sarra, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Matterns Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Mencu, Cincinnall, Ohio; C. M. Looms, New Haven, Conn.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water terms all diseases of the Kidneys, Shin, and Blood more pecupity than any other known remedy. EF Call for Textusonaux or Cures. Sold by Druggists.

Caution.—All genuine bears our trade-mark, and the buttles and corks are branded "Nature's Remedy."

Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Treas. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, VI.
Or, S. H. Scripture, 193 Broadway, New York,
General Agent.

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM Watches into the hands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or finater cettlement, at the lowest New York wholesale prices. The Expense Companies take them from ne and deliver them to the existence in any part of the Union, however remote. The package can be opened, and the watch examined, and not till then is the purchaser required to me for it, and if we examined in it is not strictly. to pay for it; and if on examination it is not setisfactory, there is no obligation to receive it. Our descrip-tive and illustrated Price-List gives full infurnation them by express. Every one should have a copy. We send it postpaid on application: no return stamps required. When you write, please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths. No. 619 Broadway, New York.

JUST OUT:

CHERRY PECTORAL TROCHES, for Colds, Coughs, Sore Throats, and Broachitis. None better, mere as good, none to pleasant, more care so quick. For sale by JOHN F. HENRY, No. 8 College Place, N. Y.

Musical Boxes

The largest and eldest depot in America. Fresh Novelties by nearly every Steamer. Fine Supply of Fater Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches. Fl. J. PAILLARD & CO., 640 BROADWAY, N.Y.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-antages of the French patents, with wonderful SIMPLICITY, DURABILITY

and CHEAPNESS.

Lovers of GOOD COFFEE are unanimous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO., SOLE MANUFACTURERS,

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

est extraordinary cures. SOLD EVERY WHERE.

UTHAM'S FRECKIE, TAR, AND PINPLE BARRERS.—
A few applications of this remedy will remove Fraction, Tars, Surenzas, Bloomers, Pineries, &c., from the face, and render the complexion Clean and Fars. Infelled superior to powders and washes that ultimately zers the complexion you valuely seek to beautiff. Price to ceems.

Sold at Jour F. Herry's U. S. Medicine Warchouse, No. 8 Colling Plane, New York.

Pollar & Sos, Manuf'rs of Gene-ing Mecratheau pools. Stores: 549 Broadway, under 8t. Nichoba Hotel, & Ti John St., middle of block. Send for new wholevale or retail circular to Letter-Box 2896. Repairing and Boiling also done.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING.

MANUFACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Send for Price-List.) Baltimore, Md.

BE BEAUTIFUL - If you desire beauty you should use HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM.

It gives a soft, refined, satin-like texture to the complexion, removes Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Tan, &c., and adds a tinge of pearly bloom to the plainest features. It brings the bloom of youth to the fading cheek, and changes the rustic country girl into a fashionable city belle.

In the use of the MAGNOLIA BALM lies the true secret of beauty. No lady need complain of her complexion who will invest 75 cents in this delightful article.

Lyon's Karmainon is the best Hair Dressing in use.

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO.

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Saromo will make Tine resemble Silver, Use only Saromo to dean White Paint. From Marble Saromo removes all Stains. For polishing Knives Saromo is unsurpassed. For cleaning Brass Stair-Rods Saromo has no equal. If you would have clean windows, use Saromo ample cake sent by mail on receipt of 20 cents. Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. Established 1809 per month, every whore, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stitch, hem felt, tack, quilt, eoed, bind, braid, and embender in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1000 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the "Elastic Lock Stitch." Every second stitch can be cut, and still the cloth can not be pulled apart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $75 to $500 per month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Perrencean, Pa., Boeros, Mass., or $n. Loves, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties paining off worthless cast-from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only gentice maining off worthless cast-from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only gentice and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for family use.

ANTED — AGENTS—875 to $200

FOUNTAIN PENS. One dip writes 4 pages.

§ 50 a gross, postpaid. — Penknife and Penkli combined. — Ernser and Fen-Holder combined, and 18 Fountain Pens, 50 cents, postpaid. Sell at sight. Access Wanter. — CITY NOVELTY CO... 401 Library St., Philadelphia, Ps.

HINKLEY KNITTING MACHINE. Agents wanted. Knits every thing. Send to of-fice, 176 Broadway, for Circulars.

10.20 BONDS.

A Limited Number

BONDS

BUCHANAN COUNTY,

STATE OF MISSOURI.

Issued by a Special Vote of the People, at an election held for this purpose, under an act of the Legislature of the State of Missouri.

TWENTY YEARS TO RUN.

With the option of paying them after ten years, bearing TEN PER CENT. (10 per Cent.) Interest, the legal rate in Missouri, payable on the 1st of July and January, at the BANK OF AMERICA, New York,

FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

Principal Payable in New York.

The entire debt of Buchanan County, including the Bonds now offered for sale, is only $500,000, and is secured by a lien on the County property and individual property, both real estate and personal, of the citizens residing in the County, amounting by the taxable returns to $13,000,000, pledged to pay the Bonds now offered for sale; while the taxable wealth of the City of St. Joseph, which is the capital of Buchanan County, amounts to $12,000,000, making the combined wealth of the County and Capital City $25,000,000.

PRICE, 96 AND ACCRUED INTEREST.

FOR SALE BY

TANNER & CO.,

BANKERS.

49 WALL STREET, New York.

WE TAKE PLEASURE IN RECOMMENDING THESE BONDS AS A PERFECTLY SAFE AND RELIABLE INVESTMENT, POSSESSING A SE-CURITY OF THE HIGHEST ORDER, AND WILL FURNISH SATISFACTORY INFORMATION RE-LATING THERETO.

TANNER & CO.

STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

With Detachable Shoulder-Rest.
Most pepular arm made for Sporting and Target-Shoeting. Sarrie & Wesseov's Ervouvens, in any quantity, for each, at hundred price.
Assor's Desarraces, and other Pistole.
J. W. STORRS & CO., MTr's Agents, 252 Broadway, New York. WILLIAMS

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LANTERES and ETREEOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 924 Chestrut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

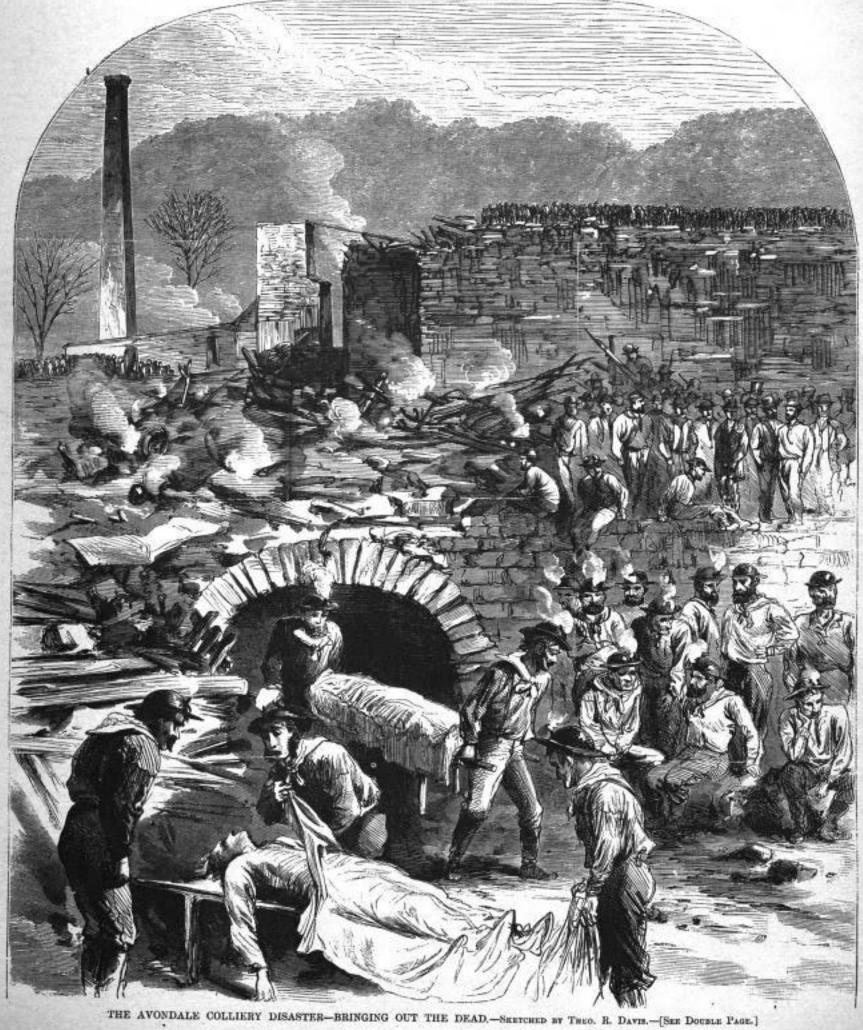

HARPERS WEEKLY. OURWAL OF CIVILIZATION:

Vol. XIII.—No. 665.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1869.

Entured according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1960, by Hurper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

Oven his war worn face has come.
The still, white sign that he knew so well,
Hushing afar the rolling dram,
Stilling the noise of shot and shell,
The hely sign that wiped the stain
Of blood from the faces of the slain.

A strengous soul, deep-built within,
The years were few from the coal pit's flame
To beleaguered Richmond's dying din
And the glory that settled on his name;
But not of years was his strength of deed;
The man was based on a full-grown creed.

Out from the dusk of common fate.
He stepped when the cry was loud for men;
Measure him, dead, by his chair of state;
Is his stature greater now than then?
Did he get or give by his country's trust?
Behold what shrunken form of dust!

He stood where but few had strength to stand In the wild face front of a giant time, With the great commander, hand in hand, Doing humanity's work sublime; Nor even in triumph put it by, But under it hid him down to die.

No more for him is the burried day,
Blind with threads of the tangled light;
His, now, the eternal lines that lay
Drawn out when the battle closed at night;
Their orders are deep in brow and breast,
And the weary Chief of Staff may rest.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1869.

THE FIFTEENTH AMENDMENT.

A S we suggested last week, the resolution of both wings of the Democratic party at the North to resist the Fifteenth Amendment gives a peculiar and unexpected importance to the political situation. That amendment provides that no State shall disfranchise a citizen by reason of color, and it is opposed upon two grounds: first, that the subject should not be regulated by the National Government; and, second, that colored citizens ought not to be allowed to vote upon equal terms with others.

The tone adopted in pressing the first objection, as if there were some outrage in submitting a proper question to the country in the constitutional manner, is merely ridiculous. Even if it were undesirable that the conditions of suffrage should be determined by the National Government, it is certainly not improper that the people should be asked to decide the question in the manner that they have themselves provided. Consequently the assertion of the Ohio Democratic platform that "the attempt to regulate suffrage in Ohio by means of the so-called Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment is subscrive of the principles of the Federal Constitution" is transparent folly. The Fed-eral Constitution is the body of fundamental laws, to which additions are made as experience and reflection suggest. The principle of the Constitution, so to speak, is that it shall be su-preme over all the States in every particular that shall seem expedient for the general welfare. Thus, the Thirteenth Amendment forbids any State to tolerate Slavery; the Fourteenth secures the equal civil rights of every citizen of the United States in all the States; and the Fifteenth proposes to prohibit unreasonable disfranchisement,

Is it desirable, then, that the States should he allowed to prescribe a qualification for the suffrage founded upon color? Unquestionably not, because nothing is gained by it but the gratification of a prejudice. Color does not determine intelligence or political espacity. The color of the skin is a disqualification as unreasonable as that of the hair or eyes. Moreover, it is a disability which, by perpetuating a dis tinction of caste among the citizens, forever renews the freshness of the feelings from which the war arose. The Pennsylvania Democratic platform declares that the party in that State is opposed to conferring upon the negro the right to vote." It gives no reason, and how could it? How could a party which courts ignorance, and which does not consider habitual drunkenness to be a valid bar to the suffrage, of fer any plausible reason for excluding bonest, intelligent, soler colored men from the polls? It is opposed to the voting of the colored citizens because is knows that the votes of a class which the Democratic party has done its best to degrade will naturally be cast against it. If the colored vote of Pennsylvania and Ohio were sure for that party, does any observer suppose the party would object to the voting of negroes? If the same vote were not sure to be thrown ngainst the party in New York, is it supposable that the Democrats would insist upon the present inequality of the suffrage in this State? The Democratic party endeavors by every kind of frand, as at the last election in New York, to secure the voting of the most ignorant foreigners, who have, and can have, no possible knowledge of the merits or tendency of the issues; is it conceivable that such a party opposes the equal voting of intelligent native citizens because they are colored?

Until this question is settled there can be no escape from the old issues; and the question may be postpound, but it can be settled in one way only. No man in his senses can imagine that this State, or this country, will finally rest in a policy of discrimination among citizens so baseless and infamous as this. A qualification of residence, of education, of familiarity with the language, is reasonable and intelligible, but one of color is contemptible and exasperating. Apparently the Democratic Convention in this State will declare against the Fifteenth Amendment, and against the provision of the new State Constitution that equalizes the suffrage, It will then be for the orderly and intelligent citizens to determine how the public welfare is to be promoted by the success of a party pledged to perpetuate upon such grounds the difference that has so long and so cruelly vexed us,

Or are there other considerations in favor of its success that make this objection insignifi-Ohio will, undoubtedly, reject Mr. PEN-DLETON; but shall New York virtually declare in favor of him and of his repudiation? If there is general discontent with the character of the Legislature, let the voter reflect whether it is likely to be improved by being composed entirely or in a majority of such members as the city of New York now sends. The Republican party is the friend of the Fifteenth Amendment, of the national faith, of equal suffrage in this State, of a strict registry, and of the atmost protection of the ballot-box against frued of every kind. It is certainly not less honest and economical than its adversary. When it is added that it is in favor of settling the long disturbing difficulty of our politics in the most just, reasonable, American, and inevitable manner, can any man who has hitherto sustained it doubt as to his duty?

THE VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE.

Tue decision of the Attorney-General in the Virginia case ingeniously compromises the difficulty. The dilemms, however, should not have arisen; and we confess it seems to us that it would have been better avoided by leaving Congress to interpret its own law. The registered voters of Virginia have, indeed, voted in favor of a Constitution which, when accept-ed by Congress, becomes the law of the State. But, until accepted, it is not the law of the State, which is still a Military District, subject to the laws passed for its regulation, and among these laws is that which requires the oath of all officers, including the members of the Legis-The Attorney-General says that it is impossible to suppose that Congress could in-tend that a Legislature under the Constitution of a State should be regulated by the military commander. But is this Legislature, before the Constitution has become valid, properly defixed by the Attorney-General as "a Legislature under the Constitution of a State?" it is certainly not a provisional Legislature, as the Attorney-General afterward asserts. And if it be provisional, all its acts must be equally so, including the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment. But is a provisional ratification

It is plain that the Legislature is not a Legislature of full functions until its action is approved by Congress; and is it not therefore equally plain that Congress, notwithstending the Attorney-General's remarks, does "undertake to furnish the State with a suitable Legislature to start with ?" If this Legislature does not do what Congress wishes, it will be held to be musuitable. If, on the other hand, Congress is satisfied with it, it will, for that reason, and for no other, be considered suitable and valid. But in considering the action of the Legislature, Congress will necessarily investigate its origin and authority. The Reconstruction laws do not compel Congress to approve the assent to conditions which is made by a body that is not qualified to make the assent; and although General Canny will not exact the oath, under the circumstances, and the Legislature will therefore probably meet and ratify the amendment, yet Congress will have to satisfy itself of the justice of the Attorney-General's decision before it accepts the Legislative action.

Of course we have no desire to prolong the controversy, still less to favor a course which at the manifest will of the rea voters of the State. In the dilemma which the law of Congress has itself occasioned, we would have postponed the proclamation of the commanding General, which would have en-abled Congress to deal with the subject before the Legislature assembled. It will be much more difficult to manage the matter when the Legislature has organized and acted, without any clear conception of the limits of its authority. If it chooses to do no more than the Attorney-General suggests-namely, ratify the amendment, and then wait and see if Congress will clothe it with full Legislative functions by accepting the Constitution and approving its action-the difficulty will be passed. Or if Congress is willing to necept the action of those who by existing laws are incompetent to act, thereby suspending the laws in their favor, there will also be no trouble. But was it not better to avoid both contingencies and all the questions that may consequently arise?

WALL STREET.

Tun cable telegraph has produced effects nowhere greater than in the financial centre of the Union. It brings us into immediate contact with London, Paris, and Frankfort, with this advantage, that the business-day is over in each of the great European markets before it commences in the United States, and can be studied and weighed before entering upon the conflicts of the trade in which we are respectively engaged. The foreign and domestic markets for cotton, food, manufactures, public debt, etc., and whether money is plenty or otherwise at any controlling point, constitute the essential subjects of inquiry at the outset of the business-day, and fortunes are lost or won as information is accurate or false in these matters.

The morning press furnishes information of the markets of the previous day, but private telegrams sent by leading houses to their correspondents here give the latest advices, and constitute the basis of immense transactions. Only those who deal largely can afford the expense of frequent telegrams, and in a time of excitement the lines are incessantly used.

The great bankers in England and on the Continent have access to all the important sources of information in their respective localities; and if the press telegrams are erroneous with respect to the health of NAPOLEON, or some other topic of interest at the time, furnish their agency or branch here with exact knowledge, upon which it acts with effect while the public at large remain in the dark.

Perhaps in no matter has the cable been used more effectively than in transactions relating to United States bonds. The Germans were the first to invest in them largely, which they did with great pecuniary advantage to themselves, while at the same time they have aided to establish over Europe the credit of the Union, which alone was wanted after the successes of the war to elevate us to the condition of a firstrate power. In the course of these transactions, on the part of the great bankers on the other side, news would reach us of a glut; apprehensions would exist here of a return of bonds; purchases of gold on speculation would follow in this market, to end in disappointment and loss on finding that the absorption of our securities still continued, and that those who held the latest advices had become free sellers of gold. The turn in the market would be immediate and overwhelming.

We have from time to time shown how the cable was used to accomplish not only a sale of the bonds, but of their proceeds in the shape of "cable transfers," so as to produce instantaneous results, and drive out of the market those who were speculating for an advance in the gold permium. The anticipated shipment of gold on which the speculation for a rise was based became unnecessary from the sale of cable exchange; which sale, effected here on the afterneon of one day, wellded here on the afterneon of one day, wellded here on the afterneon of the morning of the next, to the dismay of those who supposed the foreign purchasers oversupplied with our securities.

Perhaps never again in the history of the country will such grand opportunities for amassing fortunes be found as the negotiation abroad of our securities has furnished. We hope that at an early period our credit will be such as to enable us to substitute a four per cent, bond in the place of those earning six and five per The ability to do this will depend on the skill with which the national finances are managed. If, on the one hand, the Repudiator is kept down by the pressure of public opinion, and a sufficient amount of tax is regularly collected and applied to pay the interest as it accroes, we shall in time reach that position of safety which arises from having to pay only a low rate of interest. It is our highest policy to look to this with never-failing engerness, or the country may be tempted by heavy burdens to lose sight of the great truth that there is a mysterious, but undoubted and powerful connection between our prosperity as a people and our punctuality in meeting every obligation. We shall not reach the solid land until the debt is fixed at a low rate of interest, as the result of confidence in the integrity and strength of the country.

The change which has o by being introduced into hourly intercourse with the principal European markets is equally great in domestic business. In the latter there is a constant tendency toward the accumulation of business on the part of those who wield large capitals, as they are enabled to command success in a variety of ways. If they speculate for a fall in prices, they will lock up capital at a moment when money is already scarce from the application of large amounts in moving cotton or breadstuffs; and as the small houses know nothing of the combination or the moment of its termination, they must proceed tamely, and never without risk of being eaught by such sudden changes of policy. These speculations ordinarily embrace in the combination outsiders who are admitted on the strength of their sunposed wealth, on the agreement that they shall not be required to make a deposit as security for the result; and such is the temptation to do a large business that the plan of buying stocks without any margin is invited by the smaller houses, who, in truth, take the risk of the speculations of their principal. The rerklessness of a corner—which can not be engaged in without an abandonment of all claim to high commercial or moral position—is communicated to too many for public advantage. The policy of issuing convertible bonds and suddenly converting them into stock; of watering stocks without the consent of stockholders, and sometimes without the knowledge of Directors; and the appendage of a Court, armed with lockbreakers and Receivers, belong to the new state of things.

Great uncertainty is communicated to business in the street by these events; for it is scarcely possible to tell what portion of the price of particular stocks is due to the power of outside capitalists, and when they will unload their watered stock upon the unwary. It is painful to find that at Chicago and other Western cities the dealings in grain are subjected to the uncertainties and the vicissitudes of Wall Street gambling.

A large amount of the business of Wall Street is conducted upon proper business principles by bankers of high standing, who earn their profits by baying bills of exchange representing cotton or grain purchased for expert, and who sell their own bills, drawn on bankers in Europe, to the merchants engaged in importing foreign goods. The profits of the transactions of this character are large, as the banker takes the risk of the foreign market for the cotton or grain on which his purchase of exchange is founded. The merchant can not buy these bills founded on the produce which the country exports, because the business requires the close attention and particular knowledge which bankers only from long experience reach.

Many young men start in the street determined to avoid speculation and confine themselves to legitimate business, and some, greatly to their profit and honor, continue on in this course, securing respect and confidence; but the general tone is adverse to this, and leads the majority away from the true path.

THE COAL-MINE TRAGEDY.

THE fearful catastrophe at the Avondale coalmine should stimulate the inquiry whether there is not great carelessness in the general management of the mines. It seems incredible that there was no ventilating shaft into the pit where the miners were at work, and that their sole hope of safety lay in a shaft whose safety was constantly and peculiarly threatened. It will be easy hereafter to avoid this especial peril, but why was it not perceived before, and what other dangers as appalling still menace the miners? It is a sad life, away from the fresh air and the sunlight and the green earth. There are no gloomier tales than those which tell the story of the miners; and legislation has been chliged to interfere to save little children from the thoughtlessness of employers at the mines.

Government is, first of all, founded upon experience and good sense. The theory of the laieser-aller, of letting "things look out for themselves," may be abused in practice, like every other. When women and children were worked sixteen hours a day in English fectories, it seemed almost impossible to pass a "short time" bill. Hundreds of thousands of starving laborers were ready to starve more in order to release wives and children from the horrible bondage; and at length the bill passed. It was not theoretically correct, but it was actually most humane. No individual steekholder in a coal company would be unjust to the miners; but corporations have no sonls, and managers and superintendents must spend little and make much, or they are in danger of losing their places.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that this terrible tragedy will lead to the most searching and thorough investigation of the general management of the Pennsylvania coal-mines; and that every security which experience may suggest may be made obligatory upon the companies. There is a vast mining population in that State, and its character must necessarily affect that of the Commonwealth. It is the interest of the State that the miners do not feel themselves more and more excluded from general sympathy, and this can be done by wise evidence of the care of their fellow-citizeus.

MR. FESSENDEN.

By the death of Mr. Freshners the country loses one of its most patriotic and able statesmen, and his party a man who commanded the confidence and respect of the Opposition. His name is not especially identified with any single measure, nor with any positionly memorable speech, but it will be always conspicuous among the leading advocates of the wise and humana policy of the Republican party.

During the anti-slavery debates that preceded the war Mr. PESSENDEN'S intellectual acuteness and stern logic, and the sharpness of his sarcasm, were always most efficient in exposing and ridiculing the sophistry and malice of the slavery leaders. Through the struggle as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, and for ! some time as Secretary of the Treasury, his sagacity was of the utmost service. And after the war ended, his Report to Congress as Chairman of the Committee upon Reconstruction, in which the principles of the policy afterward adopted were set forth, is one of the most admirable political documents of the time,

With the Republican Senators TRUMBULL and Guinus, Mr. Frankxous voted against the conviction of President Jourson when he was impenched. The guestion had been made one of party, and the abuse of these Senators by a large part of the Republican press, and espeby the New York Tribuse, was unsurpri ed for its unscrupulous vehimence. It is hardly accurate to say, as that paper states since Mr. Fraskyngn's death, that he was "every where condemned" for his vote. There were many of the most radical Republicans who differed with him, but who no more condemned him than they did Mr. SUNNER; and it was the influence of those men which prevented the censure of Mr. FESSENDEN and the Senators who voted with him by the Convention that nominated General GRANT. Of the fidelity of all these gentlemen to the great purpose of the Republican party there has never more reasonable doubt than of their ability and spotless integrity.

Mr. FESSENDEN'S feeble health for many years, joined to a peculiarly sensitive temperament, made him especially impatient of mere display, and sometimes too irritable in the vidainful independence, a scornful hopesty, which indicates the character most desirable in a publie man amidst the tendencies of our politics. In many ways be recalls the men of an earlier day: grave, simple, devoted, with a profound conscionsness that this is a government of laws, not of persons. Of the sycophancy of the politician he had no trace whatever. His character and his career were full of the dignity of self-respect; and the loss of such a living example of the rarer civic virtues is not the least cause of regret at his death. It will be very difficult to fill adequately the place of such a man, who in the one act of his political career for which he was most severely censured by a large number of his party friends performed not the least valuable moral service of a most honorable and useful life.

GENERAL RAWLINS.

Tun general assent of the country to the words of Attorney-General HOAR's touching message, in speaking of General RAWLINS-" a man so upright, able, and faithful"—shows how deep is the public sense of his loss. It shows also the sagacity of the President's course in selecting for so important a position a man with whose character and capacity he was thoroughly satisfied, although his name might not be familiar to the public. From the beginning of the war intimately associated with General GRANT, General RAWLINS constantly proved his shility; and the testimony of all who knew best, since his accession to the War Department, proves the vigor and sagacity with which, even in his extreme ill health, it was conducted by the Secretary. Had he been a conspicuous politician, is it likely that he would have been a better officer, or that the country would more truly mourn his death &

In selecting his successor we hope the President will look among those whom he knows rather than those whom the politicians expect or present. We understand the necessity of party sympathy and support, and we also insist that it is the duty of every man to be a politician, so far as that word implies a knowledge of the principles involved in the questions upon which he votes. But the word politician has come to mean distinctively the bucksters in politics, the doers of dirty work claiming to be the party, and in that sense we use it. General RAWLINS could not have been the candidate of the politicians; but the party that supported General GRANT, as well as the country at large, were satisfied with his appointment. They will be equally pleased with a successor whom upon his appointment they may not know, if his adcase of General RAWLINS, that the President has selected a man "upright, able, and faith-

THE THORNS OF TRAVEL.

"A SUBSCRIBER" writes to the Timer the story of his experience upon a railroad. He went to the Eric station at the foot of Twentythird Street, and asked for a ticket to Niagara Falls, the advertised price of which was seven dollars. He was asked by "the bland and gentlemanly agent" if he intended to return by the same road. He said no. Thereupon he was politely informed that the fare would be eight dollars and seventy-five cents. He was unwilling to turn away, and paid the sum demanded, with the impression that he was swindled. When near Buffalo the conductor informed him that he must wait at that place for three hours, and gave him sixty-five cents to pay his fare to Nisgara Falls. He im-his fellow-citizens of the snare into which he had fallen.

And he did well. He did what every traveler ought to do under the circumstances, and what most travelers are too lazy or thoughcless to do. It is only of the great catastrophes that the public hears, not of the myriad small vexas that sting the traveler. The constant failure to make time, and the consequent "mak-ing up"—the minor miseries at the Mugby Junetions—the runnings off the track, and the slight collisions without serious results—the toleration of drunken passengers, and all the annoyances which the traveler habitually suffers, seem to him not worth talking about, and he half fears to be called an old Betty. But the public pays quite enough for its railway accommodation to have it of the best; and it will certainly not be of the best without the incessant spur of expo-

The posted placard announces, "To Niagara Falls via Eric Railroad for $7." It seems that the condition is, that you will take a return ticket by the same road; but the coudition is not mentioned. This is mere petty swindling, and of a kind that we have known before. Perhaps the Company will explain it. If not, we shall all have cause for still greater gratitude to Governor HOFFMAN for continuing the present direction of the road beyond the term for which it was elected.

NOTES.

Tax Democratic Bourbons who are victorious every where else must attend to Wisconsin, where the Democratic Convention lately resolved that is "rejoices in the extinction of slavery; in the prompt and general acquiescence of the Southera people in the results of the war; in every well-directed effort for the enlightenment and elevation of oppressed humanity at home and abroad; and in every measure compatible with good government and public order to broaden the basis of suffrage and extend the blessings of free institutions to all classes of the people It then proceeds to deplore that the policy of the Republican party defeats all these desirable ends; but that is of course. Here is a Demoeratic Convention that turns ONESTRUS out of doors, and finds no revelation in heels and shinbones of the right of a man with a white skin to "wallop" a man with a black. But, as if to show that this is merely a cutaneous virtue, the same Convention resolved that the national bonds ought to be taxed. The Wisconsin Democracy, after all, is a "humanity" that needs "well-directed efforts for its enlightenment.

JUDGE DEST has been nominated for Governor in Mississippi by those who are called the Con-servhive Republicans, and who are a party com-posed of some fifty Democrats to one Republican. Meanwhile, the Republican party is well organized, its platform is published, and its nomina-tions made. The platform is wise, generous, and progressive, including amnesty and educa-tion; nor is there the least reasonable ground alleged for the Dent which & few of its friends are trying to make, with the aid of its enemies, in the party. The "Conservative" movement in Mississippi is as suspicious as all other movements which take that line name. It is really the attempt of those who are least dis-posed to acquiesce in the settlement of reconcraction to obtain power under false pretenses And as Judge Dayr, whatever his excellent qualities, is a most undoubted "object-bagger" —a fact so repulsive to the Democratic press—we shall expect to have it duly set forth with gibes and grimaces in the "Conservative" journals.

CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE has written a cheerful letter to Mr. James A. Barggs, in which he says, "I want nothing whatever of a political character, and desire that my name may be disassociated in men's minds with all political action." When he was younger he says that he thought he might do a great deal of good if the people should trust him with great powers; but now that he is older, he is not at all sure that he could do better than those who have been trusted with them. There is no reason to doubt that the Chief Justice says precisely what he feels; but he is too old a poli-tician to suppose that he will be understood as meaning finally to withdraw from political life-to the point, let us say, of refusing to allow his name to be used, with a certainty of success, for a Presidential nomination by the surely winning party. In his "Reminiscences of Men and t published, and full of intere political correspondence and history, James A. Hamperon quotes an anecdote from the commonplace-book of Mr. Jose Jourston, as old merchant of New York, General Washington one day expressed a low opinion of Mr. JEFFERsos, saying that when he resigned the office of Secretary of State Mr. JEFFERSON said that he was tired of public affairs, and meant to live in private, even forbidding newspapers to be brought to his house. Speaking of this with General Ham-ILTON, WASHINGTON said that he hoped Mr. JEF-PERSON would be happy in his retirement. introx replied that for his part he should not be surprised to see the ex-Secretary a candidate for the Presidency; and when Mr. JEFFERSON aft-erward became a candidate, even General Washregree thought that his renunciation of public life was not sincere. Such is the fate of public

The great public services of Mr. VANDERRILT in buying and controlling the Harlem and Hud-son River railroads, and in going round the world in his own steam yacht, have been recog-nized by Captain Albert Dr. Gnoor and some other friends, who have caused the erection of a huge bronze statue, surrounded with emblematic designs of the methods by which Mr. VANDER-HILT has necumulated an immense fortune.

ROCKWOOD'S very elaborate display of pictures at the Fair of the American Institute stitutes one of the leading attractions of the American Institute Exhibition. Among the pictures is a large oil-painting of the late James Harrer, copied from the photograph taken a few hours before the lamentable accident which caused his death,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE AVONDALE DISASTER.

THE AVONDALE DISASTER.

We publish this week, on our first page, and on pages 612, 458, and 617, a large number of illustrations of the recent calimity at Avondale, Perseyvissia, accompanied with a detailed secretic. The subjected of its a diagram of the collery, showing the position of the shaft and the uncertor galleries. Among the papers in the possession of the company there is to be found no plan of this mine, which was companitively a new one. But our artist, Mr. Theodere E. Davis, who risited the scene of the disaster, and from whose selectedes our illustrations have been perpared, has succeeded in producing an accurate diagram from his own personal observations, aided by the effects of J. Tisdale, the superintendent of a neighboring colliery. The scene presented during the exhamation of the unfordunate victims can never be forgotten by any one who witnessed E. Upon the side-bill, as in a vast amphitheaire, stood the waiting multitude with anxious faces. The scene immediately about the shaft was gloomy in the extreme. The rains of the breaker; the descent of the brace, stalwart miner, detail after detail; their reappearance at the top of the shaft with their sed bardon from below; their crident exhaustion from the deadly gases which they had encountered; the recognition of the dead by friends, followed by the amorancement, one by one, of their names—all these features made up a picture which can scarcely be readered by pen or pencil.

But there was another scene that would baffe the kelli of Boet to reproduce—a scene of which no record is left, for there is no one to tell the tale. This was down in the interior of the mine after the bracking out of the fire, when all the fresh air in the mine was being drawn lower the fail gases were being driven hack into the interior. Trient, hitherito separated, how had not. Their forensia, litegies, was there, and to the front. Who can describe the tumolis of that gathering, or the pasic which followed when it was known that there was no hope of escape or dresses? At and died.

Most of the victives—all but eight or nine—were Welsh miners. They had recomed work only a few days bedies, after a suspension of three months. For for that suspension a connection would have been made with the old terms, and through the outlet thus given the miners would have been secure against any calamity like that which has now proved fatal.

NEWS ITEMS.

Mr. James J. Brooks, a special United States Revenue officer on duty at Philiadelphia, was shot by a party of ruffans September 6.

The Vermout election took place September 7. The Republican majority was $0.00.

The President has appointed General Sherman to act as Secretary of War until the vienney caused by the death of General Rawline shall be filled.

The Aliantown fron-Works, at Allentown, Pennsylvania, was destroyed by fire September 7, and a theorem works and workness thrown out of unployment. The box is estimated at $500,000.

There have been sixteen cases of suicide in Lowell, Massachusetts, within eight months, mostly of young stills.

The new Smale of Kentucky will consist of two Republicans, two Independents, and thirty-four Democrats. The Bouse of Representative will consist of right Republicans and ninety-two Democrats. The Fifteenth Amendment will n-1 stand much of a chance in a body thus composed.

The Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio,

The Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, George H. Pendicton, and a speech at Cincinnation Friday last, in which he opposed the adoption of the Fritzenth Amendment, because he regarded it as a material and radical change in the preced system of reservances, and as destroying the constitutional relations of States to the Federal Union.

The Warreneburg coal-mine at Carbon Bill, Missouri, caught fire in the main shaft on September 4, while fifteen near were in the retire. Seven of the measuremeded in getting on the riging to the ropes of an seconding car, although they were badly burned; but the remainder were forced to remain in the mine until the fire was callinguished, when they were reserved in a more of less injured condition, the foreman, Mr. Halver, probably fatally.

On September 9 General Carby toward his proclamation declaring the result of the interdiction in Virginia. Gilbert C. Walker will be installed as Provisional Governor on September 13, and John V. Lernis Provisional Heatmann-Governor on teclober 5. The Legislature will be called together October 5. The Legislature will be called together October 5. The Legislature will be called together October 5. The Legislature of the Emparated Convention of Minnesota met at St. Peat 18 September 9, and nominated Judge Austin, of 8t. Petars, for Governor.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Tax French Senate has closed its sessions, after adopting the Senatus Consultant. The amendment giving that body the power to elect its own President and which had been preciously rejected, was finally passed at the Emperor's own recommendation.

There is a remor, reaching to by a recent cable telegram, that the Emperor Napoleon may abdicate in favor of the Prince Imperial.

A fearful harricane has swept over the north of France.

favor of the Prince Insperial.

A fearful intricase has swept over the north of Prince.

Ministerial responsibility is to be proposed in a measure to be infraduced by the Liberal Party at the next session of the Princips Dict.

There are 17,000 men, women, and children starring in two English countles. They have been reduced to want by a strike among the mit-makers.

The most carbonate preparations are being made for the Geomenical Council. Twenty-three shorthand written are engaged to make arecond of the proceedings at the Cunnit. They have been exherted from different parts, as that some of these may be acquainted with every variation in the promotestion of the Latin tougue. The Prope's data has been played its St. Peter's, and sears have been scranged for Lish histops. "The seats are to be covered with surge, says the correspondent of the Marsing Part (Landon). "They are considered just be milion parton, so that obser profaces will be somewhat expressed in them. Each stall has a writing-desk in front, with a spiling on underneath."

Each stablibes a writing-desk in front, with a spittoon underneath."

The Reights Government has declined to join Bavaria in carrying out Prince Holsenduc's policy respecting the forthcoming Geometic Council. The Government has also determined to send no official delegate to the Council.

Republican organizations in Portugal are said to be increasing in suiciters and influence.

Lady Palmerston, wholes of the late Lord Palmerston, died September II.

Arrangements have been made to reprat the Boston Punce Jubilee at the Crystal Palmer at Sydonham, England.

The London Merston Part 2278; "His Hollows the Pares dublice at the Crystal Palace at Sydenham, Espland.

The London Mercine Past says: "His Hollness the Pope is about to make great effects to convert the negues of America. Two bundred of them are now studying for the privathosal."

Letters received, from Cuba at Washington see September 8, by way of Key West, purport to give full recounts of the bettle at Las Tanas, which is regarded as the most important that has yet taken place. The fight lasted due home. The Spanish forces were ander General Valumerita, and numbered over 4000 effective troops. The interprete were about 500 counts of the bestle at Las Tanas, which is regarded as the most important that has yet taken place. The first feet over 1000 effective troops. The interprete were about 500 most over fifteen of the bestle and wounded over 601. Two bundred of their dead and wounded were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were about 50 cm 100 most over 601. Two bundred of their dead and wounded were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approach over 601. Two bundred of their dead and wounded were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approach over 601. Two bundred of their dead and wounded were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were approached were 10% on the first, $50 prisoners were $50 prisoners shal Scramo will be extended.

Ring Vistor Emanuel, of Italy, in reply to overtimes made to the Duke of Acots in connection with the Spanish throne, declares that his sun shall sever reign in a free country unless by the manimous call of its Constitutional Chambers.

PLAN OF THE INTERIOR OF THE STEUDEN MINE, AVONDALE, PENNSYLVANIA.

ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

The 14th of September, 1869, was the contaminal anniversary of the birthday of Baron Alexander von Humbolder, the great German traveler and savant. This anniversary was to his German countrymen a day of great interest, and in this country it was ecloheated by them with peculiar endoustann. We give on this page an excellent portrait of Baron Humbolder, who in many respects was the greatest man of his age. He died at Berlin, May 6, 1859, at the uge of ninety years.

For, if any, possessed so varieda rango dattainments; no one ever used vast knowledge more nobly than he. The sciences — astronomy, chemistry, geology, minoral-cy, natural history, physics, anatomy—were not more familiar to him than politics, law, and bolles-letters: in all he was a master. Whesher we consider the sum of his additions to the general stock of known facts, or the valuable generalizations and laws which he deduced from the discoveries of others, we shall find it difficult to more any philosopher of the present day who can be compared to him. Personal advantages enhanced the fame of his mental triumphs. After a youth spent in the successful yours spent in the succession pursuit of knowledge under surprising difficulties and in spite of formidable dangers, he enjoyed a screne and beautiful old age, and set an example of rare industry and unvaried equanimity at a time of life when seither the faculties nor the temper are expected to be bright. Unlike many benefactors of humanity, he was fortunate enough to reap his reward in his lifetime. He saw his fame surpass that of conquerors and monarchs, and received, for the last quarter of his life, a homoge more universal than any other man of his day. No functal honors or posthumous entogies can enhance the reneration with which the name of Humpotor has been worshiped for a quarter of a century throughout the civilized

He was born at Berlin on September 14, 1769; his father was a soldier of distinction and a man of wealth. Left fatherless at the age of ten, Farmanca Hartsmen Alexandra—this was his name—was earefully educated by judicious relatives, and spent a creditable currer at the universities of Berlin and Gaitingen. His taste for scientific pursuits led him to devote especial attention to getdogy and mineralogy; and, after a couple of years' study at Fribourg, he became, at the ago of twenty-three, a director of the works at Bairenth. He had perciously traveled extensively through Germany, Holland, and England, and had published a small work on the bastle rocks on the Baire. His labors at Bairenth increased his love for science; he made himself master of all that was then known of chomistry, galvanism, botsny, and geology; and the death of his rocker placing him in possession of independent property, he sold his estates, there up his situation, and determined to devote himself to seience.

himself to science.

Having decided to choose a new field for his sesercations, he was somethat embarrassed in his selection. War was raging throughout Entrope at the time. He proposed to explore scientifically Southern Italy, and actually set out with a friend; but the British cruisers compelled the relimpuishment of the enterprise. He planned a rour through North Africa, and got as far as historially have the war again introfered, and he abandoned the project. He had uset at Paristica late M. Boxyriaxe, then appointed naturalist to a scientific expedition to South America; but the war put a stop to this too. Almost in despair, he and Boxyriaxe project to desore them; edges to a series of scientific experimence and observations in Spain, and left France accordingly. While they were in Spain the Government of that courtry became acquainted with

DARK OR PAIR?-(SEE POEM, PAGE 614.)

On June 4, 1799, Humnoapt sailed from Coruma on his great voyage. Even to give a brief summary of the results of his five years' journey-

BARON ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT.

Humanor's extraordinary attainments, and unticipated his foulest hopes by soliciting him to undertake the exploration of Spanish America. The offer was joyfully accepted. ings would exhaust far more than the space allotted to this sketch. It must suffice to say that, having touched at Teneriffe, and obtained some valuable observations of and from the Peak, the illustrious traveler landed at Cumana, in the middle of July, and devoted eighteen months to a thorough ex-ideration of the wilderness which now constitutes the State of Venezuela, laying down the true course of the Orinoco and other rivers, and collecting the materials for an accurate account of the physical geography of that section of country. From thence he went to Cuba, traveled over the island, and made so thorough an examination of its resources and peculiarities that his work on Cuba, old as it is, is the most valuable we have. In March, 1801, he left Cuba for the main land, intending to make Panama his starting-point. Accident drove him further south. He made Bogota his point of depart-are, and from thence, in spite of the rainy season, crossed the continent to the Pacific, and carefully survoyed Peru, Chili, and the whole Pecific slope of the Andes. It was during this tour that he made his famous ascent of Chimborazo; he attained an elevarion of 19,300 feet-over three miles above the level of the sea; and amidst mists and cold so intense that the blood started from his eyes and ears, planted his instru-ments on a rock which the wind had bared of the eter-nal snows, and enriched science with an unprecedented series of observations. In Chili he was enabled to study the phenomena of earthquakes, as, in Venezuela, he had studied meteoric showers; his views on these important subjects have never been controverted. After spending twenty-two months in South America he repaired to Mexico, visited its great volcanoes, hald down the course of several of its rivers and mountain ranges, and obtained a thorough knowledge of the country. From Mexico he sailed, by way of Havana, to Philadelphia, and spent a couple of months in this country; from whence, at length, in July, 1804, he sailed for France, with the fruits of five years' indefatigable and intelligent travel—such a store of facts, drawings, and observations as no previous traveler had ever been able to collect.

Some idea of the value of his American harvest may be gathered from the fact that his published account of his travels in South America and Mexico comprises seventeen volumes folio, and eleven volumes quarto, and costs $2000 a cony. It took him twelve years to write.

copy. It took him twelve years to write.

After the completion of this gigantic labor he traveled through parts of Italy which he had not seen, and speat some time at Rome at the villa of his brother Williams. He was enabled to witness a great eruption of Vesuvius, and obtained some valuable observations. In 1818 he finally took up his residence at Berlin, where he was eagerly wedcomed by the king and court as well as by the source. The Prosisins were so proud of him, and so fearful of losing him—strong inducements were held out to him to settle in Prance—that he was made a concilor of state, and given to understand that no favor would be too great for him to ask. He had no political ambition, however, and was happy in being able to prosecute his stadies.

In 1820 the Emperor of Russia resolved to have a survey made of his Asiatic possessions, and offered Humana. In the direction of the work. The offer was accepted, and in company with two distinguished sozess, Humana. Traveled through Siberia and Tartary, spending nine months in collecting ample material for an account of the physical geography of Central Asia. His travels were published by the Russian Government in a magnificent form, and at his suggestion a series of observations was undertaken which has been of great use to science. Nicreotas would gladly have retained Humanard in Russia, but found him inflexibly attached to his

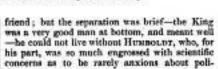

THE COLISEUM AT BOSTON AFTER THE TERRIBLE GALE OF SEPTEMBER 8 .- PROT. BY JORN A. WHIPPLE, BOSTON .- [SEE PAGE 614.]

On his return home Husmount found the revo-lections of 1830 in progress, and filled his first diplomatic part by going to Paris, on behalf of Prassis, to recognize Louis Patterra. He was much occupied then and for some years after-ward in political concerns. With the King of Prassis he lived on terms of almost brotherly in-

Prassia he irred on terms of almost brotherly in-timacy; and though his political opinions were much too liberal for his sovereign—he was, in fact, a thorough republican—he represented Pras-sia faithfully and honorably on several momentous occasions. The crisis of 1848 is said to have led to some decided expression of his liberal views, and for a time to have estranged him from his royal

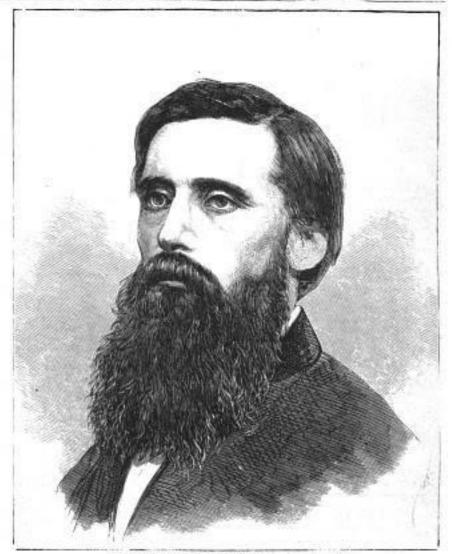

Shortly after his return from Russia he planned Shortly after his return from Itassia he planned his magazin epins, which, he intended, should contain the sum of his acquirements, and should demonstrate the harmonies of the universe. To this grent work he gave the appropriate title of "Cosmos"—the World. He began it is 1831; but for a long period the work was interrupted, and the first volume did not appear till many years afterward. The fifth was published shortly before his death. The work is so well known as to need no description here. It is enough to say of it that it contains the sum and reason of the knowledge of the most comprehensive mind of

The problem he sought to solve—the demonstration of the perfect unity of the divine purpose, and the harmony of all the divine laws—has not been solved, because all science is yet in infancy, and the sum of what we know is small in comparison with that which we have yet to learn. But any one who vants to know how much the human mind grasps, and how far the human eye has groped into the mist of knowledge, will find what he seeks in "Cormus."

One of the most striking characteristics of HUMHOLDT was the remarkable quickness with which he turned every thing to good account— even accidents and disappointments. Every man was for him a teacher of something; every object a theme for study; every event a new problem solved, to be stored away in the proper shelf in his capacious mind. TUCKERMAN says of him: "If delayed by the events of war from embarking on his American expedition, he occupied him-self in ascernaining the height of the central plains of Castile; when becalined on soundings,

THE LATE HON. JOHN A. RAWLINS .- [See Page 514.]

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-FRIENDS CLAIMING THEIR DEAD.-SERTORED BY THEO. R. DAVIS .- [SER DOUBLE PAGE.]

he examined the weeds collected on the lend to gain new light for the theory of the coloring of plants; the haze that for many hours correlled from his right the Prok of Teneriffe induced inpressure speculations on the effects of atmosphere on viscon." Our countrymon, Mr. Square, who visited him at Berlin, thought, after a few house in his company, that the raparious socress had pumped him dry about Central America; but he was mistaken, for, before his departure, an org-cut note reached him from Hr unstart, imploring how to say whether the petato diseast had comted in Nicoragua?

Petroen Americans and Human or there al-yous existed a strong bond of sympathy. His carle tracels; the respect shown him on his visit to this country; his republican opinious, and his intimacy with some of our greatest men, always had been to seek a strong affection for the United States, and to show to American travelers more artention than to foreigners generally. It is not emorph to see that his regred was reciprocated by the American people. No foreigner enjoyed such general veneration in this country is Baron He another. The proposal which was made to leave the Oregon dispute to his arbitration was one of the many evidences of the unexampled esteem in which he was held on this side the DARK OR FAIR.

S. a. Pittar Continued on Plage $13.

Marney fair With the golden hair-Sweet Primette With the locks of jet, As you roun side by side. On the morge of the tide, I know not on which my beart I should set.

The hazel orb Will the heart about, And the eye of blue Is tender and true: But when both are together This sombling weather, Their powers combined must our peace undo.

Beautiful pair. that become spore? The more and the sun Shine never as one, And why should you two Both rise on our viou When either alone had our worship won?

From crown unto feet In beauty complete, Take the Night and the Day Together you stray. Past the pier and the shipping So dointily tripping. In your pretty, besideling, unconvious way:

The maiden fair Would I gholly declare My durling- and yet There's the dark-eyed Brunette? And I vow on my word To say which I preferred Is a question with terrible doubt beset.

What shall I do To decide 'twist the two?' So beautiful both That to choose I am both, And which was the fairest The sweetest and rarest I could not declare, were I put on my early!

Brunette and fair maid Like Sunshine and Shade-Each in her sphere Is the Inteliest here, And I own I'm as fond Of Bruncare and of Blonde-A shocking confession I very much fear.

THE LATE HON, WILLIAM PITT FESSENDEN.

For some days before Mr. Frascinnen's death we were informed that his illness was serious, and that there were no hopes of his recovery. He died at Portland on the morning of Peptember 8, in his sixty-third year.

With an extraction year.
With an Ever Franchism was born October 16, 1806, in Boscawen, New Hampshire. He was graduated at Bowdein College in 1823, and after four years' study of law was admitted to the bor in 1827. He began the penetice of his profession in Bridgeton, Maine, but in 1829 moved to Perdond, where he ever after resided,
Gaining terminature as a bover he covered.

Gaining prominence as a lawyer he entered SI he was elected to the In 18 State Legislature from Portland, and was distinguished in that body for his skill and legal nearon as a legislator, and for the power which he displayed as a deluter. At the expiration of his term he returned to the practice of his profession, and was soon known as one of the most distinguished members of the bar in his Sease. In 1839 he consented to run again for the Legislature, and was elected. He was then a strong Whig, while a majority of the Maine Legislature was Democratic, this fact Mr. FESSESUEN was placed on the Judiciary Committee, and afterward elected Chairman of the Committee for the revision of the State Statutes, In 1840 he was elected to Congress, His speeches on the Loan bill, Bankrupt law, and either measures, and his reply to Caten Cran-ring fully sustained his reputation as a lawyer and as an orator. He declined a re-election, and but for the Democratic majority in the Maine Legislature would have been chosen Senator. In 1845 we find him again in the Legislature, having been elected by the prohibitionists. From 1846 to 1852 he took no active part in polities, except as a member of Whig National Conventions. In 1848 he was a member of the Con-tention which numinated General Taylor for Pre-ident, though not Taxion but WEBSTER was his tacceite candidate. Four years later be supported the nomination of General Scorr, During this time, while engaged in the practice of law, Mr. Fassennen, in conjunction with Mr. Winstein, gained a decision in the Supreme Court against an opinion previously rendered in a lower court by Judge Stoux. The case in-volved the question of the liability of the owner of property for the fraudulent acts of his auc-

Though supporting General Scott as candidate for President in 1852, Mr. Fessestors op-posed the platform of his party, and predicted His mind at this time was occupied is defeat. with the imminent question of succey, and, after the action of the Southern Whigs on the Nebrus-La bill, he advocated the formation of a new perty. So ort was defeated; but by a combination of Whige, Democrats, and "Free Soilers," Mr. Frasciscots was chosen Sonator. His colleague in the Sonate was Hannian, Haman, then a Democrat. Mr. FESSENDEN's speech on the Nebroska bill on the night of March 3, 1854, established his reputation as one of the ablest deletors in the Senate. He served on the Finance Committee, and on the experation of his term, in 18-2, was manimously re-elected. From this date Mr. Fassexpers's reputation was a national one. He held his position on the Finance Committee during both terms, and his knowledge of monetary matters led Presi-dent Laxenax to appoint him Secretary of the Treasury upon the resignation of Mr. Chase in 1861. He consented to retain his position un-pl March, 1865, when he was succeeded by Mr. M'CCLLOCH.

Mr. Freenen's course in the Senate during Axons: Joursson's administration was emi-nently conservative, though he was a sound Re-publican from first to last. One of the most nemorable acts of his Senatorial career was his vote against the impeachment of President deutysons.

Personally, Mr. FESSENDEN was a pleasant. affetés gentleman. He was tall and dignified in his appearance; but his natural severity of demeasure was relieved by the souvity of his

GENERAL JOHN A. RAWLINS.

GENERAL JOHN A. RAWLINS, late Secretary of War, died on the afternoon of September 6. The loss to the country will not easily be repaired; that sustained by the President is totally irreperable, for the latter has not only been deprived of a faithful severant, but also of a trusted friend.

Jours A. Rawaass was born in Jo Daviess Courty, Illinois, February 13, 1821. At his death, therefore, he was in his thirty-ninth year. He received a common-school and sendemic ed-ocation, and until twenty-three years of age was regaged in agricultural pursaits. In 1853 he ensered the law-office of J. P. Stramusza, of Galena, where he made the acquaintance of President Gravet. In 1854 he was admitted to the lar, and was afterward tolerably successful in his profession.

Previous to the uni General Rawanne's en-Previous to the unit General RAWLIN'S en-reor was comparitively obscure, but he had that strength of character and sturdy patriotism which, in the new ern that opened in 1861, made him a prominent soldier. From the beginning of the war his record is closely associated with that of General Grant. Soon after the fight at Sumter a large public meeting was held at Galena at which Grant presided, and Rawlins spoke. The latter had been known as a Democrat, and his declaration in favor of coercive measures to his declaration in favor of coercive measures to maintain the Union had on that account a great-

In August, 1861, he was a Major in the Fortyfifth Illipois, known as the lead-mine regiment; last at the request of GRANT, then a Brigadier-General, he received an appointment as Assist-ant Adjutant-General, and was assigned to the officer at whose request the appointment was given. From that time he accompanied General GRANT in all his campaigns, He was made a Lieutenant-Colonel November

1, 1862, aild a Brigadier-General of Volunteers August 11, 1863. He was first appointed Chief-of-Staff to General Grant in November, 1862, and retained this position after the elevation of the latter to the rank of Lieutenant-General. On March 3, 1865, he was confirmed herves Ma-jor-General. His faithful services as Chief-ofjor-General. Staff were fully appreciated by General Gasser, who in no small degree owed his remarkable our-ress to General Rawaiss.

For a short time after General Grass's inanguration General SCHOPIELD remained at the head of the War Department. But the Presi-dent derided to appoint General Rawlers to that place in his Cabinet, and finally prevailed upon him to proept it. He was unanimously apon him to accept it. He was unasanously confirmed, and his appointment was satisfactory both to Republicans and Democrats. Under his charge the affairs of the army have been con-ducted with increased efficiency, and with a wise economy of expenditure. General RAWLINS was a victim of consumption, a malady continued by exposure during the war. His private character was such as to win the esteem and affection of all who knew him. His temper was equable, and his domestic relations were of the most pleasant nature. His first wife, whom he m: ried June, 1856, died in 1861. In December, 1863, he married Miss MARY E. HURLBURY of Dunbury, Connecticut. This lady, who survives him, is herself an in-

THE LATE GALE IN BOSTON.

A TEMMENT Southeasterly gale visited the entire line of the New England coast on the evening of September 8. Before nightfull it grow into a harricane, causing great damage to property, accompanied with loss of life. The Boston Common was literally carpeted with foliage, and a few trees were blown down. The Old Elm, however, still stands. Awnings were torn to shreds, chinneys were thrown down, and churches and other edifices were unroofed.

One of our litestrations on page 612 shows the effects of the gale upon the Coliseum, in which the grand musical festival or Peace Jubilee was held last July. This once imposing tire line of the New England coast on the even-lee was held last July. This once imposing building is now butle better than a mere wreck, and its ruinous and dismantled condition gives and its rumous and dismantled condition gives a more striking proof of the fury of the storm and the havoc which it wrought than any other instance that can be cited. Shortly before six o'clock a furious gust of wind struck upon the orchestral end of the building "like a hammer," as sailors say. In a few minutes the large cir-cular window, which is twenty feet in diameter, yielded to the blast, and the wind getting inside, the building oningeral like a reset. The whole the building quivered like a reed. The whole orchestral end now crashed in, and the blast, sweeping with resistless fury to the other extremity, as speedily forced out that end. In a few moments the whole edifice seemed to be the sport of the elements, and the wind, getting underneath the roof, playfully lifted it off piece by piece until the whole of the transept was rapidly unroofed. The air was darkened with falling and flying timbers, which were tossed and blown about like shavings. The crush was and blown about like shavings. The crash was tremendous, and struck ave into all beholders. The organ was speedily leveled to the ground and buried in a chaotic mass of timbers. The big drum was also laid flat and pierced in sev-eral places by the falling timbers. Immense pieces of the roof were carried considerable dis-tances, and fall on every ride.

tances, and fell on every side.

A large number of vessels were wrecked along

THE WIFE'S SECRET.

Is I pride myself upon any mental endowment hatever, it is upon that humble one of Common-Is I pride myself upon any mental endowment whatever, it is upon that humble one of Common-Sense. I live what is called by the intellectual people a conventional life. I have my pew in the neighboring church, and sit in it twice every Sunday. I know one captain in the army—just such a person as he should be—polished, and yet ferocious, gentle to ladies, but rather insolunt to civilian males, boastful of his clubs, and giving all his leisure time, which is considerable. giving all his leisure time, which is considerable. to the cultivation of his mustaches; but other-wise I am ignorant of the fashionable world and all its gay doings. I have made no endeavor to break through the gifted pale that separates it from the steady-going middle class to which I belong. I do not understand the feeling which prompts my superiors to be ashamed of being seen in an omuibus. Once every day I return from the City in one; and if it is wet I use the same conveyance in the morning to reach my office. I pay my tradesmen weekly. My best sherry is 48s. a dozen; and when the captain alks of vintage wines (as he will do by the hour at my table), I often wonder what he thinks he is drinking. However, with true good-breeding, he imbibes it in great quantities, as though it were the best. I do not keep a man-servant. Our cook can not compass an outlette roughle. My wife trims her own bonnets. We have eight children, who all know the Church Catechism by heart, except the beby and the last but one. In short, a more respectable and unfashionable family than our own does not exist in all Bayswater.

Under these circumstances, it may be easily imagined that we are as free from the vices of the great as we are without their privileges; and this was, I honestly believe, the case until with-in a very recent period. When I used to read in the papers that the Lady Day Coltay (of Ner-man ancestry and bluest blood) had left her hus-bend's roof, and fied with Major Flutterby of the band's roof, and fied with Major Flusterby of the Life Guards; or that it was rumored among well-informed circles that the gentlemen of the long robe would soon find employment in the domes-tic affairs of his Grace the Duke of Belgravia. I used to give a prolonged whistle, and remark: "Here they are again," in general reference to the habits of the hand ton. I know that our bereditary aristocracy were given to these esca-pades, which in my own rank of life would cer-tainly be crimes, and I perused such details as the press could furnish with an avidity unalloy-ed, I am afraid, with much reprobation. I seem-ed to be reading of a class of persons whose way of life was too far removed from my own to affect me, except as a spectator; just as when I went to the play I found myself in an atmosphere of intrigue, and misunderstanding, and jealousy, al-together unreal, and with which I had not the ost of an experience in common. Jealousy! Why, I had been married sixteen years without entertaining that passion, so that it was not very likely, however well acted, that that passion should entertain as. Misunder-standing! The thing was impossible, for when-ever there promised to be "a row in the parity" —and every married man will understand me when I make use of that metaphorical expression-I brought it to a head, and had it out, and off we started again (speaking for self and Mrs. it—) on the smooth current of our lives, with the little fraces buried forever in its depths. As for the mother of eight falling in love with another man—it is all very well in a stage-play, and particularly where the hashand is a black man, and, as I have said, beditting enough among persons of quality; but upon the Notting Hill side of Baystrater any such mischance would. I felt, be out of place, and ridiculous—a social presumption, as well as a grave to the crime.

Imagine, therefore, my astonishment when my opposite neighbor, Peabody, who also calls himself my friend, did me the honor to call upon me a few weeks ago, to speak, in confidence, of the alarming conduct of my wife. Having demandedtand obtained a private interview, this scandalous old person, who was once an indigo mer-chant, and yet remins the trace of his calling upon his nose, set before me in detail a number curious circumstances connected with the goings on," as he was pleased to call them, of my wife, which he was not, indeed, prepared to say, "might not possibly be only coincidences, after all," but which he felt it his duty as a fellow-creature, and one who had been a husband in his time—here his lips made a dumb motion of gratitude—to let me know. Even as a neighbor, and an inhabitant of a common Crescent, hitherto remarkable for its respectability, and which, as I doubtless remembered, had declined to permit Mrs. Jones to put up Apartments in her window, lest we should be confounded with the lodging-house localities; nay, which, by the more force of its public opinion, had percented No. 484 from being let to a playactor—even in this character, said Peabody, he would have felt it his duty to make me aware of what was being snid, though doubless falsely, respecting the be-havior of Mrs. R----. Here I should have lock-ed the door, and informed Peabody that his last hour was certainly arrived, and that he had better make his peace with Providence before I cut his threat; but from ignorance of the proper conduct to be adopted in such exceptional circumstances, and perhaps from the knowledge that there was nothing but a paper knife in the that there was nothing but a paper-knife in the room with which to effect this righteous punishment, I only burst out laughing, and called him a meddling and importinent old fool.

"Very true," returned be, for he always makes use of that form of words—"very true; but still the facts are worth investigating, even from their singularity. To you know, for instance, that at eleven o'clock, three days a week, your wife goes out in a cab by herself?"

"No," said I, "I do not; though, if she does, it is surely better than if she had any ineligible companion. As a matter of fact, however, she companion. As a matter of fact, however, she does not do so, for I'have offered to go shopping with her twice this week, and she has declined to accompany me upon the ground of having a sore throat."

"Upon what days did she give this excuse?"
inquired Peabody, taking out his pocket-book. Last Monday and last Thursday," returned "Well, here's a memorandum: Monday 4th. Some Mrs. R.—— start, as usual, at 11; Thursday 7th, direct, direct. She could not be going to a morning concert, because she had no white gloves on.

gloves on."

"I will grant that much," quoth I, sardonically, and yet not by any means unmoved by this neexpected intelligence, "My wife does not nnexpected intelligence, go to morning concerts."

"Very true," observed Peabody. "Then the "Very true," observed Peabody. "Then the question arises, where does she go to? Now, as an inhabitant of the Crescent—"Peabody," interrupted I, severely, "I acknowledge the right of no man—no, not of the man in the moon himself—to meddle in my as fairs upon that ground. I am obliged to you for the interest you have taken in this matter, but the simple fact is, that it has been entirely mispleced. I have been perfectly well aways of my placed. I have been perfectly well aware of my wife's movements, and they have had my fullest permission and approbation. I only wanted to see to what lengths your impertinence and love of interference would carry you. That is your hat, I believe; your umbrella is the alpaca one;

I wish you a very good-morning."

I whered my visitor out, and then sat down in my private parlor with my elbows upon the table, and both my hands thrust into my hair. I had temporarily extinguished Peshody, but I was on fire with jealous apprehensions myself. What could it all mean? For sixteen years my wife had never taken any excursion unless in my company, upon which, she had always given me to understand, she doted; and yet, after refusing to go out with me upon Monday and Thursday last, on the plea of sore thront, she had started, the instant that my back was turned, in a Hansom—or even supposing it was a four-wheeler— in a cah, without white gloves on, and— Con-found it, here was a row in the pantry, and one which my peace of mind demanded to have cleared up at once. "Anna Maria," cried I, huskily, from the bottom of the stairs—"Anna Maria, I wish to speak with you immediately."

"Loc bless me," answered my wife from the top story, "it isn't one of the children, is it, lobe 2. Prove sell me the worst at once."

top story, "it isn't one of the current."

John? Pray tell me the worst at once."

"No, Madam, it is I," replied I, stiffly.

"Then it's the kitchen chimney," exclaimed

"And didn't I tell

"And didn't I tell

Mary to have it swept a week ago; and now the fire-engines will spoil every thing, even if we are not burnt out of house and home."

Was it possible that this woman could have deceived me, as Peabody had said, and yet talk so simply of her children, and of house and home? By the time Anna Maris had got down to the drawing-room flight I began to be rather ashamed of myself. When the mother of eight reached my sitting-room door, with her honest face aglow with animation, and her voice so carnest about the soot, I did not dare to mention what I had in my mind.

"I called you down, dear, to say that I was going to give myself a holiday to-day, and to ask you to come with me to Hampsterd Heath, and dine at Jack Straw's Castle this afternoon,

A ray of joy passed for an instant over her features, and then, as if recollecting herself, she began to stammer that she was very, very sorry, but really she had so much to do about the house just then; if I would only wait till Friday week, which was my birthday, then we would go somewhere, and she should enjoy it above all measure. This afternoon, however, the thing was impossible.

"Well," said I, gravely, "we have not many holidays together, and I am sorry. You had a sore throat on Monday and on Thursday, when

"Oh yes," answered she, shaking her little head, which is very prettily—could it be too pret-tily?—set upon her shoulders; "it was quite impossible that I could go out with that throat."

"Here," thought I, for she could not have gone out without her throat, "is some dreadful falsehood; but Peabody may have told it, and not she. Perhaps she never went our Should I not rather believe the wife of my bosom than that scandalous old retired indigo-merchant i Was it not base even to suspect Anna Maria of deception? Doubless it was: but yet I thought I would just satisfy myself with my own eyes."

"Very well," observed I, quietly; "since you can not come with me to-day, I shall go to the City, as usual. I don't care for a holiday by myself."

"Poor, dear fellow," said Anna Maria, coaxingly, as she helped me on with my great-coat, "I am quite grieved to disappoint you. Good-by, John. Mind you have a good luncheon; it's very had for you enting those huns and rubbish."

Ah, what a tangled web we weare," says an, want a tanged wer we weare, says somebody, "when first we practice to deceive," though after but a little trying, there's nothing easier than lying. I protest I felt like a pick-pocket, as I designed and lurked about our Crescent, watching in the distance my own door, to see whether Mrs. R--- would cross the thresh-old. I suppose I have none of the attributes necessary to the profession of a detective; for whenever a passer-by cast his eyes on me I felt myself blashing all over, and hanging my bend on one side, as a dog hongs his tail. I dared not, of course, stop in the Crescent, but loitered at the corner of a street which commanded it, now trying to dig up the tops of the coal-cellars by inserting the nozzlo of my umbrells in their circular holes, and now eliciting mournful music by dragging it against the area railings. Ex-hausted with these exercises, I had been learning against a lamp-post for about ten minutes, when the door of a house opposite opened suddenly, and a widow lady of vast proportions came swiftly ont upon me, with her cap-strings streaming in

"Now just you go away, my gentleman," said she, in a menacing voice, "before the police makes you. I know who you're a-looking for, and I can tell you she ain't a-coming, for I've got her locked up in the conl-cellar. I know you although you you, although you have not got your red cost on to-day; and mind, if you get another slice of meat in my house, I'll prosecute you as sure as my name's Mivins.

Gracious Heavens, Medam!" cried I, "do you take me for a common soldier?"

"No, Sir," answered she, maliciously; "but for a tuppenny-habenny Life Guardsman, who never saw a shot fired in his life; and if ever you come after my Jumima again-"

I turned and fled-into the very arms of the

I turned and fled—into the very arms of the abominable Peabody. "Make haste!" exclaimed he; "there is not a moment to be lost. No; the cab is coming this way; you may see for yourself whether I am not right this time."

And sure enough, who should drive by, at a rapid rate, but Anna Maria, in a four-wheeled cab, and without her bonner, and with a flower to her high the first the head of the cab.

can, and winson her tonner, and arm a power in her hair! This blow, coming so closely upon the attack of the widow lady, was almost more than I could bear. "Where can she be going to?" gasped I, half unconsciously. "It's the most extraordinary thing I ever heard of."

"I have heard of similar things," returned

Penbody, quietly, "although I never experienced any thing of the sort myself. Of course, I don't know where she is going to; but the direction she has taken is toward St. John's Wood.

I hastened back to my own house, and with the air of a man who has forgotten something, began to search in the pockets of a great-coat hanging up in the hall. "By-the-by," said I as the servant who had let me in was disappear ing, "I think your mistress must have got it after all. Just run up, and tell her I want to see her for a minute."

Emily Jane, who has been in our service ever since we were married, turned as scarlet as her cap-ribbons. "Sir," said she, bolder than brass, cap-ribbons. nissis has just stepped out; she has taken two of the little girls for a morning walk."

"Which two?" inquired I, looking this ahandoned young person fall in the face. Her subtle spirit was cowed by this course of procedure; she didn't she replied that she did not knowrecollect-she hadn't paid particular attention. but she rather thought that it was the two youngest-all in a breath.

"In that case," rejoined I, pointing with with-ering scorn to the perambulator, "how comes this here? No, Emily Jane; your mistress must have taken out with her to-day the same two children that she took on Monday and on Thursday, when her some throat was so had that she could not go out with me."
"Yes, Sir," replied she; "it was the same

"Emily Jane," said I, solemaly, "always tell a truth. I know all. Where is your mistress the truth. gone to all by herself to-day, with her hair so neatly arranged, and a flower stuck in the lefthand side of her head? and that after telling me she was too busy to move out. Conceal-ment is worse than useless. Where is she?"

"Wild horses shouldn't do it," returned the domestic, resolutely. "I told her I would keep it dark, and I won't betray no confidence as he been reposed in me. You must find it cut all of your own head, Str. Oh dear, oh dear!" Here, to my confusion, Emily Jane cast her apron, by a sudden and dextrous movement, over her features, and in that blinded condition rushed down the kitchen-stairs like a bull stung by boes.

At that moment the front-door bell rang with a violence such as none of our visitors, except the captain, ever dare to use. My wretched heart seemed to experience a little throb of joy. He at least, then—and I confess my suspicions had been turned in his direction, for was it not his profession to guard us from foreign foes, and stroy our domestic peace—he at least, I say, saless there was more than one- I dured not trust myself to finish the reflection, but opened the front-door with my own hands.

It was somebody in uniform, but not the captain. "Telegraph for Mrs. R.—," squeaked the boy, in his shrill thin voice; "please to sign on the right 'and side." Then dancing a double shuffle upon the door-step, in ceder to keep himself warm, he broke forth into bellad, "There's somebody in the house with Dinah, there's somebody in the house I know; there's somebody in the house with Dinah-

I didn't like his impodence, and I didn't like his song, but there was nothing for it but to sub-mit. What could Anna Maria be doing with telegraphs? From Rupert Merrington, 6 Cupi-don Villan, St. John's Wood. Pray, be punctu-al this time. I am engaged after twelve. I trust and this time. I am engaged after twelve. I trust you will be looking your best, not pale, as on Monday and Thursday.

"There's somebody in the house with Dinah, there's somebody in the house I know—" I rushed out with the receipt in my hand, and the buy snatched it, and took to flight, for he saw that I was dangerous. What could this dreadful message mean? or rather what meaning could it have but one? Rupert Merrington! not at all a steady-sounding name, to begin with: the sender, too, was evidently no business-man, or he would not have exceeded his twenty words so foolishly. It had a military smack all over (and I didn't like that notion—a military smack!). Merrington was of course an assumed name. The handwriting was good, and so far unlike the captain's; but then people don't write their own telegraph messages. I felt that some immediate action was necessary, or that I should be sufficient. In a couple of minutes I was in a Hansom bound for Cupidon Villas, in a state of mind easier imagined than described; and yet I had often read descriptions of it in rovels which professed to describe aristocratic life, and often had seen upon the stage (although princi-pally in farces) the husband racked by jealous pangs.

What had there been to laugh at in that, I wondered now? Why should the tenderest emotions of the human heart be made the subject of huffoon— But what a wicked-looking set of houses were these which I was now passing! If bricks and mortar—and especially stucco—coa-look vicious, certainly St. John's Wood possesses a patent for—

"What number, Sir?" shouted my driver,

"What number, bale in the roof. "This is through the little hole in the roof. Cupidon Willas."

"I am sorry to hear it," grouned I, passing my pocket-handkerchief over my brow. mind me, my good man" (for his countenance evinced much dismay at my voice and manner); "I know it is not your fault that I am miserable. Please to pull up at No. 6." Of all the wicked-looking houses in Cupidon

Terrace, No. 6 was, it seemed to me, the wicked-est. The round eye which formed its staircase window winked victously in the sunlight, and in the garden door was a little grating, as though for the purpose of reconnoissance before admit-tance, which was not a little grating to me. The drawing-room shutters were closed. This latter circumstance gave me some satisfaction, since it might signify that Mr. Merrington was dead, but a glance at the gay attire of the servant-girl who answered my summons cut away this ground of consolation. "Is Mrs. R——within I" inquired I, with a tone of assumed indifference.

"Well-yes, Sir-but you can't see her just at present. Mr. Merrington has a great objection to-"

"Confound Mr. Merrington!" cried I, pushing my way in. "I want to see my wife."

"Oh, your wife is it, Sir?" replied the maid, with a giggle. "Then of course you can go up, if you please, although it's as much as my place is worth. You will find them in the drawing-

"What! there?" exclaimed I, passionately, pointing to the closed windows. "Yes, of course, Sir! That's the room they it in? Then this sort of thine must have been going on for years! I cleared the two little flights of stairs in a couple of bounds, and hurled open the drawing-room door like a catapult.

I found myself in a large spartment, darkened, indeed, upon one side, but well lit by a huge win-dow (invisible from the front of the house) at its northern end. In the centre of the room was a raised structure, hung with purple, and rather resembling a scaffold decorated for the execution of royalty, and upon the scaffold sat my wife in an uncomfortable attitude, and with an expression of countenance that she only wears upon those ceremonions occasions which demand what are called "company manners Between her and the window stood a gentleman with mustaches, and in a velvet cont-at an easel, and evidently painting her por-He elevated his eyebrows at iar mode of entering the roces, and looked toward my wife, as if for an explanation of the

"It is only my husband, Mr. Merrington," returned she. "Oh, John, I am so sorry that you found me cut, for I had meant my picture to be a pleasant surprise to you upon your birthday next work. This was to be my last sitting | but one; and nobody knows the trouble I have taken to keep you ignorant of my coming here.

That stupid Emily Jane must have let it out."
"No, my dear," said I; "I discovered the fact for myself through the telegraph; and really I—I couldn't help coming down to see how the picture was getting on. It was so very kind of you. And, dear me, Mr. Metrington, what a charming likeness!"

"Well, it's not in a very good light, you see," related by descreptions."

rejoined he, deprecatingly, "Not having a room with a sky-light I'm obliged to block up those windows, and manage how I can. It makes the house dark, and, I'm afraid, caused you to stumble at the drawing recent door."

"Yes," said I, "that was just it; I very nearly came in head first. I—I only thought I'd look in on my way to the City. I won't interrupt you another moment; and, indeed, I have myself noting to look."

I gave the maid five shillings, and-thinking it would be more likely to insure her silence -a chock under the chin. Then I wrote to Peabody from Bunhill Row (where my place of business is situated), to tell him that I would not make a fool of him any longer; but the fact was that, during the last few weeks, I had been making my wife sit for her picture, which he was to come and pass his judgment on as soon as it was finished: there was a question as to whether the flower in her hair was an improvement or

But I know that Emily Jane would tell Anna Maria all about it. However, nothing was said until my birthday arrived, and with it the portrait, for which the dear creature had saved up her pin-money, and put herself to the greatest inconvenience. I declare my heart smote me for my base suspicions when I looked upon that honest face, which had never worm point before. Upon that day she said: "By-the-by, John, when that telegraph arrived for me from Mr. Merrington, it didn't make you jen'ou at

1. Oh dear no, my darling! Jealous of you? Impossible! Not, of course, that you are not benetiful enough to make all the world fall in love with you; but I never dreamed of such a thing."

"That's all right, John," said she, kissing ne; but there was a wicked twinkle in her kind eyes as she added, dryly: "I am glad to hear you say that, for, do you know, my dear, I al-most thought you were just a little jezious."

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

"Westevan Geove," at Oak Bloffs, Martha's Vine-yard, is a small dity of cottages. Entirched by the for-est trees—so sheltered and secluded that they only est trees—so sheltered and seconder may very peop out amidst the learning foliage—there are not far from one thousand tasteful cottages of every conceivable style of architecture. They are all small, and most of them but one story high. The streets of this most of them but one story high. The streets of this most unique village are simply paths through the woods; and so diminutive and functful are the cottages, and so lovely the grove, that the whole aspect is more like fulry-land than a real place in this prosale world. In this beautiful location the "Marc Vineyard Camp-Meeting Association" annually holds its religious services. Tents are erected, each capable of bolding two or three hundred persons, and around the "preachers' stand" comfortable seats have been the "preachers' stand" comfortable sense have been placed, sufficient to accommodate about three thousand neonle have been upon the ground this year.

Oak Bluffs is not simply a camp-ground: the place is sought by many as a health, quiet, bosulfs! watering-place. Its natural advantages are superior. Picturesque bays indent the coast: the sea view in unsurpassed; boating and fishing are excellent; there is a fair beach for surf-bathing. Many prefer quiet enjoyment in a spot where dissipation is unknown to life at a fashionable summer hotel, find their way to this sequestered nook.

Reports of every kind continue to arrive from the Wilderness. One visitor, who seems to have had a pretty good time, advises "those who love good fish-ing, clear, fresh air, delichtful ear, fresh air, delightful scenery, and honest to visit the Adiroodack region. But if a man rt, to visit the Adirondack region. But if a man ables at the song of a mosquito, or the sight of a black fly, or if he looks upon a visit to the country as a business investment which will not pay unless he catches so many fish for so many dollars, he had better put a pin-hook on a piece of cord and deh in his

A most singular natural phenomenon is reported from South Carolina. During the war a young Con-federate soldier was wounded, and his leg was ampotated near the thigh. The wound bealed rapidly; but about a year afterward a fleshy protuberance began to grow from the place of amputation. It took the shape grow from the place of amputation. It took the bange of a foot, and since that time it has been growing leg growing from his thigh, which, in a year or so, promises to supply the loss of his leg.

Biorstadt, the artist, has an elegant villa at Irving-The house is of stone, and provided with a large

Switzerland is the first foreign country which has entered into an arrangement with our Post-office De-partment whereby money orders may be transmitted between this country and Europe. The Series ex-change office is at Basle. Money orders from this country will first be sent there, and then the money due will be transmitted to the proper person in an part of Switzerland.

A gas engineer in London has patented a new porta-A gas engineer in London has passened a new perta-ble gas-making machine. The gas is manufactured instantaneously without the application of heat, and consists simply of an admixture of atmospheric air with the vapor from mineral oil. The air is admitted into the machine while the gas is in process of con-sumption, and is regulated in accordance with the demands upon the machine.

The "Euradelpha" recently invited Mr. Horsce Greeley to breakfast with them at the Woman's Ra-reau, and for a couple of hours discussed their favorite topics, apparently with mutual satisfaction. Anna Dickinson is President of the "Emadelphia," and the society is composed of those only who take a decided stand on the question of woman suffrage, and have for their special object the general wolfare of woman. It is ramoved that one feature of the society is to give breakfasts to different public men whose in fiscuce would be helpful to the court.

A Senator recently sent one of his speeches addressed to "Hon. Weedell Phillips, care few. H. W. Beecher, Brooklyn." Mr. Beecher sent the MSS, "in the original package," with the addition, "Beston, Massachusetts," and the measureadum, "Mr. Phillips is under my care, but for safety I keep him in Maron chasetts. H. W. B."

Another scientific feat is promised at Ningara. A during fellow designs taking an aestal flight across the chases on wings, which are now being constructed at Handlion, Outario.

Rev. W. H. Murray did not seeme of the newspopers suggested he should—preach shoul wandering in the Wilderness when he first met his congregation on his return. On the contrary, taking for his text the passage, "And let us not be weary in well-tring ; for in due season we shall roup, if we faint not," he ondenoured to improve his heaven with the importance of vigorous Christian activity. Park Street Church was traveled to its nimost; and Mr. Murray gate extdence in his appearance that life in the Wilderseas had been beneficial to his beaith.

There is a report that the Rochschilds are to invest $500,000,000 in Putted States Bords.

A singular ecene occurred in Buffalo early one morning not long ago. A drawe of ninety Texan cattle, that had just been landed from one of the ferry-boats, became infuriated, and run in every direction through the streets, goring and transpling every thing that came in their way. One man was tossed by a mad ball into Niegara Street Park, a woman was fatally gored, and several other persons injured. Some of the cattle swam across the Ningom River and scatterred on the Canada side. Had the stampede curred later in the day, when the streets were crowd-ed, the casualties would have been fearful,

The "perils of vaccination" scent to be exciting much alarm in London, especially among the poorer classes. One woman refused to have her child vacclusted, and was sentenced to seven days impriron-ment in consequence. One of her children had died, evidently from the effects of impure vaccination. In Esgiand vaccination is now compniory. Most phy-sicians, in this and other countries, are firm in their belief, founded on long experience, that vaccination, when properly performed, is see effectual presentive of small-pox. Dr. Ward, of London, after farty years' service in the National Vaccine Establishment, during which time he vaccinated 45,000 persons, says that none of them have died of small-pox, and only a small proportion have been revaceinated, which proves to his mind most satisfactorily the delusion of the idea that the protective powers of vaccination are diminlehed or worn out in course of time. One physician of the New York Dispensary, who had vaccinated 40,000 in sixteen years, has stated that none of them had taken small-pox after his vaccination.

Worth, the Parisian "man-milliner," does not think it worth while to cover every dress with trimmings. Recently, on being consulted in regard to trimmings. for a dress he had just finished, he declared that none should be put on R—that "it was only an 800 franc dress." The general idea is good. If some of the superabundant trimmings were emitted from cheansuperabundant trimmings were emitted from cheap dresses—to say positing of expensive ones—ladies would manifest far better taste then is shown now in tramerous cases.

According to an English physician of distinction, According to an angina paystern or definitions, extreme ritualistic services have a special tendency to produce insenity; the increase and colors and perpexing geneficitions so act upon the nerves and imaginations of excitable persons—young ladies especially—as to destroy or impair the reasoning faculties; in abort, that they make people crasy.

A few days after the International boat-race a complimentary hanquet was given at the Crystal Palace, by the Lendon Rowing Clab, in honor of the Harvard and Onford boaterwas. A hundred and twenty invited guests were present, including Charles Dickors, Thomas Hugher, Edmund Yates, Captain Anderson, and many other notables. 'Mr. Dickers made a pleasant great, in which he said many course in contract. ant speech, in which he paid musty compliments to the

A nugget of gold weighing 106 pounds, and valued at $25,000, was recently taken from a mine in Downic-ville, California. This is, within a few pounds, the largest ever found in modera gold mining. From the Monumental Quartz Mine in Sierra Baties, Sierra County, two men obtained in one day gold valued a

A couple of Brooklyn burelaw attempted a short time ago, to transfer a quantity of dry-goods from a certain shop, in which they were employes, to an accomplice on the sidewalk. One of the burglars, while pulling a piece of goods from a bale on the upper floor, slipped and fell through the hatchway. His companion fied, leaving the wretched man to writhe in ag Toward morning his wife, becoming anxions at unusual absence, went to the store in search of him, and he was discovered lying in a mangled and increa-thic condition. He was removed to the City Hospital, where he died in the afternoon of the same day,

In a biography of the Cear Nicholar, which has recently been written by a Russian prince, the following incident is mentioned in connection with the commencement of his last sickness: The Emperor had ordered a review, and, in spite of the entreaties of his doctor, insisted on riding forth in the cold. Even when he was in the court ward of his palace, Dr. Maudt renewed his supplications; begged his Majos-ty at least to throw a closk over him. The Carr remained denf to every warning. "Sire, you are ith; it will be your death;" and, at last, "Sire, it is suicitin you are about to commit." At this exposinistics. you are about to commit." At this exposinistion. Nicholas turned sharply and asked his physician by He held his review, got a chill, and expired after a short illness

Oregon will earn a good name among the lovers of salmon. There are twenty-five salmon fisheries, conploying over two hendred men, between the month Willamette Hiver and Astoria, in that State, Over a million posseds of this favorite fish have been pet up to the cane, and also about two thousand barrele have been packed.

The superintendent of the new port-office intely received numerous proposals for the use of the feace surrounding the government property to the Park for advertising purposes. We understand that a firm has obtained the privilege two years for $15,000.

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-STREET VIEW IN AVONDALE, PENNSYLVANIA.

THE AVONDALE DISASTER.

DRINGING OUT TI

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-BRINGING BODIES OUT OF THE TUNNEL.

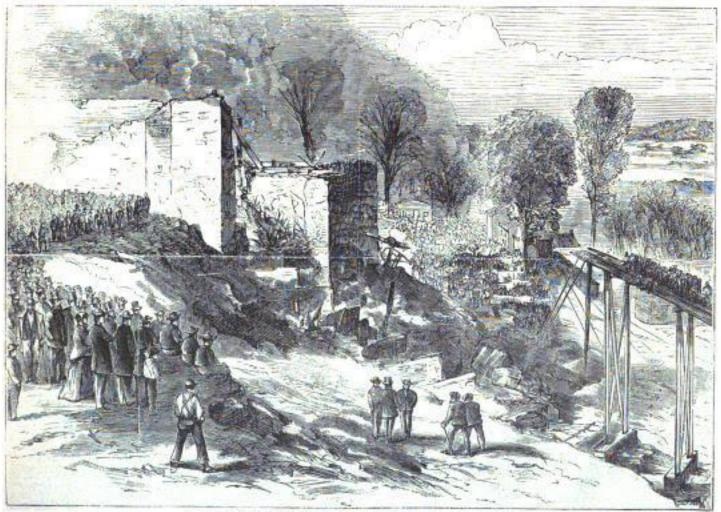

THE AVONDALE DISASTER.

The scene of the terrible disaster which we profusely illustrate in this Number was at the Avondale Colliery at Plymouth, about twenty miles south of Stranton, Pennsylvania. It is situated in the Wyoming Valley, on the steepest and most commanding side of the Shawnee Hills. This colliery was reputed to be the best and largest in the valley. When in full working order it produced 700 tons of coal per day. For three months previous to the first of September it was idle, owing to the miners' strike. It was leased by the Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, who also lease many other mines in the valley; and by this ingenious plan of leasing in place of opening mines themselves, they avoid the charge of being held responsible for the manner of their construction.

There is no doubt that the Avondale mine was one of the best and worst in the valley. The masonry-work, running down the sides of the shaft some twenty feet, was as strong as stone and cement could make it. The engine-house was firmly built, the machinery of the finest kind used in the colliery business, the breaker that covered the engine-house, and through which the broken coal was dispatched through a long shoot to the milroad track below, was built in the most substantial manner, and altogether the works to the casual observer seemed to leave no room for improvement. The shaft was sunk to a depth of 237 feet, with a space twenty-six feet by twelve, divided in the centre by a wooden partition, on one side of which the pure air descended to the mine, and on the other the impure vapors ascended to the top and were dissipated abroad. After going

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISISTI

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-RUINS OF THE COAL-BREAKER.

AUSTED MINERS.

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-CLEANSING THE FACES OF THE MINERS PREPARATORY TO THEIR SEPULTURE.

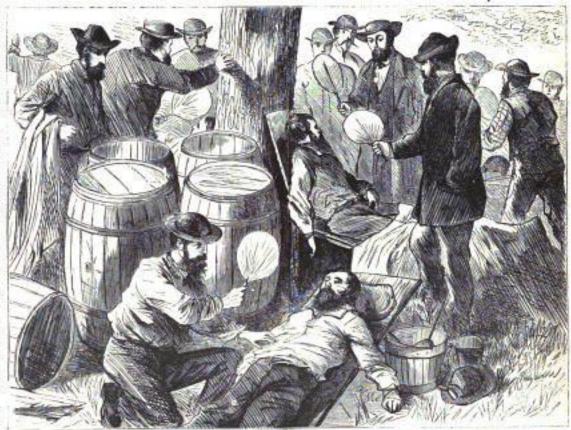

in a sheer descent to the bottom of this shaft the explorer of the mine found on either hand two long golleries, or avenues, one branching east 1200 feet, and the other west 800 feet. Moving straight onward at right angles to the shaft, and at a distance from it of 220 feet, the furnace for creating a draught of air through the galleries and chambers of the mine might be found blazing away in danger-the galleries and chambers of the mine might be found blazing away in dangerous preximity to the wood-work lining of the passage-way reserved for the admission of the fresh air currents.

On the morning of September 6 a fire broke out, originating, as it appears, from this furnace. A spark ignited the dry scantiling adjacent; the flames leaped forward to the bottom of the shaft, caught the wooden partition above-mentioned, climbed to the top, and involved the coal-breaker and the surrounding buildings in the configgration. Whatever fresh air there was in the mine went to feed the fierce flame, while the sulphurous gases, having no longer an outlet, were forced back into the chambers and galleries of the colliery. As the buildings at the top of the shaft were consumed their ruins fell down and obstructed the only means of entrance to or of excess foun the wine.

somed their rains fell down and obstructed the only means of entrance to or of egress from the mines. But what had become of the miners, of whom, by the first report, there were two hundred or more at work in the mine? This was the absorbing question of the hour. Their families were congregated about the opening in great numbers; and the miners from all parts of the region model, if possible.

About 6 o'clock r.m. a dog and lamp were sent down to test the air. The dog was found to be alice when drawn up, and the lamp had not been extinguished.

THE AVONDALE COLLIERY DISASTER-REVIVING MINERS AFTER THEIR EXPLORATIONS.

THE AVONDALE CONLIERY DISASTER-THE HEAP OF BODIES FIRST FOUND BEHIND AN EXTEMPORIZED BARBICADE

TERS DESCENDING THE SHAFT.

Soon offerward a man went down, and ofter seven animates returned and reported no diffiesdry in breathing, but soid there were obstruc-tions half-way down the shaft which he could not pass. The obstructions were removed so as to reach the lattom of the shaft by 7.15 r. st. The two men who had engaged in this work also penetrated a gangway plant sixty or seventy yards, finding three dead mules, and reaching a harricade which the miners, retreating for safe ty, had extemperized to shut out the noxious

The next two men who descended-Thomas W. Williams and Davin Joses-were suffi-cated to death. Except to recover the bodies of these beare men no further attempts were made to descend the mine until fresh air was forced down into the mine by means of a fan driven by a small engine. These preparations were not completed until D a.N. on the 7th. In the mean time a body of forty-six experienced miners was organized as a volunteer force to descend the shaft and make explorations. Several parties descended between 10 A.M. and 1.30 r.M., but they returned so completely exhausted that it was not considered safe to make any further descent until the gangway was cleared of gas. Still four or five descents were made before midnight, but without effect.

Before 3 a.m. on the 8th two of the dead were found in the stalds of the mine. At half past 6 o'clock A.M. a large number of miners were found dead on the cast side of the plane. The next party which descended reported that they went up the plane, just beyond which a harner was met, consisting of a car packed around with coal "colm" and clothing. This was cleared away, and n little further on a similar herrier was found. One man was found dead outside of the harricade. Upon the removal of this sec-ond harrier a pile of dead miners was discovered. These were found in all conceivable attitudes. These were found in all concessator arminos. Futhers had died embracing their children, and comrades locked in one another's arms. Evan Huganes, the Superintendent, was found sitting down with his head resting upon his knees. The work of exhumation continued all day, and by 3.30 r.m. seventy-two bodies had been brought up. As the hodies were brought to the top of the shaft their faces were cleaned, and they were thus prepared for the recognition of their

By noon on the 3th one hundred and eight bodies had been exhumed, after which none were found—so that the first reports as to the number of victims must have been greatly exaggerated.

is impossible to consure too severely the coloable carelessness of a mining company who, rather than provide, at the expense of a few thousand dollars, a second shall for the safety of their workmen, proferred to risk this terribo loss of life. It is to be hoped that such a warn-ing will not be lost upon other companies who have been equally negligent. We are glad that measures have been promptly taken to provide relief for the families which have been made des-titude by this sudden calamity. It is a charity which appeals to all.

Our illustrations on the two preceding pages and on our first page are from sketches made by our artist, Mr. Tuko. R. Davis, at the scene

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En gibe Books .- Book E.

CHAPTER VIII.

CONVALENCENT.

"Paul!" cried a harsh, querulous voice from behind the curtains of the bed in the grest-cham-ber at Shipley vicamge. "Paul! Where the

Then followed a string of eaths in English French, and Italian; not pretry rose-water ex-pletives, such as are occasionally attributed in the pages of fashionable novels to irresistible young guardsmen and such-like curled durlings of the world. There was no odor of rose-water about these oaths. They were vile, fierce, blasphemous parases, borrowed from the vecabulary of the ignorms and degraded.

Sir John Gale was the speaker. Sir John Gale was impotient and engry. When that was the case, Sir John Gale was apt to express himself in the strongest, coarsest, most ferocions languarge with which his tongue was acquainted, Presently the door opened, and Paul came into room. Poolo Paeli was a Piodmontese. the was a short, thick, ugly, middle-aged man, ash grave light-colored eyes, set nucler overranging brows. He had a shock of grizzled lair, and a broad forebead, and his fare was clean shaven.

Paul had been a courier, and in this capacity had attracted the attention, and won the favorable ponion, of Sir John Gale. The latter had elevated Paul to the post of confidential and personal attendant on himself. A "confidential attendout might seem at first sight to be of small value to Sir John, considering that he never voluntaly made a confidence to my human being. But here are involuntary confidences which we all is ide daily and hourly respecting ourselves. The ipieut of these in Sir John's case needed to be ch, potient, and Jisercot. Paul was all three. He entered the chamber, bearing in his hand a ray covered with a unpkin, on which was placed a rotall basin of soap.

Ills master saluted him with a volley of abuse for baying delayed.

Paul very gravely set down the trny, raised his master in the bed, supported his back with pil-lows, threw a dressing-gown over his shoulders, and then, polling from his waistcoat pocket a large sifter watch attached to a black ribbon, "It is time for your soup, Nir."

Nir John tasted the soup, made a grimace of disgust, and launched another volley of onths at

This is uneatable-heastly! They have put sage, or some damned thing into it. Ugh!"

"Very good soap, Sir," replied Paul, imper-turbably. "No sage. I saw it made. You eat it warm, Sir. It will give strength. Very good

The convalescent continued to gramble at every spoonful; but he smallowed the savery, nourisdang broth to the last drop. And then Paul removed the tray, mended the fire, and proceeded to lay out his master's clothes; for the invalid was to leave his room to-day, for the first time since his necident.

Sir John looked upward from among his pillows to where the window gave a glimpse of pale libre March sky, frested by the skeleton branches of the yet bure trees.

"It's a fine day, ch?" he asked.
"Yes, Sir. Cold. You must be well wrapped,

"What sort of place is the sitting-room?" Paul described, as well as he could, the spartment which he called the salon, and with the aspect of which the reader is already acquainted. He further stated that there was a comfortable arm chair at Sir John's disposal; that a screen and a curtain had been arranged behind this chair so as to exclude all draughts; and that a foot-stool had been placed in front of it.

"How devilish weak I am!" excluimed Sir John, with an almost piteous expression of face, as he essayed, with his servant's assistance, to

This was not the first time that be had left his bed. He had been wrapped in a dressinggown, and seated in an easy-chair by the fire-side in his own chamber, on several previous occasions. But now he was to venture into the sitting-room, have tea with the vicar's family, and make the acquaintance of the young ladies.

On the port of these latter there was a good deal of curiosity respecting their guest. two girls did not even know with any accuracy what his personal appearance might be. True, they had seen him—if it could be called soring when he was swooning, bleeding, mud-bespat-tered, on the ground at their gate. But who could judge of a gentleman's looks under such

When Sir John Gale stood for a moment at the open door of the parlor leaning on Paul's arm, and looking his first look at the vicar's daughter and ward, this is what their eyes be-held: a man of middle height, slenderly made and somewhat high shouldered, dressed with scrapulous neatness-even with elegance-and bearing traces in his face and his attitude of re cent severe illness

How much of the worn aspect of his face, and the unwholesomeness of the skin-which looked as though it should naturally have been ruddy and plamply filled out, but which now hung white and flaccid over the chocks, and in beggy wrinkles beneath the prominent dark eyes—how much of the sickly whiteness of the bony hands, white as a woman's, but knotted and plowed with deep lines like those of a very aged man-bow much, in brief, of the general debility, and air of being used-up, now perceptible in Sir John's aspect, was due to recent suffering, and how much of all this had belonged to it for years past, the vicar's family could not tell. They accepted his appearance as being the natural ap-pearance of a man no longer young, who had just arisen from a bed of sickness where his mind and body had both been severely tried.

He had sandy hair, slightly grizzled, carefully broshed, and so disposed as to hide, as far as possible, a build patch on the crown of the head. He wore a pointed beard, and mustaches that curved fleucely upward. His nose was well shaped, although rather sharp and beak-like. The tell-tale month was partly concealed by the fringe of mustache. Altogether he might have been pronounced a handsome man; and he was pronounced to be so by many persons.

In the sitting-room awaiting him were Mr.

Levincourt with Mand and Veronica. The lat-ter were a winter dress of rich claret color, reter were a winter cross of rach chareful coor, re-lieved at the throat and wrists by ruffles of white lace—very fine old lace that had belonged to her mother, and that was, in truth, a little out of place on her plain stuff gown.

Mand was an inch or two shorter than her con panion; she had broad, flucly moulded shoulders, and a noble white throat supporting a head whose form and proportions were almost perfect.
Her features were irregular, and not one of them could be called handsome, save the almond-shaped blue eyes set rather deeply under broad brows. Her wide mobile mouth was not beautiful, though its sweetness, when she spoke or smiled, was irresistible. But one beauty or smiled, was irresistible. But one beauty Mand Desmond possessed which appealed to the lenst cultivated appreciation: this was her hair, which was of a rare golden line. When the sunlight fell on it, it shone as though each separate hair had been drawn out of burnished metal. and it was softer to the touch than silk.

On these two girls, and on their surroundings, looked, for the first time, Sir John Gale.

The vicar hastened forward to offer his gnest the support of his arm, which the latter gentleman accepted after a moment's hesitation.

"I am aslamed," said Sir John, with a frank smile, which showed a bright range of false teeth, "ashamed and sorry to be such a bore and a suisonce. But the truth is, I had no interest in the smile false teeth and a suisonce. idea, until I began to dress just now, how en-tirely my strength was prostrated. It seems tirely my strength was prostrated. It seem absurd, but I am absolutely as weak as a haly.

"We are truly rejoiced, most truly so, to welcome you among us. Your strength will come back, undoubtedly. It is now only a question of time. Have patience yet a while. My daughter, Sir John Gale. My ward, Miss Des-mond. Paul, be so good as to wheel your master's chair a little more this way."

The baronet took the hand which Veronica had half offered, half withheld, and bowed low. Mand saluted him by a smile and a bend of the head, which he returned by a still lower bow than the first.

"I trust," said Sir John, when he was seated,
"that Mr. Levincourt has been so very kind as to explain to you how impossible I find it to express in any adequate way my sense of your great goodness and hospitality." His glauce, as he spoke, included the two young

"We are very glad to see you so much better," said Maud.

"And the truth is, we have done nothing at all for you, Sir John; Paul would not let us, added Veronica.

"That man of yours is an excellent fellow," said the vicar, when Paul had left the room. "There are no such servants to be had in Eu-gland nowadays. Veronica, give Sir John some ten, and then ring for another large cup for me. I can not be persunded to drink my tea out of a thing no bigger than an egg-shell," he added, turning to his goest.

"Not to mention, pape, that these tiny tea-cope are quite old-fa-blooned now!" exclaimed Veronica, with a bright, saucy smile, which became her infinitely.

"Are they? How do you know? We live here, Sir John, in the most countrified of coun-try parsonages, and yet— But, upon my hon-or, I believe that if you were to stick a woman on the top of the column of St. Simeon Stylites, she would nevertheless contrive in some myste-rious way to know what was 'in fashion' and what wasn't."

"Perhaps it is a sixth sense implanted in us by nature, Uncle Charles," said Maud, demure-ly. "You know the inferior animals here these mysterious instincts,

Sir John's eyes had hitherto been contempla-Sir John's eyes had nitherto been contempla-ting the glossy coils of Veronica's ebon bair, as she bent her hend over the tea equipage. Now, he turned and regarded Mand more attentively than he yet had done.

"I beg pardon," said he to the vicar. "I thought that when you did me the honor to present me to Miss-Miss Dermott-you called her your ward?

"Yes; and so I am," answered Mand, taking no notice of the mispropunciation of her name. "I have no right whatever to call Mr. Levin-court 'Uncle Charles,' Sir John. But I have court 'Uncle Charles,' Sir John. But I have been let to do so ever since I came here as a very small child. I began by calling him 'Zio,' as Mrs. Levincourt taught me, in Italian fushiost. But very soon my British tongue translated the appellation, and my guardian has been 'Uncle Charles' ever since."

Sir John did not appear profoundly interested in this explanation, although he listened with politic attention while Mand spoke.

Presently he and the view herem discoursing

Presently he and the vicer began discoursing of foreign travel and foreign places, and the girls istened almost in silence.

"Ah!" sighed the vierr, plaintively. "Bel cielo d'Italia! I know not what price I would not pay for another glimpse of that intense living blue, after the fogs and clouds of Daneshire."

Mr. Lerincourt had succeeded in persuading himself that the three years he had spent abroad had been years of unmixed enjoyment, "I tell you what it is, Mr. Levincourt," said

Sir John, passing his bony white hand over his mustache; "Italy is not the pleasant residence for foreigners that it must have been when you next knew it. What with their unionism, and constitutionalism, and liberalism, they've sent the whole thing to the —; they've spoiled the society altogether," concluded the baronet, discreetly changing the form of his phrase.

"Heally?" first knew it. What with their unionism, and "Well, in fifty ways, things are altered for the worse, even in my experience of Italy, which dates now, at intervals, some twelve or fourteen years back. For one thing, that British Moloch, Mrs. Grundy, has begun to be set up there."

Veronica raised her eyes and uttered a little exclamation expressive of disgust, "I should not think that mattered very much,"

said Mand, half aloud.

Sir John caught the impulsively attered words, and replied at once. "Not matter? Ah, Jea-nesse! I assure you, my dear young lady, that it matters a great deal. Mrs. Grandy is a very terrible and hideous old idel indeed. She can bully you, and worry you, and rap you on the head with her twopency mooden staff."

Mand colored high at being thus addressed, but she answered bravely. "Still I can not see that she has power to hurt good people. thought it was only the professional pickpocket who objected to seeing a constable at every

Sir John Gale's studied good-breeding partook less of the nature of polish—which beautifies and displays the natural grain of the wood—then of veneer. The veneer, though not unskillfully ap-plied, occasionally cracked, revealing glimpses of a rather coarse and ugly material beneath it. He had especially an egotistical proneness to at-tribute chance allusions to himself.
"Really!" he exclaimed. "I am to conclude that you suppose that I dislike Mrs. Grundy be-eases I fear her? She is the policeman at the street corner, and your humble servant is the professional pickpocket?"

Mand looked politfully shocked. The color receded from her face, and then fushed back brighter than ever as she said, "Oh, Sir John! How could you suppose—? I—I beg your par-don. I had no intention or idea of any such

But Sir John had already begun a discussion with the vicar as to the comparative merits of Tuscan and Neupolitan wines, and seemed to have dismissed Maud's unlucky speech from

The rest of the evening passed pleasantly, un-til the early hour at which it was deemed well for the invalid to retire.

The vicar was delighted with his guest, Levincourt declared that he felt like some shipwrecked mariner who had passed years in a sav-age island, and to whose door the winds and the waves had drifted a stranger from the distant waves the united a stranger to the lands of civilization.

"It would be more civil, pape, if you had said that we were three shipwrerked mariners. A kind of Swiss Family Robinson," observed Ve-kind of Swiss Family Rosenson, ronice, laughing.

The exaggeration of all this grated on Maud's common-sense. But she repressed the protest which trembled on her lips.

"Maudie looks sagely disapproving," said
Veronica, glancing at her.

"I am disapproving myself," replied Mand.
"How pert and flippant Sir John must have "I me! My impulsive speeches are always "How pert and flippant Sir John must have thought me! My impulsive speeches are always getting me into trouble."

"Oh! I do not believe that Sir John will give the matter snother thought. But if it weighs on your conscience you can explain, the next time you see him, that—"

"Ah, no: there are some things that can not be explained—to Sir John Gale."

"Why not to him? He is not stupid."
"No, he is not stupid, hut— He is like some richly embroidered stuff I once saw: very gurgeous and magnificent at a distance, but a little coarse in the grain, and not to be touched with impunity by a sensitive skin."

"It'm! You little shy, proud, English owl!" exclaimed Veronica.

And then for a full half hour she remained staring silently into the fire, until her sotin cheeks were quite scorehed and crimson.

The next day was the nineteenth, and the two girls were in a state of agreeable excitement at the prospect of the dinner-party which awaited

The kitchen was pervaded by a smell of ironing. Josuma was smoothing out dainty little tuckers and a long white muslin skirt, over which Veronicu's gold-colored asah was presently to stream gracefully. Early in the after-noon a wooden box arrived by a special mescen-ger from Danecester, and was found to contain ger from Dancester, and was some to contain two bouquets carefully wrapped in cotton wool. Sir John Gale—who had not yet left his room at that early hour—sent Paul into the vicar's study with a little note, in which Sir John begged that the young ladies would do him the bonce to wear a few flowers that he had taken the liberty of procuring for them.

"A few flowers!" cried Veronica, with spark-ling eyes. "They are exquisite. They come from Covent Garden. There's the man's name in the law. from Covent Garden. There's the man's name in the box. Look at these white moss-roses and in the box. Look at these white moss-roses and the Cape jasmine! Your bouquet is mixed, Maudie; mine is all white. How perfect! Do look pleased, little icide!"

"I am pleased," said Maud, with a certain constraint. "And very, very much obliged."

Veronica carried the superb exotics into the kitchen, and exhibited them with transport to the servants. The young lady had a genuine passion for applause and admiration. She could not be entirely happy without an audience to witness her happiness. It had been the same from her baby days. When, as quite little girls, they had owned a shaggy pony which was sup-posed to be the joint property of the two chil-dren, Maud had heartily enjoyed trotting out into the wildest hits of country she could find; but Veronica's delight had been to find an ex-cuse for riding through the village, or even, if that might be, into Shipley Magna. And her chubby cheeks would glow and her eyes would chancy cheeks would gow and her eyes would beighten when she beard passers-by exclaiming that that was the vicar's little lass; and hadn't she a pair of eyes? And didn't she look like a fairy, flying along with her black curls streaming over her shoulders? So now, when she had the could focuse in her hand she could not be a second focus in her hand she could not seem to be a second of the could not be a second of the could not be a second of the the costly flowers in her hand, she could not resist displaying them to the servants; and she took a creamy spotless camellia from the outside of her own bouquet and laid it among the rich waves of her hair, and stood with a beaming face to be admired.

Catherine was in ecstasies, and declared, when her young mistress had gone away again, that she liked Miss Veronica, that she did, for she had such pleasant, good-natured ways with her.

But old Jounna smiled shrewdly, a that the lass was the very moral of her poor mo-ther in some things; and that a bit of show-off was the breath of her nostrils. "Not but what," added Jonnen, "Miss Veronica has more sense in her little finger than the poor missis had in all her body. And a will she has, has the lass, that's as stont as steel! A will for any thing she fancies, I mean: she can't be stubborn and strong about doing things as is only her duty. But if there's summat as she wants for her own good pleasure, you'll see she'll get it. It was the same wi' her since she could toddle, poor lass! Many a forbidden fruit she's aten, an' many a stomach-othe she's had for her pains!"

CHAPTER IX.

THE DINNER AT LOWATER.

VERY jolly Captain Sheardown looked, and very radiant his wife, as they welcomed the party from the vicarage into their warm, well-lighted drawing-room,

"Your reverence has had a cold drive," said Captain Sheardown, jocularly. And then he and the vicar and Mr. Snowe-who, with his son, Herbert, had arrived not many minutes previously-stood on the hearth-rug and talked | of the weather, and the hunting, and the Colenso | controversy, or whatsoever topic was then chief-ly arousing the attention of the British public. Mrs. Sheardown, meanwhile, welcomed the girls, and installed them in comfortable arm-chairs, me on either side of her. Nelly Sheardown was about thirty-five years old. She had not been married more than eight years, for she and the captain had been constant to each other through t long engagement; and Tom Sheardown's head was gray before he could declare that his fight with fortune was fought out, and could claim Nelly Cherbrook for his wife. He was twenty years her senior; and there appeared to be even more difference between their ages. For Mrs. Sheardown looked younger now than she had done before her marriage, during the weary years of waiting that had sickened the heart with hope deferred, and graven lines in the fare.

How is your guest?" asked Mrs. Sheardown of Veronica.

"Sir John is getting much better: nearly well, thank you. It is such a comfort for papa to feel assured that all danger is over. It was a great responsibility, you know, having a total stranger in the house in that state;" thus, Verenica. "None of his relations came to see him?"

"He has lived abroad, and has no family ties in England, Mrs. Sheardown."

"Poor old man! It is a louely position for Verenica gave a rapid glance at her hostess's honest face, and then buried her own among her

Mand laughed heartily. "Dear Mrs. Shear-down," she said, "do you know I have a notion that Sir John Gale does not by any means look upon himself in that light."

"In what light?"

"As a 'lonely old man.'"
"Oh! I thought—I didn't know

"Lady Alicia Renwick," cried Captain Shear-down's old servent, throwing open the door. And the hostess rose and went to welcome the new arrival.

edy Alicia Renwick was the daughter of a Scotch peer, and the widow of a gentleman who had made a large fortune in some iron-works. Still further to the south than Danecester was a great black district whose horizon glared at night with a hundred lurid fires. And there the de-ceased Mr. Renwick had owned strange-looking brick structures, like pyramids with the angles rounded off, and with smoke and flame issuing rounded off, and with smoke and flame issuing from their summits. Lady Alicia did not in-herit all the gold that was melted out of the iron ore in these grimv crucibles. Mr. Renwick had a numerous family by a former wife, and had-provided for them all, handsomely. But his-relict enjoyed an income which would have ap-peared princely in her mailen eyes, and which she now characterized as "gented starvation," For there is nothing we become more easily accustomed to than the possession of riches. And a genuine love of money is one of the few passions that age, with its hollow voice crying "All is vanity!" has no power to weaken.

Alicia was a tall, handsome, stiff old lady, who took a gloomy view of life, and whe had a good deal of wit of a dry, bitter, biting flavor.

Her ladyship's entrance into the room was closely followed by that of a gentleman. Cap-tain Sheardown, after having greeted Lady Alicia, called to him, Come here, Hugh. I want to introduce you to the vicar of Shipley. Mr. Levincourt, this is my young friend Hugh Lockwood. You may have beard me speak of his father."

"Who is the gentleman?" asked Lady Alicia, half aside, of Mrs. Sheardown, and looking across the room as she spoke, with a not unfavorable glance,

"Mr. Hugh Lockwood, Lady Aliria, You has his farber was a may remember, perhaps, that his father was a great protege of the old Admiral many, many years ago, that is, before I ever saw my hus-

"Oh, ay, to be sure! I recollect it all very "Ob, ay, to be sure! I regollect it all very well, now. Robert Lockwood was a Daneshire man born and bred. He came of humble folks, small tradespeople in Shipley Magna, but he had an aspiring soul, and he got it into his head that he was born to be a great painter. Admiral Sheardown had a taste for the arts, and helped the lad to an education. And that is his son, eh? Not had-looking!"

Mrs. Sheardown explained in a few words that

Mrs. Sheardown explained in a few words that Hugh's father had done credit to his patron's discrimination, and had attained a good position among British artists. Robert Lockwood had died some years ago. His son was articled pupil to an architect in London; and having bad occasion to visit Dancesters on reofessional having casion to visit Danecester on professional busi-ness, Captain Sheardown had invited the young man to stay for a few days at Lowater House, Presently arrived Dr. Begbie, rector of Hammick, with his wife and daughter, and Miss Boyce, a lady who was staying at the rectory on a visit; and these completed the number of invited guests.

Botsy Boyce, as her friends and acquaintances called her, was a simpering, lively old lady who prided herself on her thorough knowledge of "society." She lived in London when she did not happen to be visiting at some country house. But her residence in the metropolis was never protracted; and her address when there was not revealed to many persons. She called cousins with half the sames in the Peerage; and indeed Miss Boyce found a phrase or two out of that august volume act as on "open sesame" to many a comfortable home where bed and board were at her service for as long as she chose to remain. She was herself perfectly good-humored and humble minded; and, despite her eccentricities, she was liked and esteemed by those people who knew her best. But she had taken up the Peer-

Mussalman divine adopts the Koran. She lived by its aid very comfortably; whereas Miss Eliza beth Sophia Augusta Boyce, with very few pounds per annum to call her own, and without any aristocratic connections, would have found it a rather hard task to make both ends meet. "Besides, my dear," she would say, confidentially, to some intimate friend, "I don't really humbug may hody. Papa and mamma were both thoroughly well connected. It never did them any good that I know of; but you see it is a great mercy for me. If it were not for my family and my knowledge of who's who, I might mope by myself in a dingy lodging from January to December. And for me, who am the most sociable creature living, and who detest solitude, it is really and truly a blessing and a most providential circumstance that there are persons who care very much for that kind of thing."

Miss Hoyce, then, was not undely proud of her descent, but she had a pet vanity, founded —as are not most of our vanities?—on a much less real and solid basis of fact; she had somehow lost her reckening of time, thought berself still an attractive-looking woman, and devoutly believed that markind was deluded by her wig. Captain Sheardown gallantly led out Lady Alicia Renwick to dinner, and the rest followed in due order. To old Mr. Snowe, the banker, was allotted the honor of conducting Miss Boyce. Mr. Snowe was a slow-witted, matter-of-fact man. His manner was pompous, and the habitual expression of his heavy face seemed to say, with an air of purzled surprise, "God idess my soul! If I did not know myself to be so very important a personage, I should suspect you to be laughing

During the early part of the dinner Mr. Snowe was too honestly engreesed in eating and drink-ing to pay much attention to his neighbor; but when the later stages of the repast arrived he found himself compelled to observe Miss Boyce's lavish coils of false hair, flowing curis, and colos sal chignon. He became a prey to a species of fascination that obliged him to watch some delicare artificial flowers which erowned the lady's head-genr, and which nodded, shook, and trembled, without intermission, in dumb accompaniment to their wearer's vivacious flow of talk.

The dinner-party passed pleasantly under the genial influence of the best and hostese. When Dr. Begbie rose, and, in an effective speech, rolled out in his richest tones, proposed the health of his dear friends, Captain and Mrs. Sheardown, and wished them many happy returns of that anspecious day, the general enthu-siasm was quite andent. Even Lady Alicia de-sired the servant to fill her glass a bumper, and grasped her bost's hand with her bony fingers as she tossed off the Champagne.

Mrs. Begbie shed tears. But that may have been from hahit; for Mrs. Begbie always made a point of crying at her husband's sermons. And perhaps his manly voice, alone, had power affect her. As compensation, how when Captain Sheardown returned thanks, Mrs.

Begbie was perfectly dry-eyed.

When the ladies left the table—by which time Mr. Enowe was openly and undisquisedly con-templating Miss Boyce's luxuriant locks with a fixed and stony glare-and returned to the drawing-room, they resumed a theme which had been discussed at the dianer-table, and on which Lady Alicia and Betsy Boyce were the chief talk ers.

"Gale? Gale?" said Miss Boyce, meditative ly. "No such name among the people I know. Sir John Gale! Never heard of him."

"How very strange!" marriard of him."

"How very strange!" marriared Mrs. Begbie.

"But there must be some people, I suppose, of whom Miss Boyce never heard?" said Lady Alicia. She spoke with a strong Scotch accent, rolling her r's very much, and pronounced "never heard" "never hard."

"Millions!" exclaimed Miss Boyce, absolutely squeaking in her desire to be emphatic.

"Oh, millions! Your ladyship's married name, for instance, was quite unfamiliar to me, al-for instance, was quite unfamiliar to me, al-though I remember very well—that is, I have often heård mamma speak of your father, Lord Strathgorm.

Lady Alicia smiled grimly. "Well," said she, "my dear Miss Boyce, ye might very well remember poor page yourself, for he only died in the spring of "thirty."

"Goodness!" exclaimed Miss Begbie, clasp-ing her hands. "Suppose Sir John Gale should turn out to be an impostor! A highwayman, or something. No: I don't mean a highway-man; I believe there are no highwaymen now, but I mean a swindler, or something; don't you know? Goodness!"

"Nonsense, Emmy!" said Miss Begbie's Verenica's face looked unutterable mamma. scorn, but she said nothing. The hostess asked Miss Beghie to play for them, and that young lady complied, not unwillingly. She drew very good music out of the grand piano. Her mother was complacent. Lady Alicia listened with a softened face. Betsy Boyce's ringlets quiv-ered again as she nodded her head in time to a walts of Chopin. Upon this peaceful scene the gentlemen entered in a body. Captain Sheardown took a seat beside Miss Boyce, and made her a few gallant speeches.

her a few gallant speeches.

"Go along, you false crenture!" cried Miss Betsy, smiling and tossing her head, "Men were deceivers ever. One foot on sen, and one on shore. Exactly! And you sailor animals are the most faithless of all. But I always loved the blue jackets from a girl, from a mere child! I recollect a most charming creature with whom I once fell desperately in love. He was an Ad-miral of the Red, and had only one leg, and a frightful scar on his face where a cutless had gashed one of his eyebrows in two. He was seventy-four, and I adored him. It was in Ire-

age as a kind of profession, just as rome reverend | land, at Delaney Park, in the year after-in short, I was a more buby, not fifteen!"

"At Delaney Park? Really! That was your grandpape's place, Mand, was it not?" asked

Mrs. Sheardown.

"Possible! Are you of the Delances of Delancy, Miss Desmond? Ah, I remember the youngest girl married Sidney Desmond. To be sure! The eldest, Hilds, made a great marriage laney, Miss Desmond? at the end of her first season. Poor girl? II'm, h'm, h'm? What is she doing, poor Lady Tallis? And where is she? No one hears or sees any thing of her now,"

"We do not hear very often from my Aunt Hilds," said Masol, gravely. "Do you want me to accompany that song of Schumann's for you, Mr. Snowe? Mand walked away to the plane, and Betsy Boyce poured into the greedy cars of Mrs. Beg-bie and the old banker a rorical of Lody Tallis a

"It was considered a great match, the match of the year (excepting, of course, the young Earl of Miniver, who was, you know, the richest minor in England, and married Lady Ermengarde Ermine, the day after he came of age;; and, I remember, poor old Sir William Delaney was so delighted."

Mrs. Beglös, who was transported with delight at heating &r friend and visitor so fluent and fa-miliar with these noble names, shook her bead gently, and said that that was what came of worldliness. And how strange it was that pa-rents should seek beartless grandeur for their children! For her part, she fervently trusted that Emmy would choose the bester part, and look for sound principles in her hasband, pre-ferring them to wealth or rank. Though, on the score of birth (if Emmy were influenced by such mandane attractions), there were few families to whose alliance she might not aspire, her grandfather on one side having been a Gufferand it was unnecessary to say that the Gaffers were among the few old pure Sexon families extant-and her paternal great-grandmamma a De-

Wynkyn,
"How was it, then?" asked Mr. Snowe, senior, deliberate tone. "Do I follow in his pompous, deliberate tone. "Do I follow you? Was Lody Tallie's marriage an inauspiclous one, hey?

"Mercy on us!" cried Betsy Boyce. auspicious! Her husband is one of the most dreadful persons! Hilda Delaney was a pretty, good-natured fool when he married her. It was like the wolf and the lamb; he gobbied her up in no time—crimehod her bones. 8
" Law!" exclaimed Miss Emmy.

"Law!" exclaimed Miss Emmy.

Mr. Snowe cast a redling and rather bewildered glance around. "That," said he, impressively, "is shocking, indeed."

"But how do you mean, Miss Boyce?" said Emmy, who took things a little literally, and was excessively inquisitive. "Of course I know was excessively inquisitive. "Of course I know that Lady Tallis was not really gobbled up-he, be, he! you have such funny sayings—but what did her husband do?"

Herbert Snowe's song ceased at this moment, and the conversation at the other end of the room came to an abrupt close.

Before the party broke up Mrs. Sheardown came and sat by the viear of Shipley, and told him, smilingly, that she had a potition to prefer to him. Não wanted him to allow Maud to remain at Lowater for a few days. The captain and she would bring Mand in to Shipley when they came to Church on Sunday; meanwhile they would send to the vicarage for any thing she might need. In short, they had set their hearts on it, and Mr. Levincourt must not refuse.

"I suspect you are not often accustomed to have any request of yours refused, Mrs. Shear-down," said the virar, gallantly. "If Mand be have any request or yours refused, Mrs. Shear-down," said the vicar, gallantly. "If Mand he willing—as, no doubt, she is—I consent with pleasure to her remaining."

Presently, Mand made her way quietly across the room to Veronica. The latter was scated on a small ottoman, which was made to hold only two persons, and was so contrived that one of its occupants must turn his back on the com-pany in the descriptor room while the other forced pany in the drawing room while the other faced them. Veronica was leaning back against the crimson cushion. The dark rich back-ground enhanced the purity of her white dress and the pearly tints of her shoulders. Familiar as her beauty was to Maud, she yet passed an instant to look admiringly on the picture presented by the vicar's daughter. Veronira was radiant with gratified vanity and the consciousness of being admired. It heightened the bloom on her cheek, and made her eyes bright with a liquid

As Maud approached, a gentleman, who had been occupying the other seat on the ottoman, rose to yield it to her.

Do not let me disturb you "I merely wished to say a word to Miss Levin-court."

The young man bowed, and walked a few Maud told her friend of Mrs. Sheardown's invitation.

A strange look passed over Veronica's face, At first it seemed like a flash of satisfaction; but then came an expression of regret; almost, one would have said, of a momentary alarm. "Shall you stay, Mandie?" said she, taking the other girl's hand in both her own.

"Uncle Charles has said that I may, and—

"Onese Charles has said that I may, and—
But I will not stay, dear, if you think it solfish, or if you finey you will miss me."
"Of course I shall miss you, Mandie,"
"Then I won't stay. I will tell Mrs. Shenr-

At this moment Emma Begbie came up to them, giggling after her manner, which was half spiteful, whole silly.

"My goodness, Miss Levincourt!" she ex-claimed, bending over the ottoman, "what a flirtation you have been having with that young Lockwood! What is he like to talk to?

"Very much like a gentleman," answered Verenica, with cold hauteur.

"Oh gravious! But he isn't really one, you know. Ludy Alicia knows all about his father, He was quite a common person. But isn't be handsome, this young man? You must mind what you are about if you stay in the same house with him, Miss Desmond, for I am sure Miss Lesineourt would never forgive you if you were Levineourt would never forgive you if you were to make yourself too agreeable to him. She eridently looks upon him as her conquest. Don't you, Miss Letineourt? He, be, he?

Veronien looked after her scornfully as she went away. "What an ill-bred idiot that gird is?" she said. Then, ofter a moment, she added, "Of course I shall nois you, Mandie. But you must stay. You will not be away very long?"

"Oule till Sanday. Was that gentleman who was talking to you Mr. Lockwood? I had not been introduced to him."

"Yes. Good-night, Mandie. The fly is come, I suppose, for I see paper telegraphing arross the room. Good-by."

Veronien three herself back in a corner of the Verenica threw herself back in a corner of the fly, wrapped in her warm shaul and hood, and remained sileur. The vierr fell asleep. In about ten minutes their vehicle drew aside to allow an-other carriage to pass. It was the well-appointed equipage of the rector of Hammick. The dashed along swiftly, their silver-mounted harness glistening in the mounlight.

Vermica drew still further back into her corner and closed her eyes. But she did not sleep. Her brain was busy. And the joking of the emzy old by from the Crown Inn at Shipley Magna kept up a seet of rhethmic accompani-ment to the dance of strange fancies, hopes, and plans that whirled through her mind.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

"Event thing has its use," said a philosophical professor to his class. "Of what use is a drankard's deep red nose?" asked one of the papils. "H's a light-house," answered the professor, "to were no of the little water that passes undermeath it, and reminds us of the shoule of appetite, on which we night otherwise be wrecked."

At a fishionable church, where pews are eagerly snapped up at about a thousand dollare each, a young man and his newly-married wife recently attended public worship for two or three fishbaths, and were so well pleared with the preacher that they resolved to attend regularly.

Accordingly, as they passed out one Sanday, the gentleman, calling the sexton saide, says, paircolaingly:

"Nee here, I think, on the whole, I'll come here to thurch. New, I want to hire two seats—good sexts, mind you on the lower floor, and now let me see all that you have to let."

"To let! did I understand you?" inquired the exaten.

ton.
"Yes; I don't mind paying four or five deliars extra for two choice broad aisie seats," replied the op-

"Young man," said the somewhat practical cus-tedian, "we have so seats 'to let," we do not do a retail business at this home."

A GAME OFTEN HEARD OF, BUT NEVER PLATED-"Cricket on the bearth."

* A DOMESTIC SONG.

From rows more to dewy eve, who is it makes my soul to grieve, and after all doth take Preach leave? My Biddy. Who rousts my meet into a cool, who breaks my nicost china bord, and was she "didn't on her sew!?" My Biddy. Who polithes the hitchen floor, said is helf an hear or more has it portiely as before? My Biddy. My pocket handkerchiefs and hose, who confective, under the rese, and wears by turps my nicost clothes? My Biddy. Who comes and goes whene'er she chooses, injures whetever thing she uses, and now and then to work refuser? My Biddy. Who clams, not beings, and breaks, and amachos, who town, and reofs, and knocks, and dashes, who tipe, and splits, and elpidy. And shall I ever cover to be is hondage unto such as thee? My way is dark—I can pot set. For Biddy. I only know my misery; I only wish thee over the sea; I only wish that I were free. From Biddy.

We have often heard of ships running into one another, but the other day we actually saw a bouse fly.

SINGLE BLESSEDNESS.

Let no repugnance to a simple state.
Lead to a unjon with a worthless mate;
Although 'lis true you'll find full many a fool
Wunkl make old maids the best of ridicule.
A single lady, though advanced in life,
Is much more happy than an ill-matched wife.

Some one was talking the other day of the inconveniences which the Siamere Twins must suffer in being bound together by a ligature which could serve be severed, when Robinson excludence, strack by a happy thought, "What a good thing it is that they are brothers! Just longing what they would suffer if they were strangers to each other?"

"Do you," said Frany t'other day,
"In carnest love me sa you say?
Of late those tender words applied Alike to fifty girls beside."

"Bear crost girl," oried 1, "forbear, She stopped me as the oath I took, And cried, "You've aween, now kiss the book!"

A wit being told that an old acquaintance was married, exclained, "I am glad to have it." But refecting a normant, he added, he a tone of compassion and furgiveness, "And yet I don't know why I should be; he never did me any harm."

REPARTEE.

"The brase upon your face," he said,
"Would make a four-quart shalle,"
"Your Hone's bend," the girl replied,
"Has sap enough to fill it."

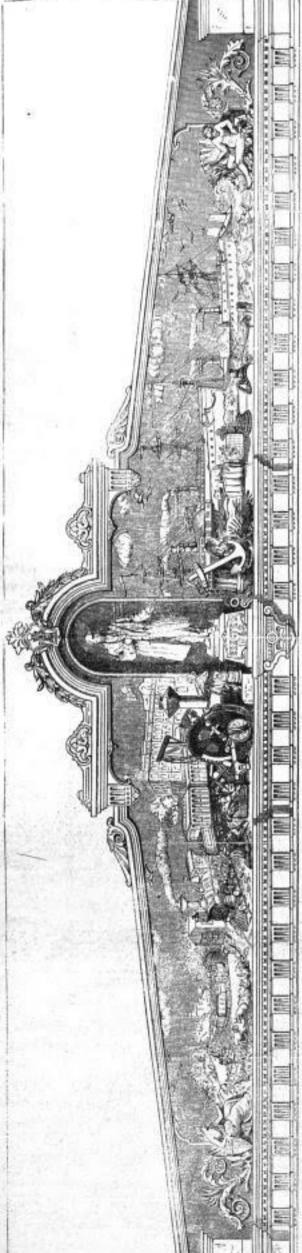

A Shourd Distraction.— This medicine," said Dr. Squills, "after having been taken for a few days, will produce the change desired."

"What!" exclaimed the thunder-strack patient, "you don't say as, doctor?"

"It's a fact, Nir," said the doctor; "the science of reedfries has now reached."

"Well," said the patient, interruptine him, "It is sensetful! If you'd said pertage-exampe, doctor, I sensid not have said say thing; but the desired change, doctor, it seems impossible."

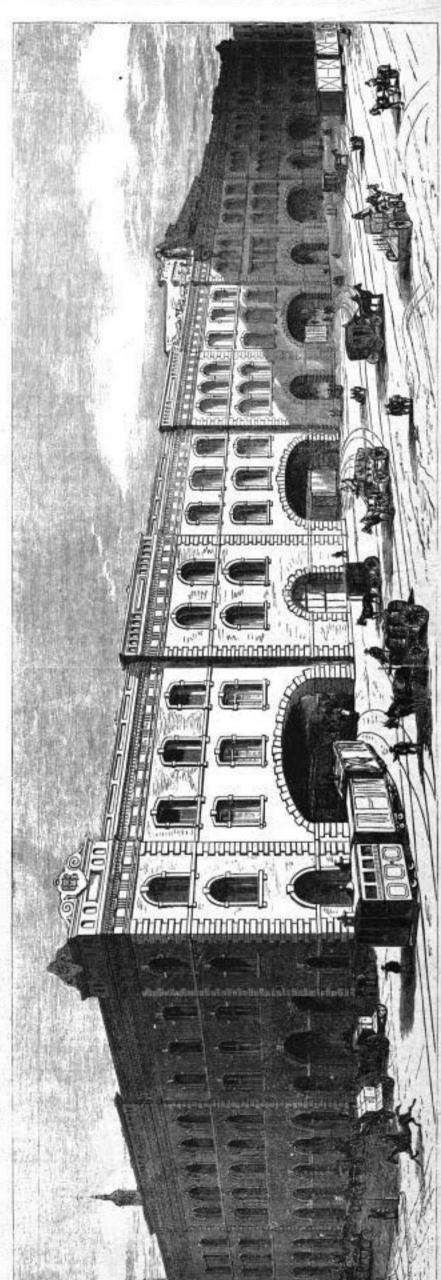

A little girl, whose father had forgotten, at a dis-ner-party, to help ker, on swelly the many but to his dog, exclaimed, "Paper, the manually does "

BRONZE MONUMENT AT THE NEW HUDGON RIVER RAILROAD DÉPOT, HUDGON STREET, NEW

EARLY in October is to be merelial the ca-le-cal beams state of Commodore VANDER into with its allegoried scressories, of which we give an illustration on this page. This mone-ment is exerted on the simmle of the western wall of the zerr Hudson River Railroad Dejot, THE VANDERBILL MONUMENT.

situated or at the cor This work Dugmoor, rently con the Hudso of the Nio

ARCHITECT; PETER T. O'BRIES, BUIL. HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD DÉPOT, HUDSON STREET, NEW YORK CITY.-J. B. SNOOK, THE NEW

feet in extreme height; weighs, we believe, nearly 100,000 pounds; and cost, as nearly as can be ascertained, over $500,000. It consists of an immense broaze statue of Commodure Vaxtuazantz, placed in the centre of a colossal bass-relief, which is contrived not only to illustrate the career and achievements of the Commodore, but career and achievements of the Commodore, but also to represent the marvelous inventions of the nineteenth century, and at the same time to pertray allegorically the growth and prosperity of the great American Republic.

The hase line upon which the bass-relief is creeted is a narrow tier of blue-stone. In the centre, just beneath this, and solidly inserted in the dejot wall, is a huge carved block of genuite weighing eleven tons. On this rests a bronze pedestal 5 feet square, 15 feet high, and bearing the inscription, "Erected 1868." On the pedestal, within a spacious arched recess, stands the stance. This is 12 feet high, nearly solid, weighs four tons, and is the largest in America, if not statine. This is 12 feet high, nearly solid, weighs four tons, and is the largest in America, if not in the world. It represents the Commodore with head uncovered and wearing a heavy for-trimmed over-coat, his left foot slightly advanced, his right hand inserted beneath his vest, and his left extended. The bass-relief is 10 feet high at the ends, and is surrounded by an elegant granite comice, which slopes gradually upward for about one-third the length from each extremity, turns suddenly up, runs along harizontally, and finally suddenly up, runs along horizontally, and finally forms an arch in the centre over the statue. The middle portion of the cornice is decorated with ornamental work in bronze. The beas-relief is ornamental work in bronze. The beas-relief is terminated at each end by massive scroll-work representing leaves and plants.

On the right hand, between the statue and the scroll, is represented the Commodore's marine life, and on the left his railroad life. At the right hand, in the fore-ground, appears, in a reclining position, Neptune, with flowing beard, a wreath of leaves on his head, his right hand grasping a rudder, a sea-monster rising from the water at his feet, and a raccoon peering around the corner of the rocks on which he rests.

In the back-ground at the right arise the forest-

In the back-ground at the right arise the forest-crowned Palisades of the Hudson, then a lighthouse is seen, and then appears, rocking on the waves of bronze, the Dred, the little two-masted "perianger," in which, half a century ago, young Mr. VANDERBULT carried passengers from New York to Staten Island at 25 cents a head. Next comes, much greater in size, completely rigged, and under full headway, the famous steamer North Stor, in which the Commodore made his well-remembered voyage round the world.

Finally the climax is capped by the huge form of the steamer Vanderbilt, also completely rigged, and plowing along at full speed. In the middle fore ground a dock appears, on which are coils of rope, bananas, pine-apples, and other tropical fruits, a huge and savage watch-dog crouched on a cotton hole, and lastly, next to the statue, a massive capstan, anchor, and chain. At the extreme left, to match the figure of Neuture on the treme left, to match the figure of Neptune on the right, Liberry, guardian of the scane, sits error with flowing tresses and drapery, her left hand holding a sword, and her right arm resting on the national shield, from behind which an engle is emerging. In the back-ground rises a woody slope, and in the front a rude fence appears, and then two cows, one idly whisking her tail and the other lying down. Back of these an engine drawing a train of cars is entering a tunnel be-neath a forest-covered hill, and still farther in the rear is a gentle eminence crowned with a villa. In the middle of the fore-ground a switchman, flag in hand, is just stepping from the door of his little house.

GENERAL EDMOND LEBOUF, THE NEW FRENCH MINISTER OF WAR.

Captain DEGROOT is certainly catitled to great penise for the boldness and originality of his de-signs in this great work, and also for the faith-ful and assiduous labor he has devoted to it from its inception to its final completion. The Fischer Brothers, and the sculptor, Plassman, are entitled to the lest praise for the admirable manner in which they performed their labors, and may be congratulated upon the success that has attended their efforts.

GENERAL LEBGUF, FRENCH MINISTER OF WAR.

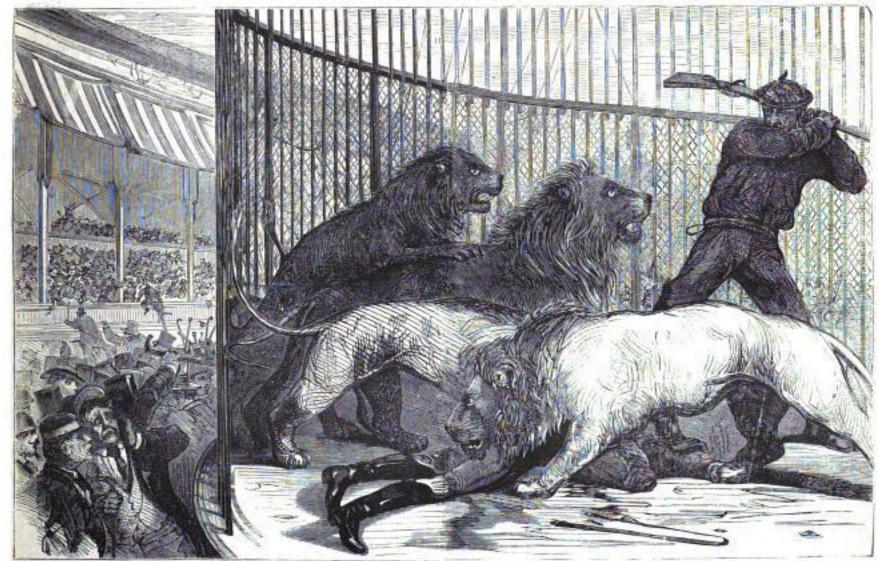

By an imperial decree, dated August 21,

By an imperial decree, dated August 21, General Laboure, communiting the Sixth Corps d'Arnée, was appointed Minister of War to succeed Marshal Nica, deceased,
General Edonous Laboure is physically the biggest man in the French army. He was born in 1803, and entered the service through the Polytechnic School, and the Ecole d'Application of Meta, whence he energed a full-blown Lieutenaut of artillery in 1803. His promotion was very rapid. His brilliant conduct at the engagement rapid. His brilliant conduct at the engagement of the Iron Gates in Algoria attracted the attention of the Orleans Princes, who took a lending just in that engagement, and he obtained his t apraincy in 1847. Like his predecessor, Mar-shal Nava, he distinguished himself greatly at the siege of Constantina, and was rewarded by the Cross of the Legion of Henor, and a montion in the general orders of the army. In 1840 he got a further step in the Legion of Honor for the skill and sang-freid with which he protected the retreat of a French column which was in the retrent of a French column which was in danger of being cut off by the Kabyles. Two years later he was made a Colonel. In 1854 he went to the Crimea as head of the artillery staff with the rank of Major-General, and took a prominent part in the battle of the Alma. He was appointed Lieutemant-General in 1857, and two years later the whole of the artillery of the Italian expedition was placed under his supreme command. The French say but for his timely aid in bringing up an overwhelming number of guns to bear on the Austrian right, commanded by Benneuer, Victor Emanuel's army at folferino would have been crushed, and the position of the French army seriously compromised. Since then he has commanded the camp at Chalons, and in 1866 it was he who was dispatiched to Venice to receive the province from the Austrian Government. From 1848 to 1850 he was in command of the Polystehnic School, and at that time be was popular with his advancion account of his liberal views, and his abborrence of matteriors. count of his liberal views, and his abhorrence of martinetism. His friends state that he is an able and fluent speaker, and a good administra-

DEATH OF THE LION-TAMER LUCAS, IN PARIS.

Thu tragedy which we illustrate on this page took place at the Hippodoune at Paris on the 18th of August.

About four o'clock the great lion-cage, as was the custom every day, was brought into the areun, All four of the lions unliked around with such calmness as to in-pire no fear. Puring some days just Leeas had noticed their agitation; the previous Sunday, on beginning his second Tharing some representation, he had said, "Two exhibitions in one day are too much.

THE LION-TAMER LUCAS, IN THE PARIS HIPPODROME, ATTACKED AND FATALLY INJURED BY HIS LIONS.

The lion-tamer entered the cage and commenced his exercises with a few strokes of the whip. The animals awoke and began to growl; then, when Lucks undertook to make them lie down by the power of his eye alone, a lioness sprang on him and threw him on the ground. The erowd uttered shricks of terror, tried to rise, but the great lion threw himself on his breast and thus rendered it impossible for him to stir. In this position two of the beasts seized their keeper, one by the thigh and the other by the neck, and buried their teeth in his Then a servant of Lucas, who had never before been near the animals, entered the cage, and seizing a musket, begun beating the terrible enemies with all his might, "Go away, go away!" cried Locas, "leave me to die alone." the groom redoubled his blows, answering, "I will die with von."

Indeed, the unhappy man would doubtless have been devoured, like his master, had not one of the four animals, a blind lioness, thrown herself furiously into the midst of the sanguinary group and thus dispersed them.

Lucas was at last drawn out of the cage, mu-tilated and covered with blood. His servant followed him, not having received a wound. This brave fellow, whose name is Perk, is of Spanish Before belonging to Lucas, in whose service he had been for about eighteen months, he was attached to the Madrid circus, kept by Revis. M. Revis is now the owner of the four lions of the Hippodrome, which have been previcesly exhibited at the Cirque and Porte Saint Martin, and which have already caused the death

After receiving the attentions of a physician, the keeper was carried to the house of his fatherin-law. The physicians counted twenty-five wounds, three of which were very severe; one in the threat and right check; another in the left arm, at least an inch and a half deep, and presenting a gaping opening as large as a silver dollar; and the third in the thigh. The other twenty-two were in the mouth, hands, breast, and other portions of the bode.

The admirable devotion of the servant, PRPS, was serveranded. The hon-tomer, Lucas, died August 23, in the most terrible agonics.

FRENCH SENATUS CONSULTUM.

THE Paris Journal Official publishes the text of the Senatus Consultum, which is promulgated in the name of the Emperor, and is signed by Rouber and countersigned by Duvergier. The following is a synopsis of the document:

Act. 1. The Emperor and the Corpe Logicistif have the jetvilege of isotiating have,
Act. 2. The Ministers are dependent on the Emperor; they deliberate under his providency, are responsible, but can only be impeated by the Senate.
Act. 3. The Ministers reay be members of either Chamber; they have free access to said the right to speak in both,
Act. 4. The eithings of the Senate are upon to the public, but on demand of five members the Senate may be into access the senior.

many po into secret secolos.

Act. 5. The Senate, wher pointing out modifications in a fell, may seed it took for further consideration in the Corps Legislatts. It may in my care oppose the promotigation of a bill, and in such case the till can not be proceeded in the Corps Legislatif again during the same secolors.

not be proceeded in the Corps Legislatif again during the same scholor.

Art. 6. The Corps Legislatif elects its own officers at the optising of each review. The bende and the Corps Legislatif make their own internal regulations. Act. 7. Every individual mamber of the Sente and Corps Legislatif make their own internal regulations. Act. 7. Every individual mamber of the Sente and corps hard-building the right of mirror latings. Volume of consistence or visual of confidence context to be received to the Barceira and mathematic fight whenever the towermound deniends it, and the lineaus will then appoint a companion to consider the matter, on whose report the Corps will decide printing in everyl or reject the vote. Corps will decide whether to accept or reject the vote.

Art. 8. No amendment of a bill ran be discussed un-

Art. 8. No americant of a full ran be discussed unless it has been previously sold to the committee which considered the bill, and also commonly act to the discussion of the forestment and the committee disagree on the americant, the Council of State chall pronounce its opinion; but the final decision rosts with the Coups Legishiti.

Act. 8. The tendents are persented and wated by chapters and articles.

Act. 16. All modifications in customs to postal facility made through province with feesing nations will require a law to make them binding.

Act. 16. The relations of the Empene, Sense, and Copp Legislatic fire changes only in so for as they are modified by this Sensitis Coupsting. Their formal increasure will be settled hereafter by Imperial decree.

Act. 12. Crytain articles of the Constitution, Incomeletent with the above provisions, are almogated

POWERS THAT MAY BE.

THE English are inquiring very anxiously, what are we to do when our cool is all hurned and before a century has rolled away this question will be a distressing one for Eu and. manufactures depend upon coal Is it possible for her to utilize petroleum instead of coel? A series of elaborate experiments, authorized by the Government of the United States, resulted in the decision, "That convenience, comfort, health, and safety are against the us of petroleom in steam vessels; and that the only advantage thus far shown is a not very important reduction in bulk and weight of feel corried. One American scientific periodical strongly deeried its superiority from an economical point of riew, and proved that the heat from oil costs double that from ceal, the quantity being measured by the work done in evaporating water; but this estimate was based upon the present relative cost of the two materials. When coal grows dear, the aspect of the comparison will be al-tered, especially if, as is pre-anable, oil should become cheaper.

Among the undeveloped sources of host, of which greater or less reservoirs are contained within or upon the earth, natural gas suggests itself to the mind that has been thinking of minitself to the mind that has been thinking of min-eral oil. What are the processes at work in the subterranean laboratories it is not our purpose i to question; but it is certain that the result of one or some of them is the generation of com-bustible gas like that which we are barning in our streets and houses, and squandering with a recklessness fearful to contemplate, if we at all heed economy in the matter of the blessings that Nature has vouchsafed to us. It may be that this gas is distilled by the earth's internal heat from beds of coal or coal oil; and if so, we may look for the vapor where we find the substance. It is, perhaps, not generally known that the Chinese are, and doubtless were centuries before us, great consumers of gas, if not manufacturers of it. Their borers for salt-water often pierce beds of coal, and the inflammable vapor streams out in great jets that reach to a height of twenty or thirty feet. With the tart of civil-ized gas-fitters, the mit-makers eatch the gas from these fountains, lead it by pipes to their works, and consume it in beiling down and eraporating the water for recovery of its sa-line constituents. Then, too, the tubes are hild through the streets and into houses and kitchens, and the gas is burned for illuminating purposes. The excess-for more is given of than is wanted-is conducted out into the try, and burned for the sake of getting rid of it. are not told that the Chinese work engines with their copious fuel, but one would not be surprised to hear that they have been doing so for ages; indeed, we would not be astonished if it should turn out that they have been telegraphing since the Deluge, and have photographic portraits of their great-grandfathers,

The American oil regions furnish an abundant supply of rendy-made gas, which has sometimes given gas companies cause to be apprehensive of failing profits. The town of Fredonia, in New York State, is lighted throughout by the outpourings from the terrestrial gasometer, and in many places the natural gas is extensively burned for steam generation. A notable instance is that of a large brass factory in Erie belonging to Messrs. Jarecki & Co. For more than two years they have drawn their fire and light from an unproductive oil well, which makes up for its barrenness of fluid by an inexbanstible yield of gas. A three-inch main is constantly charged, at a uniform pressure, and conveys the gas from its source, over a distance of 1200 feet, to the factory. The gas is of good lighting quality, and when it is not wanted, as on Sundays and during the night, it is led up a high shaft and set alight pro bows publics. What has become of the larning wells once known in England? Have they given out? or is their gas still escap-ing? or is it flowing into the coal mines, to the endangerment of the miners' lives? Supposing there is still a supply, is it worth collecting? Not now, perhaps; but if it lasts, its time may come.

A power that not only may be, but can be now, and ought to be utilized, is that which is derivable from the rise and fall of tidal waters. This is one, too, that especially concerns us, seeing the extent of our sea-board and the number of our tidal rivers. The source of motion that is here offered us is of incalculable extent; it is surprising how little has been done toward turning it to account. Not only is the rise and fall of water to be taken advantage of; there is the convard motion, the convey Water-wheele may be streams to be employed. Water-wheele may be turned by this means, while the head of water gained by the rising tide can, if projectly hardened to drive turnels or reservoirs, he made to drive convard motion, the closing and flowing of tidal streams to be employed. Water-wheele may be vested by pouls or reservoirs, be made to drive other wheels and machines of the turbine chararter-n class of movers not very well known at the present time. There is no reason why our sen side towns and fishing villages should not be the sents of manufacture, and the time may come when they will be so; or if the work can not be carried to the sea-rosst to be done, there is no reason why the power should not be impped there, and conveyed wherever it is wanted, know that electric wires are capable of carrying considerable amounts of motive force over long distances. A little battery in London mores a needle in Edinburgh; a weak current generated at the Greenwich Observatory traverses a telegraph line and pulls the trigger of a gun at Neweastle, while another current from the same place rens to Deal and works certain levers that let fall a time-signal ball. There does not appear to be any strong reason why the principle here involved should not be extended to the transmission of great powers from places where the force is most easily generated to others where it can be most advantageously applied to mechan-ical jumposes. It may be asked, what a tide-mill has to do with a galvanic battery? To which we would reply that the modern doctrine of the correlation of forces shows that any one description of force can be converted into any other description. Mechanical force, like that of a water-mill, can be turned into heat, or into electricity, or first into hent and then into electricity, or vice versa. Leaving electricity out of the question, there are other means of transporting power from place to place. One of the most simple of these is by compressed air, a medium not yet half appreciated. There is no question but that a deal of wasse is involved in the practice of making locometors carry with them the means of generating their power, instead of carrying that power rendy made—a plan that might be used in some cases, though of course nor of universal application. It has been tried, or suon is to be, in this country: a locomotive ear is to be driven by bottled-up air, highly com-The car station is to be formished with present. an engine to pump the air into reservoirs, two of which are to be attached to the car for each journey of ten miles length, and the stored-up force is to be converted into wheel-driving power by a small engine tixed underseath the carriage. May success attend the trial, and induce engineers to give attention to the important problem—the storage of force! This is the one thing needful for turning to useful account more than one powerful element of nature that is at present wasting itself on nothing, or else doing fearful damage. What a grand thing it would be if the hurricane's power could be entrapped and made a slave of! and why should it not be? Look at what the wind has done for Holland, and what it is doing all the world over on small scales: it is ready for work, a willing and a powerful servant, wanting only tasks set before it. True, it is intermittent, coming in great force when it is not wanted; but this only shows the necessity for that means of bottling power, to the perfection of which our mechanics ought to be looking.

Electricity is often spoken of as a power that may be. We have alleded to it as a medium may be. We have alleded to it as a medium for transporting power, but we hesitate to dwell upon it as a source, because no present prospect appears of any means of generating it upon a scale of chespness that would enable it to compete with other sources of energy. If we are to consume mechanical force to get electricity, as is done in some of the most recent electrical erators of great power, we might as well use the original force at once. Where metals have to be consumed to obtain galvanic currents the cost is high, too high for economical use while other power-producing materials can be procured at chesper rate in proportion to the work that is to be got out of them.

Chemistry gives us better hopes. The terri-ble powers of explosive compounds may one day be tamed down to manageable conditions. A gunpowder engine savors of the chimerical; but we lately heard it proposed, and it is to be presumed that the projector had, in his mind's eye at least, some method of rendering violent ex-plosions so continuous and governable as to yield a motion having some approach to uniformity. The gas engine is only a few removes from such a machine, and it answers perfectly. Here we have successive explosions of a mixture of gas and air, on alternate sides of a piston in a cylin-der, converted by crank and fly-wheel into a smooth continuous movement, perfectly under control, and very economical. But if gunpowder, or nitro-glycerine, or dynamite, or any mild-er source of expansive vapors, should prove in the end unfitted for direct application, why should not their energy be employed to compress air, or otherwise charge a force-reservoir that would pay out its store as leisurely as circumstances

But there may be powers capable of exhaust-on; one of these is the power of patience. So let us play our last card, which stands for a source of energy that has been forcing itself spon us for centuries, but that we have not yet utilized to a tithe of its capabilities. We allude to the power of the sun. The theoretical amount of heat that the earth receives from the sun is so normous as to appear incredible; but setting theory aside, the actually available quantity is startling enough, seeing that every hundred square feet of sun-lit earth receives an amount equivalent to the work nominally derivable from a single horse. You may doubt the accuracy of such n deduction, from your knowledge of the com-parative coolness of objects that are exposed to sunshine for hours together. But the fact is that a body subjected to ordinary insolation loses its heat by radiation and by contact with the air almost as fast as it receives it. Prevent the escape of the heat, and then see to what a height the temperature will rise. Last summer, on the tropical 22d of July, a steak and pointoes were thoroughly cooked by the sun on the south side of Westminster Bridge. The only appuratus employed was a eiger-box blackeness inside, and with a lid formed of several plates of glass. solar beams poured into this oven, and their bent was trupped; there was no ready escape for it, and in twenty minutes from the time of their first exposure the steak and pointoes were done. Ericsson's name alone has been cited as a solar engineer. But there has been another toiler in the same field: M. Mouchot, a French professor of natural philosophy. The principle involved in the eight-box oven is that which he has adapted to the construction of what he calls a se receiver. A metallic vessel, blackened outside, is mounted on a non-conducting pedestal and covered with a glass case; it is exposed to the sun, and an extra share of heat is condensed upon it by a reflector placed behind. In less than half an hour, the vessel, if empty, is raised to a temperature of 400° Fahr. The receiver may be a boiler to generate steam, or a sauce-pan for collinary purposes, or the evaporator of a still, or an oven for cooking steaks and potatoes. A working steam-engine was among some solar apparatus which M. Mouchot had the honor of bringing before the Emperor, at St. Cloud, in 1866; but his majesty could not see it in action because the weather was unpropitious, ever, he was so pleased with the idea that he gave the inventor another day's trial at Biarritz, which Phebus favored, and all worked to satis faction.

Inquirers of narrow mind ridicule this idea of extracting power out of sunbeams. They say the source is too intermistent—that during cloudy times and in countries not blessed with eternal sunshine it would be useless, because not constant. So they pooh-pooh the notion. But is not the wind intermittent, and water too? Are we to set fire to the wind-mill when it is becalmed, and chop up the water-wheel when there comes a drought? There are scores of mills in the country where wind or water furnishes the power so long as it is available, but where steam is resorted to as an auxiliary when the primary source gives out. And why should not the sun come in as an anxiliary also, to act when winds are hilled and streams are dried? Our mechanics are busstful of their prowess, and just now are complaining of the want of scope for the exercise of their ingenuity. Let them bestir themselves to get the undercloped stores of power to work, that we may economize the resources of which we are now so reckless, and hand down to our children's children an equivalent—in the shape of perfected means and appliances—for the share of those resources which is their due, but which we are doing our very best to wrest from them.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

To our hearts, there's no denying, Nothing lasting joy can being:
Like the restless swallows flying,
Are our minds upon the wing;
Still for something ever sighing,
Ever longing, ever trying.

Each one in the crowd is hieing Toward a retrograding goal: All things boarding, resping, buying, But contentment to the soul. Still for something over sighing, Ever longing, ever trying.

For some bliss we're always sighing, But possessing, find it-what? That for which our souls were dying? No; we still must seek for that.

After something ever trying, Ever longing, ever sighing.

Dyspursia Tankars care Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Rox. Mailed for the. Sold by draggists. S. G. Walling, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, FRECKLES, and TAN from the face, use PERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Perry, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Deuggists.

LOOK AT IT!

The PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL FOR Ocroses is full of entertaining reading: George W. Childs: Philip Philips; John A. Roebling: George L. Miller: Phernology, is it a Science? Answers to Objection: The Phrenologist's Prophecy: Salem Witcheraft; Our Courities—what shall be done with them? Warming Houses: The Tiger: The Chinese Question: Shall we have Celestial Laborers? &c. With Blustrations. Only 30 cents, or $1 a year. Address.

S. R. WELLS, $80 Broadway, N. Y.

Alaska Diamonds.

The new ALASKA DIAMOND, or carbonized quarts, equal in beilling-cy to the real diamond, mounted at our own factory, in articile diamond settings, passenned solal sold, and sold by us at one eisting of the cost of real diamonds, to which they are equal in every respect except intrinsic value.

sic value.

Ladice' Solitaire Rings, $5 to $30 each; Solitaire Rings, $5 to $30 each; Solitaire Rar-Drops, with pendants, $5 to $30.

Cluster Rings, $6 to $30; Cluster Rar-Drops, $10 to $20.

Cluster Sets, $15 to $30; Cruse Sets, $20 to $55.

Gente' Solitaire Pins, $5 to $20; Hings, $6 to $50.

Cluster Rings, $6 to $25.

Cluster Pins, $50 to $25.

Cluster Pins, $50 to $25.

Cluster Pins, $50 to $25.

Sinds, per set, $3 to $50.

We do our business direct $25.

We do our business direct $25.

We do our business direct from our city, which has a world-wide reputation for its fine lewelry, and are not in sympathy with bogus concerns advertising cheap lewelry.

All orders by mail for less than $10 should be ac-companied with P. O. Order or Registered Letter, and the goods sent free. Exceeding that amount sent by express, C.O. D., customers paying all express charges. A Large Discount to the Trade. Call on or address. The STANLEY & WHIPPLE MFG. CO.,

No. 12 South Main St., cor. College, Providence, R. I.

JUST PUBLISHED:

THE

GREAT NATIONAL SONG. ENTITLED

"The Starry Flag."

Written by H. Milliarn, Esq., the Author of "Walling," " Price l'America," &c., &c.

This beautiful gem is arranged for the Plane, and every lover of his country should have a copy. Printed on heavy Music Paper. Price 10 cents. It is also contained in the October Number of HITCHCOCK'S, NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE (now ready). Price, it cents. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK,
Publisher, 34 Beckman St., New York,
N. B., Sold by all Booksellers and Newsderlers.

N. B ... Sold by all Booksellers and Newsdealers,

FRENCH CLOCKS,

BRONZES. FANCY GOODS.

MUSICAL BOXES, FANS, Opera Glasses, FINE WATCHES AND

JEWELRY.

PARIS AND VIENNA NOVELTIES.

Alex. M. Hays & Co., No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-rictles to be found in the city, and are offered at

IF Sign of Gold Telegraph. _21

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and amusing, 35 cents a package. Limater or Love, 50 cents. Send to W. C. Willersa, S Assor Place, N.Y.

TROY PEMALE SEMINARY.—Tids In-over situation offers the accumulated advantages of over 50 years' successful operation. For circular, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Troy, N.Y.

HITCHCOCK'S

New Monthly Magazine

CHOICE MUSIC, ART NOTES.

Select Reading for the Family Circle.

CONTAINING

Beautiful Illustrations, Biographical Sketches, Choice Musical Compositions arranged for the Plano-Forte, Poetry, and Notes on Painting, Sculpture, &c., &c.,

PORMING A SPLENDIN

Illustrated Magazine for the Drawing-Room, AND A

Valuable Library of Excellent Music.

It is issued on the 15th of every month. Price, $3 00 per Year, in advance, Specimen Copies malled free, on receipt of price, SB cents each.

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 24 Bookman Street, New York.

EF Agents wanted every where. Write for Terms.

POPULAR SCIENTIFIC BOOKS:

HOW TO DECOME A SUCCESSFUL ENGINEER.

Being Hints to Youths intending to adopt the profession. By Brasslage STEARY, 18mo, Cloth, 75c.

PREE-HAND DRAWING. A Guide to Ornsmentni, Figure, and Landscape Brawing. By an Art Stadent. Profusely Hussirated. Histo, Cloth, 75c.

THE EARTH'S CRUST. A Handy Outline of Geology. By David Page. Historiced. 18mo, Cloth, 18c.

DODD'S DICTIONARY OF MANUFACTURES,
MINING, MACHINERY, AND THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS. 12mo, Cloth, $2.

D. VAN NOSTRAND, POMISSER,
Nos. 25 Murray St., and 27 Warren St.

"." Copies of any of the above works sent free by mall on receipt of price.

CYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OPPICE, No. 124 BOWERY, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street).

OFFICERS: EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Treasurer.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary.
A. S. JARVIS, HERVEY G. LAW, JOHN I.
VAN ALST, ALPRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

Prelit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable associament, very low for cash.

Apples—including most magnificent stock of veer-lings; also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duckess, Oldenburg, Histop, Transcendent, and other Crab Apples—1, 2, and 2 year.

Pesseles, Penrs, Cherries, Plunus, Quiness, Grapes, Perset and Evergreen Trees, Nursery Stocks, Ocase Orname Hedge Plants, Rees, own roots; Tulque, Hyarinthe, Northern, Fris, Spublit, Libles, Speciesors, Auradom, &c. Also superior colored plants of Fruits and Flowers.

Send 10 cents for Catalogues.

F. K. PHCENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

P. K. PHŒNIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO SUB-class Lady's Magazine and a first-class Weekly Paper send of once for a sample copy of

THE LADY'S FRIEND and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and see the unequaled inducements offered. $2.50 a year for each. $4 for both. Four copies for $6, with a splendid premium engraving. Pive copies (and one gradis), $8. Sample cupies of both will be sent (post-paid) for fifteen cents. Address

DEACON & PETERSON, No. 319 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WEDLOCK;

On, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES. $1 20.—"HOW TO READ CHARACTER." $1 30.—ANNUAL OF PHYSIOGNOMY for 1570. Golv 25 cents.—MAN IN GENESIS AND IN GEOLOGY ea. THE BIBLICAL ACCOUNT OF MAN'S CREATION, bested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. By Jesseys F. Theories, D.D., LL.D. 12ma. Price $1. Sent first post by S. R. WELLS, No. 339 Broadway, N. Y., Publisher.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Ilronae is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has sertously excupied the attention of ectentific men, and has not only called forth the enjoyims of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Exposition.

The Bovernents are well fin-

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers, Purther details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be east, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Kryress, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,

No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prion greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Figures, of first-class makers, for $275 and spward. New Cabinet Organs for $48 and appeard. Second-hand Figures, Melodecora, and Organs from $44 to $125, at $11 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

VINEGAR.—HOW MADE PROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drams. Por circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Com.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

GENUINE OROIDE. The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones costing $150. Those of extra fine finish, at $20, are not surpassed by $200 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, no imitation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal to gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS FROM $2 TO $8.

CHAINS FROM $2 TO $3.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pine, Ear-Rings, Sieeve-Buttons, Lockets, Sinds, Finger-Rings, Bracelets, Charms, Odd-Fellow and Masonic Pine, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUES:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no agents; orders, therefore, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our owns ormed is No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up stairs), New York.—C. E. COLLINS & CO.

FURNITURE.

We invite buyers to visit our extensive warercome and examine our large stock of Suites for Parlors, Chambers, Dining-Rooms, Libraries, &c. Manufactured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every particular.

With unequaled facilities and a ripe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promise too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be besten in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO.,
Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers and Dealers,
To and 77 Spring Street, curner Crusby.

The Climax Knitter!!

This is, without question, the best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. It is small, light, near, simple of construction, durable, works very rapidly, has but one needle, makes the old-flashboned knitting needle sitch (and two others) with light or heavy, single or double yarn, sets up and finishes its even werk, and needs no weights. It knits close or loose textures, hollow or flai web, large or small fabrics—say, thing that can be knit by hand, and in a much better manner. A child can readily operate it, and can learn to do so much sooner than to knit with ordinary needles. There is nothing to be done but to thread a needle and turn a crash, until the heel is reached, which is formed to perfection, with little trouble and no sewing; the ease is the case with the toe.

The price of this knitter is but gits to, which places it within the reach of every family. It is destined to be very popular, and we can offer special, general and special, exceedingly liberal terms for engaging in its sale. Send for Circulars.

Address ESSICK KNITTING MACHINE CO., S. W. corner 11th and Chestnut Sta., Philadelphia, Pa.

SWEET
QUININE.

SWEET Quinine is segmented equal—dose for dose—to the sulphate (bitter) Quinine, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

Suid by druggists, prescribed by best physicians.

STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemista, New York.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, $5, $12, $16. Offices, $15, $20, $30. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

THE LYCEUM,—No. 1,—contains the names, subjects, and terms of over two hondred of the best LECTURERS, MURICIANS, and READERS of the country, with valuable advice to LYCEUM COMMITTEES. Specimen copy sent on receipt of stamp, by JAMES REDPATH, Boston, Mass.

WATCHES FOR THE MILLION.

The Genar Thans-Infraorence Association (Incorporated by the State) sell First Geon and Section Service Waveston, upon the one-price general-average system, at $10 cach. Be sure to obtain a circular before buying elsewhere. Agents wanted.

Address MICHELIN & CO., Managers, Broadway, cor. Fulten St., New York.

POCKET REVOLVERS, SEX Shooter, a neat, durable weapon. Price $1 50, postpaid.
Address W. L. GRAHAM, East Saginaw, Mich.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-wan Knitting Machine, Price $25. The simplest, chengest, and box Knitting Machine ever in-vented. Will kell $9,500 silk-bes per minute. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louts, Mo.

T I L T O N S

Pashionable Initial Note-Papers
and Envelopes,
Readly put up in Bollar or Half-Bollar Bores, and arms or man, posteran, to any part of the country, on receipt of price. Send for a box to
J. E. TILTON & CO., Boston,

CLYCERINE JELLY

Food, Nourisbiness, and Stimulant for Consump-ves and delicate children. Sold by JOHN F. HENRY, N. Y., and Druggiets generally.

SOMETHING NEW.-In musical circles the D Estey Organs are the rage. They are the most durable and have the finest tone, remarkable for the successes and power. The Fox Hieranni and Fox Jubilants are the greatest novelities and best inventions aver introduced.

Brattlebero, VL, Sele Manufacturers.

WANTED AGENTS.—$73 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thing, with the latest improvements. Price for Hand Machine, $15: with Table and Foot power, $75. Send far Cirrular, with Cut of Machine and terms to Agents. Address W. S. Hill, Manchester, N. H.

PARLOR STRAM ENGINE: made entire-L ly of Metas: Botter and Furnace complete: well work for hours if supplied with water, &c.: free from danger; a child can work it. Scat free, with instructions, for $1.00; three for $2.50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 102 Nassen Street, New York.

THE MAGIC COME will change any colored hair or A beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sent by mail for $1. For subs by Merchants & Broggists generally. Address Hopic Cend Co., Springfeld, Mass.

$1140 Bow I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample malled free. A. J. Fullow, X.Y.

Use B.A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

LIVINGSTUN'S PATENT

BRACED WEB SAW

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Beaters. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 50 BEEKMAN ST., N.Y.

THE BEST WRINGER.

THE RELIANCE,

With Keyed Rolls and Spiral Cog-wheels, manufac-tured by PROVIDENCE TOOL CO., Providence, R. I. NEW YORK STORE, 29 BERKMAN STREET. Also, Heavy Hardware, Seit-Charderes' and Satt-Marres' Goods, &c., &c.

Manufacturers of PEABODY BREACH-LOADING FIRE-ARMS.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do bis own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents, ADAMS PRESS CO., 53 Marray Street, New York, PSYCHOMANCY, Pascination; er, Science of the Soul, as applied to the purposee of life. 400 pages, Cloth. By HERRERY HABLEYON, B.A. A carious book for inquisidive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wonderful power over men or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stomp and address to T. W. EVANS & CO.,

41 South 8th Street, Philadelphia.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Still-best machine on trial. For further particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

AGENTS WANTED, Local and for the New American Patent Meat and Vegetable Chopper. The best thing in the market, without exception. For Cat of Machine, Terms, 4c., address D. A. NEWTON & CO., 38 Cortlandt Street, N. Y.

Agents! Read This! WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

A LL that is required of SASH FANTENERS, Walker's Patent will do. They never get out of order. 25 per dos.—FELIX WALKER & CO., at Whitlock Exposition, 35 Park Piace, N. Y.

$25 A DAY. -- 23 new articles for Apenta. Samples free. II. B. SHAW, Alfred, Mc.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, ODS YESS.....$6 00 HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00 HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year..... 4 00

Harrin's Managem, Harrin's Weekly, and Harrin's Bazar, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $2.00.

BARRE, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $2.00.

BARRE, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $2.00.

An Extra Copy of either the Madazzer, Werrell, or Hazze will be supplied gratic for every Club of Five Sensettraces at $4.00 seek, in one resistance; or, six Captes for $20.00, uniform extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Madazzer $4 cents a year, for the Werrell, or Hazze on cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Causda wirst be accompanied with $4 cents additional for the Madazzer, or 20 cents for

24 cents additional for the Managers, or 20 cents for the WREMER OF BAZAN, to prepay the United States The Volumes of the Managers commence with the

The Volumes of the MARKING commerce with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Sale-scriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

the current volume, and uses and Baxas commence secondingly.

The Volumes of the Wessas and Baxas commence with the year. When no tirse is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Breit payable to the order of Haxres & Recursus is preferable to Benk Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the sender.

TERMS FOR ADTRETISHED IN HARPER'S PERIMICCALS. Herper's Maussias.—Whole Page, $259: Half Page, $155: Quarter Page, $70-each insection; or, for a less space, $1_0. Quarter Page, $70-each insection; or, for a less space, $1_0. Quarter Page, $70-each insection.

Herper's Weelly.—Incide Pages, $1.50 per Line; Outside Page, $3.50 per Line—each insection.

Herper's Razar, $21.00 per Line: Cats and Display, $1.50 per Line—each insection.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New YORK,

HARPER & BROTHERS,

PRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812:
or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Holice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Brasco at Lessiva, Anthor of "The Fictorial Field-Book of the Revolution," With 882 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Leesing & Barrier, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Tollane, 1982 pages, large 890. Price, in Cloth, $7 60; Sheep, $8 50; Pull Roses, $8 60; Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $10 50.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By Jawes GREENWOON, the "Amateur Casual," Author of "The True History of a Little Regammin," "Braben Dav-idger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. 8vo, Pa-per, 25 cents.

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Borner. With Partrait of George Peabody and 54 Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $100.

SIGITS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZEILAND: or, Experiences of an American Journalist is Europe. By Enward Goeld Bryton. 12mo, Cloth, $150.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TRACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By NAYSANDEL SANDE. Svo, Cloth, $1.00.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, as I a Care-ful Consideration of the Quevilum of Profit and Loss as involved in Amnerse Parming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large of Small Places in the Bural Districts, By Research B. Rosseyeux, With Characteristic Il-lustractors, 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

PARSEII AND ANALYZER FOR REGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Priase et A. Masca, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Ladycete College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 16mo, Cloth, 40 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, B.D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University. 12mo, Cloth, $150.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Attrave Reseat. Wallace, Author of "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negra," "Pain Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $2.50.

PISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Gesto C. Scott. With 110 Illustrations. Crown Sec, Cloth. $3.56.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Insease and its Core; Wine-Making and Wines, Red and Walte; Wine-Drinking as affecting Bealth and Morale, By Wittean J. Franc. 18mo, Cloth, $1 50.

The New Novels

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Harper's Diustrated Library Edition.

ADAM HEDE. Hims, Morocco Cloth, IS cents.

I'm I's be followed by Geo. Eliof's other Keeple. COUNTESS GISHLA. By E. Martitt. Translated by A. Nahmer. 8vo, Paper, 15 ccnts.

FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Year,"
"One of the Family," &c. 600, Paper, 50 cents.

META'S PARTIL. By the Author of "St. Conve's," &c. Swo, Paper, 50 cents.

PALSE COLORS. By ANNIE TROMAS. Syo, Paper, HETTY. By HEVRY KINGSLEY. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents.

MY DAUGHTER RLINGIL A Novel of American Society. Svu, Paper, $1 25. STRETTON. By HERRY KINGGEY. Syo, Paper, 40 cts.

CORD AND CREESE. By the Author of "The Dadge Club." Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 15 cents.

THE BODGE CLUB; or, Italy in 1899. By Javes Dr Muar, Author of "Cord and Creese," &c., With 100 Blustrations. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1.25.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations.

VANITY FAIR, 32 Illustrations, 840, Paper, 55 cts. THE VIRGINIANS. 188 Blustrations. 8vo, Pa-

THE NEWCOMES, 162 Blustrations. See, Paper, THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER. 12 Dissirations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT: or, Jestoury. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. See, Pa-LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Stor. Pa-

FOUL PLAY. 8vo, Paper, 25 cents.

WHITE LIES. See, Paper, 35 cents. 29" To be followed by Charles Brade's other Novels.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS:

PHINEAS PINN, the Irish Momber. Hinstrated by Milhin. 8vo, Paper, $1 25; Cloth, $1 78. HE RNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With 64 Historions by Marcus Stone. Sen. Paper. $1.00; Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separately, Paper, 50 cents.

$3" HARTER & REOTHERS will send any of the above books by mail, postnor five, to any part of the Chilled States, on receipt of the price.

THE LAST ADDITION TO THE FAMILY.

BEAUTIFUL PICTURES FOR NOTHING. VALUABLE READING FOR NOTHING. THREE MONTHS FOR NOTHING. A WHOLE YEAR FOR NOTHING.

American Agriculturist

A beautifully-libstrated mouthly of 44 pages, full of the most interesting and valuable matter for the Farm, Garden, and Household, Including a special department for

THE BOYS AND GIRLS.

The Pictures alone are worth more than the subscription price.

We will give the American Agriculturist, for the last three months of 1869, to all new subscribers for 1870 received in September, whether singly or in clubs,

For a club of ten and $12 00, or a einb of twenty and $20 00, we give the sender the paper free for a year.

Terms, 81 50 per summs, in advance; 4 copies for $5; 10 for $17; 20 or more, $1 each.

In Illustrations and Original Matter the Cheapest and Best Paper in the World!!!

Result by Chycks, Post-Office Monry Orders, or Royintered Letters.

ORANGE JUDD & CO., 245 Breadway, New York.

OLD FOGY" LOST his lead-pencil. Use the Number Pencil-Holders, and avoid losing pencils.

BE BEAUTIFUL -- If you desire beauty you should use HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM.

It gives a soft, refined, satin-like texture to the complexion, removes Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Tan, &c., and adds a tinge of pearly bloom to the plainest features. It brings the bloom of youth to the fading cheek, and changes the rustic country girl into a fashionable city belle.

In the use of the MAGNOLIA BALM lies the true secret of beauty. No lady need complain of her complexion who will invest 75 cents in this delightful article.

LYON'S KATHAIRON is the best Hair Dress-

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO,

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Sarotto will make Tins recemble Silver.
Use only Sarotto to clean White Paint.
From Matble Sarotto removes all Stalas.
For polishing Kalves Sarotto has no equal.
For cleaning Brace Stale-Reds Sarotto has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, see Sarotto.
Sample cake sent by mail on receipt of 29 cents. Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. Established 1502.

Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for

ANTED - AGENTS - $75 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to interduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON. BENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stuck, hem fell, tack, qualt, coed, blind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1600 for may machine that will seen a stronger, more beautiful, or more clistic evan than ears. It makes the "Einstel Leck Sitch." Every second stich can be cut, and still the cloth can not be pulled spart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $75 to $200 per menth and expenses, or a commission from which wice that mount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Persuarses, Ps., Boston, Mass, or 8r. Levin, Ma. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other partices polaning of worthless cast-from machines, noder the some name or otherwise. Our is the only genuine and scally practical cheap machine misinfactured.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. HATHERATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 22 pages.

HAGIC LANTERNS and STERRINGTICANS, 100 pp.

PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,

216 Chestnut St., Philodelphia, Pa. The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pianos is fully estab-lished as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Plane is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being ressonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purcha-Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Sarra & Nixos, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Huer-Oc to Satte & Nikon, Chicago, Rin.; H. N. Hener-offan, Milwankee, Wis.; Louis They, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClerk, Nashville, Tenn.; Куноки. Вкос., St. Louis, Mo.; J. R. Jacksoo, Sandinsky, Otio; J. E. Goter, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Bruss, Pittsburg, Pa.; Barinara & Soss, Cleveland, Otio; Churt & Soss, Alberty and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harmon, Rhine-beck, N. Y.; J. H. Histermister, Rhaca, N. Y.; White, Satta, & Perry, Boston, Mass.; Matthias Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; C. M. Munca, Cincinnali, Ohio; C. M. Locker, New Haven, Conn.

OF NEW YORK,

212 BROADWAY, cor. FULTON ST.

Issues all the new forms of policies, and presents as favorable terms as any Company in the United States. Thirty days' grace allowed on each payment, and the policy held good during that time. Policy-helders share in the samual profits of the Company, and have a volce-in the election and man, agencies of the Company. No policy or menical fee charged. All policies non-forfeitable on the principle of the Massachusetta non-forfeiture law.

EDWARD A. JONES, President. J. O. HALBEY, Vice-President.

J. A. MORTIMORE, Secretary.

Bor. JAMES PIRTER, D. D., Departmendent of Agencies,

Call or Send for Circular.

AGENTS WANTED. Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE. WITH

PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-saving machinery, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS. which, for BEAUTY, PINISH, and DURABILITY, Can not be Excelled.

All goods bearing our trade-mark,

"Improved Electro Treble Plate," ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED: and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded.

OFFICE AND FACTORY, WALLINGFORD, CORR. SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y.

Hemember that the Slight internal disorder of to-day may become an obstinate disease to-morrow. Be in time; meet the first symptoms of biliousness or indigestion with Taxnaw's Evranueous Saturax Arturest, and within forty-eight hours they will have coured to exist.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

Peatlax & Sow, Manuf'rs of Genn-ine Meerschaum goods. Stares: 309 Broadway, under St. Nicholas Hotel, & 37 John St., middle of block. Send for new wholesele or retail circular to Letter-Box 5646. Repairing and Boiling also done.

REMOVAL.

Davis Collamore & Co.

Have removed to their new store, No. 747 BROADWAY, FIPTH DOOR BELOW STH ST.,

And now offer a very choice stock of CHINA GLASS, AND CROCKERY WARE.

We shall also keep a full stock of SILVER-PLATED GOODS, CUTLERY, BRONZES, Ac., Ac.

PRICES SHALL BE LOW. No. 747 BROADWAY, running through to Mercer St.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water tree all diseases of the Ridneys, Skin, and Blood ore promptly than any other known remedy.

to Call for Transionals or Corna. Sold by Druggists.
Caution.—All genuine bears our trade-mark, and the bottles and corks are branded "Natura's Remedy."
Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Trens. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Or. S. H. Scripture, 198 Brondway, New York, General Agent.

A HOUSEHOLD WORD!

Buy your CHINA, GLASS, SILVER-PLATED WARE, CUTLERY, and COOKING UTENSILS,

BASSFORD'S,

COOPER INSTITUTE, N. Y., and save 20 per cent.

SCHREIBER CORNETS BAND INSTRUMENTS. The most splendid Instruments ever made. We are manufacturing all styles, and can readily sup-ply all orders for sets. Send for Price-List and Circular.

M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 680 Broadway, N. Y.

BULBS for FALL PLANTING

MALLED, POSTPAID, AT CATALOGUE PRICES.

B. K. BLISS & SON,

No. 41 Park Row, and 161 Nassan St., New York, have just received a large assertment of the above, comprising all of the most desirable varieties of Hyacintals, Thilps, Lelies, Narciscus, Crosus, &c., &c., &c.
Our New Autuma Catalogue, with many beautiful instrations, including a splendid two-page colored lithograph of the celebrated Leliuss Assertms, will be mailed to all applicants enclosing Ten Cents.

Address, an above, P. O. Box No. 5712, New York.

Pratt's Astral Uil

PERFECTLY SAFE.

Send for Circulars.
OIL HOUSE OF CHAS. PHATT,
108 Fulton St., N. Y. STEVENS POCKET RIPLE.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS. Bend for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

HARPERS WEEKLY. OURWAL OF GIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.-No. 666.7

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTE

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

REV. PETER CARTWRIGHT, D.D.

The Rev. Peter Carrwatout, the pioneer of Methodism in the West, has now been a Presiding Elder for fifty years. In view of this fact, the last Illinois Annual Conference made arrangements for a semi-centennial jubilec, to take place September 24. Among those who take a prominent part on this occasion we may mention Bishops Semeson, Moants, Janea, Ares, and Thompson. Bishop Semeson, Moants, Janea, Ares, and Thompson. Bishop Semeson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, from 1816 to 1858. In connection with this pleasant jubilec a large number of presents were given to Dr. Carrwatout as tokens of the regard in which he is held by the Church.

A complete biography of Perna Cartwarders would include the history of the rise and progress of Methodism in the Valley of the Mississippi. He was born September 1, 1785, in Amherst County, on James River, in the State of Virginia. He is now, therefore, entering upon his eighty-fifth year. In a lecture which he delivered at Chicago not long ago, he said that he was living beyond his time. He had not a father, mother, brother, or sister living. His life had been one of hardship; he had known many crosses; but if he were to live his life over again, he would be a Methodist traveling preacher; he would rather choose that than be President of the United States.

PRIER CARTWRIGHT'S father was a Revolutionary soldier. His mother, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was an orphan. Shortly after his birth his parents removed to Kentucky, then an unbroken wildeness, over which emigrants moved on pack-horses. When Prier was nine years old Jacon Lunaron, a traveling preacher, held religious services in his father's cabim. This Luraron he styles a "real son of thunder. He preached with tremendous power, and the congregation were almost all meised to tears." A small class was soon organized in the neighborhood. This little society was visited by a "mighty reviral" in 1709, and a church was built, called Ebenszer. This was in what was then called Cumberland Circuit, and Kentucky District, in the Western Conference, the seventh conference in the United States.

Logan County, where the Carrwanours lived, was called "Rogues' Harbor." Refugees from all purts of the country fied thither to escape justice. Murderers, horse-thieves, highway robbers, and counterfeiters actually formed a majority of the inhabitants, and were able to set the laws at defiance. The honest people, under the name of Regulators, combined together and formed a vigilance committee for the execution of the laws. It was in such a desperate state of seciety that Param Carrwanour's boyhood was passed. "I'was naturally," he says, "a wild, wicked boy, and delighted in horse-racing, card-playing, and dancing. My father restrained me but little, though any mother often talked to me, wept over me, and prayed for me, and often drew tears from my eyes; and though I often wept under preaching, and resolved to do better and seek religion, yet I broke my vows, went into young company, rode races, played eards, and danced. Gambling became his besetting sin.

At length, at about the beginning of the present century, Logan County became more civilized. Murderers and horse-thieres disappeared, and preaching became more frequent. About this time the Cane Ridge camp-meeting was held—a meeting protracted for weeks, and attended by from 12,000 to 25,000 people. Preachers of all denominations were present, and between one and two thousand sools were converted. This was the first camp-meeting ever held in the United States. It was about this time (1801) that Param was converted, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The following incident illustrates the ignorance with which the early Methodist preachers in the West had to contend. The Rev. Wilson Lee, preaching in Peters Cartwerour's neighborhood, took for his text, "Except a man deny himself, and take up his cross, he can not be my disciple." He urged on his congregation, with melting voice and tearful eyes, to take up the cross; no matter what it was, take it up. He made a very profound impression upon a very wicked Duschman in his congregation, whose wife was a notorious scold. After dismissing the meeting, Mr. Lex mounted his horse and rode away. After riding some distance, he saw, a little ahead of him, a man tradging along, carrying a woman on his back. This greatly surprised Mr. Lex. He very naturally supposed that the woman was a crippie, or had hurt her-scold all de fime, and dish woman is de greatest cross I have in de whole world, and I does take her up and pare her, for I must save my soul."

In May, 1802, Peters Cartweight was permitted to exercise his gifts as an exhorter. In the fall his father moved down the Camberland River into Lewiston County. Here Presiding Elder Page gave Peters authority to travel through that destinate region, hold meetings, organize classes, and, in a word, to form a circuit. Considering his education defective, he entered the best school to be found in the neighborhood, where he staid for a short time, and then went into the active work of the ministry. In 1806 he was ordained a deacon by Bishop Assury. He was married to Frances Galinia August 18, 1808, and in the following October early bishops; I have outlived every presiding elder that I ever had when on circuits; and I have outlived hundreds and thousands of my contemporary ministers and members, as well as juniors, and still linger on the mortal shores. Though all these have died, they shall live again, and by the grace of God I shall live with them in heaven forever."

Prese Carriera

Peter Carrwinger, in his journeys upon various circuits in the West, met with many very peculiar characters. And, as he himself was very eccentric, these encounters led often to amusing results. He tells the following anecdate of the conversion of two young ladies, whose mother was the terror of all preachers. He was warned not to visit them, but determined to go. The reception given him by the old lindy was any thing but itstitute, she even emission.

thing but inviting, she even ordering him to take the door. He told her he had come to talk and pray with her two daughters. She said he should not pray in her house, and sluking her fist in his face, she again ordered him out. The contest lasted for some time. The husband was a poor houseled to man, and his wife reigned supreme. At last, telling the woman to be sented, he kneeled to pray. He kept one eye open, for he had to watch as well as pray. In his prayer he gave a description of the woman any thing but flattering. He invoked the Almighty to love her, if possible, and do it quick. But if there was no salvation for her, he prayed to God to kill her, and donn her at once. Afterward he met her, and found her a changed woman.

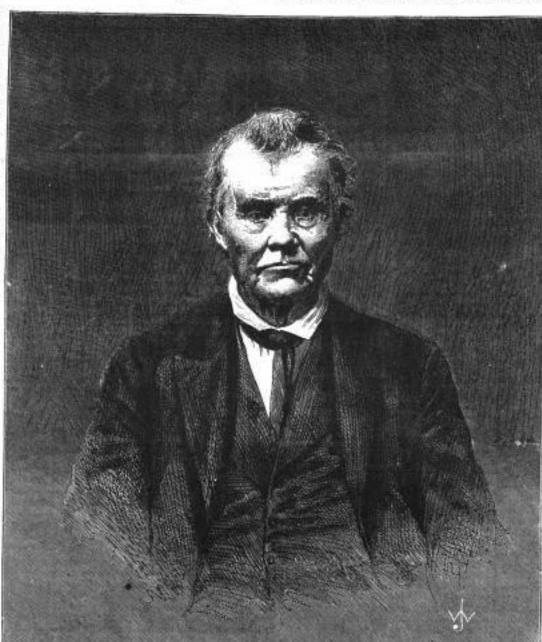

found her a changed woman.

Of course Peters Carrengury was a Jacksonian in politics; but the following incident that occurred in connection with the meeting of the Nashville Conference in 1818, showed that he was not to be scared by even "Old Hickory." "The city preacher," he says, "informed me that I was to preach on Monday evening in Dr. Brackhourse's church, and charged me to be sure and behave noyself. I made him my best bow, and thanked him that he had given me any appointment at all; and I assured him I would custainly behave noyself the best I could. "And now," said I, "Bruther Mac, it really seems providential that you have appointed me to preach in the Doctor's church, for I expect they never heard Mothodist doctrine fairly stated and the dogmas of Calvinism exposed; and now, Sir, they shall hear the truth for once. Said the preacher, "You must not preach controversy." I replied, "If I live is preach there at all, I'B give Calvinism one riddling." "Well, 'aski the preacher, 'I recall the appointment, and will send another preacher there; and you must preach in the Methodist church Monday evening; and do try and behave yourself. "Very well,' said I; 'I'll do my best."

"The preacher's conduct toward me was spread abroad, and excited considerable curiosity. Monday evening came; the church was filled to overflowing; every sent was crouded, and many had to stand. After singing and punyer, Brother Mac took his sent in the pulpit. I then read my text: 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' After reading my text I paused. At that moment I saw General Jackson walking up the aisle; he came to the middle post and very gracefully leaned against it and stood, as there were no vacant seats. Just then I felt some one pull my cost in the stand, and turning my head, my fastidious preacher, whispering a little loud, said, 'General Jackson has come in;' I felt a flash of indignation run all over me like an electric shock, and facing about to my congregation, and purposely speaking out audibly, I said, 'Who is General Jackson? If he don't get his soul converted, God will damp him as quick as he would a Guinea negro!

Guinea negro!"
"The preacher tucked his head down and squatted low, and would, no doubt, have been thankful for leave of absence. The congregation, General Jackson and all, smiled or laughed right out, all at the preacher's expense. When self in some way, so that she could not walk. The traveler was a small man, and the woman large and heavy.

REV. PETER CARTWRIGHT, D.D.

Before he overtook them, Mr. Lex began to cast about in his mind how he could render them assistance. When he came up to them, lo and behold, who should it be but the Datchman and his wife that had been so affected under his sermon at meeting. Mr. Lex rode up and spoke to them, and inquired of the man what had happened, or what was the matter, that he was carrying his wife.

The Dutchman turned to Mr. Lan and said,
"Besure you did tell us in your sarmon dat we must take up de cross and follow de Saviour, or dat we could not be saved or go to heaven; and I does desire to go to heaven so much as any pody; and dish vife is so pad, she scold and was ordained an elder by Bishop M'KENDREE. In 1813 he was appointed by Bishop Assurry presiding elder of the Green River District, in Transcesses. From that time to the present day the Rev. Peter Cartwright has lived and wrought in the West with characteristic energy, and his labors have been attended with memorable success. "I have lived," he says, in his antobiography, "to see this vast Western wilderness rise and improve and become wealthy without a parallel in the history of the world; I have outlived every member of the class I joined in 1800; I have outlived every member of the class I joined in 1800; I have outlived every member of the first General Lave outlived every member of the first General Conference that I was elected to, in Baltimore, in 1816, save five or six; I have outlived all my

the congregation was dismissed, my city-stationed preacher stopped up to me, and very sternly said to me, 'You are the strangest man I ever saw; and General Jackson will chastise you for your insolence before you leave the city.' 'Very clear of it,' said I, 'for General Jackson, I have no doubt, will appland my course; and if he should undertake to chastise me, as l'addy said, "There is two as can play at that game."

"General Jackson was staying at one of the Nashville hotels. Next morning very early my city preacher went down to the hotel to make an apology to General Jackson for my conduct in the pulpit the night before. Shortly after he had left I passed by the hotel and I met the General on the pavement, and before I approached him by several steps he smiled and reached out his hand, and said:

hand, and said:

"'Mr. CARTWRIGHT, you are a man after my own heart. I am very much surprised at Mr.
Mac, to think he would suppose that I would be offended at you. No, Sir; I told him that I highly approved of your independence; that a ter of Jesus Christ ought to love every body our no mortal man. I told Mr. Mac that if i a few thousand such independent, fearless rs as you were, and a well-drilled army, I i take old England."

ARPER'S WEEKLY. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1869.

OUR DUTY TO CUBA.

HERE was never a public question of importance enough to interest the press of ope and America about which less was austically known than the Cuban question. cems to be understood that the United es Government is making representations or of Spain; but nothing is certainly known. day it is announced that a distinct propoin of sale and guarantee has been offered. morrow it is as distinctly denied. One moit General Sickles has written a significant e; the next, he has written nothing. The tor, as we write, is that he has informed the nish Government that there is a strong ssure of public opinion in this country to ognize the Cubans as belligerents. We are y reinctant to believe that any such note · been authorized or written. It is not easy suppose that the Administration would threat-Spain; still less that it would found a threat on an untruth. Public opinion in this counthe efforts of all people honorably striving for dependence of a foreign power. But it is rtainly untrue that there is any pressing gen-al desire to recognize the independence of the, or to take any positive step until some-ing more is known. Cuban independence of annexation are known to be the same thing, id it would be very far from accurate to say at public opinion in this country demanded

e addition of nearly two millions of Spanish coles and emancipated slaves to the present

opulation. That the Spanish government of Cuba has een harsh and cruel; that the Cabana have he right, upon proper consideration of means nd chances, to attempt to secure their indeendence by arms; and that in the struggle hey have the sympathy of all generous hearts, ve have often declared. But it would be unpeakable folly for the United States to take art in every war upon the side which might seem to be in the right to most of those who snew any thing of the facts. Consequently, when the other Spanish-American colonies revolted, in 1810, the United States remained neu-They continued so for twelve years, until the colonies were not only independent in fact, but there was no prospect of their ceasing to be Twenty years and more passed, however, before Spain acknowledged the fact. During all this time the United States maintained the strictest neutrality with the frankest expression of sympathy for the colonies; and they departed from their neutrality only when an organized government, fulfilling all its functions, had been established.

But it can not yet be truly said that Cuba, to e President M. other colonies, has " declared its independence and maintained it." The revolutionary government of Cuba is the military rule of the revolutionary Commander-in-chief. The ports of the island and the large towns have not yet acknowledged it. General Jonnan, of the Cuban army, says that they "need slices, clothing, and medicines; for none are in the country. Hundreds of brave men are standing in my sight almost maked." These are facts which, as in the case of Crete, attest the heroism and the extremity of the revolutionists. As in the case of Crete, also, there is no reason to doubt that the friendly heart of this country will send the needed suc-Crete held out for three years in a just and noble cause. We sympathized, we succored, but we did not recognize her independence nor concede belligerent rights. Would it have been wiser for us to do so? Is it desirable upon any just and reasonable grounds that the United States should become the knight-errant to fight the battles of all distressed pooples? We do not ask the question from any selfish consideration, but from the highest regard to liberty and civilization. Would either | be the gainers if we should challenge every Government in the world whose principles or whose practice we do not approve?

A Contract

There is still another consideration which ought not to be forgotten. We have called England to account for her conduct during the late rebellion in this country, and none are more vehement in doing so than those who demand that we shall recognize the independence of Cuba. Let us be just to England, however unfriendly we may consider her conduct to have been. During four years the Confederacy maintained absolute independence of the United States. It had an organized civil government recognised throughout its entire territory, collecting taxes, holding courts, making and enforcing laws. Generally it repelled our advances upon its lines; and when we broke through the people refused to submit, and we held the territory that our cannon commanded, and no more. The conditions that theoretically justify recognition of the independence of a revolting state can hardly be fairly said not to have existed. We did not relinquish the contest, of course, and it was known that we should not besitate to regard recognition as war. Nevertheless Louis Narolkon urged England, by the joint recognition of both nations, to end a hopeless struggle upon the part of the United States. Had England consented, a treaty of alliance between those powers and the Confederacy would have followed, and our difficulties would have been incalculably increased. England declined: France would not move alone; and we were left with no other foe than the rebels.

What reason is there for our recognition of the independence of Cuba which would not have justified England in recognizing that of the Confederacy? Is there any comparison what-ever between the vigor and duration of the war, the actuality of the government, and the maintenance of independence? It is said that the Cubans have agreed to abolish slavery, and that our interference will lead to emancipation. That is a good reason for recognition when the Cubans show themselves capable of independence, but not before. If they have declared an emancipation which they can not maintain, they have no right to call upon other people to maintain it. The recognition of independence is the acknowledgment of a fact, not of a hope nor of an effort. If Cuba can secure her independence, establish a stable and free govern-ment, and abolish slavery, she will have done a great and good work which the lovers of liberty every where will applaud. But it is not for the interests of liberty and civilization that this work should be done for her by others. Independ-ence is secure only among those who are able to obtain it for themselves.

POLITICAL PROSPECTS.

Tun result of the election in Maine, where Governor CHAMBERLAIN is re-elected by a good majority, shows the depth and extent of the feeling which would make a separate issue of the prohibitory question. It is, apparently, doubtful whether the prohibitory vote in Maine really exceeds five thousand. By no chance could the movement have done more than elect the Democratic candidate and open every grogshop without restriction. This was plainly seen by the most noted and influential of the temperance leaders, and they very wisely resolved that the cause demanded the success of the perty which was most favorable to it. have little doubt that a result like that in Maine will attend the movement in Ohio: and the prospect invites the candid consideration of all temperance men who are also in favor of a prohibitory law. Is such a law of such superior importance to all other issues that they may properly be imperiled? This truth was certainly not established at the National Convention in Chicago that formed the new temperance party.

The result in Maine also shows that there is not that dissatisfaction with the Administration which has been asserted by some Democratic foreign authorities to be so pronounced an universal. The Republican party would certainly be very unreasonable if it should renounce the support of its own Administration for any reason that has yet been alleged. It certainly can not be so foolish as to suppose that the financial condition would be improved under the suspices of a party that nominates Mr. PENDLETON in Ohio; nor retrenchment and economy secured by a party whose chief leaders in New York are the ring that is stigmatized by one of the party organs as "corruptionists;" nor the general tranquillity and prosperity of the country promoted by a party that proposes to keep open the question of

The Cincinnati Exquirer asserts that the Republicans will certainly be beaten in that Stare. It is possible, but even Mr. PENDLETON has not yet given any proof of the probability of such a result. If, indeed, Mr. Jour Quiscy ADAMS, of Massachusetts, were the type of the Republicans of the United States, the case would be different. If, because of errors of policy, from which no party can be free, and of corruptions which are inseparable from every party in power, every Republican should think to find a remedy by going over to the Opposi-tion, the prospects of the Democracy in Ohio and clsewhere would be very much more promising than they are. Mr. ADAMS is emulous of that Chinese school of epicures who burned down their houses to roast their pigs. He applies their principles in politics, and not as yet, it must be confessed, with the same success. He has not as yet "tasted-crackling."

In this State the first duty of the Republican Convention is to settle the feads in the city, and to refuse to recognize as the representative of the party here a committee which is merely a brokerage for office. It should make a brief and positive declaration in favor of a searching reform of the whole civil service system. It should declare for the new State Constitution, and nominate candidates whose characters and antecedents would be their platform. It need not fear nor shirk. The future belongs to it if it chooses to take it. A bold reliance upon the intelligence and conscience of the State will be triumphantly justified by the result.

THE NEW STATE CONSTITUTION.

THE new Constitution of this State is to be submitted to the people at the next election, and if its provisions are understood is will unquestionably be adopted. It is a very great improve-ment of the present Constitution, which has been proved to be very far from that master-piece of risdom which it was at one time supposed to be. The fundamental defects of that instrument, however, are only partly corrected in the new; but it may be fairly said that the changes are all improvements. The Couvention was, apparently, unwilling to do more than make such changes as were indispensable, and many amendments which experience and reason justified were rejected as being too radical. It was impossible also to exclude party considerations altogether. But with every objection the amend-ed Constitution ought to be adopted.

The first in importance of the proposed changes is the equality of the suffrage. The new Constitution abolishes the property qualification for colored voters. There can be no argument in favor of this qualification which would not logically lead to the disfranchisement of colored citizens. This was plain enough from the speeches of Mr. MURRHY and Mr. Cassiby against the amendment, which proceeded upon the ground that the colored citizens are of an inferior race. But how the possession of a little money obviated the perils at the polls arising from that inferiority neither those gentlemen nor any body alse remembered to state. The justice and expediency of removing the disability were vindicated by no one with more force and eloquence than by Mr. Magnus Gross, a fellow-partisan of Mesers. MURPHY and CASSIDT.

The term of Senators is to be four instead of two years-half of the Senate retiring every two years. The advantage of such a system in securing a constant element of experience in legislation needs no argument.

The Assembly is to be elected by counties instead of districts, a change which increases the number of members from one hundred and twenty-eight to one hundred and thirty-nine. Experience has shown that the election by counties generally secures better men than by The Assemblymen are to be paid one thousand dollars—a change which, if of no further advantage, may tend to shorten the sea-

The changes in the Judiciary system are so excellent that they were supported by almost every lawyer of both parties in the Convention, and will be undoubtedly sustained by all the most eminent men of the profession in the State. To relieve the pressure upon the highest tribunal, the present Court of Appeals, with one judge to be appointed, is continued as a Board of Commissioners for Appeals, with jurisdiction of all pending cases, which must be determined within three years. In 1873 the question is to be submitted to the voters, whether the judges of the Courts of Record shall thereappointed by the Gove or elected.

The new Constitution provides a Court of Claims to settle all demands against the State; it restricts special legislation, and the power of granting the public money; confers local authority upon local officers; concentrates official responsibility for the management of the canals; places the State prisons in charge of a Board appointed by the Governor and Senate; extends the time for the payment of the Bounty debt so as to lessen the annual tax; requires a uniform rule for the assessment and taxation of real and personal property; makes punishment for official bribery practicable; and or-dains free instruction in the public schools for all persons between seven and twenty years of

A constitution is not usually a very attractive study. But voting upon its adoption is one of the most important acts of a citizen, and it is his duty to understand its general character. The new instrument has been widely published, and many of the papers in the State discuse its provisions with intelligence and vigor. The articles upon the subject in the Western New Yorker, at Warsaw, Wyoming County, are especially good. Between this time and the election we hope to be able to consider more in detail some of the more important changes proposed.

THE ST. THOMAS TREATY.

On the 15th of October the extended time allowed by Mr. SEWARD and the Danish Minister for the ratification of the St. Thomas treaty expires, and unless it be again extended by Secretary Fish the whole negotiation fails. But it can not end in this way without deep and lasting diagrace to the United States. It was a negotiation undertaken at the urgent entreaty of the Secretary of State, approved by the President. It was conducted upon the part of Denmark with the utmost honor and friendliness, and a strict regard for the wishes of the people most nearly interested. treaty was ratified by the agents of both governments, and Senators were informally consulted before the definitive vote was taken upon the island. It was then submitted to the Senate, and it has neither been confirmed nor rejected; it has been contemptuously neglected. Such conduct is discreditable to the Senate, and it is mortifying to the nation. It authorizes every government in the world to decline to trent with any authorized representative of the United States, until it learns whether it can regard his authority as evidence of his accord with the treaty-making power, It justifies England in saying to Mr. Moz-LEY, and Spain to General SICKLES, "We are very glad to see you, but you will understand that we can not possibly tell whether you represent the wishes and sentiments of your Gov-

It is very true that the Constitution regulres the consent of the Senate to a treaty, and that the Secretary of State has no authority to bind the country to do what he may think ought to be done-to buy parts of continents, islands, and other real estate at what may be considered enormous prices. But the facts must be considered. The offer to buy was made by the Secretary and President of a party which controlled the Senate. It was peculiarly fair to suppose, therefore, that the Government was a unit. This probability became virtual certainty when the same Secretary's similar action in regard to Alaska was most promptly supported by the Senate, and when personal inquiry of Senators disclosed no hostility to the St. Thomas project. It was only natural under such circumstances that Denmark should take measures to sever her connection with the island; and that she should feel burt and insulted by the disdainful omission even to consider the treaty enough to reject it. Indeed, the omission can hardly be called disdainful. seems rather an unhandsome evasion of the question, because of a consciousness that no satisfactory and honorable reason could be urged for rejection. There is no doubt that a firstrate power would not allow a treaty negotiated under such circumstances to be left without consideration. It would demand explanation in a tone that we know Denmark can not use, and which, therefore, it is still less pardonable in us to provoke.

It is plain that the Secretary of State and the Senate should save the country from the ill fame of soth conduct, and a friendly power from so gross a humiliation. Let the Secretary extend the term for the ratification of the treaty. Then let the Senate fairly and frankly consider it. If it rejects it let it state the reason, and not content itself with sic volo sic jubo; and then to avoid so unpleasant a complication hereafter, and to make treaty negotiations possible with self-respecting governments, let it strictly define the limits of executive action in the initiation of treaties. But we sincerely hope that a wise regard for the position of a friendly little power and for the fair fame of the United States will, in this instance and under the peculiar circumstances, induce the Senare to rati-

CITY ELECTIONS.

In the following article we propose to point out a few of the grave frauds which in the city of New York are perpetrated upon the people, and by means of which the will of the majority is set aside in more instances than the public would, without examination, suppose possible. It is not our purpose to refer to the iniquity of fraudulent naturalizations, to false registry, or to the voting by repeaters, all of which criminalities are carried on to a great extent, but simply to those frauds which are perpetrated on election-day at the polls, and by the very men who are appointed to protect the purity and honesty of the elections; to the crimes against the principle of self-government and republican institutions, which have made our municipal politics a reproach and by-word throughout the land. We shall expose only one link in a system of fraud which is so powerful in its various ramifications that it above lutely controls elections in our city, and utterly stiffes the voice of the people.

The inspectors, canvassers, and poli-clerks of the elections are appointed by the Police Board, which is nominally a non-partisan body, composed of two Democrats and two Republic-There are four inspectors, two canvassers, and two poll-clerks in every election distrier, of which there are three hundred and forty within the municipal limits. Of these one-half are selected from among the Repulslicans, and the other half from the Democrats: and were this selection corefully made, a per fect security would be obtained against fraud; but by reason of the many local quarrels, the running of independent candidates, the schisms in party organizations, and the united interest of regues to deplete the city treasury, improper and unfit men are frequently selected. In fact, this is carried so far that it has become a common expression among politicians "that the canvassers and inspectors have been promised to certain candidates and denied to others"-an expression which means that the irregularities we are about to enumerate were to be committed in favor of one person and against another. And it must not be forgotten that for these illegalities the Republican Police Commissioners are almost as much to blame as the Demoeratic ones.

The duty of the inspectors on election-day and to that alone we confine our remarksis to receive the votes and deposit them in the boxes. The canvassers count the ballots at the close of the polls, and the poll-clerks keep the records, which are transmitted immediately to Police Head-quarters, and subsequently to the Board of Supervisors, who are ex official county canvassers, and whose sole duty it is to compute the total result either in Assembly, Senatorial, or Aldermanic districts, and give certificates of elections to those candidates who have a majority in all the election districts with-in their precincts. By this system it will be perceived that frauds by the canvassers and inspectors, if any are committed, are fatal, and can not be corrected at any subsequent stage of the proceedings. The law requires the bal-lots to be returned to the boxes, and the boxes to be sealed up and sent to the station-houses; but this statute is practically disregarded. Consequently there is no legal mode of going behind the returns, except by summoning every voter—a proceeding that is manifestly impracticable.

If an inspector changes the ballot which is handed to him nobody can prevent his doing so; the voter may protest, but if he makes himself offensive he will be ejected by the police, under the orders of the inspectors, who have control in such matters by their general authority for preserring order at the polls. Cases frequently occur where parties objecting to the reception of illegal ballots have been arrested, while those depositing them have been permitted to go free, and any protest against the ac-tion of the inspectors leads invariably to arrest and detention in the station-house. Inspectors have been known deliberately to throw away the bellots of voters and openly to substitute others, and to continue doing this for hours in spite of all remonstrances, while in other cases they have been observed to effect the substitution by a little sleight-of-hand, and more secretly. In the contested election case of M'Kin-VER opt. WHALES, the following evidence was

"Lewis H. Lavray was a register and inspector in this district, and he testifies that during the entire day Enspector M'Quates received the Assembly bal-lets, and he dropped many of them on the foor, and substituted others from his cost pecket, which he de-posited in the ballot-box. Attention was called to it, and Lavray expostrbiated with him, when he replied, "Ton have cot too much to any around here allocation."

and Larran exponentated with him, when he replied,
"Too have got too much to say around here altogether; if you don't hish I will proch you in the head."
"In addition, it is satisfactorily proven that, in other instances, offensive and oven obscene epithets were used to instinuidate voters who declined to cast their ballots for Mr. Winger. That others who instand upon their rights to take the each prescribed by law were violently taken from the polls by persons pertending to act in the capacity of special shriff's deguties, with no intempt on the part of the Board of Inspectors to prevent such violence."

Many other international street in the capacity of the countries of the street of the str

Many other instances equally gross could be given, but these are sufficient for the occasion. They depend not upon more opinion or comon rumor, but have occu frequently proved by uncontradicted syidence in open court. Bad as they are they do not equal in enormity the frands committed by the canvassers. The latter officials, as soon as the polls close, proceed to count the votes. This is usually done by taking up ten votes at a time for a candidate sud calling "tally;" whereupon the entry is made in his favor to that effect. But it is no anneal thing for the canvasser to take fifteen votes before he calls "tally" for one man, and require only five for the opponent, thus making an error fraudulently of five votes against one and five in favor of the other, or ten in all. In such cases the packages are immediately thrown around the room or piled on the floor, to be burned up as soon as the iniquity is completed. In one instance the poll-clerk insisted upon standing behind the canvassers who were earrying out this scheme in spite of their orders to him to sit down; and the entire canvass was stopended until a telegram could be sent to Po-· Head-quarters to ascertain whether the ree me was not under the domination of the e manner. In this particular case, the Pres-ju m of the Board of Police repaid that the poll-clerk could perform his duties in any part of the room, and the result was that the opposition candidate received a majority in that district, and in no other in his ward.

But a simpler and more effectual way of carrying the election is to change the votes bodily from one side to the other. For instance, if Mr. Brown, to whom the canvassers have been given, receives three hundred votes, and Mr. Jones, who is not approved by the political magnates of the city, obtains six hundred, the six hundred are transferred to Mr. Brown, while Mr. Jones is only allowed the three hundred that were polled in favor of his adversary. By these means the tally between the poli-lists and the returns is maintained, and a cleaner and easier operation is performed, while the effect is equally conclusive. So far and accurately are these and kindred frauds carried out, that certain local politicians can often carry a district by a specified majority established before-hand. In one case a Ninth Ward politician was compelled by party pressure to go against a friend who was a candidate, but promised that the district should be given to the opponent by only eight majority; and he was much chagrined and made many apologies because by accident the majority rose to twelve. In that case there were seventy-five actual voters in the district, but the returns showed over four hundred votes.

Publicity is always given to the names of the canvassers and inspectors who are selected by the Police Board, and unobjectionable men are often chosen in the first instance. But these are changed afterward in those localities where frand can be most readily perpetrated. On the day preceding, or on the very day of election, often as late as three or four o'clock in the afternoon, the canvassers will be changed, and some tool of iniquity substituted for a good There is no time for appeal or protest or argument; the new man appears with his written authority; and if the original appointed makes any trouble be is immediately dragged away by the police. No candidate opposed to the regular organizations of either party is safe for a moment. He may imagine that he has decent and honest canvassers and inspectors, but they may be removed at any moment and the vilest men substituted. In this connection we make the following extract from the points in the M'Krevez case, to which we have already referred:

"The two inspectors, M'Quare and M'Kenna, were both supporters of Whales. M'Kenna admits that he has been arrested several times, that he was last imprisoned in 1864, and that he has since here les leed up in the station-house 'for raising a disturbut or in the house at night with his father and brother,' and M'Quass can't remember whether he has ever been

It must not be supposed that we mean to say that these enormities are committed in every election district; far otherwise; this would be neither desirable nor possible. Elections are rarely carried by other than a close vote, and the manipulation of this in a few districts will usually answer every purpose; where it will not, the regular organizations have to submit to a defeat. But if any of our readers will take the trouble to go to Police Head-quarters on electionnight they will find a number of le sand buggies waiting there. At occasionan intervals a man will be seen to enter one of these and drive off at furious speed. If our readers follow him they will find that he goes to a certain district where the proper men for the purpose are in control, and that he gives them certain directions. The returns have been examined as they come in at head-quarters, the number of votes required to elect has been ascertained, and the orders thus secretly given are to make up that number. It is thus that free expression is given to the will of the people in the city of New York, and Democratic majorities are rolled up which overslaugh the votes of the honest Republicans throughout the State.

We have only referred to a few instances in support of our statements, but we could give dozens of cases; not on hearsay evidence or public rumor, but duly sworn to, either before some committee of the Legislature or in the resence of the court. Every point that have specified can be readily sustained, and is perfectly well known to all the practical working politicians of the city. Nor is the sole injury traceable to the direct fraud, but is a consequence of it and of the knowledge of the impossibility of fighting against it. People become discouraged when they feel that it is useless to struggle against a superior power; they sarrender without an effort when they are assured be-forehand that such an effort would be in vain; and especially are the smaller politicians certain to submit to the dictation of the controlling body, when hy resisting they could effect no good, and would be sure to incur a dangerous camity.

THE PRINCE AND THE EMPEROR.

THE recent speech of Prince NAPOLEON ought to be studied by party orators as an il-Instrution of independent party criticism. The cousin of the Emperor, a probable member of the Regency should the Emperor die, and a possible successor to the throne, is really of the Emperor's party. - But he has outlived many illusions and penetrated many more. He is, to borrow a theological phrase, a rationalist in ! imperialism. He does not deceive himself by supposing that any glamour surrounds his heavy coasin in the minds of Frenchmen, and he knows that the family glory proceeds from the uncle. He has observed men and stodied history, and he has undoubtedly decided that the only hope for the present dynasty in France lies in its transformation into an entirely constitutional government. In his speech, therefore, he does not besitate to demand it. He does not praise the plan of the Emperor as the only plan, but he points out its serious defects, and he criticises the imperial régime with the vigor of a friend. This is the point which makes his speech interesting as a study of true party oratory. It is serviceable, not servile.

Prince Narothon says that the Senatus Consultum indicates that henceforth liberty is to be the strength of the empire. This he believes to be an imperial tendition, and he makes the remarkable assertion that his studies have satisfied him that his uncle, the great Narotmon, returned from Ella a convert to constitutional principles. He does not deny that the nature of his genius made him prone to adopt old practices, but he is sure that his reason was convinced. The difficulty with the government of Louis Phillipp was, that it represented the electors and not the people, and the catastrophe was therefore inevitable. But now, when there are ten millions of electors, the goverament must represent their wishes, Prince, therefore, logically objects that the Ministers are responsible, not to the Assembly, but to the Senate, which is appointed by the Emperor. Moreover, during the six months' adjournment of the Assembly the Schate may legislate under the Presidency of the Emperor, and even vote the budget. Then the Senate alone has the right to discuss the Constitution, which is proposterous. The election districts should no longer be gerrymandered by imperial decree, and the mayors of cities should be elected by the municipal councils, and not appointed by the Emperor.

These are the demands which the Prince Narot non makes in the interest of liberty. He perceives, with every body else, the suspicious omissions and complexities of the proposed system, and he very truly says: "When you seriously intend to practice political liberty, you will do pretty much what all other free peoples have dense and are doing." That is the substance of the whole matter. If Louis Narolkov intends to establich a free constitutional system, the necessary measures are obvious. If he does not adopt them, his design may very properly be respected. The justice of the Prince's critiions is entirely unaffected by his personal opes and intentions. Whether he appears in in Majesty's opposition to propitinte publie favor, or to act as a scout and feeler for his Majesty, or is merely exercising his wits to amuse himself, or is in fact the honest critic that he seems, his speech undoubtedly points out the discrepancies between the provisions of the Senatus Consultum and a true constitutional system.

NOTES.

THE late Legislature of New York omitted to ask the Governor to send to Washington a cer-tified copy of the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment. It was suggested that therefore it would not be recorded in the State Department. The acting Secretary of State therefore wrote to The acting Secretary of State therefore wrote to the Governor, who answered that the Legislature had not directed him to apprise the Secretary of State, but that he acceded to the request, and forwarded a copy officially attested by the election of the two Houses. Thereupon the World insists that such an act is not official notice. But the Governor has nothing whatever to do with the amendment except as the Legislature may ask him to send notice of its action to Washington. The "official notice" which the law requires is of course a copy officially attested by the proper Legislative authorities; and this notice has now been transmitted to the State Department.

Tun poem upon this page was evidently suggested by the illustration in the Weekly for August 28, called "An Heroic Boy." It is not the gust 28, called "An Heroic Roy." It is not the first time that our illustrations have suggested good poems. The striking sketch of "Sheridan's Ride," which was peblished in the Weeldy soon after the Battle of Cedar Creek, which has been often attributed to Mr. Nast, but which was really by Mr. Etyphon, furnished the motive for Mr. Thomas Buchanan Ream's poem of the same title. A volume of poems by Hasky Anney, the author of the "Stowawny Boy," has recently been published by A. D. F. Handourn & Co.

Wino makes and unmakes the postage stamps? The old style was neat and excellent, the new is execuable. There was a pleasant sentiment in the portraits of distinguished citizens, but pic-tures of locomotives and jockeys are absurd. We learn that there is to be another change, and we hope that the reform will be a restoration, and that the stamps will "stick."

THE Gold Telegraph, erected by Mesers, ALEX. M. HAYS & Co., in front of their store, No. 23 Maiden Lane, will prove as useful to all persons interested in the price of gold as it is novel and ingenious to the general public. The indicator is placed upon a pedestal ten feet high, with telegraphic connection at the Gold Room, by means of which all changes in price are instantly and faithfully recorded upon its dial. As nearly every one in the street is more or less interested in these changes, this new arrangement can but be regarded as of great public con-

the second of th

THE Rev. WM. II. MELBURN has just returned to New York after an absence of sixteen months in England, whither he went mainly to submit to an operation upon his eyes by GHARPPR, of Berlin, the most eminent of European oculists. Although his sight is slightly improved, the opemtion was, nevertheless, not a success:

Seasons return, but not to him returns Der, or the sweet approach of ev'n or reors, Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rese, Or flocks, or herds, or human face divine; But cloud instead, and ever-during dark, Surrounds him, from the cheevful ways of men cat off."

While abroad, especially in England, Mr. Min-BURN was made the recipient of much attention from gentlemen eminent in literary, social, and professional life. During his travels he had rare opportunities of "seeing" and heaving what was going on among the notable folk of the Old World, and these observations he has embedded in a couple of lectures: one, "What a Blind Man saw in Paris;" the other, "A Blind Man's Experience in search of Sight." These he proposes to deliver during the coming locture sea-son. They can not fail to be very popular.

THE STOWAWAY BOY.

(Suggested by our Illustration, "An Hereix Boy," in the Westly for August 28.]

Water three days forth upon the salty sea,
There came out to the deck a little boy;
Not wherewithal so pay his way had he,
Yet looked up to the broad fees sky with joy.
His face was brithe said fair, for what is good Shines cut and issue not to be understood.

But on the boy a doubting eye was cast, And soon there questioned him the master's mate: He said that his step-father, near a mast.
He said that his step-father, near a mast.
Had hidden him, with tood, and look him wait.
Within the place until they reached the shore,
Where a kind aunt would give him from her store.

The mate was slow to fiel the story true, And thought the salient gave the boy his food, And often questioned him before the crew; The boy replied with steadthat forcitude. At last the mate avowed the glaring lie Should be confused or the the boy must die.

Thereat he bade a sailer fetch a repe, And pointing to the yant-arm, somely said,
"Boy, in sea minutes you will be past hope,
And know the soleren silence of the dead, Unless you speak, and sparn the lie away.*
The boy knelt down and asked if he might peap.

Above its hell of fire the tortured steam Shricked, bissed, and ground in terror and in pain; Yet worked the ship's great muscles, shaft and beam. The word second a sea-gall or a crave Beating the denor oir that floods the world. And round and round her watery wings were whirled,

The sky best over the contented sea,

And, like the bey's face, was both pure and clear;
The ship's folk gathered round him acciously.

The Lord's Prayer from his earnest lips to hear.
The mare, in tears, by treelile sore opporated,
Cleaght up the boy and cleaped him to his breast!

Truth's simple grandour is her priceless wear, Truth's simple greateur is her process wear, And virtue is the crown upon her head; So plain is she that even a child may dare. To take her hand and go where the will tread. Not her shall serpost error faccinate, She strikes it down and rules in time and fate.

Cling thou to Truth and heep her rigid line, Nor punder to the false on either side; Truth dwells with windom, makes the face to shine, Leads on to honor, in to God effed; Oh, in thy trial hour, whate'er befull, Trust her with from faith and all in all.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

New York has one mile of railroad to 1885.1 of population; New Jersey, one to 900.5; New Hampshire, one to 900.7 Vermont, one to 586.6; Massachmetts, one to 907.9; Connecticut, one to 586.1; Penneyticut, one to 767.9; Hickingson, one to 680.5; Indiana, one to 760.5; Girle, one to 589; Michigan, one to 680.6; Hilmols, one to 760; Nebraska, one to 283.5; Kansas, one to 160; Nebraska, one to 181; Verginia, one to 160; Nerth Carolina, one to 160; Holl, Verginia, one to 160; Nerth Carolina, one to 160; Florida, one to 548.2; Alabama, one to 1182; Mississippi, one to 860; Tennessee, one to 713.2. Senate Brownlow, of Tennessee, has seld his in-

Senator Brownlow, of Tonnessee, has sold his interest in the Kroxville WAs, and says that betreffeth he owns no part of any newspaper establishment in that State or elevations.

Governor Chamberlain's najority in the Maine election, September 18, is estimated at about 2000 over both the other candidates.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Emperor Napoleon was sufficiently recovered to appear in the streets of Paris September 16. Two days later he presided at a Council of Ministers.

The remains of Lady Palmeraton have been interred by the side of her heshand's in Westonster Abbey.

A letter from Liverpool to the State Department at Washington states that a contagion radiod nurratio, or boof and mooth disease, has broken out among gattle in several parts of England. Although not as fatal as the fisherpool, all are called upon to exercise rend care to prevent its importation into the United States.

Victor Emanuel has consented that Ma son, the States.

Visites Emanuel has consented that his son, the Buke of Gemoa, shall be a randidate for the Spanish Inteste. The prospects of the Buke of Genoa, as a candidate, and reported to be encouraging.

The Spanish press is quite excited on account of General Stekler's note to the Government indicating that the United States may shortly recognize the Cabans as belligerents. Some formula go so far as to say that he was appointed Masister to Spath simply because be favored the amexation of Cuba to the United States.

Thomas John Penn, the last descendant of William Penn, recently died in Lendon.

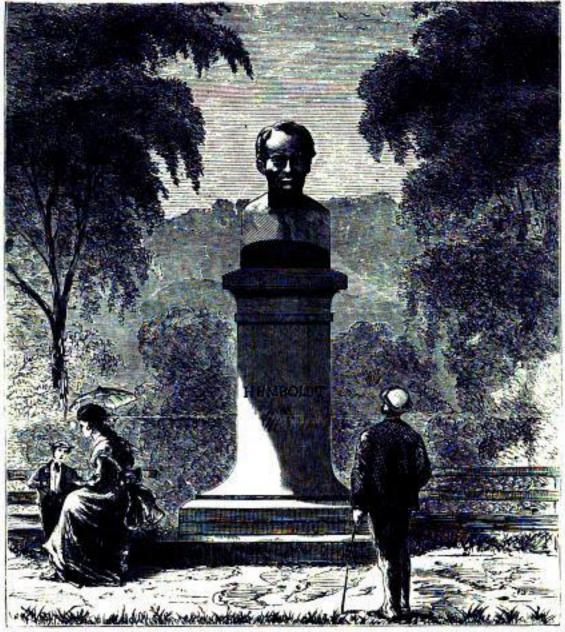

THE HUMBOLDT CENTENNIAL.

THE 14th of September—the centennial anniversary of the birth-day of ALEXANDER HUMBOLDT day of ALEXANDER HUMBOLDT— was celebrated generally through-out the country. In Boston there were three distinct celebrations, the most important of which was at the Music Hall, where Prof. Agassiz delivered an eloquent en-logium upon the scientific career of his great countryman and pred-ecessor in science. But the most remarkable of the celebrations in this country took place at the New this country took place at the New York Central Park, where was un-veiled a bust of Baron HUMBOLDT, of which we give an illustration on shis page.

It is a somewhat singular fact, that the only busts that have yet been located in Central Park are those of SCHILLER and HUM-noller, both Germans. This bust of Humoller is said to be the best in severe and humoller is said to be the best in severe and her was made by or Humbolder is said to be the best in existence. It was made by Prof. Gustav Blauser, of Ber-lin, who was a friend of Hum-monor in his lifetime, and who pos-sessed the only mask ever taken of him. He has recently modeled a best of HUMBOLDT for the King of Prussin.

The bust of HUMBOLDT in Central Pork is located near the Schol-ars' Gate, at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. It rests on a square pediment of granice, and has a total height of twelve feet from the ground. It is about three times the size of life, and presents a most the size of life, and presents a most attractive appearance. In front it bears the inscription, "ALEX. VOX. HUMBOLDT;" on one side the name of the artist, "Gust. Blanker.—fecit, 1869;" and on the other the names of the makers, "Ground Howaldt & Sonn, geg. Braunschweig, 1869."

The number of persons present at the celebration was not less than 25,000. On either side of the bust a platform was erected, covered with a large awaing, and hung around with bunting (the Ameri-can and German flags intertwined). Small American flags also deco-rated the front and sides of these rated the front and sides of these platforms. The one on the right was reserved to the speakers, the Committee of Arrangements, and the invited guests, and the other was appropriated to the reporters. The various singing societies, having filed into the Park, took places in front of the bast, the flags of these organizations being grouped together on the left of the orchestogether on the sets of the orchestra, which was seated in front of the northernmost platform.

BUST OF BARON ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT, NEAR THE SCHOLARS GATE, NEW YORK CENTRAL PARK. [Риотопачини вт Воскмоси.]

At 2 o'clock the assemblage was called to order by C. E. DITHOLD, Chairman of the Humboldt Monument Association, and after the ument Association, and after the over-ture to "Oberon," he formally presented the monument to the Commissioners of the Park, with an appropriate address. Then the statue was unveiled by Fren. Kuring, consul at this port for the North German Confederation, and WILLIAM ACPERMANN, AN-DREW H. GREEN replied to the presentation address, and his grace-ful speech was followed by a schol-arly and elaborate address by Pref. Francis Lieuce. Speaking of the appropriateness of locating the bust in this city, he said: "Hewmonor, though a German in the lineaments of his character and thents, was, of all modern men, the one whose endenvors, as-pirations, and fame were least limited by national demarkations. If we take the word Catholic in a tee by national demarkations. If we take the word Catholic in a sense agreeable to its etymology, he was the most eatholic man in modern times. Europe, Asia, and America were equally his by visit and discovery. He wrote scientific dissertations with equal satisfaction in German, French, and Spanish. New York is far the most international, or, as the Greeks would have expressed it, all-initional place in the world, where Asiatics, Africans, and Entoquans meet, traveling custward or westward. This is the fieness, real and symbolical, of the place where we now stand, for the monumental image of Alexander Humolog—a fitness which will be increased by the proposed Museum of Natural History to be established in yonder building, in former times an arsenal of the United Scates. A German collection of great value has already been purchased for this purpose, by means fornished by liberal citition of great value has already been purchased for this purpose, by means farnished by liberal citi-zens of ours; and the traveler, Bickmore, the pepil of Agassiz, the follower of Hummonn, will be the director of this collection."

It is now ten years since Hum-monn's death. The celebration of September 14 was not simply a recognition of his services to science, but also a tribute to the human intellect.

THE GRAVES OF AVONDALE-SHUPP'S HILL GRAVE-YARD, NEAR PLYMOUTH, PENNSYLVANIA.-SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.-[SEE PAGE 634.]

MY BROTHER LEONARD. By JULIA KAVANAGH.

Ir has always seemed to me, since I passed those goldly but happy years of youth when we feel too much to care to think—it has, I say, almays seemed to me, that some of us are born to act and to suffer, and others to sit passively and look on. From childhood upward to this pres-ent hour—when I sit writing alone, a whitehaired woman, in an old château of Provence-to be the silent witness of my brother Leonard's life has been my lot. No lover ever came to me: no dream of love ever crossed my path. But i do not regret it; no, I do not regret it, though I am now a childless old maid, pale and withered. If love, with its blessings and its torments, had sought me, if a husband had taken me to anoth-er bome than this, what should I have known of that shy and noble heart which grief never conquered, but a great joy broke and stilled for-

According to the world's estimate my brother Leonard's life was not an eventful one. this, too, the parts allotted to the actors in the great drama of life are unequally divided. Some get the glorious destinies. Their star sets or rises in a sort of tempestuous splendor, and leaves a long track of light behind it through the dull pages of history. So far as I can see, they are not more noble, more heroic, more beautiful than others of whom there is no record, who live and die unremembered save by a few faithful hearts. But, after all, what matter? What is it to my brother Leonard in his grave if the world never knew that it lost in him a pure heart, chivalrous and true as that which once heat in the bosom of Bayard—of the knight who knew neither reproach nor four, and who died in all honor after living without a stain? My brother Leonard never wickled lance or sword, but there are other battles fought in life than those in which blood is shed; and of all who ever struggled nobly against adverse fute, who knew how to bear de-feat, or, harder still, how not to triumph over a conquered enemy, some were ever more worthy of honor than this unremembered man,

He was the eldest and I the youngest of a large family of children, all been in this old Provençal next built on a rock above the Mediterranean Sea. It is a fair old manor enough, at least I think it so; I like its yellow sun-burnt front and the square tower which rises above its low roof, and its many tall windows, with small glass panes, which flash again in the fiery light of the setting sun. I like its broad view of an azure sea with a whitening horizon, and even the arid plains which surround our old home I like too. For in that descrit our green garden is like a beauti-ful coris, cool and shady. It is an old-fashioned garden—they have none such now—with straight alleys and clipped trees; here and there a few brathen statues, moss-stained and mildered, appear in the howers; and on the lawn, in front house, a slender fountain ever throws up its waters, however bot the mountay sun may be. But why do I speak of all this? I am the But why do I speak of all this? has of the De Lausacs, and in my languid veins their once hot Provencal blood is dying away feebly.

We were great and rich once, say the records of Provence; but the religious wars proved our undoing. We were Catholies, and had many a fight with our old foes and neighbors, the De Sainte Foys, who held the new faith. We beat them, of course; but though we were fleree and revenerful, we scorned to enrich ourselves with the speak of our enemies; and as they soon bent to the storm, the warfare which well-nigh ruined us left them rich. Better times came for them, and worse times for us; they married hoirosest and throve, while we welded poor girls, had large families, and got poorer and poorer. We had but a slender jettance left under the First Napoleon's reign, but we hated the De Sainte Foos, whose grand old chateau on the opposite hill next on adding wings and building "pavil-lons," while our poor old manor crumbled away. The sight of it fed our hate. As a child I looked at it with weath; and even now, when it holds all that is dearest to me, I never care to gaze at its brond fogade.

My brother Leonard and I were the only survivors of a large family, and many years divided us. Both our parents were dend, and we lived here alone with a maiden man, a pole, faded woman, such as I am now, who glided noiselessly about the old rooms and seldom spoke.

All the De Sainte Foys were handsome, and all the De Lansacs were tall. My brother was six feet high, a gunu, thin young man, with harsh features, keen eyes, and heavy eyebrows. He was a great sportsman, yet most incomently tender-hearted. I never saw him strike his dogs, I never saw him hurt a fly; once his gan was out of his hands he was the gentlest of creatures. For all that he was a great hater. Es-periully did he hate the Considen, as he called Bonaparte, and perhaps he hated him all the more that the De Suinte Fors were devoted to the new dynasty, and spent all their time in Paris. I remember the scornful looks my brother often east on the closed windows of their cha-ton. "Just like them," he mattered. "Time-servers; any thing for money, any thing for rank; just like them!"

I was sent to a convent when I was ten years old, and I remained there till I was seventeen.

The nems were very kind to me, but spite their kindness I pined for my old home, and the sea dashing up the beach, and the green garden with its mutilated statues and its little fountain. No, when I stepped out of the convent-gates into the little carriole which had been sent for me wish our old servant Saint Jean, I was, spite a few tears shed at parting from my kind companions, as gay as a lark. The sun was setting when we reached home. The sun-burnt land looked flooded with fire and gold, and our old manor seemed.

almost fresh and young again in the glorious light. I skipped lightly out of the little joining car; I ran up the stone steps, still as worn and uneven as of yore; I entered the hare old hall with all the grim De Lansacs looking down at me from the walls—we were not a handsome family—and I felt the happiest creature alive, till my aunt, coming down stairs to meet me, told me that Leonard was away in Paris, and that no one knew when he would come back. This sobered me at once. I felt anxions. The times were troubled. Napoloon had left E'ba and been conquered at Waterloo. Monsiour De Sainte Foy, I knew, was a proscribed man, for we had met a party of soldiers in search of him. Yet, surely—surely, my brother, the Corsican-hater, was safe! "Oh yes, quite safe," answered my aunt. Then, looking at me wistfully, she added, "Roee"—oh, what a mockery that name of mine seems now!—"we have a guest. Our old cousin the Viscount died, you know, leaving old cousin the Viscount died, you know, leaving a widow and child almost destitute; they are both here, and are likely to remain. You will do well to be friendly with them. Madame De Lamac is a great beauty, and has been rather spoiled, and her little girl is very willful; but still, "said my aunt, looking at me in that wistful way, "you will do well to be friendly with them." Youth is inclined to friendliness, and a my count's real meaning never once occurred as my nunt's real meaning never once occurred to me, I cheerfully promised to be all that the beautiful Madame De Lansac could wish. I had no immediate opportunity of showing her how amisble I was; she did not appear, and when my aunt left me to attend to some domestic matters I remained alone.

ters I remained alone.

But does solitude really exist for youth with the delightful companionship of its thousand dreams and hopes and wishes, which are ever flitting about it like gay motes in the noonday sun? Besides, could I feel lonely in the home of my childhood? I went up to my old room, and found it unchanged after all those years;
then I ran down to the garden, so fresh and then I ran down to the garden, so fresh and deny in the pleasant evening; I explored every green nook, I looked fondly at the poor old stat-ues and fancied that they looked back kindly at I was half crazy with the joy of being he again.

Of all the rooms in the manor there was one which, even as a child, I had dearly liked—the upper room in the square turret, whence there was a view of land and sea unrivaled in the was a view of land and sea univased in the province, it was said. Why should I not climb up to it now, like the Lady of Malbroak in the bulled, and gaze at a blue sea and a pale sky, where white stars began to twinkle, though the horizon was still rosy with departed fires! Per-hops I might even see a boat gliding along the waters—one of those low boats with broad lateen sails which I had so often thought of in my inland convent home.

There is a broad central staircase in our man or, with steps of massive stone and balustrades of iron, which takes us to the highest floor of the house, and ends in a long corridor, full of doors, all leading to untenanted chambers save one, which gives access to the dark and narrow spiral stairs that climb up the body of the square tower, and take one to a little room with four win-dows and a terrace around it. I solden go there now, for my breath has failed me of late; my sight, too, is weak and dim, and sees no more as it once beheld them the glories of God's world; but I was light as a bird then, ay, and as keen-eyed too, and in a few minutes I had reached the room in the tower. It was much altered from my childish remembrance of it. I had ever my chinish remembrance of it. I had ever known it blenk and bare-looking, and now it bore manifest signs of being tenanted. There was a flask of wine on a table, and when I cu-riously lifted up an old piece of tapestry which divided the room in two, I saw with surprise a low camp-bed behind it. "I suppose some servant sleeps here," I thought, and stepping out through one of the windows on the previous I through one of the windows on the terrace I looked around me with a delight which made me forget all clso. The evening was very bright and clear, the sen lay calm and lovely beneath me, and far as the eye could reach there spread a noble land stretching to the base of purple-looking hills. It was very fine, but I had no time to linger over the beauty around me. I was roused by a sound of voices coming from the room within. Hiding behind the shutters of the open window I listened and peeped in. "I tell you I can not," said a man's voice; "and I never said that I could. You must marry him.

The low weeping of a woman answered him. I saw the man first. He was no servant, as I had thought, but a gentleman, and, though long past youth, one of the handsomest men I had ever seen. He stood facing me with his arms folded across his breast, and a careless, defiant look in his dark eyes, that gazed steadily on the clear orening sky. The lady was leaning against the wall with one of her hands resting on a chair. I could not see her at first, but when she turned her face to me I was bevildered at her beauty. He was handsome, but enchanting loveliness are the only words that can describe her. If such she looked to me when overpowered by sorrow, what must she have been when gladness beamed from those deep blue eyes, and happy smiles played on that sweet young face with its cloud of golden hair! I had never seen two such handsome creatures out of the fairy tales, and I was all amazement to see them here.

"O Heavens!" she cried, classing her white hands in an agony of grief, "have I betrayed him for that?"

"Why need he know it?" asked her compan ion, drawing toward her. I was very young, very innocent, and would not understand their meaning; but some revelation of it came to me door of the turret-chamber, which had remained ajar, opened, and my brother Leonard came in with such a look on his white face as I cry, and starting back he turned pale as death; had never seen there before. She uttered a low but Leonard raised his hand, and uttered an im-perious "Hush!" which silenced them. For a moment the room was so still that I could hear the low dash of the water on the shore below.

"So that is the end," said Leonard, looking at them in sorrow and in scorn; "that is the end of trust and faith in men and woman. Do not answer—hear me both. Madame, I shall not answer—hear me both. Madame, I shall deal first with you. As the widow of my cousin you asked me for a home, and I gave you one. When you came to this house with your child, your beauty, I confess it, touched my heart; but if you had not one day given me to understand that you had seen my love, and that it might be welcome, I never should have woodd a lady so young and so beautiful as you are. On such a hint, however, I stude, and was accepted. such a hint, however, I spoke, and was accepted. I promised to become your protector and the father of your child; and you, I suppose, agreed to be true to me. How have you kept your pledge? Speak—but no, do not answer; be silent—let not Speak—but no, do not answer; be silent—let not at least your lips be perjured, even though your heart is false." He ceased: he was dreadfully agitated, and the lady sobbed pitifully: but he soon recovered, and turning to her companion he said, almost calmly: "You, Monsieur De Sainte Foy, earne to me in your peril, and, trusting to my generosity and honor, hade me revenge the old fend of our ancestors by saving your life. How did I receive you? Like a brother. And how have you repaid me? You know on what errand I went to Paris. Well, Sir, I have succeeded; you are pardoned. You can leave this ceeded; you are pardoned. You can leave this house; you need its shelter no more. You can go back openly to your own home, where you, too, have a child, Sir, a boy, for whose sake you implored my compassion; but mark my words, do not forget to take this lady with you."

"I can not—I am married," sulkily said Monsieur De Sainte Foy, for the first time attempting to answer my brother.

You are a widower, Sir," answered Leonard, gravely; "your wife died while I was in Paris. I repeat it, you can take this lady with you, And, Sir," he added, his eyes flashing angrily And, Sir," he added, his eyes flashing angrily from beneath his heavy eyebrows, "let me advise you to do her justice. She is the widow of my cousin, and I will not see her wronged. I say no more; you are my guest, and though you have forgotten it, Sir, I remember it still." So saying, he turned away and left them. My eyes were blind with tears, and my heart was full of sorrow for my brother Leonard. I stood a while behind down the median between the same of the median of the same o looking down at the swelling bosom of the sea; then, when I was, or at least when I looked calm, then, when I was, or at least when I looked calm, I entered the room. The guilty pair had vanished: they left the manor that night, and this was the story of my brother's youth.

From that day forth Leonard was an altered mad. He took to books, and became a great reader. His gun was added to the rusty old armor in the hall, and remained there unused; his days were spent in the library. His two bounds, Capitaine and Diane, used to go and seek him there, looking at him with wistful questioning eyes; but though they always got a caress and a kind word, they could not lure him forth. "Why should I go and murder poor es creatures that never wronged or betrayed me?" he once said, and that was the only alimsion I ever heard him make to the treachery that had darkened his existence. The blessing of a long life was not granted to the betray ers. Both died within a year of their marriage Young De Sainte Foy was brought up in Paris, and seldom came to Provence; his step-mother's child was adopted by a distant relation of her mother, and taken to Tours; she, too, married and died young; we never saw her. And thus time passed, and I became a sedate old maid, and after my aunt's death kept house for my brother Leonard, a hale and vigorous old man, whose locks were gray indeed, but whose step was as firm and whose eyes were as keen as ever. He was cheerful, too, and the joyous heartiness of his laugh was something to remember in a man of his years. We left home rarely, and the last time that business took us forth our return was made memorable by a very unforeseen event. We had been a week away, and I felt heartily glad when I saw once more the square tower rising above the yellow front of our old manor. Leonard, too, uttered a relieved "Ah!" as he helped me to alight, and Geneviève, our trusty old female servant, came forth to meet us with

"Thank Heaven!" she said, crossing herself, "it had seemed a hundred years since we had gone away, but all was right now, and the little girl had come quite safely, praised be Heaven! A real cherub! For though her grandmother had been foolish and wicked enough to marry a De Sainte Foy, the child-glory be to all the saints!-did not belong to that brood.'

Here was news for us! The relation The relations of that poor little orphan, our sixth or seventh cousin, had with rare coolness transferred her to us, and taken advantage of our absence to deceive poor Geneviève. Without uttering a word my brothor opened the door of our sitting room. It is a large room, with brown oaken walls and a pol-ished floor. A stream of red sunshine from the west was pouring in through the farthest win-dow, that at which I always sit, because it has a deep recess and a broad ledge on which I put my work. To this ledge the little stranger had my work. To this ledge the inthe stranger said climbed, and there she now sat in a forforn atti-tude, with her feet gathered beneath her, and her little hands clasped around her knees. She might be six or seven years old. She looked fair as a lily in her deep mourning, and when she turned toward us, and shook back her yellow curis to look at us with wintful wonder in her deep blue over. I knew at once the lovely face of her heaueyes, I knew at once the lovely face of her beau-tiful grandmother. I looked at my brother Leonard. His heavy brows were bent, and his keen eyes fastened on the child with a stendy gaze.

He smiled, too, rather a grim ironical smile, which seemed to say, "So the traitress has come back to De Lansac after all." But the little thing returned his look very fearlessly, and, to my sur-prise, smiled up in his face, and never minded me. We had not the heart to send her away. We kept her, and I soon loved her dearly. She was a good, lovely, and Joyous creature. It was like having a bird, or a sunbeam, or any thing bright and gay, to have her in the house. Leonard pever took the least notice of her; I sometimes functed he did not see her, so unconscious did he funcied he did not see her, so nuconscious did he seem of her presence. Yet of us two it was this cold and careless consin whom the perverse child preferred. She would leave me any day to sneak after him. Lucie had been a year with us when Genevière, who doted upon her, came in one afternoon with startled looks. The child was missing; she had been searched for over all the manor, and she was not to be found. My brother looked up from his book, and rose. I followed him up the central stairs, then up again in the tower to the chamber, which he unlocked, and there we found Lucie fast asleep in his chair, curled round like a faithful little spaniel waiting for its master.

My brother never said a word, but took her up and carried her down stairs, still fast asleep, and when Lucie woke below she was on his knee, in his arms, and from that day forth in his heart. They were seldom spart. If you heard my brother's stately step about the house, you also heard a pair of little fees pattering after him. His loud, cheerful laugh was ever echoed by a child-ish voice clear as a silver bell, and if he locked himself up in the library for an hour's lonely reading, his case was rain unless he also closed the window; for Lucia would climb up to the sill, jump down, and, stealing behind his chair, lay her rosy cheek to his and mingle her golden locks with his iron-gray curls. How could be help loving a creature so endearing—one who thought, felt, loved, and hated as he did, and who detested the De Sainte Foys as cordially as if she had been a genuine De Lansac? I tried to check the feeling: in the first place because it was unchristian, and in the second because it was un-christian, and in the second because the De Sainte Foys were in the shade just then. The son of my brother's betrayer lived in Paris, and squandered or gambled all his large property away. The old châtean itself would have gone away. The old chatean itself would have gone if he had not died rather suddenly, leaving but one son, a young man of whom report spoke well, and who, after his father's death, came to Provence with the intention, it was said, of remainvence with the intention, it was said, of remaining. It seemed strange to see the windows of the old châreau open again after they had been closed so many years; but we got used to it.

Monsieur De Sainte Foy had not been back more than a month, and Lucie was about seventeen, when he unexpectedly called upon us one morning. I was working, Lucie sat by the unwinding silk, and my brother was reading, when our solitary man-servant, Jacques, came in, and with scared looks announced our unexpected We all rose to receive the hereditary enemy of our house. He was a very handsome young man-all the De Sainte Foys were handsome—with a manly young face, in which I did my best to rend hereditary periody, but could not. There was truth in his dark eyes, truth in his smile, and truth in the very sound of his

"Monsieur De Lansac," he said, coming for-"our ancestors have not been friends om told; but I am young, I feel guiltless of the past, whatever it may be, and have no wish to berish its resentments or its hatreds. I therefore come to you hoping that you will be so good as to grant your neighborly advice and friendli-ness to one who, though a stranger to this place, means to live and die in the home of tho have gone before him.

My brother smiled very kindly, and held out his hand, and thus a league of amity was struck between the last of the De Lansacs and the last of the De Sainte Foys.

I had always deplored the old fend, but I had my fears about this reconciliation; and when young De Sainte Foy, who did much need my brother's advice, became a frequent visitor at our house, I plainly told those fears to Leonard. Lucie was very lovely and very young. What if she young gentleman should be smitten with her, and win her beart! "Well, and if they should love, where would be the harm?" he replied, very kindly.

Ah! what changes time can bring in its train! My brother actually wished for this thing; and when mouths passed, and no sign of it appeared, I read disappointment in his looks. Well, I too was disappointed. They were both young, both handsome, both gifted and good, and both exactly suited to each other, as it seemed to me. I could not imagine how they met without pleasure and parted without pain, as unconcerned as if the magic of the word "Love" did not exist if the magic of the word "Love" did not exist for them. Heades, I longed for a love-story. There had been none in my own life; my brother's had ended in bitterness. Why would not these perverse young things give me one? It would have been so pleasant to see them adoring each other, quarreling and making it up again, and going through their pretty idyl in the green garden of our old manor. I was sorry that they did not care for each other, and I could not help saving so to my brother one evening as we walked saying so to my brother one evening as we walked alone in the garden. Lucie was up in the tower; she had taken a great fancy to it of late, and went up to it every evening.

"And I, too, am sorry," replied Leonard, shaking his gray locks regretfully: "for, Rose, I like that young man very dearly; strange that a De Lansac should say so, is it not? But he does not care for the child, and love will be free. Where is she? In the tower, as usual. Let us go up to her. It feels close down here." go up to her. It feels close down here."
I do not know why I opposed Leonard's wish.

Digitized by Google

I seemed to have a presentiment of coming evil, and yet all I thought of was that the stairs were steep and high, and that the exertion would be too much for my brother. But he only laughed, and said he would go and see what stars the child was reading up there. He was soon tired, as I had foreseen, and obliged to rest on the dark stairs of the tower. A sound of voices from above came down to us. Lucie, if she was there, was not alone. I heard my brother hearthing heavel.

breathing beavily.
"Leonard," I whispered, "let me go," for it

"Leonard," I whispered, "let me go," for it was a man's voice that mingled with hors.

He did not answer, but he put me by; in a moment, as it seemed, he had reached the door and pushed it open. I followed him in. Lucie was aboue in the room. Without looking at her, my brother went straight to the window, and said, calmly, "You may come in, Sir."

And thus summoned, young Monsieur De Saints Foy left the haloney and entered the room. I looked at them both. There they were—the two ingrates—as I had seen them so many years before; beautiful and deceiving.

many years before; beautiful and deceiving, again betraying the kind friend and the generous enemy; but they were younger than in those by-gone days, and I could read shame and grief on their two faces. My brother looked at them with the very look which I remembered—a cold and angry look; and he said, in a cold, hard

"I have read somewhere that what has been is; that the same men and women live again and again to do the same deeds over and over, and i find the truth of it this day. You, Mousicur De Sainte Foy, came to me, your hereditary enemy, asking our old asimosity to be forgotten; and when I opened my house to you, as if you had been one of its sons, you absed my hospitality. Even so did your grundfather act, Sir, when I saved his life many years ago. Hush! you will apask presently. You," he added, tureing to Lorie, "have betrayed use, your adopted father, as she whose image you are betrayed me, her future husband; and, true to your destiny, you chose to do so with the descendant of the man to whom I was sacrificed. I, too, fulfilled my part in this repetition of an old story, for I was blind, trusting, and easily decrived. Well, as I acted before I shall act again. Let the lot you have chosen be your lot. You want this counts will Measure De Sainte Eur? Toke young girl, Monsierr De Salote Foy? Take har! For the sake of the few drops of De Lan-sne blood which flow in her velus she may remain is the house sill she becomes your wife; but I shall thank you both to have the wedding over quickly, and then let me see either of you no

Lucie buried her face in her hands, and sobbed pitifully; but the young man became crimson, and said, passionately, "You wrong us, Sir; we have been impru-dent, but treachery was not in our thoughts. I repeat it, you wrong us."

"Do you think I am angry?" replied my brother Leccard. "Why, you could not help yourselves. It was in your blood to betray me, and it was my lot to be deceived by you."

"Ah! do not say so," cried Lucie, attempting to detain him as he turned to the door; but he who had no lovest her looked at her se could's.

he who had so loved her looked at her so coldly that she shrank back afraid. So we left them; and, turning back, I saw her sinking on a chair, pale as death, while her lover stood looking after my brother, grawing his nether lip, as if he still smarted under the sting of those bitter words: "It was in your blood to betray me." Sad and bitter were the days that followed this ill-fated evening. I attempted to say a few words for poor Lucie, but my brother's only an-swer was, "Keep her out of my sight till they are married."

He was a willful man—one, too, whom the memory of a great wrong had embittered. It was useless to dispute his commands, and I told

I have deserved it," was her only answer;

and she submitted, and kept out of his way.

The wedding was to be a speedy one, according to my brother's wish; but, oh! how joyless were the few preparations, and with how heavy a heart I made them! Three days before that appointed for the marriage I again tried to move Loonard. It was a clear and calm evening, and we sat together on the wooden bench in the wer where the dilapidated Pan is ever playing on a broken reed. I pleaded for the two cul-petts. I spoke of their youth, of the wish be had felt for their union, of forgiveness and indulgence. He beard me out, then said :

"I trusted them, and they deceived me with-out need, without cause. By what magic can I ever trust them again?"

I felt silenced. What is there, indeed, that I felt silenced. What is there, indeed, that can restore a lost faith? Still, I was seeking for some argument wherewith to move him, when both startled by a round of steps on the graveled path. Lucie and young De Sainte Foy stood before us. My bruther's pale, thin face took a slight heetic tinge, and he looked angrily at them both, but said not one word.

"Monsieur De Lansac," said the young man and I had never seen a nobler and a more loyal look on man's face than I then saw on his-"we would not thus intrude upon you if we could help doing so, but we can not; he so good, therefore, as to bear with us for a few "Speak," impatiently said my brother.

"All we have to say is this; our love was born and ripened in ignorance; our interviews were the result of accident; we never designed to deceive you, or to betray your trust, and you have hid upon us the burden of a sin and a shame which, however much appearances may condemn us. we will not bear. We love each other very dearly, but having no other means to convince you, we have resolved to part forever rather than give you the right to think that we, the descendants of two who unhappily wronged you, have combined to betray you in your old age as you were betrayed by them in your youth. In your presence, therefore, and with her full consent, I give up all claim to this young lady's love. Here I bid her adies forever, and let the bitterness of such a parting atone for the imprudence which has cert up both as done.

has cost us both so dear."

I looked at Leonard; I could scarcely see him, my eyes were so dim with tears; but he replied, fow bitter voice:

"Yes, the old man has but a few years to live. It will do to wait till he is in his grave, will it

"Ah! we have not deserved this!" cried Lucie.
"No, we have not deserved it," answered her lover. "Sir, you wrong us very much indeed. A thought so cruel as that of waiting for your death never came to us. Our parting is to be ir-revocable. My house and land are to be sold, and the first vessel which leaves Marseilles will take me to India. We may never meet again; and if we do, years will have passed over us-years and their changes. If you do not trust us, if you think we are acting a part and speculating on your grave, the sin be yours, not curs."

"Marvelous!" replied my brother Leonard, with a low, ironical laugh. "A young man gives up his mistress, a girl gives up her lover, and all for the sake of a gray-headed old man! Do not ask me to believe it."

"Sir, it is not merely for your sake that we part," said young De Sainte Foy, with an angry light in his dark eye; "it is also for the sake of our honor. Our error has sulfied it, but our sacrifice shall redeem it; and you yourself, Sir, you our accuser, shall confess it."

My brother was staggered, but he would not

"Yes, yes, I know," he said, impatiently; "you think I am one of those soft-hearted stage fathers, who forgive the sinners and bestow their blessing in the last act. You are mistaken. If Lucie gives you up, she must give you up entirely. Do you bear, both of you—entirely? I ask for no sacrifice; I expect none. But if you do give up this thing for the sake of your honor, t not look back."

"We mean it so," answered the young man, in a low tone. "Lucie," He turned to her, She twined her arms around his neck; for a few moments they stood before us in the pale moon-light, clasped in so passionate an embrace that it seemed as if they could never again be sundered. Neither spoke, neither wept; but when I looked at them—so young, so fend, so noble, and so handsome—and thought that they were to part, I could not restrain my tears. My brother looked on unmoved, and uttered not a word of relenting. Young Monsieur De Sainte Foy at length put her by, and walked away without bid-ding us adies. She stood looking after him, pale and tearless.

"Lucie," quietly said my brother, "you may call him back, if you repent your choice."

She looked at him swiftly, with a vague hope, poor child; but there was no reienting in my brother's eye, so her face fell a little, and she only shook her head, as much as to say, "I do

I have often woodered how my dear brother, I have often woodered how my dear brother, so generous, so kind, could be so hard to these two. But he had trusted them entirely, and it pieroed his very heart that they should have deceived him. Indeed, there was no reason why they should have done so. It must have been the waywardness of youth which allured them into this needless secrecy, giving sweetness to a hidden love. I could have made all these allowances for them, it seemed to me: but Laccard ances for them, it seemed to me; but Leceard could not. He was hard because he was him-self the soul of truth and honor, and he was unrelenting because the memory of his old wrong had never left him. It may also be, that in his secret heart he thought to try the two culprits for a time, and forgive them in the end; but is Lucie bore this great trial with quiet fortitude. She looked pale, and her old joycusness was gone; but if she grieved or wept, she kept both tears and sorrow to herself. To my brother she was as gentle and affectionate as ever. His manner to her was unaltered, save for a slight shade—a very slight shade—of more tender-ness. I think my heart must have been young still in those days, for I kept on hoping to th last. I used to watch my brother Leonard's face, trying to read signs of pity or forgiveness in his barsh features, but I saw them not. Then, I confess it, I acted a little part. I would sigh deeply within his hearing, or look persistently at the château of the Sainte Foys, when we were all in the garden, or marmur a "Poor child!" whenever Lucie left the room; but my brother would not see, he would not hear—he never questioned me, nor gave me the opportunity I wanted. At length I got desperate, and spoke to him one evening.

"Leonard," I said, "will you not relent? Do you know that young De Sainte Foy's house and land are for sale, and will go to the highest hid-der? Do you know that he sails for India tomorrow on board the Memphis ?"

"You have seen hisn," said Leonard, knitting his heavy eyebrows, "and he has asked you to say all this to me?"

"I have seen him but not scaken to him." I

"I have seen him, but not spoken to him," I replied, a little angrily. "He is the shadow of his former self—so pale, so worn, so sad, has he grown at all this. Do not let him go, Leon-

"He will come back when I am in my grave," answered Leonard, moodily. It was useless to argue. Mistrust had taken an iron grasp of bim, and would not let him go again.

On the evening of the following day we missed Lucie. Genevière sold us that Mademoiselle had gone up to the tower; I guessed what had taken her there, but Leonard did not seem to think that she might wish for solitude, for he | The dlary will explain that his long term of serv-anid to me, "Let us go to her."

Never shall I forget the sight that met us as we entered that ill-fated room. It was full of a broad ruddy glow which cause from the sea. lighting up the coast for miles around; a vessel was on fire! My heart seemed to stand still in the horror of that moment, and yet how I re-member the pale evening sky, with the round white moon, and Lucie's glassly face and wild eyes, as she stood gazing on the cruel sight in mute despair!

My brother stared at the burning vessel. "God forgive me, miserable sinser!" he cried—" God forgive me!" And he sank back with a groan, and would have fallen but for me. he cried-" God

He never recovered that blow; for it was the Memphis whose destruction we thus witnessed, and young De Sainte Foy, who had sailed in her, was not among the few who escaped to tell her lamentable history. He was the last of his name, and with him ended the line of our hereditary enemies.

And Leonard, as I said, never recovered that blow. His vigorous old age gave place to decrepitade; his gray hairs grew white, his form was bent, his steps became feeble and unsteady. The knowledge that his mistrust and hardness had deemed that brave and true young man to a creek death, and condemned Lucie, his darling, to go through the ageny of such a grief, was more than he could bear. He brooded over the thought incessantly.

The weather was fine, and that part of the garden where he could sit and look at the cha-teau of the De Sainte Foys, now closed forever on its ancient tenants, was that which he liked on its ancient tenance, was been best. He would sit there, gazing at the shut-up mension for hours at a time. When I tried to mansion for hours at a time. When I tried to rouse him from this bitter contemplation he only shock his bead and said: "It was an old quar-rel, a long quarrel; it lasted ages, but the De Sainte Foys had the best of it in the long-run, Rose. Far better perish on board the burning Memphis-better lose love and life for honor, than live to be a hard and revengeful old man. This was the thought that was killing him. "Make him forget," said the doctor whom I called in, "and then you may hope to save

Make him forget! I would have laid down my life for it—oh, how gladly !—bus it passed my power; Lucie herself did her best, and failed. What she really felt and suffered she never showed. She was a generous little creature, and from the first she buried her grief deep in her heart, and kept it there fast locked from our view. Her one thought seemed to be to cling to Leonard. He no longer read new, though when he could not up to the seement to though when he could not go to the garden to look at the chiteau of the De Sainte Foys he would sit in the library with a book lying unread before him, his moody eyes ever seeming to gaze on the tragic ending of the ill-fated Memotis. But no more then than formerly could be escape Lucie. She would steal in upon him as she had so often stolen in her childhood, and lay her cheek to his fondly and silently. I do believe she had never loved him more senderly than she did then, perhaps because of the same deep grief through which they both suffered, and which, as I saw with an aching heart, was wast-ing them both away. This had lasted three weeks—weeks long as years—when the end came. We were all sitting in the garden, I re-member, in that very arbor where the poor god Pan is ever piping away, when Genevière or up to us with startled looks.

"Monsieur! - Mademoiselle!" she gasped. "He is alive—here he is!"

brother rose as with an electric shock He strode toward her; he pushed her away, and then young De Sainte Foy stood living before us. "Sir," he said, "I did not mean to intrude upon you; but my life has been saved by a miracle, and as I am told that the report of my death has been a heavy trouble to you, I

He did not go on.

"Thank God!" gasped my brother. "Thank God! But it is too much; sh! it is too much, And it was too much indeed! The joy wa The joy was too exquisite and too great for his true heart, for as he uttered the words he sank back on his seat and died. What sorrow, what faith be-trayed and love lost had not done, the joy of seeing his heredisary foe safe and well before him died. him did.

My little tale is told. I am very happy, for my dearest Leonard has only gone before, and the two whom we both loved so dearly are blest. Yes, I am happy; but you know now what I meant when I said that the lot of some is to suffer, and that of others to look on. This was certainly my lot, and maybe that is why, though so happy, I sometimes feel rather useless. My part is ended, and all I can do now is to remem-ber what I can see no more. Be it so; memory,

LORD PALMERSTON'S DIARY.

THE private diary of Lord Palmerston has been discovered. It commences when he was sixteen years of age, and it ends at the close of en he assumed office as Foreign Secre-No continuance of the diary has been It seems to have been originally designed in its present form chiefly to explain why he left the Tories and took office under the Whig Earl Grey; a change which, according to Lord Palmerston's chivalrous sense of honor, could only be justified by the fact that he was himself deserted by the party, when he was unscated for the University of Cambridge, for voting in favor of Roman Cathelic Emancipation, although there bad been an established compact, according to which that subject was to have been an open one.

ice as Secretary at War was not from the want of many eventures to accept higher offices. His lordship was importuned by Mr. Perceval, as Mr. Pitt's successor at Cambridge, to assume Mr. Pitt's effice of Chancellor of the Exchequer. But George IV. thought that he should find a more plians Minister in Mr. Herries, and Mr. Canning was compelled, after a visit to Windsor, to make an awkward spolegy to Lord Palmer-ston, by offering him a British peeragu and the Governorship of Jamaica.

Lord Palmerston's dinry is written in a hand only a little less firm and graceful than Walpole's, but it is quite as legible. It is not a mere record of facts, but a gallery of pictures and aketches, in all of which are clearly to be seen the style of an accomplished master. It is, besides, some-thing more. A scene between the writer and the Duke of Wellington, when Mr. Huskisson's dismissal or his being retained was in dispute, is of the very highest and finest style of serious comedy: graphic, dramatic, and so lifelike that the actors seem bodily before us.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Vary Sixva-vas.—Here we read of a clever invention: A private soldier in California has invested a new method of skinning molk. He fits a fine gaune sieve to a hoop of the size of the pan. The milk is then poured into the pan so as to a little more than cover the sleve. When the cream has risen the hoos is lifted, and the cream is than competely removed. We fear the invention is not likely to come into new in New York. The sleve would have a sincern, for to attempt to remove cream from New York milk would be like shaving a pig for wool.—Sheer nonsense.

Were I court-plaster, I would be A patch upon her lip, And spend my life in ecstary, And sip, and sip, and sip! Were I a pair of speciacles, How dearly would I prize A situation on her nose, To gase into her eyes I 3

A Good Large.—An enthusiastic positry-keeper writes to suggest that the Great Raskers should be now called the Great Res, because it has laid so many cables, and brought some of them up, too!

Little Howard came into the room where his mother had just bung up a clean cartain, and made the astate observation, "Ob, ma, the window has got on a clean shirt!"

An old writer gives the following as the amount of "Nature requires five; Custom gives seven; Latiness takes nine; And wickedness eleven."

In view of the continually increased recurrence of railway accidents, the following resolution should be adopted by our State Legislatures:

Whereas, human flesh and blood are not valued upon railways so highly as they should be, and this is one of the chief reasons why accidents occur, Be it enacted, therefore, that ne signalman, or guard, or any other servant, shall work on any railway more than eight hours in the twenty-four, which constitute a day.

a day.

Be it enacted forther that, with the view to the en-couragement of proper care and caution. Directors shall be personally liable for damages, to be assessed according to the schedule here annexed:

SOURSETLE. A Broken Leg.

The temperature such that its case of lose of life as arounity of not less than five bundred dollars a year shall be paid by the Directors out of their own pockets, and not those of their shareholders, to each child of the decessed, tagether with a pension of one thousand dollars a year to the widower or widow of decessed, if such survive.

"The woman question"...What shall I get for a fall bottest? The "man question"...Where shall I get money enough to pay for it?

Mrs. Partington, in illustration of the proverb, "A coft answer birrieth away wrath," says "that it is better to speak paragorically of a person than to be all the time flinging epitaphs at him."

THE RAYLORS THAT SUPPORT POLICEMEN -- Corpo

A judge and a joking lawyer were conversing about the doctrine of transmigration of the souls of men-late animals. "Now," said the judge, "suppose you and I were turned isto a home and an ass, which would you prefer to be?" "The ass, to be sure," re-plied the lawyer. "Way!" asked the judge. "Be-cause," was the reply, "I have heard of an ass being judge, but of a horse, never."

A PRETTY MAIDEN'S SOLILOGUY.

Ob, dear me t I Am ready to cry,
And it sometimes seems as though I should die:
Nobody knows
The number of woes
That beset such a maiden as I.

They call me a flirt,
And try to convert

Me into a hateful, cuntemptible prude:
If they don't mind,
I think they will find
That I'll soon teach them what to conclude.

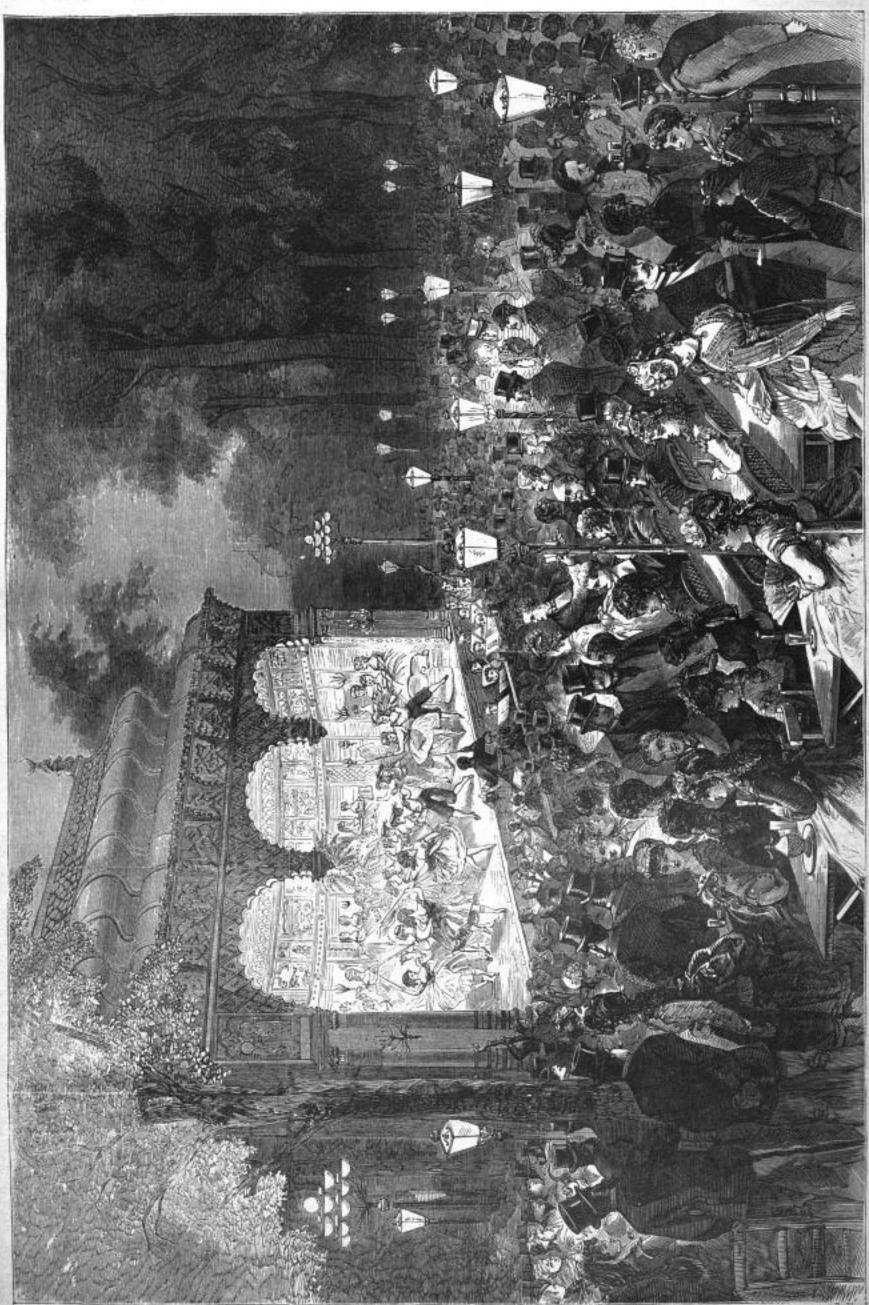

As for the beaux, Heaven only known Why they seem so delermined to prosecute me;
What under the sun
I ever have duse
To make them act so, I can't see.

If they ask me to ride,
Or to walk by their side,
Whenever I think they're about to propose,
I manage the thing—
Contriving to bring
The subject at once to a close.

But then if I wait
It may be too lale—
For men are but fitche at best (so they say);
I think I'll decide
((th dear! how I'm tried)
To accept one without more delay.

Now John will be here
To-night, without fear,
It will be very easy to just bell him "yes;"
But his hair is so light,
And his whisters too bright—
He'll wait a while longer, I guess?

Digitized by Glogle

AN OPEN-AIR THEATRE IN PARIS. -[SEE PAGE 637,]

THE LITTLE PEACE-MAKER.

SEPTEMBER.

FLASH out, thou glowing ember Of a year that is expiring, With the flame of red September The maple woodlands firing; With the sparkle and the glinter, And the flush of royal wine, Warm our chilly hearts are Winter Shall seal thoe with his sign.

The sumach bush is turning To gold and crimson splendor, The majde woods are burning Far in the distance tender; The tinted hill-sides glimmer Within a purple haze,
Their brightness growing diamer
As fade the Autumn days.

The vines, in gorgeous tangle, O'er heary rocks are trailing, Each roughened point and ang With brown and searlet veiling; And where the pine-tree towers The purple asters bloom, Lifting their starry flowers To light the emerald gloom.

The apple-tree commences shed its fruitage mellow, Beside the orchard fences The golden-rod is yellow; And all the green things growing Have ripened to their fall, With Autumn sunsets glowing And golden over all.

Flame higher, foding ember Of a year that now is dying, While the bucs of red September Are on the hill-sides lying; In the beauty and the sweets Of these perfect Autumn days Crown all the year's completeness With a coronal of praise.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble,"

En Plee Boots .- Boot #.

CHAPTER X.

THE GAUNTLET.

Sen John Galk, after his first appearance in the vicar's parlor, came daily to sit there.

Ilis afternoon visit became an established custem, and, after the second time, it seemed as though he had been familiar there for years.

He grew stronger very quickly. It was not long before he began to speak of departing. There seemed, indeed, to be no valid reason why he should linger at the vicarnge. And yet he staid on.

"I shall go shroad as soon as we have some assurance of milder weather," he said to Mr. Leviscourt. "Spring is delicious in Italy. I shall wait, however, until I hear that the Alps are not too impressable; for, of all things, I detest a sea voyage, and the two hours in the Channel are always worse to me than a week's land traveling. Meanwhile—"

"Meanwhile, why not remain here?" said the virar. "There is no need for yen to make a more until you set off for the south."

To this Sir John Gale replied that his intrasion at Shipley virarage had already been long sion at Shipley vicarrage had already been long enough; that he should never forget his host's kindness, but it behowed him not to trespass on it too far; that, although he certainly had no ties of friendship or relationship which sperially claimed his presence just then in any other part of England, he must nevertheless make up his mind to say farewell to Shipley as soon as the doctor's permission to travel could be obtained.

All this, and more to the same purpose, said

Sir John Gale. And yet he lingered on.

The spring set in early, after a severe winter.
By the beginning of April there came soft, bright days, with a southerly breeze which tempted the inmates of the vicarage forth from the house.

Some such days immediately followed the dim-ner-party at Mrs. Sheardown's.

One afternoon Sir John, beholding from his chamber window Miss Levincourt stralling in the garden, presently ventured forth to join her.

"May I walk here, Miss Levincourt?" he asked, pausing at the threshold of the glass door that led into the garden.

"Oh, by all means." But is it somy enough here? The evergrooms give a very damp simile. If you are not afraid to venture further, you aid have more warmth and a southern aspect there, beyond the gate.

So Veronica and her father's guest wandered slowly on and on, looking out over the common dappled with cloud shadows, gazing at the far, hars horizon, passing now and again for a moment, but still proceeding in their course until they reached the church-yard of St. Gildas.

John derheed that the balmy air was a cordial that did him more good than any medi-Still, warm as it was for the senson, he dared not sit in the church-ward to rest, and, as he turned to go back, he was evidently tired.

A flown darkened his fare. "I ought not to have come so far without Paul," he said, "I am still so der - so unacrountably weak."

"It is my fault!" exclaimed Veronica. "Let me be Pant's substitute." She offered Sir John the support of her arm with perfect test and telf-passession, as though it were the most natand ordinary proceeding in the world.

After that occasion the daily walk became a matter of course.

The temporary absence of Miss Dermond from the vicarage was by no means regretted by Sir John. In truth, he did not like Maud. Some word to that effect escaped him in speaking to Veronica.

"You must not say that to papa, Sir John," said she, looking quietly up at him.

"Say what?"
"That you do not like Miss Desmond."

"Of course not. I never said so to any one. It would be untrue. Miss Desmond is a very to would be untrue. Miss Desmond is a very charming young lady, very charming and very young, and perhaps her youth explains a slight touch, the very slightest touch, of—self-sufficien-cy. We grow tolerant and skeptical as we get older. Helas!"

" Mand is not self-sufficient. She is only very earnest and very honest.

"Miss Desmond is happy in having so warm and generous a friend. And pray do not accuse me of any want of respect for Miss Desmond. I have no doubt that she possesses the most ad-mirable qualities; only her manner is a little—a little hard and chilly, if I may venture to say so." "As heart she is really very impulsive."

"Is she?"
"But she has great self-command in general."
"But she has great self-command in general." "I am bound to say that she must have. Any thing less impulsive than Miss Desmond's manner I have seldom seen. But forgive me. I will not say another word that shall even seem like disparagement of one for whom you entertain so warm an affection."

Sir John spoke with a winning deferential softness of manner, and looked with undisguised ad-miration into the beautiful face by his side.

Such looks were now not rare on his part. Veronica, in her retrospective meditations, could recall many such glances; could recall, too, many soft words, so soft as to be almost tender, spoken in her car during the afternoon stroll in meadow or garden. She was flattered and touched by the deference toward herself of this man, whose character she perceived to be imperious, almost arrogant, to the rest of the world.

Others had been admiring and deferential be-fore now. Mr. Plew would endure her scornful raillery with abject submission; but then Mr. Plew was habitually submissive to every one, and was, after all (she reflected), a very insignificant individual indeed

That young man, that Mr. Lockwood, the other evening had shown himself very sensible to the fascinations of her brightness and her beauty. He was not abject, truly. No; he was manly and modest, and he looked, and spoke, and moved in a way which showed that he thought himself the equal of any one among Captain Sheardown's guests. Nevertheless, in Veroni-ca's apprehension, he was not so. Although she had chosen to put down Emma Begbie's ill-breeding, she had been, to a certain degree, mortified by her contemptuous tone.

Sir John Gale was a different kind of person from this young Lockwood, whose father had been educated by the bounty of Admiral Shear-

To be "my Lady Gale!"

The words rung in her ears. She whispered them to herself in the solitude of her chamber, Wealth, station, and all that was alburing to the girl's vanity and ambition, were in the sound. In those earliest years of existence during which, as some think, the deepest and most abid ing impressions are made on the character, the ideal of happiness held up before Veronica's eyes was an essentially ignoble one. The possession was an esercianty agrees one. The possession of such delights as may be summed up in the vulgar word "finery" she was directly or indirectly taught to look upon as an aim to be attained. As she grow older, and the life that lay before her in Shipley-in-the-Wold became clear to her apprehension, an eating discontent took hold upon her like a slow poison. At times, in recalling her mother's stories of her young days in Florence, a passion of envy and longing would make the girl's heart sick within her. Not that those things which had made Stella Barletti gay and happy would have altogether satisfied her daughter. The inter had more pride and less simplicity. Stella liked to "far figura," as the Indian phrase goes; to make a figure in the workl. But her ambition never scared on a very during wing. She was perfectly contented to accept Bussian hospodaresses Inden with emeralds, or even Prince-ses Della Sestoli da Salsa, crowned with paste diamonds and enameled with effrontery, as her social superiors, and to evjoy the spectacle of their real or sham splenders exactly as she enjoyed the spongles and timed of the ballet in carnival.

Not so Veronica. She would willingly be ond to none. There were moments chance mention of Mand Desmond's family, or an allusion to the glories of the ancestral mansion at Delaney, made her sore and jealous. She rendered irritably impatient would even be Mand's simple indifference on the score of her nocestry; though the least display of pride of birth on the part of her father's ward would have tolerable to Veronica's hanghty spirit.

Yet Veronien was no monster of selfish consistency. She was often visited by better impolses and a longing for a nobler aim in life. But the first shock of practical effort and selfdenial repulsed her like a douche of ice-cold wa-There came no reaction, no after-glow, and she shrank back shivering, with a piteous cry of, I can not be good.

She know herself to be wretchedly dissatisfied. And, although her youth and bodily health at intervals asserted their elasticity, and broke furth into a wild flow of gayety and good spirits, she was yet, at nineteen years old, secretly consumed by dreary discontent,

Then she told herself that it was easy for happy people to be good. "If I were but happy, I should be good and kind and generous," she

And latterly the thought had taken possession of her that it would make her happy to become | my Lady Gale.

Opportunity is the divinity which shapes the ends of most love affairs, let them be rough-hewn how they will. Under the favoring influence of residence beneath the same roof, daily walks together, and evenings spent in each other's soci-ety, the intimacy between the vicar's daughter and the stranger sojourning in her father's house grew rapidly. The disparity of age between them offered no obstacle to the familiarity of their intercourse.

There are some men who accept the advance of age, and even make a step to meet it; there are others who painfully and eagerly fend it off; again, there are some who simply ignore it. To this latter category belonged Sir John Gale. You could not say that he indulged in any undue affectation of juvenility. He merely seemed to take it for granted that such affectation would have been entirely superfluous.

From the first moment of seeing Veronica he had been spuck by her remarkable beauty. And not the least attraction in his eyes was the contrast between her character and her position.

"Who the dence would have dreamed of find-ing such a girl as that in an English country parsonage!" he said to himself,

In their conversations together Veronica had spoken of her mother's early life, and had not attempted to conceal her own longing to quit Shapley-in-the-Wold, and Danashire altogether, for other and brighter scenes. He had noted, with a sort of cynical good-humor, the girl's as-piration after wealth and display; her restless discontent with the obscurity of the vicarage; the love of admiration which it required no very acute penetration to discover in her. But these traits of character were by no means distasteful to Sir John. Coupled with a plain face or an awkward manner they would have—not disgust-ed so much as—bored him. United to rare beauty and a quick intelligence they amused and attracted him. And then, to complete the spell, came that crowning charm without which all the rest would have wasted their sweetness on Sir John Gale: the fact that this young, brilliant, and beautiful girl desired very unmistakably to be pleasing in his eyes.

If she be not fair for me, What care I how fair she be?

might have been said, and said truly, by the baronet, respecting the loveliest woman ever cast in mortal mould. Time and self-indulgence, in proportion as they had indurated his heart, had rendered his egotism more and more keenly sens-

It remained his egotism to be, from whatever cause, an object of attention to Veronica. He cared not to ask himself whether she would have lowered her beautiful eyes to have regarded him towered her beautiful eyes to have regarded him for an instant had be been poor and obscure. His wealth and rank were part of himself; inseparable from that capital I, which filled up for him so large a space in God's universe.

"The girl would make a furore if she were known," he said to himself. "Her coloring, hair, and eyes are perfect. And she has spirit enough for Lucifer?"

Nevertheless he had not sweet the best of the coloring.

Nevertheless he had not gauged the height of Veronica's ambition.

Bay by day, and hour by hour, the attraction exercised over him by her beauty grew stronger.

"You are not such a vetary of Mrs. Grundy as your friend," he said to her one day.

"As Mand?" answered Veronica, laughing. Then she continued, with a dischainful toss of her head, "'No, truly; I suppose my Italian blood renders me incapable of worshiping at that shrine. Dio mio! Life is so short! And so little sweet! Why embitter it voluntarily with Mrs. Grundy?"

"Yet in your heart—confess now—you are a little afraid of her?" I might answer you as you answered Maud:

am I a pickpocket to be afraid of the police-

"Miss Desmond's retort did not hit the case, The policemen merely administers laws: Mrs. Grundy makes them.

"She shall make none for me," said Veronica looking very handsome in her scorn,

Sir John gazed upon her curiously; but he said no more at that time. The subject, however, seemed to have a peculiar attraction for him, and he returned to it frequently.

On the Friday morning preceding the Sunday fixed for Mand's return home there came a letter to the vicar from his ward. The purport of it was, to ask his leave to stay a short time lon-ger at Lowater House. There was to be a concert at Danccester, to which Mrs. Sheardown had promised to take her. At the end of the letter were a few words about Hugh Lockwood.

" Do you know, Uncle Charles, wrote Mand, "that Mr. Lockwood knows my Aunt Hilda? He heard accidentally that I was a niece of Lade Tallis, and he then mentioned that he and his mother had made her acquaintance at a watering-place three or four years ago; and that Mis. Lockwood and my aunt became quite intimate. They have not seen her for a long time; but she promised to let them know whenever she came to London. I can not have seen Aunt Hilda since I was seven years old, when she came one day to see poor mamma; yet my recollection of her is a correct one, for Mr. Lockwood describes her as a small, slight woman with delicate feat-ures and benutiful eyes. This is just what I remember. Only he says she is now sadly

"Dear me!" said the vicar, "odd enough that these Lockwoods should have come across Lady Tallis! Here is a postscript for you, Verouses, asking you to send back some dress or other by Captain Sheardown's man. See to it, will you?" Then the vicar, having handed his daughter the letter, went away to his study. Veronica read the letter from beginning to end. She read it more than once. There was a good deal in it about that Hugh Lockwood, she thought. She remembered what Miss Bog-bie had said about him, and her lip curled. She care for the attentions of such a one as Mr. Hugh Lockwood! Emma Begbie should change her tone some day. Puzienzu!

her tone some day. Fuzienze?

Veronicz got together the articles for which Maud had asked, and as she did so she scarcely knew whether she were glad or story that Maud was going to remain a while longer at Lownter House.

"Dear old Maudie! I hope she will enjoy herself." Then she wondered what Maud would say to her daily walk with Sir John Galé, and whether Maud would perceive the growing devo-tion of his manner toward herself. And then she looked in the glass with a triumphant smile. But in a moment the blood rushed up to her brow, and she turned away impatiently. Was she afraid in her secret heart, as Sir John had said? No; not afraid of the gossiping malice of the world; not afraid of Mra. Grandy. But she had a latent dread of Maud's judgment. Mand had such a lofty standard, such a pure ideal. Bah! People all wished to be happy; all strove and struggled for it. She, Veronica, was at least honest to herself. She did not gild her motives with any fine names. She longed to be happy in her own way, instead of pretending to be happy in other people's way.

That very afternoon, Sir John Gale announced that Mr. Piew had told him he might quite safely venture to travel. He made the communica-tion to Veronica as they stood side by side lean-ing over the low wall of St. Glidas's church-yard, and looking at the moss-grown graves, all vel-very and mellow under the slanting rays of the declining sun.

"Mr. Plew was very hard and cruel," said
Sir John, in a low voice. "Very hard and inexorable. I tried to hint to him that my strength was not yet sufficiently recovered to render my taking a journey a safe experiment. But it was Was he not cruel?"

in vain. Was he not cruel?"
Veronica stood still and silent, supporting her elbow on the low wall of the grave-yard, and leaning her cheek on her hand.

"Was he not cruel, Veronica?"
His voice sank to a whisper as he uttered her name, and drawing nearer, he took the unoccupied hand that hung listlessly by her side.

Her heart best quickly; a hundred thoughts seemed to whirl confusedly through her brain. But she stood immovably steady, with her eyes still turned toward the green grave-yard.

"I—I don't know. I suppose—I should think not. You ought to be glad to be well enough to

He drew yet nearer, and pressed the hand that lay passive in his clasp.

"You think it natural to be glad to leave Ship-

Very natural." "You hate this place and this life. I have seen how uncongenial all your surroundings are to you. You are like some bright tropical bird carried away from his native susshine, and caged under a leaden sky. Leave it, and fly away into the sunshine!" "That is easily said!" "That is easily said!"

"You are not angry?" he asked, eagerly, as she made a move to walk back toward the house.

"Why should I be angry? But the sun is sinking fast, and papa will expect me. We had better return to the house."

"Stay yet an instant! This may be our last walk together. What would papa do if you did not return home at all?"

not return home at all ?"
"Really I do not see the use of discussing so absurd an hypothesis."

"Not at all absurd. It must happen some

"There is Catherine at the gate, looking for us. I must go back.

"Ah, Veronica, you are angry with me!" "Then it is the shadow of Mrs. Grundy that has darkened your face. Why does she come between poor mortals and the sunshine?"

"Nonsense!" Nonsense! "I took you that you were afraid of Mrs. Grundy in your heart."
"And I told you that you were mistaken."

They had been walking toward the house, side by side, but apart, and had by this time reached the little iron wicket which gave access to the lawn. Here Sir John paused, and said, softly: "Well, I have been obedient. I have come home; or rather, you came, and I followed. Perhaps there was no great merit in that. But, Veronica, if you are not angry that I have dared Veronica, if you are not angry that a more care-to call you so, give me a token of forgiveness."

"I have told you that I am not angry."

"Yes; but you say so with your face turned away. Not one look? See—that glove that you away. Not one look: See that give analyses are pulling off give me that."

"Pray, Sir John!" murmured Veronica, hurrying up the gravel path, "I request that, you will not touch my hand. The servant is there, within sight."

"The glove, then! Fling it down as a gage of defiance to Mrs. Grandy, if you refuse to give it as a token of pardon to me!"

She ran past him quickly, up the steps and into the house.

As she entered it a little brown glove fluttered in the air and fell at the feet of Sir John Gale.

THE GRAVES OF AVONDALE.

On the outskirts of Plymouth, near the scene of the recent colliery disaster, there is an old grave-yard known as Shupp's Hill, of which we give an illustration on page 629. It is fall, ap-parently, as interments do not seem to have been recently made in the cemetery proper. Tangled briers grow about the graves, and thistles higher than one's bend wave to and fro, while the golden-rod lifts its bright flowers above the most pretentious marble slab. The fences had to be removed to make room for such of the victims of the Avondale calamity at resided in the immetion relative of the collision.

diate vicinity of the colliery.

On Thursday afternoon, September 9, the first bodies were brought to this place for interment. Widows and orphans, townspeople, and strangers were assembled on the knoil. The burial-service in the Welsh hanguage was quickly over, and just as the crowd was dispersing a bright, beautiful rainbow was set among the clouds. Far in the distance is the Nanticoke Gap, near which the smoke may be seen to arise from the rains of the Avondale breaker.

Many of the bodies of the miners were taken direct from Avondale to Scranton and other towns, whence they had come to work in the Avondale Colliery. The Shupp's Hill graveyard is the burial-place nearest to the scene of disaster.

HEAT FROM THE MOON.

A LONG-VEXED question—one which astronomers and physicists have labored and puzzled and even quarreled over for two centuries at least—has at length been set at rest. Whether the moon really sends us any appreciable amount of warmth has long been a moot point. The most delicate experiments had been tried to determine the matter. De Saussure thought he had succeeded in obtaining heat from the moon, but it was shown that he had been gathering best from his own instruments. Melloni tried the experiment, and fell into a similar error. Plazai Smyth, in his famous Teneriffe expedition, tried the effect of seeking for lunar heat above those lower and more moistore-laden atmospheric strata which are known to cut off the obscure heat rays so effectually. Yet he also failed. Professor Tyndall, in his now classical "Lectures on Heat," says that all such experiments must inevitably fail, since the heat rays from the moon must be of such a character that the glass converging-lens used by the experimenters would cut off the whole of the lunar heat. He himself tried the experiment with metallic mirrors, but the thick London air prevented his succeeding.

The hint was not lost, however. It was de-cided that mirrors, and not lenses, were the prop-er weapons for carrying on the attack. Now there is one mirror in existence which excels all others in light-gathering, and therefore necessarily in beat-gathering, power. The gigantic mir-ror of the Rosse telescope has long been engaged in gathering the faint rays from those distant stelhr cloudlets which are stream over the celestial vault. The strange clusters with long outreaching arms, the spiral nebulæ with mystic convolu-tions around their blazing nuclei, the wild and fantastic figures of the irregular nebulæ—all these forms of matter had been forced to rereal their secret under the searching eye of the great Par-senstown reflector. But vast as are the powers of this giant telescope, and interesting as the revelations it had already made, there was one defect which paralyzed half its powers. It was an inert mass, well poised, indeed, so that the merest infant could sway it, but possessing no power of self-motion. The telescopes in our great observatories follow persistently the motions of the stars upon the celestial vanit, but their giant brother possessed no such power. And when we remember the enormous volume of the Rosse telescope, its tube—fifty feet in length—down which a tall man can walk upright, and its vast metallic speculum weighing several tons, the task of applying clock-motion to so cumbrous and ngly unwieldly a mass might well seem taking its part in a multitude of processes of re-search to which its powers were wonderfully adapted. Spectroscopic analysis, as applied to the stars, for example, requires the most perfect uniformity of clock-motion, so that the light from a star, once received on the jaws of the slit which forms the entrance into the spectroscope, may not move off them even by a hair's breadth. And the determination of the moon's heat required an equally exact adaptation of the tele scope's motion to the apparent movement of the celestial sphere. For so delicate is the inquiry, that the mere heat generated in turning the tel-escope upon the moon by the ordinary arrangement would have served to mask the result.

At enormous cost, and after many difficulties

At enormous cost, and after many difficulties had been encountered, the Rosse reflector has at length had its powers more than doubled, by the addition of the long-wanted power of self-motion. And among the first-fruits of the labor thus bestowed upon it, is the solution of the famous problem of determining the moon's heat.

lem of determining the moon's heat.

The delicate heat-measurer, known as the thermopile, was used in this work, as in Mr. Huggins's experiments for estimating the heat we receive from the stars. The moon's heat, concentrated by the great mirror, was suffered to fall upon the face of the thermopile, and the indications of the needle were carefully watched. A small but obvious deflection in the direction signifying heat was at once observed, and when the observation had been repeated several times with the same result no doubt could remain. We actually receive an appreciable proportion of our warmth-supply from "the chaste beams of the watry moon." The view which Sir John Herschel had long since formed on the behavior of the freecy clouds of a summer night under the moon's influence was shown to be as correct as almost all the guesses have been which the two Herschels have ever made.

And one of the most interesting of the results which have followed from the inquity confirms in an equally striking manner another guess which Sir John Herschel had made. By comparing the heat received from the moon with that obtained from several serrestrial sources, Lord Rosse had been led to the conclusion that at the time of full moon the surface of our satellite is raised to a temperature exceeding by more than 280° (Fahrenheit) that of bodding water. Sir John Herschel long since asserted that this must be so. During the long lunar day, lasting some 800 of our hours, the sun's rays are poured without intermission upon the lunar surface. No clouds temper the best, no atmosphere even serves to interpose any resistance to the continual downpour of the fierce solar rays. And for about the space of three of our days the sun hangs suspended close to the resist of the lunar sky, so that if there were inhabitants on our unfortunate satellite, they would be scorched for more than seventy consecutive hours by an almost vertical sun.

enty consecutive hours by an almost vertical sun.

There is only one point in Lord Rosse's inquiry which seems doubtful. That we receive heat from the moon he has shown conclusively, and there can be no doubt that a large portion of this heat is radiated from the moon. But there is another mode by which the heat may be sent to us from the moon, and it might be worth while to inquire a little more closely than has yet been done whether the larger share of the heat rendered sensible by the great mirror may not have come in this way. We refer to the moon's pow-er of reflecting heat. It need hardly be said that the reflection and the radiation of heat are very different matters. Let any one hold a bur-nished metal plate in such a way that the sun's light is reflected toward his face, and he will feel that with the light a considerable amount of heat is reflected. Let him leave the same metal in the is reflected. Let him leave the same metal in the sun until it is well warmed, and he will find that the metal is capable of imparting heat to him when it is removed from the sun's rays. This is radiation, and can not happen unless the metal has been narmed, whereas heat can be reflected from an ice-cold plate. There has been nothing in the experiments conducted by Lord Rosse to show he which of these removes the same which of show by which of these two processes the moon's heat is principally sent to us; nor do we know enough of the constitution of the moon's surface to estimate for ourselves the relative proportions of the heat she reflects and radiates toward us.

THE SEYCHELLES ISLANDS.

Is these days of steam and universal exploration there is scarcely a habitable spot on the globe that is not brought to us (in fancy, at least) as close as a neighboring village of a quarter of a century ago. Owyhee and Honolulu sound as familiar to us as Rockaway or Penobscot; and yet every now and then we come, in the course of our reading, upon a description of some out-of-the-way place of the existence of which we had never before heard. Such are the Seychelles Islands, in the Indian Ocean, which the English have made the dépôt for slaves recaptured and released on the east coast of Africa.

Concerning the history of this interesting group of islands little is known. They were in all probability discovered by the Portuguess two hundred years ago. They were first colonized by the discoverers, then by the French, and finally by the English, but by them in name culy. They are situated about nine hundred miles due north of the island of Mauritius, the governor of which colony appoints the officials on the Seychelles.

Although the Seychelies are really English, they are apparently French. French schools, French language, French education; even the divine service is read in the Protestant church in French. All the merchants, and, in fact, almost the entire personnel of the islands, are French. A French man-of-war visits the islands periodically, and an English one rarely, and then only in case of necessity. The little town of Mahe, the capital, is inhabited by about ten thousand French Creoles and Africans, and has lately been brought into notice by the English mail line of the Peninsular and Oriental Scamship Company having made it a way-station between the Red Sea and the Mauritius.

The climate is very healthy, but the morality of the place is frightful. The marriage ceremony is a dead letter. Incest is too common to be taken notice of. The author of "A Crulse in the Gorgoa" makes a very comical statement to the effect that an official in the Mauritius (born at Scychelles) is the son of his grandmother by his own brother! The female population are as five to one of men, and there are very few virtuous girls on the islands.

And these terribly depraved people inhabit a perfect paradise of beauty. The land at Mahé rises almost perpendicularly, fronted by a few miles of flat land, whereon stands the town. The heights, some 7000 or 8000 feet, are of solid rock, and to the top covered with luxuriant vegetation. The houses are built a la Swiss, and only want the pretty little bridges and rumbling streams to make the coverage of the stream to the stream t bling streams to make the comperison perfect.

On this island there are about half a dozen roads—one running round the bay, the others at right angles to the hills in the back-ground, gently inclined toward them. These are lined with hedges of the prettiest flowers, the graceful palms and weeping-bamboos rendering them refreshing, cool retreats. At evening these walks are delightful, especially on a moonlight night. The aroma from the myriads of pine-apples, limes, and roses is truly delightful; and in the morning, before the sun has taken up the dew, a little walk before breakfast, besides exhausting one's cologistic vocabulary, leaves one in a good termer for the remainder of the day.

a little walk before breakfast, besides exhausting one's culogistic vocabulary, leaves one in a good temper for the remainder of the day.

One of the greatest curiosities to be seen at Seychelles is a kind of leaf-fir, something like the leaf-butterfly described in Wallace's "Malay Archipelago." Close attention is required to discover the insect on a bunch of leaves; to all appearances it is one of them; its body is quite green, with veins, fibres, etc. These leaf-flies are rare, and very difficult to keep, requiring fresh leaves daily. The ant and other insects perforate and devour them. When first hatched they have the appearance of small dried leaves, but soon turn green as they move about.

The soil is so rich and prolific that a walkingstick stuck into it at random would probably take root and grow. In a short walk, almost within a space of a hundred square yards, can be counted an endless variety of fruits—limes, pine-apples, oranges, bananas, plantains, lychoe, the noble bread-fruit, alligator pear, and mangoes, all growing wild, the two former choking the hedges and emitting a delicious fragrance of herbs; clove, cinnamon, castor-oil, balsam copatha, manise, taploca, sago, and cassava; trees of all kinds—India rubber, palms of every description, cocca—mit, traveler's rest—which, tapped near the root, yields a refreshing drink—cushcw, cocoa de mer, baisualt—from which, being so hard, they make tiles for houses. The escar de mer, as the name implies, grows by the seaside; it is peculiar to the Scychelles, and grows nowhere else in the world; it is valuable for its fine straw; also it has a large nut which contains a kind of blanc-mange, which is very good.

side: it is peculiar to the Seychelles, and grows nowhere else in the world; it is valuable for its fine straw; also it has a large nut which contains a kind of blanc-mange, which is very good. The females are largely employed in plaining this straw, and they sell the plait, onough to make a very small mar, for fifty cents. They work with ease and rapidity, but charge very high for their manufacture. The whole work of the island is performed by women, the men doing little or nothing.

BIG BELLS.

Is China bells have been made of enormous weight. Nankin was anciently famous for the largeness of its bells. At Pekin there were seven bells cast in the reign of Zoulo, each weighing 120,000 pounds. The sound of the largest Chinese bell was very poor, owing to its being struck with a piece of wood, instead of a metal clapper. given to the cathedral of Moscow by the Czar Godunof weighed 288,000 pounds, and another given by the Empress Ann, probably the largest in the known world, weighed 432,000 pounds. The great bell at St. Paul's weighs bepounds. The great bell at St. Paul's weighs be-tween 11,000 and 12,000 pounds, and is ten feet in diameter. On this bell is inscribed "Richard Phelps made me, 1716;" and Peter Cunning-ham, in his "Hand-book for London," tells us that it " is never used except for striking of the hour, and for tolling at the deaths and fuorals of any of the Royal Family, the Bishops of Lon-don, and, should be die in his mayoralty, the Lord Mayor." We believe, however, that it tolled at the funeral of Lord Nelson, and at the deaths and funerals of the Duke of Wellington and Dean Milman. "The larger part of the metal of which it is made," the same authority informs us, "formed the celebrated Great Tom of West-minster," once in the clock-tower, Palace Yard, Westminuter," We do not know the size and weight of Mr. Denison's portest, "Big Ben" of Westminuter, but believe it is not quite so large as Tom of Lincoln, its vibratory power, however, being greater than that of any other bell in the kingdom. The new Great Tom at Lincoln, cast in 1835, weighs 12,000 pounds. The Great Tom in 1835, weighs 12,000 pounds. The Great Tom at Oxford, 17,000 pounds. The great bell cast in 1845 for York Minster, the heaviest in the United Kingdom, weighs upward of 12 tons, or about 27,000 pounds. This last, though so much heavier, is smaller than St. Paul's. The same spirit which caused people to build immense monasteries, and decorate churches, induced them to vie with each other in the size of their bells. The number of bells in every church gave rise to the singular and curious architecture often found in the campanile or bell-tower. It was a con-stant appendage of every parish church belong-ing to the Saxons, and is distinctly mentioned as such in the laws of Athelstan

The custom of welcoming distinguished visitors by a joyful peal is derived from very ancient days, when abbots, emperors, kings, and bishops used to be thus greeted.

The different uses of bells have given rise to

The different uses of bells have given rise to many poems, some of which are inscribed on the bells themselves. Perhaps the finest is Schiller's "Die Glocke," in which he describes the casting of the bell and its uses. The old inscriptions on bells are in some cases of historical value. Certain bells still remaining in London have historical notes: that, for instance, at the top of the bell-tower in the Tower, which was telled at the execution of Lady Jane Grey, Anne Boleye, and other state prisoners; and sounded alarms of fires and other calamities.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

The terrific torundo which swept with such fury all along the New England count is believed to have traveled at the rate of forty miles an hour. A pretty good railroad speed was that, and plenty of mischief did old Ecolas cause by thus giving a loose rain to his subjects. Boston will long feel the effects of this most unscanceable equinocital gale. We believe a storm that occurs any time in September is allowed the honor of being reparded as the Equinocitat, unless it is afterward overshadowed by another more furious. The briefest list of the houses, berns, and chimneys blown down, of the tail spires demolished, of the shipping injured in port, of the windows broken in, of the orchards stripped of fruit and foliage, and similar disasters, would fill columns. It is wonderful there was so little loss of life on land. Some wracks at sea have been reported, and others must be expected.

A few days before the Eastern gale a terrible storm of wind and rain occurred in the vicinity of New Octeans. It seems to have expended its fury upon the Lake shorts, and had the storm continued many hours longer New Orleans would have been flooded, in consequence of breakages in the draining canals, and other unusual casualties. The hotel at Grand Jale was surrounded by water to the depth of two feet; and the guests, about fifty in number, were in a state of great sarriers for mean hours.

It was a regulation of the managers of the Avondale mine that any miner arriving at the mouth of the shaft after the bell tolled seven o'clock should not be allowed to work that day. On that fatal Monday morning two men came late, by only a few momenta. The person in charge refused to let them go down, whereat they grambled and swore, and threatened to be revenged some day; but their lives were saved.

The Rev. Dr. Laushan, the newly-appointed agent of the McAssist Book Concern, it is currently reported, has discovered great unfaithfulness and corruption in that establishment, livelying losses amounting to several hundred thousand delians.

The "Byron scandal" is said to have caused a large demand for his poems. A mysterious amountement is also made that Byron's autobiography, which Moore burned, "will yet see the light." If rumor is to be relied upon, Mrs. Stowe will wait until every body on both sides of the water has discussed the subject before she makes any roply.

The season at the German watering-places has just closed. At Baden-Baden there have been about 22,000 visitors. At Carisbad 11,180 are registered, and at Kissingen and Marihad between four and five thousond each.

The American Institute was founded about forty years ago. Each year it issues 15,000 copies of a volume of nearly 1400 pages, containing a summary of the most practical current information in applied science and agriculture, including the intest and most valuable discoveries. The exhibition now being held in this city is the thirty-eighth annual fair.

It is said there will be a magnificent banquet when the Vanderbilt Bronze is unveiled to the gaze of the world.

Major Powell has successfully concluded his explorations of the Great Caton of the Colorado, and will soon return to give the details of the expedition.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of the College of the City of New York, the question was discussed whether the professorable of Latin and Greek should be retained in the college course. After an animaled debate it was resolved to continue classical instruction as a measure of sound policy and justice both to the pupils and to the community.

Professor Agassis recently received a present of a banner fish caught at Norwich, Connecticut. It is diamond-shaped and three inches square. From two sides of the diamond feated glutinous streamers of a delicate color, at least two feel long. Between these were smaller streamers gridinused by strips of red, white, and blue. When awimming in the river the fish resembled a crystallized American flag, its sides resplendent with all the colors of the rainbow.

The generosity of the American people has been nobly displayed in the rendiness with which they have contributed to the Rawline fined and that for the Avondale sufferers. Them are plenty of selfah people every where, no doubt; but it is a pleasure to know that our country is not lacking in truly benevoleut ones.

The Harward crew on their serival in New York retently were most cordially greeted, and the hospitalities of New York and Boston were offered them by commiltees from the Common Council of this city and from the City Council of Boston. As a testimonial of respect, a harquet was given at Delmorico's in honor of the Harvards by the associated boat clubs of New York and Brooklyn. The hall was decorated with American and English flags, and many distinguished men participated in the festivities. The Harvards could not fall to feel that their countrymen honored their brave endeavors and manly conduct. Heary Ward Boocher, who was prevented by filmess from heing persent, sent a cordial letter, which was read at the entertainment.

Among the extraordinary stories which gain a certain credence in this age of wonders is one concerning a Mrs. Birney who lives in Ohio. She is over sixty years of age, and for the last twenty-three years has preached every two weeks while in an unconscious state! She does not take the trouble to write a segment, or even to study her subject, as less gifted preaches usually find it necessary to do. But every alternate Banday, about ten o'clock in the morning, after smody strange and painful sensations, she passes into an unconscious siste, and delivers a discourse of an hour or more in length! These discourses resemble in style and matter the old-fashboned exholor, sermons of half a century age. Science has falled—so says report—to fathom the mystery surrounding this wonderful case. The subject herself declares that she is wholly unconscious of what transpires during the "spelle;" but she believes they are caused by a stoke of lightning which she received when about eighteen years old, and which for the time paralyzed the right half of her body.

Brigham Young considers an exemption from medical attendance one of his greatest bleedings. He declares that for farty years he has never had a dector in his house—and that at Salt Lake they had no sickness till the dectors came. Then they, being too lazy to delve and hee like others, made people ill, in order to get a living by dectoring them!

The Empress of the French is said to have given up her intended visit to Jerusalem, but is still expected at Constantinopie early in October. The Imperial party will then proceed to Smyras, thethee to Rhodes and Cyprus, delaying some time at each of those places before continuing the voyage to Alexandria. The preparations which are being made at Constantinopie for the reception of the Empress are on a very imposing scale. Roads are being formed and districts improved for the convenience of her Majesty. The whole of the Turkish fleet, consisting of thirty ships of war, is in go to Corfu to meet her; there is to be a grand performance in her honor at the Opera, be which artists of distinction have been engaged at great cost in London and Paris; and on the evening of her departure the palaces, houses, and shipping all along the shores of the Bosphorus will be brillantly illuminated, and large fires lighted on the adjoining eminences. The cost of these feativities is estimated at fifteen millions of france.

A feeding paper relates a strange and terrible story of the self-destruction of seventeen hundred religious enthusiasts in the Government of Saratow. A few months ago the prophets of a new religion made their appearance in that part of Russia, preaching self-destruction by fire as the only sure read to salvation, and so readily was their dreadful doctrine received by the ignorant and superstitious peasantry, that in one large village to less than seventeen hundred persons assembled in some wooden houses, and, having barricaded the doors and windows, set the buildings on dre and perished in the fames.

The centenary of Humboldt has given an impulse to biographical literature in Germany, and caused the automorphism of no less than seventy-four new books about this great scientific man.

FISH CULTURE IN FRANCE.

Tun French Government maintain a great establishment for fish culture. It is situated near the route from Basle to Strasbourg, and takes its name from the old castle of Huningue, near by. The principal building is a long, low structure, with a pavilion at each end and in the middle. In front are numerous pends and water-courses, in which the young fish treat, salmon, perch, pike, and others—are distributed. The row of populars behind the buildings in the first ricer marks the line of the great state. canal which connects the Rhone and the Rhine. The mountains upon the right, in the back-ground, are the spurs of the Swiss Alps. The mountains Those upon the left are the range of the Black Forest. The Rhine lies in the valley at their feet. All the springs in the vicinity of the buildings are carried by a canal into one end of the struc-ture, and the fresh, sparkling water, distributed into several troughs. rens incessantly from one end to the other, every part of the course being occupied with the process of imprognating or hatching the eggs, or nurturing the infant fish.

After the eggs have been taken from the fish and impregnated in the way which has been often de-scribed, they are placed in shallow baskets in the running water. At-tendants watch them night and tendants watch them night and day, remove those that are "sick," separate those which the water masses together, change the bas-kets if they become foul from too long exposure to the water, and pick off every floating straw that might injure the eggs. The salmon eggs are large enough to be counted; and so complete is the organization of the establish-ment that records are kept of the daily changing numbers. Other eggs are too small to be known except by measurement.

except by measurement.

In the other wing of the building are the pools or tanks in which the young fish pass their enr-liest days, and from which, after proper growth, they are transferred to out-of-door pools, or sent to stock the pouls and streams of France.

The establishment at Humingue is for the benefit of the stablishment at Humingue is for the benefit of the stablishment at Humingue is for the benefit of the stablishment.

efit of the public, and the eggs are sent throughout France to all who apply, with no other charge then transportation.

AN OPEN-AIR THEATRE AT PARIS.

THOUGH it is the customary affectation of the journalists who keep the record of Parisian gayeties to protest, about this time of the year, that the French capital is a perfect desert, abandoned by all its proper inhabitants, and only frequented

GOVERNMENT ESTABLISHMENT FOR FISH CULTURE AT HUNINGUE, FRANCE-GENERAL VIEW.

by the savages of the provincial departments, or by ignorant foreign tourists who have lost their way on the wide continent of Europe, we are nevertheless credibly informed that the native bourgeoisie continue to dwell in that lively city; and we believe they may be found assembled in considerable numbers, any fine week-day or Sunday creating, at the various places, urban and suburban, where popular entertainments are provided at a cheap cost. The open-air theatres in the Champs Elysées and in other favorite hannts of pleasure contrive to draw pretty large andiences for their brisk little vaudevilles or farces, and plenty of spectators willing to be gratified by the performances of the nimble, if not always graceful and decorous, nymphs of the ballet. It is an exhibition of the latter kind, associated with the temptations of social idleness, a cup of some dainty and exhilarating beverage, alternating with cakes, or ice-creams, or comfits, or cigars, and especially with the opportunities of fliration and coquetry under the public eye, which has attracted so many young men and maidens, besides not a few old men and children, who might perhaps have been more wisely occupied at home. But the world does very much as it pleases; and the illustration we have engraved on page 632 pretends but to show what the Parisians like to do

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL

Some years ago I knew a lapidary who gnined a considerable fortune by a great misfortune. An excellent workman, honest as the day, Montin had but one fault; he was too fond of good wine, which caused him to neglect his work—sometimes for days together, to the great dissatisfaction of his employer, who in all other respects valued and esteemed him highly, both for his skill and employer.

for his skill and probity.

One day Montin received from his master a diamond of the finest water to cut and polish, with strict recommendations to keep sober until the work was finished.

"I rely on your activity," said the jeweler, on giving him the stone. "I must have it with-out fail on the 15th of this month; and if you disappoint me this time, it will be the last work that you will ever have or the property and

Montin promised exactitude, asked, as was usual with him, part of his pay in advance, and set himself courageously to work. Under his shillful hand the dinmond soon began to show forth its beauty; in a few more hours it would have been finished, when, sufortunately for Montin's re-olutions, a friend collect on him, me old comrade, who had been long absent from Paris: what could they do but take a glass together? Arrived at the enbares, the time passed quickly away, and Montin thought no more of his unfinished

During the morning his coudover came to see how the pol-islang of the diamond proceeded. The concience assured him that Montin had only just gone out, and would not full to return dinoc-ly, as he had for some days been working steadile and unrematingly. Only half satisfied, the jenuter used away, to return in two hours, and to find Montin still absent. Consinced he was at the tasern, the moster charged one of his men to seek him, and induce him to return to his work. This was done, and Montin, grandling between his teeth, quitted his con-rade, and ascended to his workshop; but his head was no longer clear, nor his hand stendy. To add to his trouble, the diamond ho-cume unfixed; be seized it has tily to replace it; his trembling fingers gave a jerk—and, by a strange fa-tality, the precious stone flew out of the window! Sobered in a moment by this terrible socident, Montin continued gazing out of the casement as if petrified, his pale lips marmuring the words, "Lost! lost!

For more than an hour be remained almost motionless, and was only roused from his lether-gy by the entrance of his master.

Is it thus you work, Montin?" exclaimed, "three times have I called for the diamond, and you spend your time at the tavern. Give me the stone; I must have it, fluished or un-

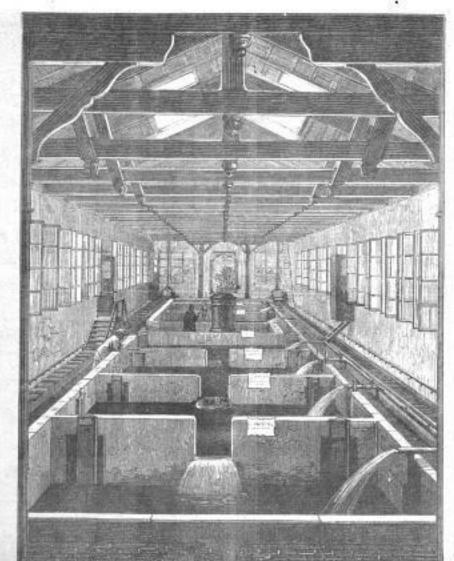

Montin looked wildly at him without uttering a word.

"What is the matter with you?" asked the jeweler. "Why don't you answer? Have you jeweler. "Why don't you answer? Have you drunk all your senses away?"

The lapidary tried in vain to speak. His tongue seemed paralyzed. At last he rose, and hiding his face in his hands, murmured, "It—

- "Explain yourself. What has happened?"
- "Out of the window,"
 "What! when?"
- "The stone."

INTERIOR VIEW, SHOWING THE POOLS FOR TOUNG FISH,

INTERIOR VIEW, SHOWING THE TROUGHS FOR HATCHING.

"Well, well, well; tell me what has occurred.

"The stone flew out."

It was now the turn of the master to become silent with astonishment; then, furious with rage, he cried, "I don't believe a word of your story; you have sold my diamond to pay for your dissi-

This accusation was the coap de grace for Montin. He fell fainting at the feet of his master; and it was not without difficulty that he was recalled to life, or rather to a despair which amounted almost to madness. The joweler, who understood what was passing in his mind, tried to console him, and at last succeeded in rendering him more calm.

It is a most unfortunate accident, no doubt," "but it is not irreparable.

"You do not, then, believe that I sold your diamond for drink?" said Montin, eagerly.

"No, no, Montin; you must forget what I said in the first moment of anger, and let us try to find a remedy for the misfortune. diamond was worth £200; you must endeavor to repay me the half of that sum out of your wages, which, when you work regularly, amount to £3 or £4 a week. With industry and sobriety you will som get out of debt.

"From this time I will work stendily," said Montin, with tears in his eyes. "You shall see, Sir, that though I have been a drankard, I am not a thief." I believe you," replied the jeweler. "I have every confidence in you; you are a good work-man; I will furnish you with pleasy of work, and in a few years you will be right again. Well!

will that suit you?"
"Oh yes, Nir! only tell me once more that you do not think I sold the diamond."

I repeat, on my honor, that I only said so in the first moment of anger. I am convinced you are an honest man-in fact, I prove it by trasting you with more work."

Yes, Sir, that is true, and I promise you I will not disappoint you. I will repair my fault; the lesson has been severe, but it will not be without its fruits.

Montin kept his word-he rose early, and worked indefatigably; the lost stone was re-placed by another, which was polished as if by to morning associated by passed to a system of the contraction of the tavern, and became a model of steadiness and indicate. At the end of the year he had paid a considerable part of his debt. Sixteen mostly passed thus, when one fine morning is the house facility of the first passed that it is not be assessed in the first passed that it is not be assessed in the first passed that the first pa in May, having finished his work, he placed him-self at the window, and watched the boats passing and repassing on the river which flowed close to the walls of the house. Suddenly, his eye was attracted by something bright glittering on the extreme edge of an old chinney. What was his surprise to discover his half-polished diamond! It seemed as if a breath would precipitate it into the warer beneath; and yet there it had been for so many months suspended between heaven

At this sight his emotion become almost as great as on the day when he had seen it disappear out of the window; he dured not remove his eyes, fearing to lose sight of the almost recovered treasure

"It is-it is my diamond, which has cost me so many tears," said be; "but how shall I reach it? If it were to fall! But no, I will take every procaution; not too fast!—let me consider well!" At this moment his employer entered the

"Oh, Sir!" cried Montin, "it is there!"

"What?" said the jeweler.

"My diamond, or rather yours. Ah, do not tourh it, we shall lose it forever.

"It is true; it is certainly the diamond that has so termented us; but the difficulty is how to get it. Wait a moment, I know how to do it." So saying, he left the room, but quickly returned, bearing in his hand a net prepared for catching butterflies. With its aid, and that of a long stick, he proceeded carefully to try and get the precious stone-Montin, hardly during to breathe, eatching all his movements with the greatest anx fery. At last his efforts were crowned with sucand be cried, "Here it is, Montin! I congentalate you on its recovery. I am now your debtor to the amount of nearly a hundred pounds. Wint do you intend to do with the amount

"Leave it in your hands, Sir, if you will be kind enough to keep it for me."

"Most willingly: I will pay you the interest, and if you continue to add to it, you will soon have a nice little sum," replied the jaweler.

This was the beginning of Montin's fortune. In a few years be became a partner with his masone of the principal jewelers in Paris.

HINDOO MARRIAGES.

Sonnay is some antelioration of the Hindes marriage law required. Tied together as infants, there is rarely much love between the Hindoo man and wife; and too offen the hus-hand (if not indeed the wife) seeks chewhere that affection which can not be kindled on the domestic hearth. But to the woman this is not ail. Married while yet a baby, she is by the old Hindoo law married once for all. Her lord and master may die before the marriage has gone beyond the mere betrothal, but she is thenceforth a wislow whom no other men may wed, tild Mr. Weller might, as far as this matter is concerned, have found favor among the strictest Brohmins of the old school, so entirely in accurdance with their views were his sentiments as to widow nurriage. Left a uidow, the Hindoo woman is for the rest of her life a slave in the household of her hashand's family. No hopes may she cherish of having a home and children to 113 her own. She may not even satisfy her womanly vanity by woning the trinkets that her sex (only in India, of course) delight in. And her existence is one of hopeless drudgery and unsatisfied desires. But the Bengalee Baboo has appeared as a modern Perseus to rescue the Hindoo damsel from her chains. Already, in the face of old-world prejudices, many Hindoo widows have been re-elected to the privileges of matrimony, and as the opinions of young Bengal extend, such marriages will become every day of more common occurrence.

A HEART UNFELLOWED.

Tuz autumn mellowed the year, the year, And by the sea Sat an angel, or fay, or lady rare— I know not which—with a shell at her ear That from the depiths of the ocean near Whispered and walled this melody:

"Oh! if it were mine to love, to love,

"Oh! if it were mene to towe, to towe,

And thou wert abe:
Then should'st to me be an isle of the prime,
Where, reling backward the wheels of Time,
All bilss should meet in an Eden clime,
And I would be the ambient sea. "Oh! if to thee, my love, my love,

But once were given;
Thou should'st to me be the fount of light,
The star of stare in the infinite,
And I, as worlds glowed into sight,
Would be the gazing rest of beaven.

"Oh! if, in the might of thee and love, To dark were mine;
The throne of the world should be my seat,
The neck of the world should bend at thy feet,
And the waves of its praise should break most sw
That they were doubly mine and thine.

"Oh! if to thee I brought my love,
An offering;
My captives of victor thought, I ween,
Should march in flowers with dainty mien,
And, paying bornage to thee their queen,
Tell me I was the more a king.

"Tis mine, alas! to love, to love, And thou art sie. Not a word? not a sigh!—I am too bold; My beart is on fire, but thine is cold; Than the empty sum of my life is told... That I am naught, since naught to thee?"

were the words of the shell, the shell,

Words saft and few; But whose was the voice that spake to her ear, That whispered and wailed forth its deep despair, ore than that angel, or lady rare, Or fay, or shell, or ocean knew.

METEORS AND COMETS.

A most remarkable feature of modern astronomical disrovery is worthy of mention. A phe-nomenon which men had long been in the habit of looking upon as a meteorological one has been at length recognized in its true light, and has been found wonderfully to enhance our appreciation of the complexity of the systems which exist within the solar domain. Metoors, shooting-stars, and accoultes have taken their place among the attendants of the sun; and, in sever-al instances, the orbits they have followed before they reached the earth have been approximately determined.

But it is rather as members of systems than as individual bodies that these objects acquire their chief interest and meaning. There was not much, perhaps, to attract attention to them when they were supposed to form one or two rings occupying a position in space very nearly coincident with that of the earth's orbit. But it has now been placed beyond a doubt that the earth encounters fifty-six systems, at least, of these small bodies. And these systems are found (in the only instances yet examined) to be not circular rings, but ovals of great eccentricity extending far into space, even in some cases beyond the orbits of Uranus and Neptune. It is clear, then, that we can no longer look on these systems as resembling, in the remotest degree, the asteroidal zone. We are forced, too, to take into consideration an import-ant question of probability. What is the likeli-hood that, if there were but a few hundred of such systems, the earth would encounter so many as fifty-six? The probability may be reckoned "almost at naked nothing." And therefore we are compelled to admit as a legitimate à posteri-ori deduction, the extreme probability, we may almost say the certainty, that such systems are to be reckoned, not by hundreds and thousands.

but by millions on millions.

Nor is this all. Within the last few months the startling discovery has been made that two of the meteoric systems, at least, and probably many others, coincide throughout their calculated extent with the orbits of known comets. Accordingly, we are lod to trace an intimate commer-tion, if not an absolute identity, between comers and shooting-star systems. And when we find that a system which has afforded such grand displays of star-falls as the well-known November shooting star system is identified not with a large and conspicuous comet, but with one which has only lately been detected, though it must have been in close proximity to the earth somethirty times during the last thousand years with a comet, in fact, which is absolutely invisible to the naked eye, and far from being a conspicuous object in powerful telescopes—we are led to recognize the importance of such comets as Newton's, Hailey's, and Donasi's.

LIFE INSURANCE.

LAFE INSURANCE in this country seems to be safer than in England. In the latter country the Albert Lafe Insurance Company, established ever thirty years ago, with an income exceeding $1,500,000 a year, and seams insured reaching $10,000,000, has suspended payment. This means that some 16,000 heads of families see the previsions they supposed they had made for those dependent on them unish into air. In many businesses a certain amount of risk seems inseparable from success. But in life insurance there can be no legitimate development of trade except on the understanding that risks are excluded.

In this country the government exercises a supervision over the insurance companies. An officer, called the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, takes care that the nominal capital is both subscribed and fully paid up before the company begins business and that on fore the company begins business, and that on taking any fresh risk a sum is set aside which, annually invested in approved securities at a low rate of interest, will be sufficient to pay the policy at maturity. To this officer every company is obliged to furnish on oath an annual statement, in a form supplied by him, of its exact financial position. The State does not trust, however, to the oath alone. The Superintendent, if he sees reason to suspect the annual statement of any company, may at any moment make a special investigation into its affairs, and where he believes mismanagement to exist he may order the company to suspend the issue of new policies until after such an investigation has been held. If the result of the inquiry does not establish the solvency of the concern, the matter is referred to the Supreme Court, the company is dissolved, and the assets are distributed among the policy helder. holders.

REARING CHILDREN.

It is a settled matter of demonstration that about one-fourth of all the children born die in their infancy. If statistical tables are correct, the mortality is greater in civilized society than among semi-barbarians or savages. It is not to be denied that the Indians lose a large number of their pappooses before the second year; not in the ratio of a given population in a civil-ized community where all the appliances, con-veniences, and knowledge are in full exercise for their preservation.

The negroes of Africa and the nomadic races The negroes of Africa and the nomadic races in Asia lose many children early; but they appear to be more successful in their efforts to rear them than the best intormed people of civilized Europe or America. No doubt this assertion may be called in question. Figures are not to be disputed, however. If it be admitted that the manner of everyday life of millions of mother than the manner of everyday life of millions of mothers. thers is injurious to their nursing babes, one direct cause of the mortality among infants, never practiced by unsophisticated outdoor, open-air mothers, will be established. Our civilized mothers bundle up their babies too closely, and too often deprive them of the fresh, invigorating at-mospheric air. They are wilted like cut flowers in a stifling nursery. Their freedom is too much abridged, from a mistaken idea that they may take cold if exposed. The Esquimaux mother refreshes her node nursling in an Arctic snow-drift. Civilization overdoes—the unrivilized lets nature do more.

THE NORTHERLY LIMIT OF THE OYSTER.

AT the northern extremity of the Province At the northern extremity of the Province of Nordland, between 68° and 69° north lati-tude, are situated the Lofoten Islands, or Ves-terlaans Cerns, which are separated from the main land by the Vestfjord. This broad arm of the sen is remarkable both for its violent cur-rents and whirlpools, among which the Maelstrom has attained a world-wide celebrity, and also from its being the most northerly limit where the cyster has been found.

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I HAVE used my WHERLER & WILSON Sewing Machine over ten years without repairs, and without breaking a needle, although I commenced the use of it without any instruction. Have used it constantly for family sewing, have quilted whole quilts of the largest size, and it is still in complete order, runs like a top, and bids fair to be willed to those who come after me, with better powers of production than an unbroken prairie Mrs. H. E. G. AREY.

Whitewater, Wis.

Dr. Aven's Languagest, that has done such wondery for the sick, now issues a potent restorer for the beauty of mankind—for the comeliness which advancling age is so prome to diminish and destroy. His Vices mounts inxerient locks on the hald and gray pates among us, and thus lays us under obligations to him for the good looks as well as health of the community.

Diverges a Taburra cure Indigestion, Heartburn, and Sour Stomach. Fifty Cents per Box. Mailed for 60c. Sold by druggists. S. G. Walleno, 571 Broadway.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, FRECRIES, and T TAN from the face, use FERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Pearet, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Dengglets.

"AROUND THE WORLD."

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE

NEW YORK OBSERVER. 83 50 PER ANNUM.

SAMPLE COPIES PREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., 87 Pass Row, Naw Your.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and amment, it could a parkage. Lineage or Lavy, 50 coulds. Send to W. C. Westes, 8 Astor Pisco, N.Y.

TUST PUBLISHED - OCTOBER NUMBER

HITCHCOCK'S

New Monthly Magazine.

CONTENTS: MADAME MALIBRAN. Portrait and Biography.
LEONARDO DA VINCE. Poetrait and Biography.
LEONARDO DA VINCE. Poetrait and Biography.
MARRIAGE IN GREAT BRITAIN.
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS. Editorial,
ART NOTES.
BRAMATIC NOTES.
MUSICAL NOTES.
POETRY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSIC.
THE STARRT PLAG. For Voice and Pinns.
MY SOUL TO GOD, MY HEART TO THEE. Do.
KISS WALTZ. Pinns.
EIT FLANNAGAN'S FAIRY. Voice and Pinns.

Specimen copies mailed free, on receipt of price, 25 cants each. Sold by Bookaseliers and Newsdealers.

Address
BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK.

Publisher, 24 Beekman St., New York.

Est Agents wanted every where. Write for Terms.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

BRONZES.

NOVELTIES,

FANCY GOODS,

MUSICAL BOXES, FANS,

Opera Glassee,

FINE WATCHES AND

JEWELRY,

PARIS AND VIENNA

NOVELTIES,

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-rieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

Geo. Eliot's Novels.

HARPER'S LIBRARY EDITION. ILLUSTRATED.

FIVE VOLS., 12mo, 75 CESTS EACH.

VOL. L. ADAM BEDE. (Just Published.) II. THE MILL ON THE PLOSS. (Jost Pal-

III. FELIX HOLT. (Ready this Fork.)

IV. ROMOLA. (In Press.)

V. SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE AND SILAS MARNEIL (In Press.)

"George Elict" novels belong to the enduring literature of the country-durable, not for the fashiona-bleness of its pattern, but for the tenture of its stuff.

Few women-no living woman, indeed-have so much strength as "George Eliot," and, more than that, she never allows it to degenerate into coarse-ness. With all her so-called "masculine" vigor, she has a feminine tenderness, which is nowhere shown are plainty and Transcript, plainly than in her descriptions of children.

It was once said of a very charming and high-minded woman that to know her was in itself a liberal education; and we are inclined to set an almost equally high value on an acquaintance with the writings of "George Elict."—London Esries.

EW HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above tolumes by mall, postage prepail, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 16 cents.

OYPRESS HILLS CEMETERY. OFFICE, No. 124 BOWERT, N. Y., (Corner of Grand Street). OFFICERS:

OFFICERS:
EDMUND DRIGGS, President.
WM. J. PEASE, Vice-President.
WILLIAM MILES, Tressurer.
WILLIAM EDWARDS, Secretary.
A. S. JARVIS, IDERVEY G. LAW, JOHN I.
VAN ALST, ALFRED M. WOOD, Trustees. N. G. PALMER, Sup't and Surveyor.

$100 every THOUSAND.

We have lately introduced some new Boxes of Initial Stationery, with facey RUSTIC Stamping, which we think will meet the approval of the public. And to further facilitate the sale of this really first-class article, we propose, as an indecement, to pack $100.00 in every Thousand Boxes, in Prizes varying in amount from 81 00 to $50 00.

Put up in nest boxes, and sent to any part of the nuntry, postpaid, for 50 cents.

Address MERRILL & MACKINTIRE, SALEM, MASS.

WEDLOCK;

Os, THE RIGHT RELATIONS OF THE SEXES. $1 50.—"HOW TO READ CHARACTER." $1 50.—ANNUAL OF PHYSIOGNOMY for 1870. Only 25 cents.—MAN IN GENESIS AND IN GEOLOGY-OS, THE BIBLICAL ACCOUNT OF MAN'S CREATION, tested by Scientific Theories of his Origin and Antiquity. By Joseph F. Theorieson, D.B., i.i. D. 1700. Price $1. Sent dret post by S. E. WELLS, No. 359 Broadway, N. Y., Publisher,

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS OF

P. T. BARNUM. WRITTEN BY HIMSELY. IN ONE LABOR COVATO VOLUME—STATELY 800 PAGES—PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GREEKE.

33 Elegant Full-Page Engravings.

It embeaces Foury Yaans' Emontagement of his Busy Life, as a Merchant, Manager, Banker, Lecturer, and Showman, and gives accounts of his Imprison-ment, his Failure, his Successful European Tours, and important Historical and Personal Reminiscences, re-plete with Humor, Anecdotes, and Eutertaining Nar-vertices.

ve.
contains his celebrated Lecture on the Auv or ser Gerrine, with Rules for Success in Business, which he was offered $5000. We offer extra indecetis to Agents, and pay freight to the West. Send 31-page Circular, with Sperimen Engraving and ms to Agents. J. B. BURR & CO.,
Publishers, Hartford, Conn.

Remarkable Success!!

The New Standard and Popular Work for Cabinet Organs and Melodeons!

CLARKE'S NEW METHOD

reed organs.

The Best Teachers and Players are using it.

Price, $2 50. Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston; C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

FURNITURE.

We invite buyers to visit our extensive warerooms and examine our large stock of Suites for Pariors, Chamisers, Bining-Booms, Libraries, &c. Manufactured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every particular.

With unequaled facilities and a ripe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promise too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be besten in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO., Wholesale and Retall Manufacturers and Dealers, 15 and 77 Spring Street, corner Crosby.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Alumintum fronte is a metal differing en-Brouze is a metal differing enlirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even indges have been decrived. It has veriously occupied the attention of scientire men, and has not only called forth the enlogiums of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal
at the Paris Expection.

The movements are well fin-

at the Paris Expection.

The movements are well fusions, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured to my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as encellent time-keepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sant by Express, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. RUGGIENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

Finit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, Immense and reliable associament, very low for cash.

Appler—including most magnificent stock of year-lings: also hardy Northern surfa, such as Buchess, Oldesburg, Hisley, Transcendent, and other Crab Apples—I. 2, and 3 year.

Franker, Pears, Cherrias, Planus, Quines, Grapes, Forest and Recryptor. Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osage Ornage Hedge Plants, Roses, non routs; Tultips, Blyomith, Narviews, fra, Speidis, Libes, Speciouse, Auralum, &c. Also superior colored plates of Fruits and Flowers.

Send 10 ceuts for Catalogues.

P. K. PHENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

F. K. PHENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

SWEET QUININE.

Sweet Quarte & survented equal-dose for dose-to the sulequal—dose for dose—to the sul-phate (bitter) Quinine, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA.)

VAPNIA.

STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemists, New York.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED for trated Editions of the

LIFE OF CHRIST and BUNYAN'S

PILGHIM'S PROGRESS.
The works are now ready for delivery. Address for Catalogue of the best-selling Subscription-Books published.
W. W. HARDING, Philadelphia, Publisher of Harding's Pictorial Family Bibles.

THE BEST WRINGER, THE RELIANCE,

With Keyed Rolls and Spiral Cog-wheels, manufactured by PROVIDENCE TOOL CO., Providence, R. L. NEW YORK STORE, 20 BEEKMAN STREET.

Also, Heavy Hardware, Suit-Charders and Sail-Mares Goods, &c., &c. Manufacturers of

PEABODY BREACH-LOADING FIRE-ARMS.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cnis, borders, &c., &c., 10 central ADAMS PRESS CO., 65 Murray Street, New York.

A HANDSOME FULL-GILT Photograph Al-bums, holding 30 full-size pictures, mailed, post-paid, for 30 cts.; 5 for 31; §2 50 per dozen. Circulars free. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, N.Y.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

Gold Watches and Jewelry.

THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE OROIDE.

The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones coating $150. Those of extra fine fin-h, at $20, are not expansed by $200 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, a imitation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

MADAME FOYS

COMBINED

Corset Skirt Supporter and Bustle.

Is just the article needed by every lady who would consult health, comfort, and style. Our st, who doe, of these goods have been sold within the past five years, and the demand for them is constantly increasing. HARMON, BALDWIN, & FOY, Sale Manufacturers,

New Haven, Conn.

D. B. Sauviens & Co., Boston, Mass.; Lex. Alexander, Bred. & Co., Philadelphia; Arama & Modu-row, Baltimore; Kaupphan & Bars, New York, are our Agents.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Priors greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Planos, of first-class makers, for $275 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Second-band Plains, Metodeces, and Organs from $10 to $175, at 481 Broadway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

WATCHES FOR THE MILLION.

The Great Trans-Interestment Association (In-corporated by the State) sell First Goud and Sours Survex Warmes, upon the one-price general-average system, at $10 cach. Be sure to obtain a circular be-fore busing elsewhere. Apputs washed, Address MICHELIN & CO., Managers, Broadway, cor. Fulton St., New York.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the relebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Such a slike on both sides. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address
THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

COMETHING NEW,—in musical rircles the Sestey Organs are the race. They are the most durable and have the floost tone, remarkable for their services and power, The Vox Howans and Vox Jubilants are the greatest novelties and best inventions ever introduced.

J. ESTEY & CO.,
Brattleboro, Vt., Sole Manufacturers.

WANTED—AGENTS—To sell the Ameri-can Knitting Machine, Price $25. The simplest, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever in-vested. Will knit 20,000 ethelses per sisuate. Libraria inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN ENIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Loms, Mo.

DARLOR STRAM ENGENE: made entire-try of Metal: Boiler and Furnace complete; will work for bours if supplied with water, do.: free from danger; a child case work it. Sent free, with instruc-tions, for §1 60; three for §2 50. Address WALTER HOLT, No. 302 Nassay Street, New York, WANTED AGENTS.—275 to 2000 per month, we every where, make and female, to introduce the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thing, with the lasest improvements. Price for Head Machine, $15: with Table and Foot power, $85. Seed for Circular, with Cut of Machine and terms to Agents. Address W. S. Hill, Manchester, N. H.

O 1 50 procures, postpaid, Arwayen's Parent Paren, With Book and Writing-Case for Copying Letters, & heatently and perfectly. "The thing for copying."

—A. P. Book. Address C. C. Thurston, Brooklyn, N.Y.

TROV PEMALE SEMINARY, This lo-A stitution offers the accumulated advantages of over 50 years' successful operation. For circulars, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Troy, N. Y.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of 830 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our over and wonderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

VINEGAR - How MADE PROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drugs. For circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cronwell, Com.

TYLER WATER WHEELS.—Over 2000 in operation. Address the manufacturers, Soldiess Machine Co., Clarement, N. H., for reduced price-list.

$1140 -How I made it is Six Months. Secret and sample mailed free. A. J. Fullans, N. Y.

Use B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge. Address HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

The Climax Knitter!!

This is, without question, the best Family Knitting Machine ever invented. It is small, light, need, simple of construction, durable, works very rapidly, has but one needle, makes the old-fashioned knitting-needle stitich (and two others) with light or heavy, single or double yarn, arts up end fasishes its earn work, and needs no weights. It knits close or loose textures, bollow or flat web, large or small fabeles—anything that can be knit by hand, and in a such better manner. A child can readily operate it, and can learn to do so much sooner than to knit with ordinary needles. There is nothing to be done but to thread a needle and turn a crask, notil the heel is reached, which is formed to perfection, with little trouble and no sewing; the same is the case with the toe.

The price of this Knitter is but $25 tel, which places it within the reach of every family. It is destined to be very popular, and we can ofer agents, general and special, exceedingly liberal terms for engaging in its sale. Send for Circulars.

Address ESSICK ENSTTING MACHINE CO.

Address ESSICK ENITTING MACHINE CO., 8. W. corner 11th and Chestnat Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

A LADY who has been cared of great nervous debility, after many years of misery, desires to make known to all fellow-sufferers the sure means of relief. Address, enclosing a stamp, MRS. M. MER-RITT, P. O. Bur 1603, Boston, Mass., and the prescription will be sent free by return mail.

$100 to $250 per Month guaranteed. Sure paid, every where selling our Palmet Executarion White Hire Wholes Lines. Call at, or write for particulars to the Girard Wire Mills, 261 North 3d St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or beard to a permanent block of the colored hair or A beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sent by mail for $1. For sale by Merchante & Bruggiote generally. Address Mayie Comb Co., Springfeld, Mass.

$25 A DAY. — 33 new articles for Accoust. Samples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, No.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1869.

HARPER'S MAGARINE, One Year$4 00 Harren's Weekly, Oue Year..... 4 00 Harren's Bazan, Oue Year..... 4 00

Harrier's Batas, One to Mercury, and Harrier's Batas, in one address, for one year, $30.00; or any two for $7.00.

As Extra Copy of either the Manazine, Werkelt, or Batas will be expected syntic for every Club of Fire

An Entra Copy of either the Manazora, Werkelt, or Baran will be expected gratte for every Club of First Suscensions at $6 to each, in one remellance; or, Air Copies for $25 00, uniford entra copy.

The France within the United States is for the Manazora 24 cents a year, for the Werkely or Baran 30 cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where exceived. Subscription from the Dominious of Canada must be accompanied with $6 cents additional for the Manazora, or 25 cents for the Werkely or Baran, to propay the United States postage.

postage.

The Volumes of the Manazinz commence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers with be sent accordingly.

the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werner and Baxas commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber withes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. Subscribers to the Manazaw, Wessay, or Baxas will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription capires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Hanes & Baourses is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without less to the sender.

In ordering the Magazawa, the Werker, or the Basas, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISENO IN HARPER'S PERSONNOALS. Herper's Moszine.—Whole Page, $250; Half Page, $150; Quarter Page, $10—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Heetly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $3 00 per Line—each Insertion.

Herper's Baser. - $1 00 per Li $1 35 per Line-each insertion. er Line; Cuts and Display,

THE WORLD-RENOWNED

FOGGAN'S GENUINE OROTOE GOLD HUNTING-CASE WATCHES

are manufactured on strictly scientific principles, haring all the brillianes, shrundiffy, and exact appearance of which participants of the root rare and only description of Growing Gold Metals at the second of which probably takes therework and exact appearance in the second of the second second of the second second of the second seco

HARPER & BROTHERS.

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PICTORIAL FIELD BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Helics, and Traditions of the Last Wer for American Independence. By Brasses J. Losenso, Author of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 89r Hinstrations, engraved on Wood by Losenso & Barritt, chiefy from Original Sketches by the Anther. Complete in One Volume, 1934 pages, large 8vo. Price, in Cloth, $7.66; Sheep, $3.04; Pull Roses, $9.66; Half Calf or Half Morocco catra, $10.06.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By Jawes GREENWOON, the "Ameteur Causal," Author of "The True History of a Little Regamella," "Residen Dav-leger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Svo, Pa-ner, World.

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Buys. By H. R. Fox Bautar. With Portrait of George Peabody and Willinstrations. 16mo, Cloth, 81 90.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Edward Goold Buyen. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By NATHABLEL SANDS. STO, Cloth, $1 00.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Electida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Americar Farming, with such Valid-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Places in the Jural District, By Bossaw B. Rossewan. With Characteristic H-lustrations. 18me, Cloth, $5 56.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Signestive Fixture. By Flans-cus A. Marca, Professor of the English Linguings and Comparative Fulfideer in Lafourier College, Author of "Method of Fulfideerical Study of the En-glish Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 46mo, Cloth, 48 cents.

RHETORIC : a Text Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Harres, D.D., LL.D., President of the Northwestern University. 1240, Cloth, $1.56.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Usan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Proceedings of the Control of Travels on the Control of the Control THE MALLY ARCHITICALAND: The Land of the Orang-Dian and the Bied of Paradise. A Narrative of Tower, with Smiles of Man and Nature. By Arratin Russus. Wark set, Aphino of "Toweris on the America and Bio Negro," "Palin Trees of the America," &c. Wirth Yen Maps and Fifty-one elegant Biastrations. Crown Set, Cloth, §2 59.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Grass C. Sweet. With 170 Illustrations. Crown Sec, Cloth, 83 50.

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Togating of Vine-Uniture: Vine Disease and its Cure: Wine-Making and Wines, Red and White; Wine-Drinking as affecting Realth and Morals. By William J. Faland. 1870, Cloth, $150.

The New Novels

PERLIBURS BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Harper's Illustrated Library Edition. ADAM BEDE. 18mo, Mororen Cloth, 25 cents.

MILL ON THE FLOSS. 12mo, Morocco Cloth, 15 cents. IF To be followed by Geo. Eliof's other Novels.

COUNTESS GISELA. By E. MARLITY. Translated by A. Nahmer. 6vo, Paper, 35 cents.

FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Year,"
"One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

META'S FAITH. By the Author of "St. Olave's,"

PALSE COLORS. By ANNIE THOMAS. Svo, Paper, HETTY. By HESRY KINGSLEY. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

MY DAUGITTER RIJNOR. A Novel of American Society. 8vo, Paper, $1 25.

STRETTON. By Hanky Kingster. Svo, Paper, 40 cts. OORD AND CREESE. By the Anthor of "The Dodge Club." Illustrated. Sm, Paper, 75 cents.

THE DODGE CLUB; or, hisly in 1939. By Jaura He Mane, Author of "Cord and Greene," &c. With 100 Districtions. Syn, Paper, 75 costs; Cloth, $1 25.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Binstrations. VANITY FAIR. 32 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 50 cts. THE VIRGINIANS, 156 Binstrations. 8vo, Pa-

THE NEWCOMES. 162 Blustrations. Svo, Paper, THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 Blustrations. See, Paper, 50 cents.

HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER.
12 Illustrations. Evo, Paper, 50 cents.

CHARLES READES NOVELS: HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 cents. GRIFFFTH GAUNT: or, Jesloney. Illustrated. 8vs, Paper, th cents.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, 8vo, Pa-per, 35 cents.

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 870, Paper, 25 cents.

FOUL PLAY, See, Paper, 25 cents.
WHITE LIES, Swn, Paper, 25 cents.
For To be followed by Charles Break's other Neurice

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S LAST NOVELS:

PHINEAS FINN, the Irish Member. Hestration Milials. Sec., Paper, $1.25; Cloth, $1.15. HR KNEW HE WAS RIGHT. Complete. With— Hinterations by Marcae Stone. Sec. Paper, $1.0 Cloth, $1.50. Part II., separately, Paper, $6.0000-

FAT HARDER & BROTHERS will send any of the above coke by most, postage free, to any part of the United Bates, on receipt of the price.

Sold by every first-class Grocer.

THE HALFORD LEICESTERSHIRE

TABLE

THE BEST ARTICLE IN USE

FOR EVERY GENTLEMAN'S TABLE.

HIGHLY RECOMMENDED BY PHYSICIANS.

IN USE AT ALL THE BEST HOTELS, siz. /

PARKER HOUSE, Boston;

PIFTH AVENUE, New York; CONTINENTAL, Philadelphia; SHERMAN HOUSE, Chicago, &c., de.

For Family Use it is preferable to all other.

General Agents, who sell in their respective cities of uniform prices to the Trade: CARTER, MANN, & CO., Boston; G. W. PETTES & CO., 10 Murray St., New York, CHAMBERS & CALDER, Providence, R. I.:
J. T. WARREN & CO., Cincinnati, O.,
J. & C. CAMPBELL, Philadelphia, Pa.,
SAWYER, JONES, & CO., Cleveland, O.;
M. GRAFP & CO., Chicago, Ili.;
D. NICHOLSON, St. Louis, Mo.;

RUSSELL & HALL, New Orleans, La.; HOSTETTER, REDINGTON, & CO., San Francisco, Cal-

GT At once the BEST and the CHEAPEST. #1

Only Fifty Cents per Pint Bottle.

ō.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water stres all diseases of the Kisheys, Skip, and Blood more prometly than any other known remedy.

27 Call for Testinonials or Cress. Sold by Caution.—All gennine bears our trade-mark, and the brities and corks are branded "Nature's Bemedy."

Address: J. JAY JOSLIN,
Treas, M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Or, S. H. Scripture, 101 Breadway, New York,
General Agent.

REMOVAL.

Davis Collamore & Co.

Have removed to their new store, No. 747 BROADWAY, PIPTH DOOR BELOW STH ST.,

And now offer a very choice stock of CHINA GLASS, AND CROCKERY WARE. We shall also keep a full stock of

SILVER PLATED GOODS, CUTLERY, BRONZES,

PRICES SHALL BE LOW. No. 747 BROADWAY, ranning through to Mercer St.

1

WE PUT GENUINE WALTHAM Watches into the hands of purchasers in any state, territory, town, village, or frontier settlement, at the lowest New York wholesale prices. The Express Companies take them from us and deliver them to the customers in any part of the Union, however remote. The package can be opened, and the watch examined, and not till them is the purchaser required to not for its and ill on examination is to not resistance. to pay for it; and if on examination it is not entisfactory, there is no obligation to receive it. Our descrip-tive and illustrated Price-List gives full information in regard to the watches, and our plan of sending them by express. Every one should have a copy. We scod it postpaid on application; no return stamps required. When you write, please state that you saw this in Harper's Weekly.

HOWARD & CO., Jewelers and Silversmiths, No. 619 Broadway, New York.

ANTED - AGENTS - $75 to $200 ANTED - AGENTS - $75 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will either, hem, fell, inck, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and embedder in a most asperier manner. Frice only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1600 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more classific seam than ours. It makes the cut, and still the cloth can not be palled apart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $15 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address $ECOMB & CO., Pirrantonon, Pa., Borreo, Mass., or 8r. Lotas, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties palming off worthess cast-iron machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genuinc and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

THE LYCEUM,—No. 1,—contains the names, subjects, and terms of over two hundred of the best LECTURERS, MUSICIANS, and READERS of the country, with valuable advice to LYCEUM COMMITTEES. Specimen copy sent on receipt of stamp, by JAMES HEDPATH, Boston, Mass.

FOUNTAIN PENS. One dip writes 4 pages.

F $1.50 a gross, postpoid. — Penknife and Pencil combined. — Eraser and For-Holder combined, and 19
Fountain Pens. 50 cents, postpoid. Self at sight.
Auguste Wanten. — CITY NOVELTY CO.,
404 Library St., Palladeiphia, Pa.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano;

The reputation of these Pianos is fully estab-lished as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish,

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase. Circulare and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Serve & Nicos, Chicago, His.; H. N. Henretald, M. M. McClurk, Nashville, Tenn.; Kunckel Bros., St. Louis, Mo.; C. M. Merce, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. R. Jackson, Sandrsky, Ohio; Brainand & Sons, Cleveland, Ohio; J. E. Govle, Philadelphis, Pa.; Mrs. C. Blener, Pilisburg, Pa.; Clevet & Sons, Albary and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hammer, Bhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Hintermeter, Itheca, N. Y.; H. S. Macker, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utley, Beffalo, N. Y.; Where, Serva, & Perry, Sonton, Mass.; Coart Broz., Providence, B. L.; C. M. Leonis, New Haven, Coun.; Mayvellas Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordhermet, Toronto, C. W.; E. Piere & Bro., St. John, N. B.

BE BEAUTIFUL -If you desire beauty you hould use Hagan's Magnolia Balm.

It gives a soft, refined, satin-like texture to the complexion, removes Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Tan, &c., and adds a tinge of pearly bloom to the plainest features. It brings the bloom of youth to the fading cheek, and changes the rustic country girl into a fashionable city belle.

In the use of the MAGNOLIA BALM lies the true secret of beauty. No lady need complain of her complexion who will invest 75 cents in this delightful article.

LYON'S KATHALBON is the best Hair Dress-

HOME INVESTMENT.

GOLD LOAN

The Rochester, N.Y., Water Works Company:

SIX PER CENT. BONDS, DUE 1889,

OF $1000 EACH.

8

INTEREST in MAY and NOVEMBER. Principal and Interest psyable in Gold, at Union Trust Com-We offer for sale of this loan at EIGHTY-TWO AND A HALF, and accrued interest in currency.

$400,000

The entire property is mortgaged to the Union Trust Company for the protection of the bondholders, and the bonds are issued by them only upon the certificate of John C. Trantwine, C. E., appointed by the bond-holders, approved by the Board of Directors, that the money has been actually expended upon the works. Pamphlets containing the reports of the Engineers, W. Minor Roberts and J. C. Trautwine, upon the progrees of the works; also copies of the acts granting this Company their charter to supply Rochester with water, farnished upon application. Upon the most mod-erate estimate, the rental from the works, when completed, will be $150,000 annually, double the amount required for interest upon the bonds. Having personally examined the works, we can confidently recommend this loan to the public as a safe and profitable investment.

UTLEY & DOUGHERTY, No. 11 Wall St.

Ask your Family Physician what he thinks of Tanzant's Erraryzacier Satraza Aran-zer. He will tell you that it combines the properties of a mild purgative, a stemachic, a febrifuge, an alterative, and a detergent; in short, that it is five valuable remedies in one.

SOLD UNIVERSALLY BY DRUGGISTS.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.

MAGIC LANTERNS and STEREOPTICANS, 106 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages.

JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,

726 Chevinut St., Philadelphis, Pa.

THE CELEBRATED

BRAND BLACK ALPACAS.

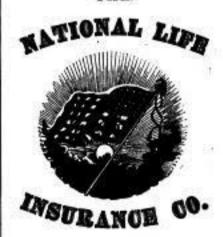

This Brand of Alpaca, on account of its fineness of cioth and richness of color, has become the Standard Alpaca now used in the United States.

Aspecs now used in the United States.

These goods are greatly segressed in Weight, Steen, and Shade for the Full and Winter wear; and, being made of the very finest material, they are obsciutely superior to any Alpacas ever sold in this country, and are now one of the most fashionable and economical fabrics worn.

These beautiful goods are sold by most of the leading Retail Dry-Goods Marthants in New York, Brocklyn, and in all the leading cities and towns throughout all the Sintes.

WM. L PEAKE & CO., 46, 48, & 50 Waite St., Sole Importers of the Brand for the United States.

OF NEW YORK,

212 BROADWAY, cor. FULTON ST.

Issues all the new forms of policies, and presents as favorable terms as any Company in the United States. Thirty days' grace allowed on each payment, and the policy held good during that time.

Policy holders share in the enemal pecilis of the Company, and have a voice in the election and management of the Company.

No policy or medical fee charged.

All policies non-forfeitable on the principle of the Massachusetts non-forfeiture law.

EDWARD A. JONES, President. J. O. HALSEY, Vice-President. J. A. MORTIMORE, Secretary.

Rev. JAMES PURTER, D. D., Experimendent of Agencies.

Call or Send for Circular.

AGENTS WANTED.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-antages of the French patents, with wonderful

SIMPLICITY, DURABILITY,

and CHEAPNESS.

Lovers of GOOD COPPEE are manimous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. _=1 SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO., SOLE MANUFACTURERS.

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

FISHERMEN!

TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS,

THE REISSUE OF

RPERS WELL OURWAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 667.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Barper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE THORN IN THE FOOT.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1869.

LOUIS NAPOLEON'S NEW SYSTEM.

IT is announced that the majority of the Prince Imperial of France will be declared upon his next birthday. This fact, with the age and recent illness of the Emperor, so serious that the Empress abandoned her Eastern toor, must remind every Frenchman who really desires permanent repose for his country that the prospect of obtaining it is rapidly disappearing. Nearly seventy years ago Narotzon said to Larayerte, "The French are tired of liberty." Larayerte answered that they were tiredonly of license, and their sufferings from the abase of liberty made them only the more desirous of real freedom. "And that," he said, "Citizen First Consul, the French expect from

When Louis Napoleon overthrew the French Republic, he said, substantially, that nothing was to be hoped from a government of doctrinaires and visionaries quarreling among themselves, and that he would justify his usurpation by the tranquillity and confidence which he would be-stow upon France. This was the significance of his famous remark, "the empire is peace." In a certain sense he has redeemed his word. During the seventeen years of his reign there has been no serious public disturbance in France. He has adorned Paris. In the Crimea and in Italy he maintained the national prestige; and although in the later Italian movement, and in Mexico, his sagacity was at fault, the incom-petency did not lead to domestic trouble. The principle which he extols in his "Life of Casar," Caesarism or absolute personal government, has been the guide of the imperial régime. But the fatal fault of the system has been evident from the beginning. The empire may be peace, but the Emperor is the empire. While Casar lives the power that establishes his rule contin-ues; but when Casar dies Casarism is impo-

The present situation of France is the final criticism of Louis Napolnon. He has sought his own glory, not the welfare of France, and he has not been able to see that, even for himself, a true patriotism was the best policy. He has preferred a strictly personal government, and in so doing, despite the claims of his friends that he is a remarkably sagacious man, and despite a certain reputation for political study and philosophy due to his "Napoleonic ideas, he has shown that he has not comprehended the cardinal principle that a stable and progressive government is one of laws, not of persons. In the last days of a fierce civil war lasting for four years the President of the United States is assassinated, but his death does not in the least degree affect the operation of the government, and, while it terribly shocks, it does not injuriously disturb the public mind. But at the end of seventeen years of undisputed and pencoful supremacy, the mere prospect of the death by illness of the Emperor of France is the sure portent of confusion and dismay,

For this situation Louis Narotness and France are equally responsible—the Emperor for supposing that permanent order could be established upon personal supremacy, and the French for not demanding a constitutional system. This has indeed been the demand of a party; but it was not so plainly the resolution of the country that it could not be disregarded. And that it has been disregarded, and that Louis Narothon has chosen by restrictions of the press and by his whole system of centralization to be deaf to the voice of the nation, convicts him of incapacity rightly to use the power that he seized, and makes his usurpation a crime. No reason can be urged for the concessions of the Scantas Consultum now that were not equally valid ten years ago. The moment for an absolute ruler to begin a constitutional régime is when he is in the fullness of his power and renown, not when his force is failing, and the constitution is seen to be a tub thrown to the whale. Louis Narothon's true policy was the extremest constitutional liberalism, and that is almost the only form of government which France has not tried within the last century.

The radical defect of the system now proposed by Louis Narolisos is, that the Ministry is not responsible to the people. If the change in the direction attempted is necessary, then a more radical change is imperative. A Ministry responsible to a Senate which the Emperor appoints is not a responsible Ministry in the legitimate sense. The point for which Louis Narolisos ought to hope to provide is the peaceful succession of his son. But how does the Senatus Counties of this son. But how does the Senatus Counties of the people that the security against trouble when the Emperor dies would be the conviction of the people that they really have the power. The new system does not assure them of that. The majority of the Prince Imperial may be declared, but nobody can declare that of the empire. At any moment the Emperor may fall, and apparently the empire must fall with him.

THE SICKLES NOTE.

We have never supposed that the Administration would choose this moment to threaten Spain, or to depart from the honorable traditions of American neutrality. We have therefore been constantly unwilling to believe that propositions of the kind reported for a settlement of the Cuban question had been made to the Spanish Government; and we are not surprised to learn that the note which General Suckins was said to have addressed to that Government, conveying a menace, was not approved at Washington. Nothing could well be more superfluous and insulting than to state to Spain that if she did not behave differently we should recognise the Cubans as belligerents. This, however, is merely the reported threat of the note. As we said hat week, it is not easy to know precisely any thing upon the subject.

The United States need not threaten. Their power is recognised and assured. Their re-spect for treaty obligations, and the comity of nations, and their own neutrality laws, have been demonstrated. Whenever it shall seem to them that good faith permits, and the general welfare demands, intervention, or concession of belligerent rights, or recognition of independence, in the case of any struggling people any where, they will act without a prelude of menace, and with the full consideration of every consequence. And especially under this Administration they will act without Buncombe. The proper course for the United States Government to pursoe, with a due regard for its friendly relations with Spain, and for the present condition of that country, if it wishes to propose any thing, is to offer friendly media-When that is declined in the same spirit, there is an end of the matter. The war would continue, the Government would watch it narrowly, and act accordingly.

If the war upon the Spanish side in Cuba is distinguished by peculiar barbarity, it is becoming in any power friendly to Spain to remonstrate at its discretion. But it should remonstrate in the name of humanity and civilization, and not seize the occasion to bluster. Every remonstrance of this kind implies a reserved possibility. If the warfare is so inhuman as to provoke expostulation, of course if the exposulation be disdained or unheeded, the warned nation is prepared for all consequences. Should it appear that the note of General Sukles contained nothing more than an earnest remonstrance of this kind, the perturbation of the Spanish press would be entirely unnecessary. But if it were confined to such an expostulation, that perturbation would hardly have arisen.

It is to be presumed, therefore, that our Minister has gone further, and as a politician educated in the manifest destiny school, it is not impossible that he has striously transcended his instructions. The London Times says there is no doubt that the alternative offered Spain by the United States is abandonment of the island or American recognition of the insurgents, and apprehends serious events. The Times is unquestionably mistaken. The Ad-ministration would not take such a responsibility, and it would not be sustained by public tion if it did. The Timer adds that the abolition of slavery in Cuba has been determined by the home Government, and that negotiations have begun for the severance of the island from Spain. Does it not occur to the Times that if these are facts the conduct which it attributes to the United States Government is ridiculous? Why should we be supposed to threaten Spain if she does not do what she has already done?

When the Cortes and Congress meet, the Cuban question of course can not be evaded. We still doubt whether Spain will offer absolutely to part from Cuba. As we said some weeks since, it is more likely that before yielding to the revolution she will propose an armistice, a plan of reforms, and a vote of the Cubans upon the question of separation. Congress, if it faithfully represent public opinion, will not depart from the national traditions of conduct in such circumstances, and will not allow any supposed desire of amexation to influence its action.

CATHOLIC PROTESTANTS.

Attriough when Pope Pius Tie Ninth was elected to the chair of St. Peren he began his Pontificate by the display of a liberal political spirit, although, after the gloomy regime of Gregory the Sixterenti, the words and acts of the new Pope seemed to promise a millennium of joy and progress to the Roman States, and a fresh inspiration to the polity of the Church, it was tranquilly said by those who thoroughly comprehended the nature of the Church, that if Pius were another Gregory the Great or Hillmermann, he could stir the Church to the centre, and shake the religious world; but if he were only what his career to that time had led every body to believe, then he would be a leaf upon Nisgara. Poor Pius has certainly not been a Hillmermann; but he has summoned a Council.

It is more than three hundred years since there has been a General Council of the Church of Rome, and its authority is so vast and vague in assumption, and so undecided in fact, that to invoke it has always seemed to threaten more danger than profit to the Church. The call for the present assembly by a Pope who has denounced the whole spirit of modern civilization as irreligious, and whose organs have plainly foreshadowed the enormity and stringency of the dogmas likely to be declared, has, of course, profoundly moved the great body of Roman Catholics.

The consequences already begin to appear. The two old tendencies in the Church, the Ultramontane and the Gallican, are becoming daily evident. These names describe in general the liberal and the anti-liberal movement—the assertion of universal ecclesiastical supremacy, and the protest against it. The Bavarian Prime Minister has expressed his dissatisfaction. Anstria quietly awaits events, but will, of course, resist any extraordinary assumptions. Mostralement, the press chemier of the Roman Church among European laymen, has declared his sympathy with the Germans, who protest in advance against the probable action of the Council; and the telegraph who protest in advance against the probable action of the Council; and the telegraph announces that the Dominican Father Hyacustus, the honeyed tongue of the Church in Paris, has abandoned his convent, and has published a letter to the General of his order, protesting against the Pope and Council, and against dectrines and practices of the Church which he asserts to be unchristian.

Such signs are significant. When Pope In-

NOCEST censured FERRLON he submitted without a word. But this is not the age of FERRLON, and a priest who defies the Council in advance is not likely to yield to its demands nor to dread its anathema. If the conservative and reactionary spirit should rule the Council—and in ecclesiastical assemblies it generally prevails

—there will be many a Montalemerat, many a Hyacintum, who will be forced to oppose the decrees of an authority which they are taught to believe infallible, or to admit that an infallible body may be mistaken in the subjects to which its infallibility extends, or to renounce their Church altogether. As yet, indeed, the reasons for assembling a Council which were powerful enough to balance the great perils of its probable action have not been made evident. It was hardly worth while, for the sake of declaring the dogma of the divinity of the Virgin Mary, to run the risk of convulsing the Church; and what can be gained by the assertion of the personal infallibility of the Pope, if it is at the cost of a schism? To those who are not of the Church the spectacle will be interesting; while among the most extraordinary incidents in history would be the declaration of the highest authority of the greatest multitude of Christians in the world, that the era of the greatest general enlightenment and most active progress, the era of breaking chains, and of the most careful study of human welfare, was radically hostile to the spirit of Christ.

THE NEW YORK DEMOCRATS.

The New York Democratic Convention was an assembly of the most noted party leaders; but nothing in its proceedings commended it to the sympathy of those who believe that this is a truly democratic government intended to secure equal rights for all the people. Mr. Therew exhorted his friends to let by-gones be by-gones, and he declared for what he called white labor against the Chinese immigrant and the colored citizen. But he did not remind his friends that the by-gones, including a bloody war, were the work of Democrats, and that certain dogmas of the party must be abandoned because the people had spurned them; nor did he show any consciousness that in a country of which a seventh of the population is colored, and which invites immigration, to declare for one color or race against another is to forbid fair play, and to encourage hatred, confusion, and anarchy.

Mr. TILDEN having said that he did not wish to see any immigrants coming to the country who could not be amalgamated with the population in one homogeneous mass, Mr. O'GORMAN said that the population itself was immigrant, Of course both remarks were equally acc to a party which fraudulently multiplies the ignorant immigrant vote in New York and declaims against the colored native vote in Georgia. Mr. O'GORMAN also said that the Republican party had obtained influence by "interpreting that transient emotion, that angry passion, which now, thank God, is eradicated from the Amer-The transient emotion and angry passion which have given the Republican party power, which maintain its continued dominance in the minds of the most intelligent men and in the most enlightened parts of the country, were the love of liberty and the perception of the relation of justice to national prosperity, which have abolished the most infamous slavery against the protest of what is called Democracy, and have proclaimed the equal rights of all American citizens against the most desperate Democratic Mr. THORN and Mr. O'GORMAN, and all Democratic orators and conventions, may be very sure that it is not by contrasting the history, character, and measures of the two parties that they can hope to make converts among intelligent Americans. Mr. Cassiny, who is one of the ablest of the Democratic editors, and who is understood to have written the resolutions, also points us to the history of his party from the beginning. But surely be, equally with his friends the crators, knew that the reason the Democratic party was constantly defeated from 1860 to 1868, during the deadly struggle to save the country and the government, was the universal conviction of the American people that a party which had furnished every robel and every sympathizer with rebellion was not a truly patriotic party.

MR. SUMNER'S SPEECH.

MR. SUMMER's speech at the Massachusetts Republican Convention took the ground that the chief consideration in the pending election is the position of the State upon the great mational questions. He very properly assumed that if Massachusetts, of all the States in the Union, should, upon some issue of prohibition, abandon her place at the right of the Republic an line, that line throughout the country would be dismayed and demoralized; and by its defeat not only would the grog-shops in Massachusetts and elsewhere be thrown open without restriction, but the policy which is most favored at such resorts would become the policy of the country. The speech, by its forcible presentation of the great national issues, undoubtedly had a powerful immediate effect. The action of the Convention was singularly harmonious. The only question upon which difference might have arisen-that of prohibition-was declared not to be one of party, but one which should be properly left to the Legislature.

The points of the speech were that the national faith must be kept to the uttermost with the freedman and the creditor; and that while our domestic policy should be peace through justice, our foreign policy should be peace through honorable and friendly neutrality. Cube should not be recognized as belligerent, because belligerency is a fact, and insurrection is not accomplished revolution. Against England the case was re-stated as in the speech in the Senate, in which Mr. Seneral said that no did not demand damages, but simply declared the nature and extent of the claim of the United States.

This speech and those in the New York Convention show how entirely our politics proceed upon general and national, not upon State and local issues. Mr. TILDEN, indeed, said in the New York Convention that the Democratic Canal Board had cleaned out the canals. But the remarks he made could not be regarded as a consideration of a State question. The tendency of which we speak is inevitable, and it is instructive, nor is it to be deplored.

THE SCHOOLS.

THE Board of Education has resolved that the Latin and Greek languages shall still be taught in the College of the City of New York, Mr. LARREMORE, the President of the Board, claimed that it was not the business of the trustees to decide whether the College was a desirable institution or not. It has been founded by the State; he and his associates have been made trustees; and as the languages are a recognized part of every college curriculum, it is, in his judgment, the duty of the Board to follow the precedent, unless good reason can be urged against it. This he has not found, and he warmly advocated the study of the Latin and Greek, and opposed dropping them from the course. The Opposition made the mistake of underestimating the value of the classical studies as a reason for discontinuing them in the Col-lego. It may be desirable to do that, but not for the reason that they are valueless.

This question being settled, there are subjects of more importance that will demand the attention of the Board. It is alleged that the accommodations of the schools are wholly insufficient, and we have even read one statement that thousands of children were excluded for this reason lest year.

The one thing that we can all clearly see is, that ignorance is fatal to a popular government, and that a certain kind and degree of education are so indispensable to the public welfare that the State is justified in providing for them at the common expense. Unquestionably, also, the same consideration would justify making that education obligatory.

First of all, there must be room enough in the schools, and the school-houses must be not only sufficiently specious, but perfectly secure, well-lighted, and properly ventilated. Of course, in the city of New York, with the rapid increase of the population by immigration, it is not easy to keep pace with the demand of such accommodations. The schools must be built in every part of the city, and the highest prices for land, material, and labor must necessarily be paid. These indispensable expenses are very great, but they are unavoidable, and the Board should not hesitate to accertain, from statistics and calculations which are at hand, just what is necessary for the proper school so-the estimate a liberal rate of salary to all teachers. Let them report to the public, but take care to show that the money will not be wasted. The new Constitution provides that instruction shall be free to all children in the State. Economy is always desirable; but parsimony in the support of schools is not economy. We do not believe that the taxpayers will gradge the payment of any sum for school purposes, so long so they are persuaded that it is honestly necessary.

It is true that the proper lines of a public school education are necessarily arbitrary, but they may still be drawn with a great deal of uniformity and precision. It is to be a general and not a special training; it is to furnish the elementary instruction, which at his own in-clination and expense the scholar may afterward develop. We hope that the new Board will have plain principles and a definite policy, and not fear to trust the public good sense upon this most important of public interests.

TRADE AND THE CROPS.

THE principal trade thus far this season has been with the South and Southwest, and on a scale which shows a decided improvement in those localities in financial power, due mainly to the results of the cotton crop for the year ending on the 31st of August last. The total crop amounts to 2,260,557, in addition to 398 on hand on the 1st September, 1868; which, together, have yielded from two hundred and fifty to three hundred millions of dollars to the cotton-growing States; with this advantage over former years that, having at the same time produced more food than is usual, the net profit from cotton equals that of those years when double the quantity of that staple was grown. Of the crop of this year 1,444,668 were exported to foreign countries, 821,924 were consumed north of Virginia and in the Northwestern States, and 173,203 in Virginia and the Cotton States—giving a total of 995,127 con-sumed in the United States, which quantity includes 20,203 bales burned, and 11,160 the estimated stock on hand on the 1st Septem-

It will be thus seen that foreign states contribute to this renewed strength of the South in the proportion which 1,444,668 bears to 2,297,955; and that the States north of Virginia and those of the Northwest in the proportion which the figures applicable to them bear to the whole produce.

The consumption in Virginia and the Cotton States-178,208 bales or thereabonts-shows the extent of the manufacturing industry in cotton fabries which has grown up in the South -a result in great part of the war. This man-ufacture consists of cotton yarns and coarse shirtings and sheetings, the latter distributed quite largely in New York in free competition with cloths of like description proceeding from the old establishments. This industry will no doubt increase with advancing immigration into that quarter, as all the materials for success are found in the Southern States. Cotton and woolen mills are also springing up in the West, which supply their respective localities with many coarse fabrics.

The time is not distant when the Eastern and Northern States will bear the same relation to the Southern and Western in manufacturing industry that the European manufacturers now bear to us. The foreigner now supplies only fine goods, in the manufacture of which in four or five years we shall be actively engaged, the result of successful competition with us in the courser fabrics which the spread of mills over the South and West will occasion. No other resource is left to us; and it may safely be assumed, if protection to our industry is not too much reduced, that we shall advance to the new competition with the foreign manufacturer, to which we shall be driven, with the skill and activity necessary for success. No American can examine the display of goods at the fair now in progress in this city without just pride at the advances made within a few years in woolen and dress goods-advances which leave no question of the eminence soon to be attained.

Another change has occurred in the condition of the South. More than one-half of the buyers from that quarter during this season are of the Jewish personasion—a fact very perceptibly felt during the Jewish holidays, which are quite frequent and very well observed, leading to diminished sales by the jobbing and importing houses on the days when they occur. It will be recollected that during the war the Jews passed the lines of both belligerents very freely, as it was difficult to distinguish to which see tion they belonged, and they had scarcely any politics. The old houses of the South, which were in the habit of giving long credits to the planters, were many of them either killed or weeded out as the result of the conflict, and a new system of trade and new men followed. The aversion to long credits is shared not only by the new traders, but here also, and there is consequently greater safety in this respect. Efforts have been made this season to extend the credits on cotton goods, on the ground that the the reproof profits of the purchasers would be light, and community.

commodation of all the children, including in [that payment from home customers was expected only after the new crop had begun to come to market; but the effort was generally resisted by our leading houses.

Northern and Western buyers have not arrived very freely thus far, owing to their ability to receive goods rapidly, and to the tendency to hold low stocks which is common among the small dealers. Chicago has become a large distributor for the region pierced by her railroads, and she buys from first hands more generally than usual. Money not being plenty among Western farmers, the trade is confined to the supply of immediate wants; and although it will continue to be good and remunerative, it is not likely to partake of speculation in any part of the season.

The condition of the country as to its crops is now being regarded, at least in portions of it, with some uneasiness. A drought of uncommon severity had prevailed along the Atlantic coast, and it has become necessary to resort to stores laid up for the winter to supply the want of pasturage. The corn crop in light soils has been severely injured, in some cases entirely destroyed. In the adjoining county of Westchester farmers not favored with living springs have been obliged for nearly a mouth to send long distances for water, and they are now learning what were the sufferings of the English during the season of 1868. The su-tumnal equinox, which has been awaited with anxiety, has occurred; and as the rains have not been very copious, the now useless pastures will scarcely be restored this year, bowever, is abundant,

The crops of small grains had been gathered throughout the Southern Atlantic States before the drought set in. In portions of South Car-olina and Georgia the dry weather has affected the cotton as well as corn; but taking into view the whole cotton-producing region, there is scarcely a doubt that the quantity will be as large if not larger than the crop of 1868-69. Shipments of wheat from the South have been restrained by the fear that it will be necessary to call upon this cereal to supply the place of corn.

the West the growth of all the cereals was quite good, but owing to the severe rains which fell at harvest-time much wheat has been injured, and the corn crop has been so delayed in ripening in the Northwest that an early frost would inflict serious damage.

The vast extent of the whole Union, and the varieties of climate with which we are favored, do not permit uniformity either in the benefits or the injuries to the farmer which attend the annual production. Neither the misfortune of drought nor the undue prevalence of severe rains is ever general over the entire country, and all do not simultaneously suffer. The advantage which some portions enjoy this year will furnish more grain than we shall need for consumption, but not much from Atlantic ports to satisfy the want abroad. Whether the cotton crop of 1869-70 will produce as large rewards as did that of 1868-69 is much discussed. There seems to be no fear that the production of cotton in other countries will be sufficiently in excess of the last crop to affect the demand for what we shall have to sell; but it must be recollected that manufacturers abroad and at home were not generally able to make a profit last season, and it can scarcely be expected that they will run their mills for another year at a loss. There was a sharp decline in mid-dlings during the week which ended on the 18th September, due very much to the approach of new shipments, it having been long understood that 344 cents for middlings could be maintained only during the prevalence of the scarcity which the nearly total consumption of the crop of 1868-69 had occasioned. To England cheap cotton is a necessity, and she will make as powerful efforts to accomplish it as have been made since last season, and with success thus far, to command the market-price of grain.

Business, however, of all descriptions was brought to a pause on Thursday and Friday by the exhibition of gambling in Wall Street, conducted on a scale of frightful extent and with the effrontery which disregards the sub-stantial interests of the community. The time chosen for this speculation proved that its authors expected that it would be of short duration. It was during the pause which precedes the movement of new cotton, and but a little in advance of the period for large payments on account of interest from the Sub-treasury. Shipments of breadstuffs on an active scale were at the time going forward, which fornished a larger volume of exchange than was at the moment taken,

In the face of these adverse circumstances the speculation was set on foot and carried on with frantic violence in order that large margins might be suddenly claimed. The Treasury Department gave notice on Friday of its intention to sell gold, when the speculation suddenly collapsed, to the dismay of its authors, who can scarcely escape from sovere loss, except it be by the sacrifice of brokers who acted in their behalf. Confusion has since reigned in Wall Street, and uncertainty has been communicated to all operations. It is to be hoped that a scheme so damaging and disgraceful may meet the reproof and the fate it deserves from the

A BATTLE IN THE AIR.

Norwino could be more touching than the pertinacity with which Mr. ALEXANDER H. STETHERS insists that the war was unconstitutional, and that a true regard for the fundamental law would have resigned the United States to total destruction. He continually argues at great length that the Constitution is merely a treaty between sovereign powers from which each may withdraw at pleasure; and in utter contravention of the peace and dignity of Mr. GRORGE TECKNOR CURTIS, the historian of the Constitution, the biographer of WEBSTER, and a gentleman who believes to a degree that ought to console Mr. STEPHENS that the country has already arrived at the demnition bowwows-in utter disregard, we say, of the peace and dignity aforesaid, Mr. STEPHENS stoutly asserts that Mr. WEBSTER himself changed his views somewhat after his famous speech in reply to HAYNE.

Mr. Sterness quotes from a subsequent argument of Mr. WEBSTER's in the Supreme Court, in which he said; "I am not prepared to say that the States have no national sovereignty. And he declares that Mr. Calmous reduced Mr. WRESTER to utter silence, crushed him, pulverized him, on the 26th of February, 1883. Upon that celebrated occasion Mr. Calmous drew an argument in favor of the State sovereignty theory from the 7th article of the Constitution itself, which speaks of the establishment of the Constitution "between the States so ratifying." This blow, Mr. STEPHESS tells us, was overwhelming. It left Mr. WEBSTER, so to speak, in a hopelessly limp and flabby intellectual condition, and he "never came back at his opponent." That word "between," Mr. STEPHENS again informs us, is an argument in favor of the treaty view of the Constitution that never has been and never can be answered.

Mr. Cuarts replies by harling Mr. Manuson at Mr. Calmous, and demanding, through his clenched teeth, as it were, whether Mr. Mantson was not as good a Democrat and might not be presumed to understand the Constitution quite as well as Mr. CALHOUN. He shows Mr. Madeson's view of the subject to be identical with Mr. WEBSTRE'S, and he follows up Mr. STEPHENS's airy speculations about "delegated" or "alienated" sovereignty with the unction of a Seraphic Doctor pushing an Angelic Doctor upon the most recondite theological abstraction. Then he descends upon the ex-Confederate Vice-President, and asks by what right, upon his theory of the Constitution, he complains of the military despotism, the estrapic system, and the "ruin at last," which Mr. WEDSTER predicted, which now weighs upon the country.

Does it never occur to such disputants that the point upon which they differ was purposely left obscure in the Constitution, as the great, unexpressed compromise, that Mr. WEISTER and Mr. Calhoes, reasoning from the letter of the instrument merely, were both correct, because while the Constitution declares that "we the people" ordain it, it also makes it subject to ratification "between the States," and that such a radical difficulty could at last be settled in one way only, and that it has been settled? The people of the United States have declared the most appalling emphasis that they are and will remain one nation. The only final interpreters of the Constitution have interpreted "You are all wrong," murmers Mr. Sru-PHESS. "Constitutionally you ought at this very moment to be a moist, unpleasant body." It is the most affecting illustration upon record of "Scissors, if I die for it!"

NOTES.

WHETHER Mr. LELAND'S amusing "Hans Breitmann" is a work of genuine humor, and likely as such to hold a place in literature, is a question upon which good critics differ. But there can be no question whatever that it is excellent fun. A book which has so many laughs, or at least so much "smiling" in it, can not fail to be relished as long as the veritable Hans is so constantly before our eyes or lives in fresh tradition. It seems to us that there is also in the gay little volume a frequent stroke of real There can, for instance, be no better satire upon the immense body of sentimental German poetry than the last stanza of the first poem, "Hans Breitmann's Party." It is irresistibly felicitous. Messrs. T. B. Patternos & Brothess have issued the poems in a very near and pretty volume, with a grave glossary at the

By the death of Mr. JOHN RIDGEWAY, on the 4th of August, Boston lost an exemplary citizen, and the country one of its most remarkable inventors. He was well known as the inventor of the RIDGEWAY "Vertical Revolving Battery." did not succeed in securing the adoption of his invention by the United States Government, but it has received from army and naval officers the highest commendation,

THE first number of the College Review, a next and attractive monthly of the form of the Nation, We learn that the editor is Mr. has appeared. P. C. Gernear, and that the literary reviews are by Mr. W. L. Stone, who has also a general supervision of the paper. The opening number has some timely and pleasant articles, and the foreign correspondence is anununced as of especial interest. A story by the late WILLIAM L. STONE open racily, and we do not doubt that the college boys will heartily agree with the remarks upon College Education, and give a hearty welcome to the vis-itor who appeals peculiarly to their sympathy, and who will be devoted to their service.

Tun Times says that "Paragray is a republic The Times says that "Paragray is a republic threstened by a monarchy," and, therefore, appeals to our interest as republicans. So old Venice was a republic, but we doubt if Republican liberty suffered severely when it was overthrown. The people of Paragray have as much share in their government as the people of Turkey. It is not with the name of Republic, but with the fact of popular government, that Americans naturally sympathica.

Mr. Hanry Monnison, a gentleman bitherto unknown to us, sheds a good deal of light upon the present political situation in a late speech fore the Young Men's Democratic Committee, His view of the Democracy, especially, is inspiring and novel. Mr. Monnison remarked that,

ing and novel. Mr. Monkison remarked that,

"The genius of the Democratic party was as eternal as the country, and that both must expire simultaneously, without hope of resurrection by the light of the past. In the silent watches of the night the watch man's response was that the waters were there in their water and in their volume rolling for and in this immetelty of expanse and incudation the good old ark of Democracy—her timbers strained bet sound—was fleating yet, and by the light of other days, which had not finded, the morning daward. It broke, and with it came the down upon the deck, bearing in her beak their onen and their pride: she came with evidence that the Empire State had given her footheid and welcome, for on each leaf and evergrees, in letters of light and life, again to the Democratic party, was inserficed, "Excelsion."

After observing at some length that greatness and goodness and glory were identical with the Democratic party, and reviewing our political history with what the reporter invidiously de-scribes as "considerable accuracy," the orator concluded by exclaiming:

concluded by exclaiming:

"Say not that republics were ungrateful. They had a ruler who, after M'Cleatlan's right hand was crippled by jealous interference, was Blustrious: whose high altitude in the neutith of the aspirations of statement described them with incomprehensibility when they regarded his qualifications, bidding Bemocrats take advantage of the interregnum which success of party had accomplished to ask a nation to return to the allegiance of the first principles of their existence, when its debt of gratitude had been overpaid at the expense of reason and justice in the admiring but intemperate embrace of the removed soldler as the ensign of the so-called Republican party. Hussia had ber Poland, Austria her Bungary, England her Ireland, and America her Bungary, England her Ireland, and America her Bongary, and resumed their rank among the sovereign States of a restored and perpetuated Union, and by the living light and life of the bistory of the Democratic party, with eyes upturned to heaven, referenced, regenerated, and restored by Democracy and the lospiration of its grains, they claimed their hirthright and their attributes of humoriality."

If not entirely perspections, this will yet be uni-

If not entirely perspections, this will yet be universally agreed to present the subject in a very striking manner,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

M. CAVACARY, the new Hussian Minister, presented like credentials to the President on September 24. The New York State Democratic Convention net at Syracuse September 22. The present State officers were renominated.

The Massachtsectts Republican Convention met at Worcester September 23, and was presided over by Senator Sommer. Governor Claffin was recommented.

Colonel J. W. Powell, of the famous Powell Exploring Expedition in Colorado, has returned to Chicago, and reports that the part of the country through which be traveled is barren and not susceptible of cultivation. No precious metals were discovered.

The damage indicted upon the whest crop in Minnesota by the hits storm is estimated at $4,000,000.

The engineer who a few weeks ago caused the Mast Hope disaster has been acquitted by the jury.

We give on page 654 a table, showing the remarkable factuations of the gold market in New York city from 19 a. m. to 3 r. m., September 24, 1859.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE Paris papers recently published a letter from the preacher-monk, Pather Hyacisthe, addressed to the Pather-General of his order at Rome, asnouncing that he abandoos his convent, and ceases benefout to preach in the Church of Notre Bame of Paris. As a reason for this radical step, he declares that he can not obey the orders of the Holy See. He protests, before the Pope and the Council, against decirioes and practices of the Romish Church which, as be continued, are not to accordance with the principles of Christianity. The French Journals regard the interest of Pere Hyacinities as a great religious and political event.

of Caristianes, The French Journals regard his leater of Pere Hyazimhe as a great religious and political event.

Father Charles Louvon Hyacinthe was born at Orleans, France, in 1981, and completed his admention at Pan. In 1983 he was ordained at Rt. Salpice, in which parish he subsequently officiated as a priest; but in the mean while he studied theology four years and tangth philosophy at Augmon, and afterward theology at Neates. Having passed ten years in study and a nositiate of two years in the Lyone Convent of Carmelite Friars, he because a member of the order and was first a prescher in that city. While there, his sermons, delivered at the Lysic, were considered remarkable. During Advent, in 1863, by preached at Bordeaux, and in the Lenten season of 1864 at Perigneau. It was during the summer of 1864 that he mode his first appearance in Paris, preaching at the Church of the Modellac, and afterward at Notro Barne, having prepared a course of sermons for Advent. Here he at once, by the obsquence and buildness of his otternacus, attracted public attention and gained for himself a beilliant reputation. He is a most popular preacher, and it is from this fact that his recent letter excites such wide-operad comment. The latest reports from Paris state that since his production Father Hyadinthe has left his convect, and at the home of his parents will await the decision of the Council.

Our late advices from Spain report a revival of the a course of sermons by the cloquence and seted public attention at reportation. He is a lis from this fact that side-spread comment, that that since its project his convent, and at wait the decision of the report a revival of the le Government. This is Republicans. There is streets of Earteloon, sent in Medrid. Castad recently addressed and recently addressed and recently addressed outmand of the Castad recently addressed and command of the Castad recently addressed accord with the papal Council.

Our late advices from Spain report a revival of the reactionary movement against the Government. This time is is not the Carlists, but the Republicans. There had been a barricade fight in the streats of Euretiona, and an outbreak seemed imminent in Madrid. Castellar, the Republican leader, had recently addressed 20,000 people at Sarapassa.

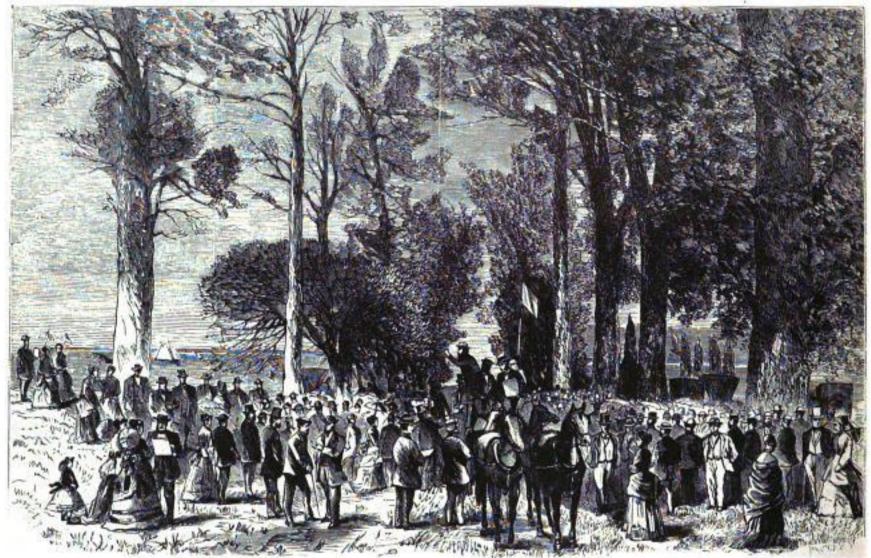

We have from Cuba a confirmation of the Las Tunas victory. Cospedes has assumed command of the Cuban area.

ban army.

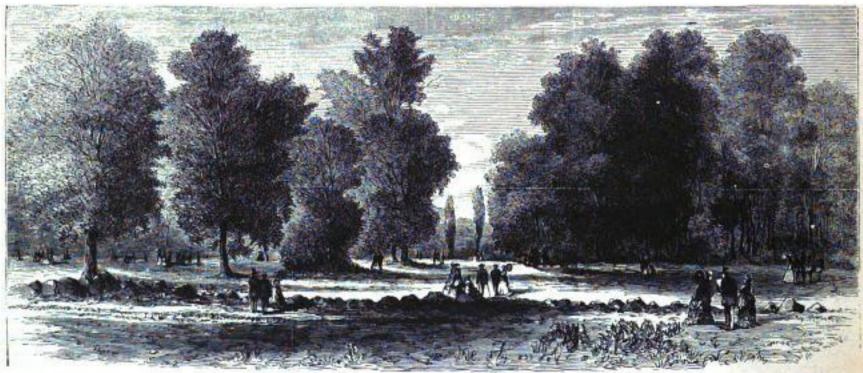

The Pope has pointely informed Dr. Cumming, of England, that these only will be admitted to the Geometrical Council who are in accord with the papel.

VIEW OF SHIPPAN POINT, OPPOSITE STAMFORD, CONNECTICUT.—PROTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.—[SEE PAGE 646.]

SHIPPAN POINT-JOHNSON AND MILLER'S AUCTION SALE, SEPTEMBER 21, 1869.—PROTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.—[SEE PAGE 646.]

SHIPPAN POINT-VISITORS INSPECTING PROPERTY PRELIMINARY TO THE SALE OF SEPTEMBER 21, 1869,-Phot. By Rockwood.-[See Page 646.]

BARBARA UBRYK, THE INCARCERATED NON OF CRACOW.

BARBARA UBRYK, THE INCARCER-ATED NUN.

Our renders will remember that, a few weeks since, we published a detailed narrative from the Vienna Presse of the incarceration of the Cracownin, Barmans Unity. We give this week a postrait of this victim of conventual cruelty.

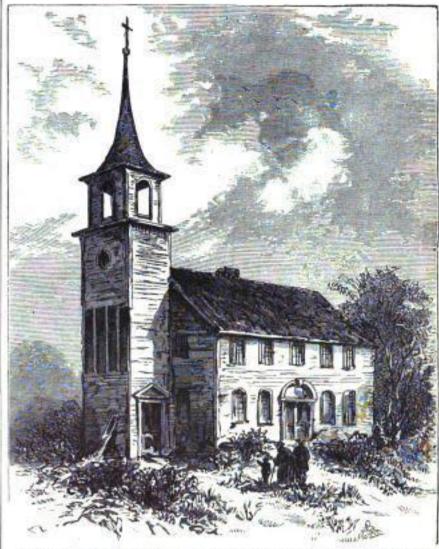

cow non, Barnana Unity. We give this week a portrait of this victim of conventual cruelty. The Hull Convent scandal, in England, and this Cracow disclosure have each excited the most profound attention throughout Christendom, and have done much to disabuse the popular mind of the romantic notions so often associated with convent life. These revelations have also led some of the European governments to insist upon the right of exercising inspection over convents, as over other institutions where the lack of such supervision might lead to abuses.

lack of such supervision might lead to abuses.

The following is the substance of the information made public soon after the discovery of Bannara Ubryk's incarceration:

July, an anonymous notice reached the Criminal Court at Cra-cow to the effect that in the Convent of the Carmelite Barefooted Nuns one of the or-der, named BARRARA Unryk, had been forcibly kept in close con-finement in a dark cell for twenty-one years. The Vice-President of the Criminal Court, RITTER VON ANTO-BIRWICZ, immediately laid this information before a judge of in-quiry, who, in compa-ny with the public prosecutor, repaired to the hishop, Vox Ga-LECKI, with the request to permit them to enter the convent. Hery Vos Galecki suggested to the judge that the notice might have arisen out of a false report; but when the officer of justice urged him to give him an ecclesiastical assist-ant, he declared that he would grant the re-quest in his capacity as Papal delegate, and sub-delegated the Papel prelate SPITAL, a very intelligent and very intelligent and worthy priest. In his company and that of Kwiaihis actuary, Kwrat-kowski, the judicial Gralewert and Theorem. Party, the judge drove to the convent. The latter, which is one of the strictest female orders, is situated in one of the most beautiful suburbs of Cracow. The convent was first entered by Father Sertat, and the commission went to the upper corridor, followed by the nuis, one of whom showed the judge the cell of Sister Barbara. This cell, between the pantries, close to the dung-hole, had a walled-up window and a double wooden door, in which there was a movable grating, through which, very probably, food was handed in. The cell, seven paces long by six paces wide, was opened, but it is almost impossible to describe the view this piece of inquisition of the nineteenth century presented. In a dark, infected hole, adjoining the sewer, sat, or rather cowered, on a heap of straw, an entirely naked, totally neglected, half insane woman, who, at the unaccustomed view of light, the outer world, and human beings, folded her hands and pitifully implored: "I am hum-

THE OLDEST EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN NEW ENGLAND, AT WICKFORD, EHODE ISLAND.

SKETCHED BY CHARLES E. HURL.—(SEE PAGE 447.)

gry; have pity on me; give me meat, and I shall be obedient—" This hole, for it could hardly be called a chamber, besides containing all kinds of dirt and filth, and a dish with rotten potatoes, was deficient of the slightest decent accommodation. There was nothing—no stove, no bed, no table, no chair—it was neither warmed by a fire nor by the rays of the sun. This den the inhuman Sisters, who call themselves women, spiritual wives, the brides of heaven, had selected as a habitation for one of their own sex, and kept her therein in close confinement for twenty-one years—since 1848. For twenty-one years the Gray Sisters daily passed this cell, and not one of them ever thought of taking compassion on this poor outcast prisoner. Half human being, half animal, with a filthy body, with thin knock-kneed legs, hollow cheeks, closely shoru-dirty head, unwashed for years, came a bos-i-ble-looking being forward, such as Danta in its wildest imagination was unable to picture. With her deeply-sank eyes staring on one spot ancht this wretched victim in her cell in the Convent of the Carmelites. The judge instantly ordered the nun to be clothed, and went himself for Bishthe nun to be clothed, and went himself for Bishop Gatheat. The bishop was deeply moved, and, turning to the assembled nuns, he rebemently represented them for their inhumanity.

AN ENGLISH FARM SCENE.-(SER PAGE 647.)

"Is this," he said, "what you call love of your neighbor? Furies, not women, that you are, is it thus that you purpose to enter the kingdom of heaven?" The mans ventured to excuse their conduct, but the bishop would not bear them.
"Silence, you wretches?" he exclaimed; "away, out of my sight, you who disgrace religion!" The hishop and prelate at once suspended the Father Confessor, and also the Superioress, who is de-Confessor, and also the Superioress, who is de-scended from an old bonorable Polish noble family. The hishop ordered nun Barrana Unry to be brought into a clean cell, and there to be dressed and nursed. When the unhappy nun-was led away, she asked anxiously whether she would be brought back to her grave; and when asked why she had been imprisoned, she an-sucred: "I have broken the vow of chastity; but," pointing with a fearfully wild gesture and in great excitement to the Sisters, "they are not angels."

This fearful personal history, which was brought to the light of day by chance alone, shows what iniquity may be covered by the secred name of religion even in this 19th century.

SHIPPAN POINT.

Surrean Point, of which we give a view on page 644, is a heautiful and fortile peninsula of 200 aeres in extent, apposite Stamford, Connec-tion. The surface slopes in every direction, and it is surrounded on all sides by the most exquisite sentery. In front, stretching restward and sen-ward for a long distance, lies Long Island Sound, with Long Leland beyond. Through the green with Long Island beyond. Through the groves and orchards of Shippen Point several miles of and or sards have been recently constructed, and other improvements are in progress. One of our illustrations on page 641 represents the sale at public arction of a portion of the proper-ty at the Point, by Jourssos & Mallien, on the 21st of September.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

In fibe Books .- Book E.

CHAPTER XL

SIR JOHN IS DISCUSSED.

DURING the first four or five years of Mand Desmond's stay at Shipley, Lady Tallis had written several times to Mr. Levincourt, asking news of her nicee, and pouring out tidings of her own troubles and injuries in long, taugled akeins of sentences, wherein verbs and their nominative cases were involved together in inextrimble confusion. Moreover, as she wrote with very pale ink, on very thin paper, and crossed each page of writing, the trouble of deciphering her epistles speedily became a greater one than Mr. Levincourt was willing to give himself.

Her ladyship's mode of expressing herself was singularly enigmatical. This did not arise from any intention of being mysterions, but simply from what the vicar styled "puzzle-bendedness," and from a conception of the grammatical con-struction of the English language considerably

Lady Tallis invariably wrote of her husband as "be." This was intelligible until some other male individual requiring the same personal pro-nous appeared in the letter. But when that other individual-whoever he might be-had to be mentioned, the difficulty of distinguishing the "he's" became considerable.

Add to this that every word which could be

Add to this that every word which could be abbreviated was cut down to two or three letters: "which" became wh, "your" yr, "morning" mrg, and so forth. As though time and letter-paper were so inestimably precious to the writer that they must be economized at all hazards. Though, in truth, she had quite as much both of the one and the other as she knew what

Mr. Levincourt would glance at the beginning and the end, and then would fold up the letter, saying to himself, as he placed it in his desk, that he would rend is carefully "by-and-by.

As years went on the communications be-tween Lady Tallis and the family at the vicarage grew rarer and rarer. Her ladyship was traveling about. The town-house was let on a long lease. Her address was uncertain. It became more and more apparent—or would have become so to any one taking the trouble to con-sider the poor lady's epistles with patience and sympathy—that her married life was wretched. She would, she said, very gladly have received her niece for a while, but "circumstances forbade her doing so." What those circumstances her more for a white, but "creamstances for hade her doing so." What those circumstances were, the vicar knew with telerable necuracy.

Veronica, too, had learned from her mother more of Lady Tallis's history than was known to Mand. Mrs. Levincourt had often expressed her contempt for Lady Tallis's weakness in submitting to be crushed and tyramized over by her husband, and had said that the woman must be an imbedia. be an imbecile.

Veronica was inclined to think so too. Occasionally Mand had spoken of her sunt to the vicar. "I should like to see Aunt Hilds."

she had said. "She is the only one left of dear mamma's relatives. And I know mamma loved her very much."

Then the vicar had explained that although Mrs. Desmond loved her sister, she by no means loved or esteemed her sister's husband; and that there was no possibility of Mand's desire to see her aunt being gratified, unless Lady Tallis should come to Shipley-in-the-Wold. Once Mand had said a few words to Veronica on the subject.

"I can understand plainly," said she, "that poor Aunt Hilda is very harshly treated, and very much to be pitied. During dear mamma's lifetime I was, of course, too mere a child to know any thing about it. I remember once Aunt Hilda corner to see a child to the control of the corner and the cried and telled. da came to see mamma; and she cried and talked room."

"I think," answered Veronica, "that Lady
Tallis's history may be summed up in a few words.
She was good-natured and weak. Her husband was bed-natured and strong. Keco!"

"But I wonder why he does not love her!
Aunt Hilda had beauty and gentle birth and a very excitedly, and mamma sent me out of the kind, sweet nature."

"I believe, Maud, that men love what amuses them. Now it is possible to be handsome, and well-born, and good-natured, and yet to bore people to death.

When, during the first day of her stay at Lo-water House, Maud discovered that Mr. Lock-wood knew her nunt, she asked him many questions about her.

"I am unfortunately not able to tell you as much of Lady Tallis as my mother would be," answered Hugh Lockwood.
"Mrs. Lockwood and my aunt were quite intimate, were they not?"

"They lived in the same boarding-house at Torquey for some time. My mother was an in-valid, and had been advised to go to Devonshire vaned, and had been advised to go to Devonstrie for the winter. Lady Tallis was there alone; so was my mother; and they found each other's so-ciety more congenial than that of the rest of the people in the house."

"And Annt Hilda was quite alone?"

"Quite alone. At first we supposed her to be a widow; but after a short time she became very confidential with my mother, and explained that her husband was still living, but that—that—ber her husband was still aring, but that—that—ther marriage was not a fortunate or happy one. You must understand, Miss Desmond," proceeded Hugh, seeing Maud's countenance fall and the color flush into her check, "that Lady Tallis volunteered this statement. My mother, how-volunteered this statement. My mother, however, has a singular power of winning confidence. It has more than once happened to her to receive the most curious particulars of their private history from almost total strangers. I think that if you knew her you would not distrust her."

"I never distrust people," answered Mand, looking up candidly into his face. Then a thought came into her mind, and she added, hastily, "Not quite never; of course I am bound in conscience to own that there are some faces, and especially some voices, which inspire me with distrust, perhaps unjustly."

She was sitting alone with her hostess next evening before dinner. The twilight still straggled with the blaze of the firm. It was that peaceful hour between day and night when old people are upt to dream of the past and young people are ant to dream of the past and young people of the future.

"Mand," said Mrs. Sheardown, "do you know when your guardian's guest is to take his departure?"

"Not certainly. As soon as he was well enough to travel, he said, when I left the vicarage. That is vague, of course. But I should think he might go by this time."

"That sounds a little like 'I wish he would go."

"Does it?"

"You don't like this Sir John Gale, Mand. Have you any reason for not liking him, or has he one of those faces or voices which inspire you with distrust? I'll make a confession, Mand.

I have a strange distrust of this man, and with less excuse than you; for I have never spoken to nor even seen him. It is one of what I call my presentiments, and what Tom calls my unreasonable feminine prejudices! I wish the man were fairly away out of the vicame. Does Mr. Levincourt like him?"

"Very much. Uncle Charles finds him amus-very much. Uncle Charles finds him amus-ing, and able to talk upon subjects which my genrulian seldom has an opportunity of discuss-ing."

"And Miss Levincourt—does she like him too?"

"Oh- Yes; I think so."

"That he admires her is a matter of course. She is very handsome.

Verquica has the most beautiful face I know." "Yes, she is strikingly handsome. Our young friend, Hugh Lockwood, was quite captivated by her beauty the other evening.

"I warned him not to burn his wings, for I do not think a poor man would have much chance with Miss Levincourt,

"N—no—I don't know."

"I don't say that she would be deliberately merronary—only—only I don't think she would happen to fall in love with a poor man."

"Dear Mrs. Sheardown, I always cite you as most inst persons I know. But one of the most just persons I know. But-don't be angry with me-I do think you are a ittle unjust to Veronica."

"Am I? I will try not to be, Mandie." "It would seem presumptions in me to talk to you in this way, only that I, of course, know Veronica so thoroughly. She has fine quali-ties; indeed she has."

"She has, at all errents, one good quality, which I am willing to admit; she is fond of you, I truly believe."
"Indeed she is, Mrs. Sheardown. And you don't know how I try her. I lecture her and don't know how I try har. I tecture her and soold her sometimes terribly. And you know I am two years younger than she is. And yet she bears it all so well. I am sure that if Ve-ronics loved only flatterers she would detest me." "Who is it that does not detest Miss Des-mond?" demanded Captain Sheardown, enter-ing the room at this moment with Mr. Hugh Leckweep.

"Never mind," returned his wife; "the reference you heard on coming in concerned neither you nor Mr. Lockwood."

"We have been to Shipley-in-the-Wold, Nelly."

"What took you to Shipley-in-the-Wold?"

"Captain Sheardown was kind enough to go, partly on my account," said Hugh. "I wanted to have a look at the church there; and as we are to go to Danecester for the Sunday service at the cathedral, I thought I might not have another opportunity of seeing St. Gildas, which "Had I known we were going to Shipley, Miss Desmond," said the captain, "I should have asked if you had any commands to give But we only made up our minds to push me. But we only made up our minus to push on when we were already a good mile on the road. This young gentleman found my description of St. Gildas's church irresistibly attractive. He was rather disappointed when I told him I was going to call at the vicarage. But he consoled himself with the hope that Miss Levinconsoled himself with the hope that Miss Levin-court might not be at home."

"I assure you, Mrs. Sheardown," said Hugh, turning to his hostess with a vehement carnest-ness that made her smile—"I assure you that I did not eren know, until we were within sight of the vicarage house, that Miss Levincourt lived there. If I had been told, I had forgotten."

"Did you see Uncle Charles?" asked Mand of Capaala Sheardown.

"No, there was no one at home. The vicar

"No; there was no one at home. The vicar was at Haymoor on parish business, and Miss Levincourt was out walking."
"Then," continued Maud, "you did not see

Stop a bit! We had left our cards at the vicarage, and had walked to St. Gildas and thorvicarages, and had walked to St. Gildas and thor-oughly inspected that very squat specimen of Saxon architecture—oh yes, I dare say it isn't Saxon at all, Hugh, but never mind!—Miss Des-mond does not know any better!—and we were crossing the church-yard, when whom should we see but Miss Levincourt and Sir—Sir—what is the man's name?"

"Sir John Gale," said his wife, gravely.
"Of course! Sir John Gale! Hugh saw them

"Miss Levincourt wore a red cloak, and the color caught my eye," Hugh explained. "Something caught your eye? Yes, and fixed it, moreover! For it was your intense gaze that made me look in the direction of the common. And there I saw Miss Levincourt and Sir Thingumbob strolling along arm in

"The dressing-bell has rung, Tom," said Mrs.

"The dressing-bell has rung, Tom," said Mrs.
Sheardown, rising from her chair.

"All right, Nelly. But I was surprised to see such a young-looking man! I fancied he was quite an old fogy!"

"No," said Mand, "he is not what one would call an old fogy. Did Veronica see you, Captain Sheardown?"

We walked half across the common to have the bonor of accosting Miss Levincourt. Hugh sacrificed his inclination to a sense of politeness. Miss Veronica received us very graciously, wanted us to go back to the vicames; but Sir John looked uncommonly black. I don't think he half liked being interrupted in his tête à tête.

And upon my word—"
"Please go and dress, Tom," interrupted
Mrs. Sheardown. "And you, too, Mr. Lockwood. You will both be late as it is."

While the captain was finishing his toolet his wife came into his dressing-room, and said, "Oh you blundering, tiresome Tom!" "What have I done now?" asked Captain Sheardown, wheeling round with a huge hair-brush in each hand. "I didn't want you to talk about that man before Mand."

before Maud."

"What man?"
"That Sir John Gale."

"Why upon earth shouldn't I?"

"Well, it does not so much matter your speaking about him as coupling his name with Veronica's. It makes Mand uneasy. I always knew Veronica to be a flirt; but, upon my word, I think her conduct with this man passes all limits. What is the vicar about? He knows nothing whatever of this man with whom he lets his daughter wander about the country."

"Gently, Nelly! They were not wandering about the country. They were taking an after-noon stroll within sight of her father's house."

" It's all the same!"

"Not quite, my dear."
"Tom, would you like your daughter to do "My dear Nelly, if you are speaking serious-

"My dear Nelly, if you are speaking seriously--"
"Quite seriously."
"Then, seriously, I think you are making a mountain of a mole-hill. The man is not a pleasant-looking fellow, though I suppose he is handsome after a fashion. Neither was he particularly civil in his manner. I dare say he thinks himself a very magnificent three-tailed bashaw.
But, after all, neither his looks nor his manners constitute a crime. And if the vicar and his daughter are satisfied, I don't think we have any husiness to object."

business to object."
"Why should Sir John Gale linger at Shipley?
He is quite well enough to travel. Mand was saying..."

10 Oh, it is Mand who has been putting this into your head?"

"No. But she distrusts and dislikes the man, I am not fond of Veronica Levincourt; but I can not belp feeling that I ought to hold out a hand of womanly help to her—ought to give her a word of counsel. The girl is motherless, and, in spite of all her self-confidence, we must remember that she is but nineteen. I wish I had invited her here with Mand! But, to say the truth, I was afraid of Hugh Leckwood getting entangled by her. He was greatly taken with her beauty. And her love of admiration would lead her to encourage him without the smallest compunction."

"Well, my dear child," said the captain;
"this Sir John Gale will be gone in a few days,

and—"
"Is he going?"

"So you see, you need not attempt the very disagreeable duty of giving a word of counsel to Miss Levincourt."

"Disagreeable enough! And ten to one I should have Jone no good by it. Well, Sir John is going, and it is all smooth. Mand will be delighted to get rid of him."

"I can not understand why you two should take such a hatred to the man, though! As for you, Mrs. Nelly, you know simply nothing whatever about him. He may be a model of manly virtue for any thing you can tell."

"I hardly think that a boon companion of Lord George Segrave's is likely to be that! But I am willing to allow him every virtue under the sun, if he will only relieve Shipley vicarage of his treatment.

presence."

"There's the dinner-bell. Come along, you illogical, prejudiced, unreasonable—dear little woman!"

CHAPTER XIL

THE VICAR IS NOT ALARMED.

Rain, rain, rain! It poured down on the open roads. It plashed and dripped from gutter and gargoyle. It sank deep into the miry uplands, and covered the marsh-rushes on the wide flats with beaded pearls.

The sun went down amidst clouds that looked like dun smoke reddened by the reflex of a distant conflagration.

Splash, splash, from the slated caves came the water-drops on to the evergreens outside the sit-ting-room window at Shipley vicarage. Splash, splash, splash!

splash, splash!

The log hissed in the chimney. They always crowned their coal fire with a log of wood at the vicanage of an evening. It was a custom which Stella Levincourt had brought with her from foreign parts. She said she liked the smell of the wood.

Not that the pungent, acrid odor was grateful Not that the pungent, acres over was general in her nostrils; not that the blue flame leaped brighter than the deep glow from the steady coal; no, not for these reasons did the economical housewife (who had learned to cherish a six-pence with the lingering grip that had been wont to caress her Tuscan paul) insist on the extrava-to caress her Tuscan paul) insist on the extravagance of a log of wood upon the evening fre.

It was the memory of her youth that she loved, and to which she offered this burnt-sacrifice.

Phantoms of old days revisited her in the pale gray smoke that curled up on her hearth-stone, like the smoke of the Tuscan fires, far away.

And the custom survived her. It was continued on the same estensible ground as that on which she had commenced it. The vicar "liked the smell of the wood." Veronica "thought the bright flame so much prettier than the masty coalthe smell of the wood." Veronica "thought the bright flame so much prettier than the nasty coal-bright flame so much prettier than the nasty coalgas, that flared, and glared, and scorched one."

The vicar of Shipley-in-the Wold sat alone by his hearth. He was depressed, and a little out of humor. His guest had left him, and the vicar missed his evening chat.

Mand was still at Lowater, and Veronica had gone to pay a long-promised visit to old Mrs.
Plew, the surgeon's mother.

"Mrs. Plew has asked me to drink tea with her so often," Veronica had said. "I ought to go. I will walk over there after the afternoon practice in the school-room." practice in the school-room.

The vicar had made no opposition at the time. But now that he was alone he began to think himself hardly used. Veronica could stay at himself hardly used. Veronical while there was a home, evening after evening, while there was a stranger in the house. But she cared nothing stranger in the house. She never considered for her father's society. She never considered that he might feel solitary. She had declared herself to be moped to death, and so had gone out to seek a change. Selfish, selfish! How selfish and inconsiderate people were! Splash, splash, splash, fell the drops from the slates of the roof. On the garden the spring rain was falling, fine and close. Now and again came the west wind, flying fast, and with a swoop of his wings scattered the trembling drops, and dashed them against the window-panes. Each time that the vicar heard the rain pat-book and moved uneasily in his chair. Some-times he stirred the fire. Sometimes he moved his reading-lamp. Once he rose, went to the window, drew back the curtains, and put his face close to the glass. There was not much to be seen. As his eyes got used to the darkness he could distinguish the outline of the old yew-tree, solidly black, against the vague, shadow-like clouds. A wet stormy night! How would Veronica get home? Joe Dowsett had gone to Shipley Magna to buy corn, or the vicar would have made him take a mackintosh and water-proof shoes to his young mistress. He could not send either of the women out in this weather. Then he sighed, and went back to his chair and his book.

In the kitchen old Joanna was knitting a coarse gray stocking, feeling rather than seeing her work; and Catherine, with the solitary candle drawn close to her, was trimming a smart cap.

"How solitary-like the house seems now!" exclaimed the latter, after having plied her needle for some time in silence.

Quiet," responded Journa, briefly.

"Oh, quiet enough! But for that matter it warn't never noisy. I like a little life in a place. Somehow, Sir John being here, and Paul, livened us up a bit."

"You've a queer notion of liveliness, Catherine. It was more like deadliness a deal for one while? And very nigh being deadliness, too." The old woman nodded her head in grim satis-

Well, but there was something going on all the time. Not but what Paul gave us little enough of his company; and as for Sir John, I didn't hardly set eyes on him from week's end to week's end."
"No great loss, neither!"

"Laws, Joanna, why are you so set agin' Sir John? I'm sure he was quite a handsome-looking gentleman for his time of life. And behaved handsome too, when he went away."

"My liking ain't to be bought with guineas.

Nor yet with five-pound notes."

"Well," observed Catherine, reflectively, "I think guineas helps liking. I hate stingy folks."

"You're young and foolish. It's a pity as wisdom and judgment mostly comes when folks hasn't no more need on 'em."

There was another and a longer silence, dur-ing which the wind rose higher, and the rain raitled against the casement.
"We shall have Miss Mand back to-morrow,

"we shall have Miss bland back to-morrow, I suppose," said Catherine. "She's a nice young lady: only a bit high. I don't mean high exactly, neither; but—she has a kind of way of keeping you at a distance somehow. Miss Veronce's more to my taste."

"H'm!" grunted out old Joanna, with closed line.

tips.
"She's a bit overbearing sometimes," pursued Catherine. "But then she has such pleasant is in a good humor."

"She's a bit overbearing sometimes," pursued Catherine. "But then she has such pleasant says with her when she is in a good humor."

"Did ye ever remember Miss Veronica taking any trouble about you? I don't mean telling somebody else to take trouble, and her getting the tredit of being very kind and generous for it: but right-down putting of herself out of the way for you quietly, where there was no show-off in the matter? Because I've know'd her ever since the way have a different at the same of the same and I same all such a thing to she was born, and I can't call such a thing to mind

Catherine opined, under her breath, that Jocanerine opined, under her treath, that yo-sons was "crusty" to-night.

The old woman's ears were quick enough to satch the words, and she answered, emphatical-by, "No, Catherine; you're mistaken. It ain't rrustiness as makes me speak as I spoke then; but I'm nigh upon fifty year longer in the world than you, and I've seen a deal of people, high than you, and I've seen a deal of people, high and low. I'd do more for that young lass than you would; but, all the same, I read her as plain se print. I tell you, it makes me sorry to

"Sorry! What for?"
"What for? Well, there's no need to say whether it's for this or for that; but I am sorry to see a young creature with no more religion than a heather—Lord forgive me!—and her head turned with vanity and vainglory, and caring for nothing but show-off and being admired. I tell you, if Miss Veronica was sent to live among black Indians, she'd paint herself blacker than any of em, if that was what they considered handsome. Ah, deary me, Cather-ine child, don't get to think too much of that rosy face of yours. It is pretty now. You needn't plume yourself up. God made it, and rosy face of yours. It is prony mode it, and needn't plume yourself up. God made it, and he didn't make it to last very long."
"There's the door-bell!" said Catherine, jumping up, not unwilling to escape from Joann moralizing.

In a few minutes the hall-door was shut heav-ily, and almost immediately afterward the vicar rang his bell.

Was that Miss Veronica?" he asked, as the girl entered the room.

"No, Sir; it was Jemmy Sack, Sir. He brought a message from my young lady to say as she wouldn't be home to-night."

"Not be home to-night!" "Not be home to-night!"

"No, Sir. Jemmy Sack saw Miss Veronica at the school-house, and she hade him say, as it threatened rain, she should very likely stay at Mrs. Plew's for the night. And you wasn't to be alarmed, please Sir.

"Alarmed! No, of course I am not alarmed. But — Where is Jemmy? Is be gone?"

"Yes, Sir; he's gone. He wouldn't hardly stay long enough to give his message. He was running down with rain."

"Ha! It is raining still, then, is it?"
"Pouring, Sir. And the wind beats the rain against your face so as I couldn't hardly shut the door Let me know when Joe Dowsett come back."

Yes, Sir."

"What o'clock is it?"

"After eight. I looked at the kitchen clock just afore I came up stairs."

When Catherine related to her fellow-servant what had passed, the old woman shook her head. "Ah," said she, "that's the way. The strange face is gone. There's nobody at home to amuse my lady, so off she goes to make a fool of that soft-hearted little surgeon, that would just lay down and let her walk over him, if she had a

"But, Joanna, it's a real bad night. I don't wonder as she didn't like the walk home, all along that sloppy lane, or through the church-yard, as is worse a deal, and lonesomer."

"It ain't sloppiness, nor yet church-yards, that could keep Miss Veronica if she wanted to come. And, what's more, if Miss Mand had been at home she wouldn't have staid at old Mrs. Plew's. For Miss Maud she do take her up pretty short about her goings on with that soft little man. If there's any body on God's earth as Veronica minds or looks up to, it's Miss Desmond. And I've rished more than once lately that Miss Mand hadn't been away this fortnight."
"Why?" asked Catherine, gazing with open-mouthed curiosity at Joanna.

"Well, it's no matter. I may ha' been wrong, or I may ha' been right; but all's well that ends well, as the saying goes."

And with this cracular response Catherine was fain to content herself.

THE SUMMER POOL

Trees is a singing in the summer sir,
The bine and brown moths finiter o'er the grass,
The stabble bird is creaking in the whest,
And peech'd upon the honey-makin hedge
Pipes the green linnet. O the golden world!
The stir of life on every blade of grass,
The motion and the joy on every bough,
The glad feast every where, for things that love
The sunshine, and for things that love the shade!

Aimleasty wandering with weary feet,
Watching the weolly clouds that wander by,
I come upon a lovely place of shade,
A still green pool, where with soft sound and stir
The shadows of o'erhanging branches sleep,
Save where they leave one dreamy space of blue,
O'er whose soft stillness ever and anon
The feathery circus blows. Here unsware
I pause, and leaning on my staff I add
A shadow to the shadows; and behold!
Dim dreams sceal down upon me, with a hom Dim dreams steal down upon me, with a hum of little wings, a murmuring of boughs, The dusky six and motion dwelling here Within this small green world. O'ershadowid By dusky greenery, though all around The sunshine throbs on fields of when The senshine throbe on fields of wheat and bean, Downward I gaze into the dreamy blue, And pass into a waking sleep, wherein The green boughs rustle, feathery wreaths of cloud Pass softly piloted by golden sirs, The sit is still, no bird sings any more, And, helpless as a tiny flying thing, I am alone in all the world with God.

The wind dies—not a leaf stire—in the pool The fly scarce moves;—earth seems to hold her Until her beart stops, listening silently stateps of the coming Rain l

While thus I pause, it seems that I have gained While thus I purse, it seems that I have gained New eyes to see; my brain grows sensitive To trivial things that, at another hour, Had passed unbeeded. Suddenly the air Shivers, the shadows in whose mids: I stand Tremble and blacken;—the bine eye o' the pool Is closed and clouded; with a shrill, sharp cry, Olling its wings, a swallow darteth past, And weedling flowers beneath my feet thrust up Their leaves to feel the coming shower. O hark I The thirsty leaves are troubled into sighs, And up above me, on the glistening boughs, Patters the summer rain; And up above me, on the Patters the summer rain!

Fatiers the summer rate. Into a no Boreen'd by thick foliage of oak and beech, it creep for shelter; and the summer shower biarmurs around me. In a dream I watch And listen. O the sweetness of the sounds, The patienting rais, the murmrous sigh of it The deep warm breathing of the scented at They sink into my soul—until at last Comes the soft cassing of the gentle fall, And lo I the eye of blue within the pool Opens again, while in a silven gleam, The jewels twinkle moistly on the leaves, Or, shaken downward by the summer wind, Fall melting on the pool in rings of light!

THE NEW STATE CAPITOL AT ALBANY.

We publish on page 648 an engraving of the new State Capitol building at Albany. Our il-lustration is from a photograph of the last draw-ing of the architect, and shows the general char-acter of the edifice. It has been designed in the Rensissance style, similar to that of the Louvre in Paris, and many of the finest modern public

The location is a very commanding one, the grounds being about 170 feet above the level of the Hudson. The main walls of the building will rise to an elevation of 110 feet above the level of the adjacent streets, and the corner and ventilating towers from 50 to 90 feet still high-er, while the main tower will reach a height of 800 feet above the street. From its cupola the valley of the Hudson, for more than thirty miles north and south, and of the Mohawk for nearly the same distance west, will be seen, as well as the intervening slopes and plains, for a circuit of more than twenty miles radius.

The open public grounds around the Capitol will have an area of ten acres, and when the building is completed the old Capitol. Library, Converse of two states and Converse Hall will all Governor's mansion, and Congress Hall will all be removed, leaving a park on the east front of 450 feet long and 320 feet wide, the ornamenta-tion of which will be made to conform to that of the structure. That noble avenue, State Street, will continue this open space for nearly half a mile eastward to the river; on the north will be Washington Avenue, 100 feet wide; on the south the contin-State Street; and on the west Swar Street. All of the streets which formerly crossed this large area are now closed by law. grand north and south entrances will be exactly n the line of Hawk Street, the grade of which falls off rapidly, both to the north and south. Thus, standing upon almost the highest ground in the city, with the land falling off in all directions, except to the west, surrounded by these wide, open parks and broad avenues, with its high walls and still higher pavilions, turrets, and towers, this building will appear to great advant-

The exterior walls are 280 feet long north and south, and 380 feet east and est. There are four entrances; three of which will be to the first-floor, and the west one to the second-floor, upon which will be the legislative halls and Library. Three of these portices will be arranged with carriage entrances.

main entrance will be at the east front, and will be approached by a very broad flight of steps in front up to the level of a broad terrace, which will extend across the whole east front. From this servace will extend another broad flight of steps to the level of the first-floor, and will open to a large vegtibule, from which will extend broad corridors to all parts of the building. the left of this entrance will be placed the suite of rooms designed for the use of the Governor, of his secretaries, and of the Military Depart-ment; and on the right will be rooms for two or more of the State officers, with whom the Gov-ernor has the most immediate official relations.

On the second, or principal floor, will be placed the Senate and Assembly chambers, and the State Library, all of which (in elevation) will occupy two stories, making 45 feet of height. Rooms for the Committees, and other purposes, will also be placed upon this floor.

The Senate Chamber will be 75 by 55 feet aber will be 75 by 55 feet The Senate Chan on the foor, with a gallery on three sides, of 20 feet more width. The Assembly Chamber will be 92 by 75 feet on the floor, surrounded by a similar gallery, which in both chambers largely increases the areas of the upper portion. The Library will occupy the whole of the east front of these two stories, and will be 283 feet long and 54 feet wide. This will be the most attractive room in the building, and perhaps in the world. Its large area and lefty proportions, its views toward the north, east, and south, over-lacking the city and being in its traffic of looking the city, and bringing in the valley of the Hudson and its western slopes for miles in each direction, will make it a favorite place of resort at all seasons of the year, even by those who have no taste for the mental pleasures afforded by its 500,000 volumes.

The great tower is 66 feet square, and the up-per portion will be a quadrangular dome of nearly 100 feet high, surmounted by an observatory, access to which will be had by a spiral staircase.

In the middle of the building will be an open court of 130 by 90 feet, to give light and air to the inside rooms. This court will be a grand and attractive feature, being treated in the same elaborate manner as the exterior fronts, and will no doubt ultimately have its fountains and be surrounded with statuary.

The plans of the foundations have been prepared with great care. The entire structure will weigh 150,000 tons; but the great inequalities in the heights of the various walls, and the distribution of the enormously heavy fire-proof floors, and roofs sometimes laden with deep tribution snows, bring very unequal weights upon the parts of the foundation adjacent to each other, and without this great care they would settle un-equally and crack the walls, as is so frequently seen in modern private, and even in many of our public buildings.

The stone foundation of the walls commences on concrete, and is made of large blocks of close-cut limestone of from two to six tons weight, laid in regular courses, the first one of nearly the width of the concrete, and each successive one narrowed by offsets, until the wall is contracted to the width necessary to support the structure, arranged so that they will afford an equal bear-ing on each side of the line of the centre of gravity of the walls and the weights which they are to sustain.

The work has been carried on with very rapid progress. Several hundred masons, stone-cut-ters, and laborers have been employed at the building, and several thousand men at the vari-ous quarries and in transportation, All of the stone and the other materials which have come in by railway or water have been unloaded by steam-derricks, and hauled up the hill on the railway, on cars specially built for the purpose. The Commissioners expect to com-plete the foundations and a considerable portion of the basement walls during or before winter.

The building is estimated to cost four million of dollars, exclusive of the cost of the land and any additional decoration or ornamentation which may be hereafter ordered by the Legislature. It will require four more seasons to fully complete

The names of the Commissioners are as lows: Messir, Hamilton Harris, John V. L. PRUTH, O. B. LATHAM, JAMES S. THATER, Alonzo B. Cornell, William A. Rice, James Terwilliger, and John T. Hudson.

Mr. THOMAS FULLER is the Architect, Mr. WILLIAM J. M'ALPINE is the Engineer, and Mr. Jour BRIDGEFORD the Superin

A VERY OLD CHURCH.

THE Old Church represented in our picture on page 645 was built at North Kingston, Rhode Island, in 1707. In 1800 it was removed to the village of Wickford, where it now stands. It is the oldest Episcopal church now existing in New England. The building is guarded with the most jealous care, as a precious relic of the past. It has been closed for many years. A few summers since, however, one afternoon the longclosed doors were thrown open for worship; many old people of the town once more entered the pews they had not set in since they were chil-Ancient Prayer-books were brought out, and the beautiful service of the Church performed. Then the doors were closed, the broken windows boarded up, and the dust was once more left to settle on the pews, and the mould to gather on the walls. Not many years can elapse before this venerable memorial of the past will go the way its first congregation went more than a hundred years ago.

AN ENGLISH FARM SCENE.

TRIS carefully-executed and agreeable picture, This carefully executes and aguiet and repose on page 645, has an air of rural quiet and repose to page 645, has an air of the subject. The congenial to the nature of the subject, artist, we feel, must often have lingered at the evening hour, when the milkmaid settles to her labor, near some such comfortable homestead. The cow, which forms the principal object in the composition, has a tether round her horns, which the young woman holds; and we presume that this cow is the mother of the white calf which straggles from her side to look at the dog, and that her maternal instincts have rendered her less amenable to discipline than the others. secondary groups of cattle carry the eye well into the composition; and the glimpse of the farm and the stretch of rolling country beyond com-plete a picture which is thoroughly English in its

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

THE MARCH OF SCIENCE.

Awtrey (as a kind to his friend, "Bless me! fire o'clock! I had no idea it was so late. How quickly fine does fly now!" YANKER. "Which I calc'late it's all owin' to the vast improvements effected in chocks by our great country."

A little Buffalo girl wants to know if feas are white because her uncle told her that "Mary had a little lamb with feas as white as snow."

With Oars.—A crop that is generally sown between eighteen and twenty-five. The harvest exts in about ten years after, and is commonly found to consist of a broken constitution, two weak legs, a had cough, and a large trunk filled with vials and patent medicines. We can hardly say that the yield pays for the time and labor expended in the cultivation.

NEW NOVELS.

"Near and Narrow," by the anthor of "Far and Wide."

"Strings of Barley Sugar," a sequel to the thrilling tale of "Bopes of Sand."

"Downey as a Decay Duck," a factinating sequel to "Simple as a Deve."

"The Geat She Jilied," a romance of real life, written by the author of "The Girl He Married."

"Boiled Blackbeetles," a sensation story, by the author of "Burned Butterfiles."

"Fatal Fever-heat," a tale of most unreal life, by the author of "Fatal Zero."

"Handley in Good-Humee," a "squal to the story of "Handley Cross."

There was a clergyman who often became quite vexed at finding his little grandchildren in his sindy. One day one of these little children was standing by his mother's cide, and she was speaking to him of heaven. "Ma," said he, "I don't want to go to heaven." "Don't want to go to heaven." "Don't want le go to heaven, my son!" "No, ms, I'm sure I don't." "Why not, my son!" "No, grandpapa will be there, won't he!" "Why, yea, I hope be will." "Well, just as soon as he seen us he will come scolding along, and say, 'Whew! whew! whew! what are these boys here for!"

BLENDER PARTY (who is not very complexiable). "These street care ought to charge by weight."

Stoor Party (sheepig). "Ab, if they did they would never stop to pick you up."

RETRACEDINARY PRESCRIPTION IN NATURE - A feet

We have it on the best anthority that the ancient patriarchs were their hair and beards so long that they starved the barbers i

A lady, having discharged her cook, said, "Thank Heaven, there are no cooks in the other world?" Her little girl said, "Well, mamma, who cooks weak-day? for you know they must have a big week, as their gar-ments are always white."

A young lawyer was examining a bankrupt as to how he had spent his money. There were about two thousand dofters unaccounted for, when the attorney put on a severe certainking fice, and exchained, with much self-complacency, "Now, Sir, I want you to tell this court and jury how you used those two thousand dofters." The bankrupt put on a serie-comic face, winked at the audience, and exclained: "The lawyers pot that!" The judge and the audience were convulsed with laughter, and the councelor was glad to let the bankrupt po.

Why did the Americans lose the boat race?—Be-ause they did not pull " And Aerd" (Harvard) enough.

Where is there no end of cats?...In the Isle of Man, where the cats have no toils.

A Sunday-school teacher was giving a lesson on Ruth. She wanted to bring out the kindoess of Boax in commanding the reapers to drop larger handfule of wheat. "Now, children," she said, "Boax did an-other very nice thing for Ruth; can you tell me what it was?" "Married her," said one of the boys.

The Illinois girl who lately lost her speech (save whispering) has had forty offers of marriage.

RECEIVING TRLEBES-Rewarded informers.

The gas is so bad in Eric, Pennsylvania, that the boy who puts it out uses a lantern to find the

To him a rosy-checked girl, and find your mouth filled with Venetian red, and she growing pale on it, is truly awful.

An Ohio journal pointedly remarks that "every sed of wood given to the poor will be so much fuel aved from use in the next world."

Upon Caleb Cushing a spineter postess of Newbury-ord once wrote an epigrammatic spitaph, as follows:

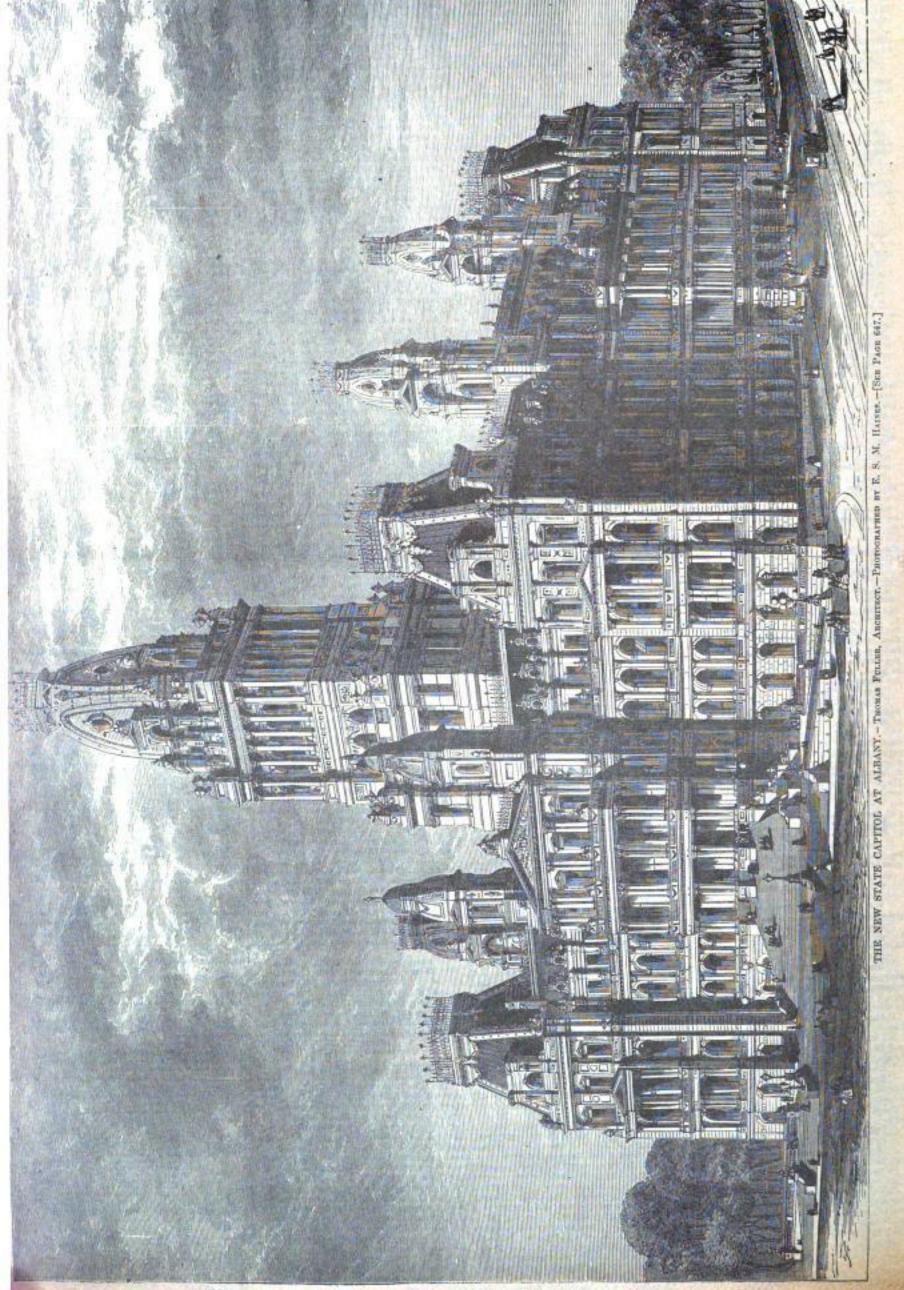

cann transing a spinster poeters of the wrote an opigrammatic epitaph, "Lay adds, all pe dead, For in the next bed Repease the hedy of Cuding! He has neverted the way Through the world, they say, And even though dead will be pushing."

Mr. Cushing wrote the following rejoinder: "Here San me whose wit, Without wounding, could kit,
And green growes the grass that's shows har;
Having sont every bean.
To the engines below,
She has gone down herealf for a loves,"

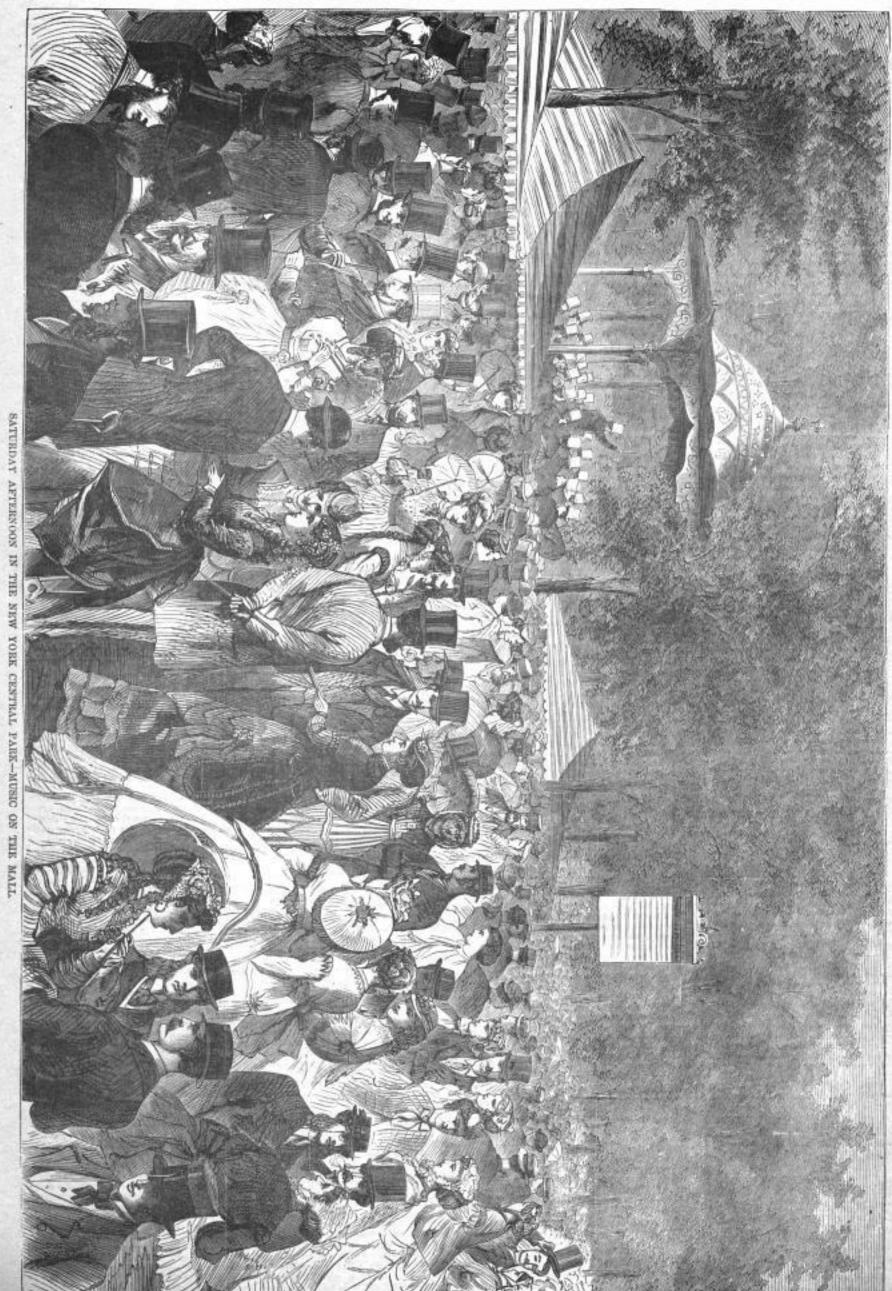

An editor says, "Our best things will be found on the outside." That's the way with most of the world.

"Pather," asked a little three-year-old the world.

"Pather," asked a little three-year-old the other day, at dinner, of his paps, "what is it that makes the lightning?" "You can't understand it now," was the answer; "Pit tell you when you get a helin older," and the father went to bis avocation. In the evening he returned, and the young hopeful, climbing upon his knee, said to him, "Papa, I know now what makes the lightning. It is God acratching matches against the oky!" Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

NOT A DREAM.

"WHAT I have got to tell you are plain facts. You can try and account for them by physical rules if you please, or you can take them as be-longing to the category of things that are not to be explained. That is what I have done for many years. I have never told the story before, because there were those for whom it was a purchase ful subject. They are all dead and gone now, e there were those for whom it was a pain-so it doesn't matter."

So spoke the old General, whom we had been tensing for a story one winter's night. Hitherto his talk had been of tigers, pig-stickings, Mah-ratta battles, and other Indian subjects, on which he dilated with the zest of a boy, white headed veteran as he was. But there was something in his tone now which seemed to prepare us for a very different topic, and we were not mistaken.
I was about eight-and-twenty (be continued) and had just got my company, when it suddenly occurred to me, without rhyme or reason, that I must get leave and go home. I was in good health, and I had a promise of a valuable civil appointment. I had no one in England whom I cared particularly to see again, for I had been I cared particularly to see again, for I had been left an orphan very early in life, and my uncle, who was my guardian— Well, let by gones be by-gones. I have seen other youngsters with the same fit upon them. You might as well tell a quall that he need not migrate as to try and persuade them not to ask for leave; and they are not worth their salt till they get it, as I have told the Directors over and over again. Well, the fit was on me, and bome I went. The voyage in those days was no hop, skip, and jump over Egypt and France, but a weary business of three months—if you had good weather—in sailing-ships round the Cape. I had younty of time to think of the wonderfully pleasant things I would do when I landed; and when at last I found myself in London I was a little disappointed. A hiatus of eleven years plays the very deuce with one's friends and acquaintance. Some peo-ple second to think that I must want something when I called upon them, and others were so forgetful that I had half made up my mind to make no further attempt at renewing acquaint-ances, when one day, while taking my solitary dinner at a restaurant affected by "Indians" (we had no club of our own then), the waiter came and no close of our own toest, the waster cause up with a card, and, "Beg your pardon, Sir," said he; "gentleman in No. 4, Sir, hopes no offense, Sir, but may your name be Davenport, Sir?" I looked at the card; "Mr. James Stuart Carenove" was elegantly engraved thereon.

"My name," I said, "is Davenport, but—it's so confoundedly awkward, you see, for a fellow to claim acquaintance, and you not to know who the dence he is." I gave the waiter back the card, and the next moment its owner had taken a seat opposite me. "I should have remembera seat opposite me. "I should have remember-ed you any where," he said, "but you don't re-member me. I took the name of Cazenove for a fortune I was locky enough to get two years ago. I'm little Jim Stuart. Lord! don't you remember "Cocky" Stuart at Damberley's?" Then I knew him in a moment. Cocky Stuart! the little rascal I had licked at school, whose verses I had done, and who had been my faith-ful accomplice in many a poaching adventure at on a compact of may a passing anventure at poor old Damberley's.

Oh yes? you girls may smile. You are all very well, kissing and "dearesting" each other at two days sequaintance, but you don't know what men feel at meeting an old school-fellow, especially when one of them has been broiling eleven years in India.

Cocky" Stnart was one of your lucky ones He inherited a fine business from his father, which seemed to take care of itself. He was made a rich man's beir, and he married well in every sense of the word. He was in London to complete some business matters connected with nn estate he had recently bought, and I was one of the first batch of guests who assisted at his se-warming. Well, old man," he said, when he had shown me over most part of the house—a lungo old Tu-dor Gothic place which he had restored, to my thinking in great good taste-"what do you think of it?"

I told him I liked it immensely-that he had just hit the happy mean between comfort and

"That's just what Bossie says-it's all her do ing. Bless you, I take no credit. It's all her handiwork. I wanted to pull the place down, and build a modern house, but she would not there's many a duke would envy you those old carved onk wainscotings, those deliciously ugly corbels and stained-glass windows. There must be a learned for many stained windows. be a legend for every stone, and I'll be bound there's a haunted room.

"Oh! that's nonsense," he replied, rather aharply,

"My dear fellow," I persisted, "a house "ke If you haven't got a ghost, pray invest one 1 just as soon be without a butler if I were you It's quite de régneur in such a dear, quaine old place, I assure you."

"Don't talk nonsense, Davenport." I remembered afterward how his voice and manner changed; but I did not notice it at the time. I was in a chaffing mood, and went on:

"Nonsense! Do you call ghosts nonsense?" Yes, I do. " It's very wicked to call ghosts nonsense."

"Davenport, I'd trouble you to drop the sub-ject; I don't like it."

Of rourse I could say no more after this, and, it being nearly time to dress for dinner, I was shown to my room. I was somewhat surprised when I entered it.

All the other rooms I had seen were, as I have himed, quaint, old-fashioned, with low ceilings, polished oak floors and wainscotings, some hung with tapestry, and all furnished in keeping with those surroundings. My room was a lofty spart-ment with a French paper on the walls, a Brus-sels carpet, a polished steel fire-grate, and a bed and other accessories of the latest fashion. Perhaps it was that the contrast with the other portion of the house made it appear at first harsh, vulgar, and garish. The colors on the walls and floor appeared unnecessarily gay, and two large pier-glasses with gilt frames, and a mantle-piece covered with crimson velvet, on which a hand-some clock ticked loadly, flanked by two elaborate ormolu candelahra, gave it an unusual air for an English bedroom. "This isn't Bessie's orate ormote canonical and This isn't Bessie's for an English bedroom. "This isn't Bessie's taste, I'll be bound," I roused, as I tied my white taste, I'll be bound, "I roused, as I tied my white taste, I'll be bound," I was a room they choker at one of the glasses, "It's a room they have added to the old house, and Master Jim has had his wicked will with it. The rascal? If he had taken a Clapham villa he could not have done worse."

Bessie was a very gem of a hostess, and before dinner was over her guests, some ten in number, were on perfect good terms; and al-ready the keels of certain small flirtations had been laid. When the ladies had retired, and we were adjourning to the smoking-room—a rare luxury in those days—" Cocky" took me aside and whis-pered, "Don't you mind what I said to-day, old man. I didn't mean to be cross, you know; but don't talk about it, like a good fellow. Servants get hold of such things, and play the very

'Get hold of what things?"

"Oh! you know-about haunted rooms and that. It's all nonsense." I was half vexed with him for thinking I would pursue a subject which seemed to annoy him, and, lighting a cheroot, turned to a young person who had amused me greatly by lectures on India, based on information he had gained from tracts written by people as wise as himself.

At last it was bedtime, and my host accompanied me to my room, where he fidgeted about good deal, and seemed reluctant to leave me. He set the clock right, lit a good many more lights than I could possibly want, and walked about touching small articles of furniture, putting them a little more to the right or left, backward or forward, in a nervous way.

"Is there any thing you want?" he asked at "No," I said; "nothing, thank you. "If you do want any thing, my room is the third door in the corridor to the left."

"My dear fellow, I'm an old campaigner. I shall sleep like a top in that luxurious bed," I Well, good-night. Remember the third door to the left if you want any thing. Don't forget,"

As I lighted him out I noticed that there was a short passage between the door of my room and the corridor, and this confirmed my idea that the room had been added to the old house. Directly opposite to where I had sat at dinner was hung the portrait of a very beautiful woman, dressed as a shepherdess, with a crook in her lap and a flock of sheep in the distance. I dreamed that this picture came into my room, which suddenly became like any other room in the house, only larger. I awoke, and found the lights in the candelabra (which I had forgotten to put out) burning brightly, and every thing just as it had been when my host took his departure. I fell asleep again, and was only roused by Casenove knocking at the door, and saying that the breakfast-bell would ring in twenty minutes.

"Did you sleep well, old man?" he asked.
"Like a child," I replied, jumping out of bed.
"By Jove, I'm so glad!" he cried, with what struck me at the time as unnecessary warmth; ind away be went.

When the servant came in with my shaving-water and drew the heavy curtains which hid the window, I got a little start. It was the window of the room I had seen in my dream! A large, deep bay-window, almost a chamber in itself, with stone copings and divisions and lancesshaped lights, the small diamond panes in which were set in lead—a window ridiculously out of keeping with the room and its furniture. I had dressed for dinner the day before by candle-light, and seeing the incongruous window now so sud-denly brought back my almost-forgotten dresm with, as it were, a mental crash which staggered me for a moment.

Angry with myself for giving way to such fancies, of course I laid the blame on some one else, and inwardly abused my host for his anachromism. "With such a window as that stand-ing, why the dence couldn't he have rebuilt the om in harmony with it?" I growled. When breakfast was over I could not help sammering into the dining-room to have an-other look at the picture which had troubled my repose. The original must have been very beautiful, and as a work of art the portrait was almost perfect, except for the position of the right hand—a small white hand—but, as I thought, too prominently displayed. There was something ven threatening in the attitude.

As I gazed Casenove came in, gun in hand (it was the 1st of September), and rated me for not

I told him that I was not only ready, but had been waiting for him. "Only, before we start," I said, "tell me who is that?" pointing to the picture.

"Oh, that? That's a portrait," he replied, becoming suddenly grave.
"So I suppose; but of whom?"

"Oh! of some one belonging to people who used to live here long ago."

"Connected with the Surface family, I should think, from their selling their accessors?" I said. "But, I beg pardon, perhaps she was some re-lation of your own?"

"God forbid!"

ashamed of her personal appearance. Show me as beautiful a girl living now, and I'll show you a man who would make a fool of himself for her,"

"I've begged and prayed Bessie a score of times," he muttered, angrily, not appearing to heed me, "to let me have the infernal thing hacked out of its panel, or painted over, or omething-it's a fixture, confound it!she won't. I'll do it, though, in spite of her. For God's sake, Davenport, don't stand there staring like an idiot! Come and shoot, if you're coming,"

This was the second time he had broken out at me rudely, for no apparent cause, and I be-gan to think that my fortunate friend had had a bad temper left him among his other legacies.

At dinner be did me a grievous wrong. Con-trary to all law and custom, in defiance of the British Constitution itself, he ordered me away from an exceedingly nice little girl, whom I had taken down, and sent me to the other side of the table, on the pitiful plea that there were two ladies together there. I remembered afterward that this change brought me with my back to the picture.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

The manor had been badly preserved by Cazenove's predecessor, who never lived on it, and we had a good deal of walking for our twenty brace. I was glad indeed when our fair hostes told us we were very stupid, as gentlemen always were in the shooting season, and that the best thing we could do would be to go to bed. If ever a man had an excuse for sleeping like an animal, I had one that night; but I could not I could not help thinking of the beautiful shepherdess with the small lily hand, and wondering why my host had spoken so irvitably in answer to my questions about her. What did he mean by saying "God forbid!" with so much vehemence when I asked if she were a relation? Why should he want to destroy so admirable a painting? Small things affect a man with the fidgets on him. The fire was burning brightly in its pol-ished grate, and lighted the room so that almost every object was visible. Of all the rooms in the world, it was the last to have any such legend as I had suggested the day before ed with it. A thing of yesterday, with the smell of French polish and new carpets not yet blown away, what association could it possibly have with a lady who probably died before Queen Anne? What story, beyond what was told in an upholsterer's bill, could belong to it? When an uphoisterer's bill, could belong to it? When midnight struck, and a cold shiver passed over me, I said to myself, "Davenport, my boy, you got your feet wet in the turnips. Dwellers in the tropics can not afford to play tricks with their health. That jungle-fever you caught their bealth. That jungle-fever you caught three years ago is not quite out of your bones. A does of quinine for you to-morrow morning, Master Davenport." Then I shut my eyes, and canfelly resolved to share. Small thins: I are manfully resolved to sleep. Small things, I say, affect a man with the fidgets on him. The fire worried me; but what was I to do? Empty the water-jug on it?—that would rust the reflecting-bars, and being on my head the maledictions of an injured house-maid. Take off the coals?— where was I to put them? Besides, there were no tongs, and only a sort of gigantic skewer for a poker. I am afraid I said bad words of that a poker. I am afraid I said bad words or that fire and its new-fangled irons as I turned my back on it and tried again to sleep.

At last I fell into a conscious doze, during which the light faded away; and then there came over me that pleasant sensation which says, "You have only to turn over on your other side, and you will go fast asleep." I turned over, and saw that the old enemy of my rest was out. The room was in total darkness, where the moonbeams fell in through the window. This struck me as odd, and roused me; for I distinctly remembered that the heavy This struck me as odd, and roused cloth curtains were drawn close when I went to "Bother the moon!" I exclaimed, and was in the act of jumping out of hed to shut it out, when another light shone suddenly from the opposite side of me, and by this I—as fully awake and in my senses as I am at this moment—saw that the size, shape, furniture, every thing about the room had changed, and that it had become room of my dream the night before!sombre oak-paneled room, with a high vanited roof, in which some tattered banners waved to and fro in the night-air mournfully. Even the bed, on which I sat in horror, was not what it had been, but a huge structure with gilded posts and dark heavy drapery, embroidered with quaint devices, as the state-beds of kings and queens in olden times were wont to be. Remindful of my dream, I instinctively turned toward where I fancied I had seen the picture the night before, and there sure enough I saw—not the picture, but THE ORIGINAL, standing with a lamp in one hand, and the other in the attitude of the portrait, but with this horrid difference-that the was pierced through and through as though by a stab, and blood trickled from it to the ground. There she stood in her fanciful s, and a look, not of pain or of anger, but of deep unntterable despair, branding the face I had thought so innocent and beautiful, for, I suppose, some minutes, though they seemed hours to me. Then she walked slowly round the room, close to the wall, and vanished the instant that she returned to the spot where I had first seen her, leaving me again in darkness.

Now, I dare say there are some of you who will say that all this can be explained; and so perhaps it can, so for. You may argue some-what in this wise: —"The old-fashioned part of the house had made an impression on my mind which was strengthened by the contrast presented by my bedchamber. The portrait in the ig-room had also made an impression. had dreamed of the latter, and, naturally enough, gave it a fitting back-ground." So much for what "Well, I'm sure you have no reason to be shamed of her personal appearance. Show me beautiful a girl living now, and I'll show you man who would make a fool of himself for her," said.

"Well, I'm sure you have no reason to be you will, no doubt, call my first dream. You will go on to urge that, "overtired with a long day's shooting, and with a touch of intermittent fever on me, that first dream made an impression which developed itself into the second." I say again, so far such an explanation might pass, But when, impelled by terror—of which I was afterward heartily ashamed—I knocked up Cazenove, his first words were:

My God, Davenport! Have you seen her?" Then I knew in a moment why he had sn-wered so irritably my nonsense about haunted chambers, and the inquiries I had made about

"I have seen some one," I replied, "and it may be a trick. Bring your lamp and come at "Not for the world!" he cried, drawing back. "She never appears a second time to the same person; but I have not seen her yet. You may person; but I have not seen her yet. You may take the light and satisfy yourself without the slightest danger. It is all over."

I went back, and found every thing exactly as it had been—the thick curtains closely drawn over the window, and the fire still burning.

Then I rejoined my host in the corridor. Don't blame me for what has passed," he said, in a low voice, "until you hear my ex-cuses. I have a haunted chamber-worse luck!

As he spoke he lifted the tapestry, and dis-As he spoke he intend the aspestry, and dis-closed a small low door, which I saw from its position should lead into the room I had just left. "Go in," he continued, opening it by pressing a spring, "and look about you. No, there is nothing to fear; I tell you again, she never appears twice to the same person. Go and judge for yourself if there be any trick."

I went in, and found myself in what appeared, at first sight, to be a passage between the corridor and my bedroom; but on examining the outer wall I recognized it, with a cold shudder, as the wall of the room round which the lady with the bleeding hand had passed. I looked up, and there was the dark vaulted room, there were the tattered batmers. The new room had been built

The Dream theory will not do now. A dream a confused set of ideas arising out of something which the sleeper has seen or known of when awake. I had server seen that room; it was hid from me (all but the window) by solid walls of brick. I had every reason to suppose that I was in a new part of the house. How, in a mere dream, could I servert such a thing as a chamber within a chamber? Again, with regard to the picture, I was half in love with the winning grace, the essentially feminine beauty, of the fair shepherdess. In a mere dream I should have made her the central figure of gay scenes, court revels, masks, balls, and the like, which, waking, I fancied she must have graced. How could I invest such an improbable thing as that her peetwhich the sleeper has seen or known of who invest such an improbable thing as that her pretty hand should be stabbed through and through? -that she should be wandering about alone at night with that awful look of despair fixed on her face?

It was no dream.

"Of course, there's no more sleep for either of us to-night," said Cazenove, as I rejoined him. "Come into my dressing-room, and I. will tell you all I know about this miserable business. I was angry with him for what I considered his unfair treatment, and had determined to tell him so; but there was something so dejected in his voice and manner that I checked myself with the words hot on my lips, and followed him in silence to his room.

His narrative was a long and not intelligible one, for he rambled into many details which had nothing to do with the story, and wasted a good deal of time talking about his bad luck, and giving instances of it; so I had better give it to you in the shape into which I reduced it afterward, with the help of some further information. Among the cavaliers who cheered the exile of

King Charles the Second was a certain Sir Hubert Dyke, a gentleman who had done things in his time on the Spanish Main which we should call time on the Spanish Main which we should call by ugly names, but who was a stout soldier, another what was more to the pur-pose in those times—a rich one, thanks to his ex-ploits among the galleonsof the Don.

When he must have been nearly sixty he mar-ried a young Frenchwoman, of whom when I say that she was very lovely I have told you the best that can be said of her.

The King got "his own again"—that is to say, he was brought back to waste other folks' say, he was brought back to waste other folks' property; and Sir Hubert and Lady Dyke got their own again, considerably improved by having passed through the hands of a crop-eared knave, who, if half that is said of his conduct as a landlord be true, was worth a whole regi-ment of lawless dare-devils like Sir Habers.

High festival was held in honor of the Restoration at the manor, and its beautiful lady was the life and soul of the revels, not the least splendid of which was a mask composed by Dryden, in which she appeared as a shepherdess. Among the company was a then unknown artist named Lely, who asked and obtained the honor of painther portrait on a panel in the dining-The fame of that mask went abroad, and the King himself commanded its repetition

But for one thing Sir Hubert would have a happy man. Among my lady's train, and the actors with her in that mask, was a young countryman of hers, who, it turned out, had woosd her before she had charmed the eye of the ex-buccaseer, and whom she loved in spite of her marriage-vows. Dark hints reached Sir Hu-bert's ears, and I dare say he would have stood on scant ceremony with the disturber of his peace, but that there was the royal visit and the royal command; and, as the mask could not be performed without Mossieur Le Goffe, his hateful presence had to be endured. Only one-half of the truth appears to have been known to Sir Hubers, for he is reported to have been most affectionate and courteous toward his beautiful wife up to the last.

The mask went off more brilliantly than be-The mask went of more brilliantly than be-fore, and all that is known with any certainty of what followed ise that shortly after midnight a wild piercing shrick was beard, and my lady rush-ed to the King's chamber, calling for help and justice, and showing her hand pierced through and through by a stab. The next day the estab-lishment was broken up. My lady is esid to have returned to France, and to have entered a convent. Sir Hubert obtained a military com-mand in Scotland, but Monsterr Le Goffe sear mand in Scotland, but Monsieur Le Goffe was sever heard of again. The legend goes that the lovers were surprised; that the lady threw her arms round Le Goffe to protect him from her injured husband's fury, but that he stabbed him to the heart through her hand. The scandal was hushed up, as such things could be in those days when great people were concerned; but no one could live in the statechamber, and eventually the fine old house was chamber, and eventually the fine old house was sold for about a fifth of its value.

"Like a fool as I was," said Cazenove, "I made no inquiries. I saw the place and liked it; so did Bessie. I offered a sum for it which I thought ridicalously small, and to my surprise it was accepted. Not a servant belonging to the vicinity would come to live with us, and so at last the truth leaked out—the place was haunted! Bessie said it was all nonzense; that the state-chamber was far too large and sombre for a bedroom; that its dark walls, and the shadows a bedroom; that its dark walls, and the shadows and noises in the vaulted roof, created fancies : and as we could not pull it down without disfig-uring the house, we built a modern room inside, which you were the first to occupy. But you see it is no use; there is a curse upon the place!"
"Has it appeared in any other part of the "No, never."

"She has appeared to many persons?"
"To every one who has slept in that room—once."

"And—tell me truly, Casenove, what has rollowed?"

"Ob, it's no use talking about it any more,"
he replied, with a renewal of his old petulance.
"Casenove, I insist on knowing. There is something you wish to conceal—out with it, man! The thing is done, and can not be helped.
What has followed?" What has followed?

"They say that those to whom she appear never marry. . . .

"And were you ever married, General?" ask-ed a pretty girl who sat next him.
"Never, my dear," replied the old soldier;
"but whether that was my fault, or the ghost's, I can not say."
"You think it really was a ghost?"

"What am I to think?"
That is a question which has yet to be answer-

ON AN ICEBERG.

I was once summoned home from my travels on the Continent by very important news. There was no time to lose in getting back, so I went as fast as I could to Havre, and took the first ship that sailed for New York. It was in the month of June, which I considered the most pleasant time in the year to cross the Atlantic; and though I found after leaving that my ship was an old and rather leaky concern, yet I did not feel any very great anxiety.

We went on for several days; and as we were favored with a fine breeze, perfectly fair, we made very rapid progress, and soon came within the re-gion of the Banks of Newfoundland.

But here a stop was put upon our progress. On the second day after we arrived on this spot

On the second day after we arrived on this spot the wind died away altogether.

For an entire day we lay becalmed, with the ship tossing lazily over the huge ocean surges. All hands grew impatient. Our captain, who had been in high glee at our quick progress, and had expected by this time to be sailing in New York Harbor, now lost his patience, and spent the greater part of his time in cursing alternately the wind, the waves, the sky, the sun, the ship, and his own eves.

and his own eyes.

This did not help the matter at all, however. In fact, worse things than a mere calm were in store for us. During the night a fug came on, and when we arese in the morning it had closed in all around us with a density that I had never imagined before and have never since seen smooth see, and not a breath of wind. I blamed myself a thousand times for not going on to Liverpool and taking an ocean steamer

However, there was no resource but patience. Patient we had to be whether we liked it or not. In the middle of the following day, however, we felt a slight breath of air. It was the first breath of the glorious wind which now again was blowing favorably as before. Through the day it increased, blowing stronger every hour, until, when I went to bed, I retired with the pleasing thought that every hour carried me ten nearer to my home. .

I slept soundly.

But suddenly, at about three o'clock in the morning, as far as I can recollect, I was awaked by a sudden crash which sounded like thunin my half-aroused senses, and seemed to shake the ship to pieces.

In a moment I was out of my berth and up on the deck.

Great Heaven! what a spectacle there met my

All around was the blackness of darkness. The wind was howling flercely through the rig-ging. The sailors were running wildly to and

The captain was standing like a man paralysed, and shouting, while he wrung his hands, "We're lost! we're lost!"

I spoke not a word to any one, but quickly and sembly, as a cat, I leaped down from the quarter-deck on to the poop deck and rushed forward. It was so intensely dark and thick that I could see but little with distinctness. Yet a strange feeling of intense cold made itself evident even then to my senses.

I leaped upon the forecastle.

a sight of horror burst upon my view.

Then a sight of horror burst upon my view.

High before me, extending out of sight, was a vast precipice—appearing in the darkness to be of immeasurable proportions. And at this the thip was crashing and pounding. At each stroke of the ship huge masses came thundering down, and falling with deafening noise into the ocean.

What was it? Was it the rocky coast of Newfoundland? or was it a lonely rock in the middle

It was neither. I soon knew all.

It was a vast losberg! The ice itself was not colder than the chill that rushed through every nerve as this appalling thought burst upon my mind. Then in one moment an utter sense of ruin, of hopeless de-tion, took away my faculties.

But now there was no time to lose, nor was there time even to mourn. For the ship, acted upon by the long rolling waves of the Atlantic, was driving with fearful violence full against the enormous mass. I heard the crashing ice—I heard the shattering of her timbers—I heard the rush of the water as it poured into her.

The ship seemed alive, struggling like some drowning wretch to avert her fate. The groaning of her paring timbers sounded like a human sice—the voice of one in agony. A mighty wave of gigantic size now lifted the quivering mass high into the air. Retreating backward it hore its load away from the iceberg for some considerable distance, but only to hurl it back with more tremendous force. Returning with redoubled power it flung the ship headlong against the enormous mass. I, who was stand-ing on the prow, was thrown as though I had been a straw, off from the ship entirely. I fell prostrate and almost senseless upon the iceberg, on a declining surface along which I shot for a long distance, until I was stopped by an upright mass of ice.

All around me I beard a burst of fearful sound a sound of crashing timbers, falling masts, roaring waters, crumbling masses of ice, and howling winds, while high and distinct above them all arose a shrill wail of human agony which shall never be forgotten by ma, until ear is closed to all earthly sounds foreter.

Alone there in the thick darkstess, clinging to the mass of ice before me, with the tempest howling around, and the stuse of horror at the Misericorde !" fate of my companions, it was wonderful that through the accumulated terrors of that fearful moment my mind passed without failing beneath the unequaled trial.

I too exclaimed the last word of my companions, and sunk senseless upon the ice.

How long I lay I knew not. It could not have been less than an hour, but at last sense returned, and with it all the recollection of my

I rose to my feet painfully.

Misericorde !

was first aware of my own physical condi-Yet before doing any thing I cast a look tion.

The fog had cleared away altogether.

The broad expanse of ocean lay before me, its deep blue surface reflecting the gurggous rays of the sun which was just rising. There was not a breath of wind, and the see was as unruffied as a mountain lake.

I cast a glance downward to see if there was

Alas! not a single vestige could be seen. Not a plank—not even a chip floated upon the water. All had gone down. Not a wretch was saved. I only-I only had escaped to tell the

I was standing upon a broad surface of ice nearly half an acre in extent. It was smooth and slippery as glass. It was nearly level. I was at the lower end of it, and had been stopped by a high wall against which I had struck.

The iceberg was of the most colossal magnitude and grandeur. At the side of the slippery surface where I stood it went sheer down perpendicularly into the sea. But its edge extend-ed away on either side for an immense distance. Its edge ought to be called a cosst, so extraorhis ex hind me it ascended far into the air. at once or abruptly, but by a series of terraces, at once or attraptly, but by a series of terraces, until at last far away its lofty summit seemed to touch the clouds. The terraces were regular and even. At intervals along the ascent arcee towers and pinnacles, and upon the topmost point a vast spire of glittering ice shot up straight into the skies for at least a hundred feet. Seen from a distance it looked like some glorious city, some magnificent capital such as we read the fantastic story of the Arabian dreamer.

Alas! to me there was no time for admiration er. All this I took in at a glance. I quickly returned to myself.

I was chilled through. Fortunately I had slept that night with my clothes on, or it would have been worse with me. As it was, my hands and feet were perfectly numb.

I rubbed my hands violently, struck and beat them, and at the same time ran up and down stamping my feet. The violent exertion brought warmth into my system. My hands began at length to have something like sensation, but my est were frosen.

I began to think now with greater despair upon my situation.

There was no hope for me!

I could see all around. Not a sail was upon the vast expanse. Yet on one side I could not see. It was hidden by the lofty island of ice.

se. It was hidden by the lotty assume of the last a moment my resolution was formed.

"I will go there," I said, aloud. "I can but it. To stay here will be to perish slowly. To said, a chance for life. Morego there will be to seek a chance for life. More-over, it will distract my thoughts, which here will drive me mad. I will go."

And go I did. I set forth boldly. I mounted terrace after terrace as I went along on a journey such as no mortal man has ever undertaken. Buoyed up by the dear hope of life, I went brave-

Deep chasms intercepted me-awful precipices rose before me. My footstep disturbed immense masses of ice, which came crashing down, yet still I went on.

What will not hope make a man do?

On! on! Nearer! nearer! And now the summit is near-nearer-nearer. It is gained! There, at last, I stand at the foot of the lofty pinnacle alone on my vast iceberg!
Alone! Oh, what is that upon the ocean?

Never before was the presence of man so dear to his despairing fellow.

There, not a mile from me, was the form of an ocean steamer, slowly passing by on the course toward America. I saw the tumult, the hurry, the thronging, the confusion.

The steamer hove to. A boat was let down and in a few minutes was within hail. I pointed back to the other side of the island.

Back again I went-rejoicing-praying-sing-ng with joy and gratitude. I was saved! A jump into the sea, and I was caught up and taken into the boat and into the steamer.

I am a saved man—and an artificial foot which I now am compelled to use ever reminds me of

LOST.

Tax moon comes out and glimmers, The stars like diamonds gleam, And long green boughs are waving O'er a pleasant mountain stream.

And my thoughts travel backward Into the long dead years, And your face comes before me, Seen through a mist of tears.

We met-we loved-we parted, The story ever new; We lived—we hoped—we waited, And so the long years grew.

A vast sea rolls between us, A gulf that time has made, New habits grow upon us, Old beauties faint and fade.

Take one last look behind you, Into the vale of years, Does my face come before you, Seen through a mist of tears?

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Usuase there is some change in the law by which the confinement of persons in Insune Asylums cared, almost any one is liable to be adroitly captured exerci, almost any one is liable to be advectly captured, and unsuspectingly decoyed into closer quarters than are desirable for any who are not either morally or mentally insens. Instances have been recently brought to light in this city and in Hartford—indeed, cases are frequently occurring which show clearly that the present law affords the opportunity, at least, of fearful wrong-doing. Ambition, revenge, and co-pidity may find in it an easy method of putting out pidity may find in it an easy method of pritting out of the way one whose presence is offensive or unde-sirable. Any little eccentricity may be brought as proof of unsound mind, or, if that be wanting, two physicians can easily be found who will pocket a bribe and testify as is required. Charles Reade does not portray too vividity in the "Hard Cash" the hor-rors which a same person might experience if confined in a "retreat" for luxuitor.

Austrian scenery has received a new addition in the Ansirian scenery has received a new addition in the shape of a lake of pure gator which suddenly made its appearance one day last Angais, where a few seconds before a field of oats had been growing. The land full in with a crash like thunder. All sorts of theories have been invented to explain this phenomenon. This event transpired in the village of Moll, near Steyer, in Upper Austria.

The Sheffield Scientific School at Yale College has received a large addition of physical and mechanical appliances, recently purchased in Europe by Profesat the Scientific School is this year larger than ever

From Salt Lake City there comes a story or an at-From Nam Lane City there comes a story of an ac-tempt made by one of Brigham Young's daughters to clope with her "Gentile" lover. She was discovered, however, and carried back to the king's castle and locked up to prevent further mischief.

Statistics show that there have been forty-one fatal cases of hydrophobia to New York city within the last eighteen years. The months in which these cases have occurred indicate clearly that the majority of them have not occurred in what are called "dog-days." Facts confirm the opinion that dogs are not driven med by bot weather.

It is said that many quarrels which occur between brothers, sisters, bushands and wives, and other pe sons who habitually room together, may be referre to electrical changes in their nervous systems cons quent upon lodging together night after night. There is nothing that will so derange the nervous system of a person who is eliminative in nervous force as to He all night in bed with another person who is ab-sorbent in pervous force. The absorber will go to sleep and rest well, while the eliminator will be tem-bling and tossing, restless and nervous, and wake up in the morning fretful, pervish, fault-finding, and disA Yankee, who doubtless spends his evenings medi-tating by the kitchen hearth, has discovered that the pitch of the singing of crickets depends directly on the temperature. Can not crickets be utilised, and barometers he superseded?

M. Sacrelmey, the patentee of a new kind of coffin made of paper, seems to believe to the adaptability of paper to all the needs of civilized life. His object to introducing it into the manufacture of coffins is to obtain a perfectly air-tight, water-proof, and damp defying shell, which nothing from without can pene defying shell, which nothing from without can pene-trate, and nothing from within can escape. The Zo-pless paper coffin, in which these conditions are said to be fulfilled, is a solid looking structure, very much resembling in build and thickness the ancient mummy cases preserved in the British Museum.

An English magazine, waiving the question of "woman's rights," discourses on "ladies' privileges," bidding the fair sex to consider how far they surpass the sterner sex in all the heaveries of apparel; to recall their partners, waiking attendant at their sides, like ravens or jackdaws, in sober black, while they appear in the fabrics of Persia, diffusing the perfumes of Araby, and despoiling the very relabove of its hoss for the arabaneous of at their charms. It hids then for the enhancement of their charms. It bids them for the enhancement of their charms. It bids them reflect how differently all this is arranged in the world of birds, beasts, and savages. The tiger in the jungle rejoices in a spotted splendor far greater in beauty than that which Nature has bestowed upon his sponse. The lion only wears the mane. The peacets spreads his gorgeous plumage in the sun, while it has pleased Providence to make the peaken a very so-so affair. And among the less civilized races, from the feathered and registralized garages in his wirethe feathered and paint-danked savage in his wig-warn to the Grand Turk on his throne, it is the lords of creation for whom the tailors make the rich and showy robes. And contrasting husbands, fathers, and brothers with wives, mothers, and sisters, the perti-nent query is made, "Is all this to stand for no-thing?"

A new method of curing hay has lately been tried in England, and promises to succeed so well that the sun's mission in hay-making will not be so absolutely aspential as it has been in past times. By this method the grass is taken from the field as fast as it is mown, and subjected to a blast of but air for about two minutes, when it is perfectly cared, and fit to be stowed away. This hot air is obtained from a furnous and is drawn out two mans of a receiving the second of the seco furnace, and is drawn out by means of a revolving fan

Can any thing be sadder than the last words of a little boy who intely died from injuries received by being run over in the street: "Don't whip me, father; I'll never do so again?" He was only six years old.

Chicago has a couple who met for the first time on Priday, courted Saturday, were "engaged" on fun-day, and married on Monday. The discree is expect-ed soon.

Boston has recently organized a National Musical Association, the objects of the society being to elevate the people to an appreciation of music, to improve the social standing of professional musicians, and both to create and supply a demand for educated musician and good music. This enterprise grows out of the Peace Jubilce.

The "Aged Brotherhood" of Portland has been very spec of 66 and 91. It is found impossible to organity an "Aged Sisterbook," as there is great difficulty as finding any woman & years of age.

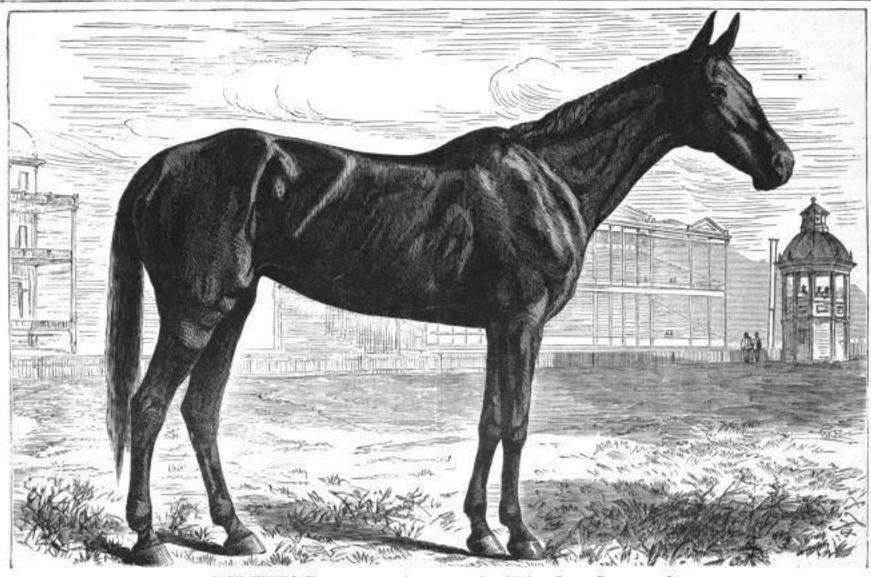

Between two of the highest of the Adirondack Mountains, at the bottom of a crevice a thousand feet or more in depth, precipice-walled and gloomy, itse Avalanche Lake, 2000 feet above tide-level. It is sur-mised by many that this lake and Lake Colden, at the south of it, were cope one sheet, or at least connected by a deep ratine. A slide, rolled down from Mount Colden, closed the channel, throw back the waters, and the lake, avalanche born, was formed.- Last Anand the lake, available form, was formed. Last An-guest a furious storm of wind and rails occurred among the Adirondacks. A visitor reports that during that storm a mighty available rushed down the side of Mount Coiden, falling into Lake Awahnche, and lit-erally making a dam across it, and dividing it into erally making a cam across it, and dividing it into two lakes. Amidst many difficulties he visited the wild spot soon after this occurrence, while yet the dark waters were muddy from recent disturbances, and the lake strown with floating timber. It is predicted that after a few more mountain slides Ava-lanche Lake will become Avalanche Pass.

The latest discovery of science may be called "An The latest discovery of science may be called "An Obstacle to Longwitz beyond Seventy," which has been revealed to a learned Englishman, being nothing more or less than a drasping or pendent epiglottis! A paper was recently read before the British Association, stating that from a careful examination of five thousand throats, it had been ascertained that in all thousand throats, it had been ascertained that in an persons over seventy the position of the epiglottis was vertical, without a single exception. Consequently it is argued that those who are so unfortunate as to possess a pendent epiglottis will not live beyond sevensens a pendent epiglottis will not live beyond seven-ty. This new discovery may be important to life in-surance companies. But guery, Who can tell but a law of nature may yet be revealed whareby pendent epiglottises may erect themselves after the age of sev-enty? The pendents need not be distressed.

Rev. Dr. E. O. Haven, recently inaugurated Presimarked in his address upon that occasion : "I can not doubt that she (woman) has an equal claim with man to all the advantages of our universities. Universities can not be duplicated for the accommodation of the sexes any more than churches. There is no sex in learning more than in religion. It is no more proper for man to determine this question for woman than it ould be for woman to determine it for man. Belegnineteenth century shall close, all the best universities in Europe and America will educate both men and

Buffalo proposes to have a public park. The ground which will be devoted to this purpose possesses unusual natural advantages. Trees are slready growing upon it, a creek flows through it, and at least two mineral springs contribute value to the proposed site

The Metropolitan Tabernacie in London Spurgeon preaches, is a large and rather elegant edifire, with a portico and six massive Doric columns in front. The house seats five or six thousand, though, including those who stand, the audience usualty is not less than seven thousand. Two deep galleries go jected from the front of the lower gallery, is occupied by the speaker, who simply has before him a small table upon which are a Bible and hymn-book.

"LADY THORN."-(PHOTOGRAPHED BY SCHREIBER AND SON, 818 ARCH STREET, PHILADELPHIA.)

FOUR FAMOUS TROTTERS.

WE give on this and the next page four illustrations representing some of the most famous trotters that have recently distinguished themselver on the American turf.

"Lady Thorne" is owned by James D. M'Maxx and Welch; her sire was Mambrino Chief; her dam, Gano. Her best time in a one-mile heat has been 2 minutes 19% seconds.

"Goldsmith Maid," owned by Jackman and Donle, was sired by Edsall's Hambletonian; her dam was Old Abdallah. Her best time in a one-mile heat has been 2 minutes 19‡ seca one-mile heat has been 2 minutes 194 seccends.

"The American Girl," owned by William Lovell, was sired by Cassins M. Clay, Jun.; dam's pedigree unknown. Her best time in a one-mile heat has been 2 minutes 19 seconds.

"The Mountain Boy," owned by Commodore VANDERBILT, was sired by Major Winfield; dam unknown. His best time in a one-mile heat has been 2 minutes 21 seconds. He is said to lack wind, and not to be good for a long heat, but is admitted to have the best trotting movement ever witnessed on the course.

The three trotters first mentioned contested the course at Prospect Park Pair Grounds, Long Island, September 28. The following account of this affair was given in Wilker's Spirit of the Times for September 4:

"The great trot on Saturday last, between three of the best mares that ever came together on the turf, was one of the finest ever witnessed any where, and the fastest that was ever seen on the Island, if we except the three bests of Dexter at the Fashion against Ethan Allen and his running mate.....

"First Heat.—American Girl had the pole, and "First Heat.—American Girl had the pole, and Lady Thorn was second in position. After several effects, in one or two of which Goldsmith Maid broke near the score, they got the word, American Girl having a trifle the best of it. On the turn American Girl led a length, and Lady Thorn was second. At the quarter, in 364s., Lady Thorn was at the girths of American Girl, and Goldsmith Maid two lengths behind. The wind was now behind them, and they squared

"GOLDSMITH MAID."-[PHOTOGRAPHED BY SCHREIBER AND SON, PHILADELPHIA.]

"THE AMERICAN GIRL."-[PROTOGRAPHED BY SCHERIBER AND SON.]

away fast and free. Half-way along between the quarter and the half mile Goldsmith Maid broke. The others kept up at the rate, and at the half mile American Girl and the Lady were head and head. Time, 1m. 9½s.; the second quarter having been trotted in 33½s. On the lower turn the old mare showed a trifle in the lead. Goldsmith Maid broke again. At the three-quarter pole Lady Thorn led American Girl only a neck.

The pace was strong and the interest intense. The two big mares awang around the last turn close together, and came on in a whirl of dust. In the straight bit Danners laid on the whip, but it was no go, and the long, low stroke of the Lady cut the Girl down, although she had the inside, and beat her by a neck, in 2m. 20§s. Goldsmith Maid was two lengths behind them, and her backers began to look blue.

"Second Heat.—A strong friend of the old mare's and of Dax Prupus's carried the news over to his bedside, whereupon he said, 'The track is smooth and hard; she's fit to trot for a man's life, and they won't beat her!' So thought the public, for she was made the favorite at two to one against the field. Six times they scored before they got the word, American Girl having become somewhat unsteady. The old mare moved like clock-work, never expended an ounce of exertion that was not required, and never seemed to pull a pound. At the start American Girl had a trifle the worst of it. On the turn Thorn led a length, and Goldsmith Maid was two before American Girl. There was a break on the part of the Maid, and she took a little gallop. At the quarter in 36s, she was at Lady Thorn's haunches, and American Girl was three lengths behind. Again it was hot work in the second quarter, and the fine old mare again trotted it in 33 s. Before they reached the half-mile pole she and Goldsmith Maid were neck and mile pole she and Goldsmith Maid were neck and neck, but at the zole the Lady led half a length—time, Im. 9js.—American Giel fire lengths behind. The work was still very strong and close between Thorn and Goldsmith Maid. The latter nearly overhauled the old mare, but again the long, steady stroke got her into difficulty, and carried her to a break. Still she came again, and at the three-quarter pole the Lady led but a neck. But now the strong, staying power of and at the three-quarter pole the Lady led but a neck. But now the strong, staying power of old Thorn began to tell a tale. Goldsmith Maid broke again at the head of the short homestretch, and the Lady won it by six lengths. American Girl was six lengths behind the Maid. Time, 2m. 20js. When Mr. M'Mann and the old mare passed by the stand they were saluted with much elapping of hands and cheering.

"THE MOUNTAIN BOY."-[PHOTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD.]

"Third Hest.—Any odds on Thorn, and no

"Third Hest.—Any odds on Thorn, and no takers. At the start American Girl led a trifle, and Lady Thorn went on second. Donne tried to snatch the pole from behind; but "Jeems" knew just about where a sulky could go and where it couldn't. On the turn the old mare took a slight lead, and at the quarter in 36s, she and American Girl were nock and neck, and Goldsmith Maid a length behind. The pace Goldsmith Maid a length beams. are re-was very hot again in the second quarter. It was trotted in 33½s, and American Girl led a length at the half-mile in 1m. 9½s, and Gold-man Maid a length behind Thorn. The latter took the lend upon the turn; but the race was so close that they were as near together, all three, as might be, at the three-quarter pole. Amer-ican Girl now made a skip, and the long, steady stroke of the old mare began to mow them down. She lasted the longest, as before, and coming clean away from them at last, won it by four lengths in 2m. 201s. DOMLE saved a little for a last effort, and beat American Girl two lengths for the second place."

SUMMARY. PROSPECT PARK FAIR GROUNDS, L. I., August 28.—Purse $4000—$2500 to the first, $1000 to the second, and $500 to the third

NEW YORK GOLD MARKET PLUCTUATIONS. FROM 10 A.M. TO 3 P.M., SEPT. 24, 1869.

10.00	150	12.22	33
10.05	100%	19.85	186
10.09	(150%	19.38	185
10.55	150%	19.36	136
10.66	15056		135
10.04	151.54	28.37	134
11.00	1550		135
THE STATE OF THE STATE OF	6 500%	12.38	135
11.01	2 356	32.59	135
4	135%	12.53	136
11.09	155.36	12.54	135%
11.07	350.54	19.55	135
11.08	385%	6. 1.00	136
11.10	100	1.00	135
11.15	110%	1.06	136
11.16	152.56	1.12	155
11.19	160	1.50	15436
11.20	160%	2.00	135
11.31	180%	2.10	15436
11.55	160	A CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF TH	134
11.80	162	2.11	188
	1 161	1	104
11.34	1 100	9.19	133
11.35	161	1	DESK.
11.36	6 502	2.13	133
240TZ8001000	(102%	0.000	134
11.40	162	2.14	122%
11.48	f 141		181%
217.00	6 500	2.14	13034
33.58	150		150.56
31,09	1 161	1	13834
11.53	100	2.16	120%
	4 150	2.13	Taxin
11.54	1155	9.10	1275
	1 145	9.25	TOTAL .
11.56	1 140	2.56	13.5
11.58		2.80	1335
11.10		2.81	333
12.00			13150
12.07		2.35	1333/6
12.09		9 24 5	124%
72.09	1 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2 2	9.36	1245
17.10	F 27.79		151
15.55		2.45	13432
16.19		1.50	174
	1 156	9.53	12336
12.20	1 130	9.88	127.5
12.50	134	8.60	12335
	0.366

COMMERCE.

CLOSER.

than a reciprocal communication, intercourse, or correspondence between man and man; but usu ally it is restricted to mercantile negotiations between individuals or companies of different na

Trade, properly speaking, is that traffic which is limited to one particular county or town, but in familiar conversation it is frequently used as emonymous with commerce; as the West India trade, the African trade, etc.

Trade begun when neu, becoming civilized, associated in large communities, and it was found necessary for each individual to follow but one employment—and the superfluity of the produce of his labor be exchanged for that of his neighbor; this was called bester.

But it was soon found inconvenient, because it frequently happened that one person wanted the commodity of another, without having any toing to give in return that could render exchange de-

This inconvenience was remedied by taking the precious metals, gold and silver, in exchange for every kind of commedity that could administer to the real or imaginary wants of mankind.

They were made the medians of exchange at first by weight; but, as weighing them afforded no security against the debasement of their quality, they were coined into money, bearing a par-ticular stamp, significant of the weight and qual-ity of the metal contained in the piece—to counterfeit which has always been considered a capi-

In the course of time, as the wants of men increased with the refinement of their manners, they found the produce of a single country insuf-ficient to supply them; they therefore explored distant regions, bringing home such produce as they could not find in their native land, and exporting in return their own superfluities. Such is the origin of commerce.

Trade and commerce may be, with propriety, considered as synonymous; according to present usage the latter may be called foreign, the former domestic commerce,

So great is the advantage arising from an ea ly attainment of commercial knowledge that thousands, who have taken pains to acquire it, have risen to opulence, and many have in conse-quence discharged some of the highest offices in the state.

The Egyptians were the people who first ex-tended their commerce to foreign lands, by the encouragement they gave to navigation. They tended their commerce to foreign stends, by the concouragement they gave to navigation. They were a luxurious but prudent people; for while they issimilized themselves in the costly productions of the East, their industry enabled them to export so many of their own as amply to repay the balance greatly in their favor.

What rendered Egypt peculiarly favorable to commerce was the conventions unit of its in-commerce was the enterprising spirit of its in-habitants, and subordinate to this was the level nature of the country, which afforded a facility of making numerous canals, thus rendering internal intercourse easy.

When every other advantage is equal, commerce will flourish most in those countries that exercise the most sagacity and enterprise in fa-

The Phoenicians next, possessing only a nar-row slip of land on the coast of Asia, raised themselves by their extensive commercial transactions to a high consideration among nations; they are said to be the first people who reduced the com-mercial art to a fixed system.

After the destruction of Tyre, the capital of Phoenicia, by Alexander the Great, Carthage be-came the chief seat of commerce; and so suc-cessful did it prove, that in a comparatively short period that famous city contained no less than period that famous city contained no less than 700,000 inhabitants; and above three hundred cities of Africa were dependent on her, and she had colonies in Spain, Sicily, and Sardinia. After the destruction of Carthage, the city of Rome became mistress of the profitable trade of the East Indies. This, however, introduced a refined luxury and elegance, which, while it brought the fine arts to the highest degree of perfection, was carried to such an excess, as finally to cause the destruction, not only of commerce, but of the state itself.

We derive from the Romans the insurance or assurance of ships and merchandise from losses nt sea. This has been adopted and considerably improved by modern nations.

The city of Bruges next, in the Austrian Netherlands, became from its situation the emporium of Europe; but the riches acquired by the inhabitants rendered them idle, inattentive, and negligent. They became proud, and despised that commerce which had been the chief source of their opulence. In a short time they felt the ill effects of their folly, and Bruges declined as rapidly as it rose.

Antwerp next became a celebrated trading city, and its inhabitants possessing those qualities so deficient in the former city a permanent state of prosperity might reasonably have been expected. But that tyrannical bigot, Philip II. of Spain, commencing a religious persecution in the Netherlands, and introducing the hated inquisition, thousands of artists, manufacturers, and merchants took refuge in foreign countries, and thus the sun of Antworp's prosperity set in darkness. An example of the intimate connection there is between civil liberty and commercial freedom and national prosperity; without the former, the latter can not reasonably be expected. England being at that time governed by a princess (Queen Elizabeth), who powerfully sup-ported heretical opinion, great numbers of these refugees settled in her dominions; there they prospered highly, and laid the foundation of that commercial greatness which England has since attained, in spite of Government attempts to exploit industry for the benefit of nations.

The commerce of most of the ancient nations was principally that of fruits, salt, skins, rice, sugar, cassia, balm, perfume, spices, precious metals, precious stones, and flax and wool. compared with the present day commerce in ancient days was small, for so late as the year 1612, the exports from England to all the world amount-ed to only £2,000,640. And this was some time she had founded colonies in America. 1866 English exports were declared to be of the value of £188,917,536, and the imports in pro-portion. True, they have fallen something since, on account of the general depression of the last two years.

We may well pouse a moment to inquire where are the notions whence commerce flourished of Where is ancient Alexandria, Carthage, Imperial Rome, Venice, Pisa, Genoa? are the confederated maritime cities-the Hanse Towns, once the mistresses of commerce? Where are the discoverers of the passage to India by the t spe, and the first settlers in America, the Portuguese, Spaniards, and the Dutch? Alas! their spirit, presperity, and glory departed to the Anglo-Saxon race, and there it yet remains. And the English Brights, Goldwin Smiths, and Macaulays, declare that the United States will yet become the grower, manufacturer, and carrier of the world, and that while the English are only distributors of the treasures of others, America will be the distributor of her own.]

COAL IN INDIA.

The great want in India has been coal. For some years past it has been found in some parts of Bengel and the Central provinces, but with very little effect compared with the demand for the mineral; and even the local railways, when English coal is scarce, have to be fed with wood, to the danger of the trains and their contents, which have suffered severely at times through accidents by fire. But a new discovery has been made in this direction, promising most important results. An extensive field of useful coal has, we are informed, been found in the sandstone dis tricts of Chanda, in the Central provinces, the chief town of which is about eighty miles from Nag-pore. The discovery is due to Mr. Lucie Smith, the deputy commissioner of the district, who folthe deputy commissioner of the district, who fol-lowed up the trace from a slaty coal picked out of the bed of the Wurdah, and the search has been continued, it appears, by various scientific gentlemen ever since 1865. Conclusions have been arrived at with great caution; but at length a report has been made to the Supreme Government of so encouraging a character as to warrant more active and extended operations.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF CELEBRATED HORSES. We have excellent instantaneous photographs of Lady Thorn, Dexter and Lady Thorn grouped, Mountain Boy, Confidence, Bradly, and Geo. Palmer. Sent by mail on receipt of twenty-five cents each, or six for one dellar.

Receiveon, 839 Broadway.

ROCKWOOD, 839 Broadway.

Taxa Aven's Prins for all the purposes of a purga-tive, for Constipation, Indignation, Headache, and Liver Complaint. By universal accord they are the best of all purgatives for family use.—(Cres.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, PRECKLES, and TAN from the face, use PERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Pesar, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Druggists.

Now ready-october number

HITCHCOCK'S

New Monthly Magazine.

CONTENTS: CONTENTS:

MADAME MALIBRAN. Potest and Biography.
LEONARDO DA VINCL. Potrait and Biography.
MARRIAGE IN GREAT BUITAIN.
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS. Editorial.
ART NOTES.
DRAMATIC NOTES.
MUSICAL NOTES.
POETRY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSIC.
THE STARRY FLAG. For Voice and Plana.
MY SOUL TO GOD, MY HEART TO THEE. Do.
RISS WAITZ. Plana.
RIT FLANAGAN'S FAIRY. Voice and Plana.

Specimen copies mailed free, on receipt of price, 25 onts each. Sold by Booksellers and Newsdealers.

Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 34 Beskman St., New York.

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

COIN-SILVER HUNYING CASES, $31; Extra Pine, $30. SOLID GOLD

Bunting-Case Full-Jeweled Lever Watches, $40, $40;

Extra, $00. Ladies' Size, $26; Extra, $40; Enameled, $46.

COIN-SILVER HUNTERO CARRA, $14; Extra Quality, $16. AMERICAN MOVEMENTS, Bvery variety. Lavser, Lowser Pances.

And Watches of every description, in fine Gold and Silver Cases, at Importers' Raice. Goods sent by Express, to be paid for only after they have been received, examined, and accepted.

S. H. MOORE & CO., Importers, Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y.

Pull Descriptive Price-Lists sent free.

NEW INDESPENSABLE HAND BOOK. HOW TO WRITE, HOW TO BEHAVE, HOW TO TALE, HOW TO DO BUSINESS. ome volume of 600 pages. Sent by first

Design to the state of the part of the par

FURNITURE.

We invite buyers to visit our extensive warerooms and examine our large stock of Sultes for Pariets, Chambers, Dining-Rooms, Libraries, &c. Manufactured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every particular.

With unequaled facilities and a ripe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promise too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be bestern in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO., Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers and Dealers, 75 and 21 Spring Street, corner Grosby.

WANTED, live men, who can give security for goods received, to distribute "packages" of "Wonder of the World" among families, and collect the same. Address J. C. Till'ON, Pubbargh, Pa.

THOY PENALE SEMINARY.—This lo-ter to years' successful operation. For circulars, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Troy, N. Y.

MAPLE LEAVES, colarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the chespert Magarite published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1810 for 10 cents. Send in your subscriptions

O. A. ROGRBACH, 192 Nassau St., New York.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE,

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK.

The next Academical Year will begin on the law Montay (s(h) of October. The students of the College will attend for matriculation on that day at $2, A.M.

Candidates for the Faragram Class will present themselves for examination on Friday, Oct. 1st, and sturchey, Oct. 2d, at 10 A.M.

Applicants for admission to advanced classes, and those required to be re-examined, will present themselves on Saturday, Oct. 2d, at the same hour.

For Catalogous and farther information, apply to REV. Dr. BARNARD, President, or to HENRY DRISSLER, Senior Professor and Acting as President.

New Trotting Prints.

"SCORING — COMING UP FOR THE WORD."
Little Fred, Needle Gun, Jeszie Wales, Beile Brocklyn, Lady Waltman, and Old Ful, in their great tred over the Prospect Park Course, May 29, 1889. Size, 55 x 33 inches. Price, 83.

"THE BRUSH ON THE HOMESTRETCH."
American Gerl, Goldsmith Maid, Locy, Bashaw Jr.,
Rhode Island, and Geo. Wilkes, in their great tret for $2000 pure. Prospect Park Fair Ground, May 39, 1806. Size, 35 x 30 Inches. Prios, $3.

"WON BY A NECK." Lady Thorn, American Girl, and Goldsmith Maid trotting their great race on the Prospect Park Fair Grounds, August, 1809, Lady Thorn winning in three heats, in 2005, 2005, 2005, Size, 55 x 33 toches. Price, 55.

"GOING TO THE TROT." Size, 26 x 25 inches. Price, $4. Showing the "trotting public" going down to the track; passing Jao. I. Snedker's.

"COMING FROM THE TROT." Size, 56 x 35 inches. Price, 54. A capital picture, representing the "aports" on the way home.

"TROTTING CRACKS AT THE FORGE." Size, 30 x 35 inches. Price, $4. A busy scene at a black-enith-shop. Lady Thorne and Gray Eagle occupying the foreground, while Mountain Boy is led in by a

"A STOPPING-PLACE ON THE ROAD." Sire, 25 x 85 inches. Price, $4. Scene under the shed at one of the well-known baunts of the habitues of Harlem Lane, on a summer afternoon.

"TROTTING CRACKS AT HOME." Size, 25 x 16 nucles. Price, 36. The interior of a model stab a. The horses in the foreground are the famous Aubu m lorse, Feeriess, and Dexter.

Any of the prints will be carefully enveloped, and sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Please state that you saw this advertisement in Harper's Weekly. Address CURRIER & IVER, Publishers, 198 Nassan St., New York.

GREAT ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC TEA COMPANY.

NO. 8 CHURCH STREET,
P.O. Box 5505. New York City.
An organization of capitalists for the purpose of importing Tens and distributing them to Merchants throughout the country at Importers' prices. Established 1309. Seed for Price-Lost.

TYLER WATER WHEELS. Over 8000 In operation. Address the manufacturers, Sullivan Machine Co., Clarement, N. H., for reduced price-list.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

HARPER'S MAGAZINES, One Year $4 00 HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year..... 4 00 Harper's Baran, One Year..... 4 00

HANFER'S MAGAZINE, HANFER'S WHEELY, and HANFER'S BARRA, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

two for $1.00.

An Estra Copy of either the Managema, Werner, or Baran will be supplied gradle for every Club of Five Someonianum at $4.00 cach, in one resultance; or, Six Oppies for $20.00, seithout entre copy.

The Fontage within the United States is for the Managema 24 cents a year, for the Wasser or Baran 20 cents a year, payable yearly, cernly-parity, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with 24 cents additional for the Managema, or 30 cents for the Wasser or Baran, to prepay the United States postage.

Me cents additional for the Mananum, or No cents for the Wexerty or Baran, to prepay the United States postage.

The Volumes of the Madazors commence with the Numbers for June and December of sath year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wexery and Baran commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. Subscribers to the Mananum, Wexerty, or Baran will find on each wrapper the Formber with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It his not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In constiting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Braft payable to the order of Harrens & Browness is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be lest or stolen, it can be removed without lose to the sender.

In ordering the Manazon, the Wexer, or the Basan, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

EF A See Story by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "So Name," "Armodole," and "The Monatons) will be commenced in Hauren's Wester, early in November. New subscribers will be furnished with the Wester from the commencement of this story to the end of 1870 for $4 00.

Terms FOR ADVENTISING IN HARPE'S PERSONNALS

Harper's Manarine — Whole Page, 2020; Bail Page, 2020; Quarter Page, 2020—each insertion; or, for a less space, 20 30 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, 21 to per Line; Outside Page, 22 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's Barar. -$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 50 per Line-each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS Address

FRANKLIN SQUARE, New, York.

Digitized by Google

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE POR THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY, THE PROPER'S PAYORITE SOURSAL.

The Most Interesting Stories are always to be found to the

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

At present there are SIX GREAT STORIES running through its columns; and at least

One Story is Bogun every Month.

New subscribers are thus sure of having the com-mencement of a new continued story, no matter when they subscribe for the

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

Each number of the NEW YORK WERELY contains several Beautiful Illustrations, Double the Amount of Reading-Matter of any paper of its class, and the Sketches, Short Stories, Posms, &c., are by the ablest writers of America and Europe. The

NEW YORK WEEKLY

does not confine its usefulness to amusement, but publishes a great quantity of really instructive Mat-ter, in the most condensed form. The

N.Y. Weekly Departments have attained a high reputation from their brevity, excellence, and correctness.

The Personal Parameters are made up of the concentrated wit and humor of many minds.

The Knowledge Box is confined to useful infor-ration on all manner of subjects.

Tax News I was give in the fewest words the most notable doings all over the world.

THE GOSSEP WITH COMERNTONDENTS CONTAINS ADswers to inquirers upon all imaginable subjects.

AN UNRIVALED LITERARY PAPER IS THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

Each issue contains from EIGHT to TEN STORIES and SKETCHES, and HALF A DOZEN POEMS, in ADDITION to the SIX SERIAL STORIES and the VARIED DEPARTMENTS.

The Terms to Subscribers:

One Year—Single copy Three Dollars.

Four copies ($2.50 each) Ten Dollars.

Bight copies Twenty Dollars.

Those sending $50 for a club of Right, all sent at one time, will be suitited to a copy sum. Getters up of clubs can afterward add single copies at $2.50 cach. STREET & SMITH, Proprietors,

No. 55 Fulton St., N. Y.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

PARIS AND VIENNA

NOVELTIES. WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-rieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

to Sign of Gold Telegraph. 41

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Bronze is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been deceived. It has even judges have been deceived. It has even judges have been deceived. It has even judges have been tide men, and has not only exilted forth the enlogious of the press in consequence of the peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Expection.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all those goods are massafactured in my own factory. I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time keepers.

Paries ruses $15 to $50.

Parther details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent postnaid, on demand.

Further details will be found in my passpars, where the sent, postpaid, on demand. Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges. Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 tirsen-licenses.
Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable associament, very low for case.

Apples—including most magnificent stock of year-lings; also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duchess, Oldenberg, Hisloy, Transcendent, and other Crab Apples—1, 2, and 3 year.

Freedom, Para, Cherrias, Fluesa, Quinous, Grapes, Freedom, Plants, Rose, own roots: Thips, Hyacinths, Narciama, Iris, Specill, Likies, Speciause, Awarden, & Alice superior colored plates of Fruits and Fluwers.

Bend 10 cents for Catalogues.

F. K. PHENIX, Bioconington, McLess Co., Ill.

F. K. PHENIX, Bloomington, McLess Co., Ill.

THE MYSTERIOUS PUZZLE, A Great Sensetion. Sent for 10 cants. WALTER HOLT, 106 Names St., N. Y. Box 1888.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

Gold Watches and Jewelry THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY

GENUINE OROIDE. The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones costing $150. Those of cutra fine fin-h, at $50, are not surpassed by $500 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, instantion of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pine, Ear-Rings, Sicere-Buttons, Lockets, Stads, Finger-Rings, Heacelets, Charms, Odd-Fellow and Masonic Fins, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no agents; orders, therefore, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our entry owner is No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up stairs), New York.—C. E. COLLINS & CO.

ALL SUFFERERS _ Pulmonary Diseases, Nersons Debility, Fo Featments, or Circois Disorders of any nature, and all whom Fital Feroes are

MERVOUS TONIC AND INVIGORATOR, SHOULD IMMEDIATELY USE WINCERSTER'S

HYPOPHOSPHITES,

THE SPECIFIC REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION!

iervous and General Bebility, Bron-chitis, Asthma, Neuralgia, Paralysis, Wasting, Scrothla, Loss of Strength, Flosh, and Appetite, Byspepsia and Indigestion, Impurities of the Blood, Female Complaints, Chronic Diarrhesa, Mala-dies of Children, &c.

PROPESSIONAL TESTIMONY.

For sale by Druggists and Desires in every city, town, and village throughout the United States and Canadas. Prices: -$1 and $2 per bottle. Three large, or Six small, $5.

J. WINCHESTER & CO., Proprietors, 36 John St., New York,

This is acknowledged to be the best saw and in more general use than any other in the Cuited States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 30 BEERMAN ST., N. Y.

JUST PUBLISHED: THE

GREAT NATIONAL SONG,

"The Starry Flag."

Written by H. Millarn, Req. the Author of "Failing," "Fine Camerica," Re., &c.

This bestolid gen is arranged for the Pisno, and svery lover of his country should have a copy. Printed on beary Music Paper. Price 10 cents. It is also contained in the October Number of HITCHOCK'S
NEW MONTFILY MAGAZINE (now ready). Price,
26 cents. Mailed free on receipt of price.
Address BENJ W. HITCHCOCK,
Publisher, M. Beckman St., New York,
N. B.—Sold by all Booksellers and Newsdealers.

"WE CAN'T DO WITHOUT IT," SO SAY THE SUSSCIERS TO THE

NEW Y RK OBSERVER. $4.50 PER ANNUM.

SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., 37 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

SWEET QUININE.

Sweep Quintex is marvanted equal—dose for dose—to the sul-phate (bitter) Quintine, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA is Order Periods of the stakening and poisoned peoperates. It is the most perfect Assorter and Scientific Orland Sold by dengina, prescribed by best physicians. STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemists, New York.

5000 Hook AGENTS WANTED for frated Editions of the

LIFE OF CHRIST and BUNYAN'S
PILGRIES PROGRESS.
The works are now ready for delivery. Address for Catalogue of the best-selling Subscription-Books published.

W. W. HARDING, Philidelphia, Publisher of Harding's Pictorial Family Bibles,

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing fall information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., melled free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, backlers, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 52 Marray Street, New York.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored bair or beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb seat by mall for $1. For sale by Merchanta & Bruggiets generally. Address Magic Comb Co., Springfield, Mass.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS OF

P. T. BARNUM WHITTEN BY HIMSELF, IN ONE LABOR OCTAVO VOLUME-PRABLE SEE PROPER IN RESCRIPTION AND GREEKEN.

33 Elegant Pull-Page Engravings

It embraces FORTY YRARS' RECOLLECTIONS of his Busy Life, as a Merchant, Manager, Banker, Lecturer, and Showman, and gives accounts of his Imprison-ment, his Fallure, his Successful European Tours, and important Historical and Personal Reminiscences, re-place with Humor, Anecdotes, and Entertaining Narrative.

It contains his celebrated Lecture on the Art or Moony Gerrino, with Raies for Success in Business, for which he was offered $5000. We offer extra inducements to Agents, and pay freight to the West. Send for St-page Circular, with Spectmen Engaving and Terms to Agents.

J. B. BURB & CO.,
Publishers, Hartford, Conn.

GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO SUB-G SCRIBERS.—Let these who want a first-class Lady's Magnine and a first-class Weekly Paper and at one for a semple copy of THE LADY'S FRIEND and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST. and see the unequaled industruents offered. $2 to a year for each. $4 for both. Four copies for $8, with a splendid permium engraving. Five copies (and one gratis), $8. Sample copies of both will be sent (post-paid) for fifteen conts. Address aid) for these costs. Address

DEACON & PETERSON,
No. 319 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

USEFUL INFORMATION FOR RAILWAY MEN.

Compiled by W. G. Hawkites, Engineer. Second edition, revised and minged. 529 pg., #2mo. Mo-rocco, Gill Edge, $2 cc. D. VAN NOSTRAND. Publisher, is Murray St., and 27 Warren St., N. Y. . Copies sent free by mall on receipt of price.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Pianos, of first-class makers, for $375 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Second-hand Pianos, Melodeous, and Organs from $45 to $375, at 481 Broadway, N. Y.

HORACE WATERS.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To aponts to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. States either a both side. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address her particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cleveland, Obio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

DSYCHOMANCY, Fascination; et. Science of the A Soul, as applied to the purposes of life. 400 pages, Cloth. By Henner Hawkines, B.A. A carious block for inquisitive people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wonderful power over men or animals. Can be obtained by sending postage stamp and address to T.W. EVANS & CO.,

41 South 8th Street, Philadelphia.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY. Price of Presses, 88, $12, $16. Offices, $15, $20, $30. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

COMETHING NEW.—In musical circles the D Estey Organs are the rage. They are the most durable and have the finest tops, reservable for their securious and posser. The Fox Remons and Fox Juddants are the greatest boveliles and best inventions ever introduced. J. ESTEY & CO.,

Brattleboro, Vt., Sole Manufacturers.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-can Knitting Machine. Price $25. The simplest, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever in-vented. Will knit 29,000 stitches per miturés. Liberal inducements to Apenta. Address AMERICAN ENIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or 8t. Louis, Mo.

VINEGAR, WINE Molesses, or Sorghum, to 10 hours, without using drugs. For circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

WANTED AGENTS.—$75 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE: A new thing, with the latest improvements. Price for Band Machine, $15: with Table and Foot power, $80. Send for Greenar, with Cut of Marhine and terms to Agenta.

Address W. S. Hill, Manchester, N. H.

A HANDSOME PULL-GILT Photograph At-bums, bolding 20 fell-size pictures, mailed, post-paid, for 55 cts.; 5 for 81; 52 ff per dozon. Cierchan free. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wonderful invendons. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

15 Rich and Rare Articles for 25c. Box 470, Bast Boston, Mass.

$25 A DAY. - 38 new articles for Agenta.

Samples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Me. $1140 -How I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample matted free. A. J. Pullars, K.Y.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

FRANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK,

Have just Published:

PICTORIAL PIRI,D-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1809; or, Illustrations, by Feu and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Semery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Basses J. Lossine, Anthor of "The Pictorial Pield-Book of the Bereintion." With 862 Illustration, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barrist, chiefy from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1904 pages, large five. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $5.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $6.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $6.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $6.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Illustration of Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $6.20; Pull Roam, 32.50; Pull UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOGOPHY. Mental Phi-losophy: embracing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sembblitdes, and Will. By Troncas C. UPMAR, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Phi-losophy in Rosebou College. In Two Volumes. Vol. L. Intellect, Lenguage; Vol. II.: Sensibilities, Will. 19mo, Cloth, §1 15 per volume.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James Gazenwoon, the "Amateur Cassal," Author of "The True Blatory of a Little Ragamnifin," "Reuben Dav-iégee," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Sto. Pa-

FAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Hoys. By H. H. Fox Bounna. With Portrait of George Prehody and 34 Illustrations. 16mo, Cloth, $1 00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; OF, EXPERIENCES of an American Journalist in Europe, By Eswam Gotad Borron, 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Naturaliza. Sarre. Sto., Cloth, $1.00.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Election tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Careful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Ameter Farming, with much Valuable Advice and Instruction to those about Furchasting Large or Small Places in the Sural Descripts. By Houser B. Bhouse see, With Characteristic Illustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER POR BEGINNERS, PARSER AND ANALYZEE PUB DESIGNATION WITH DIAGRESS and Suggestive Pictures. By Faxeers A. Marcu, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lafayatte College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Graviers of the Anglo-Samon Language," &c. 16mo, Cloth, 40 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text. Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., Ld.D., President of the Northwestern University. 12no., Cloth, $1 50.

THE MALAT ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Cian and the Bird of Paradiss. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Aurason Russen Wanner, Author of "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negra," "Palm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Pifty-one elegant Illustrations. Crown Sed, Chith, $2.50.

FISHING IN AMERICAN WATERS. By Genoo C. Scove. With 139 Hinstrations. Crown Sec, Cloth,

THREE SEASONS IN EUROPEAN VINEYARDS.
Treating of Vine-Culture; Vine Disease and EaCure; Wise-Making and Wines, Red and Walte; Wise-Drinking as affecting Health and Moraks. By WHILIAM J. PLACE. 12mc, Cloth, $1 50.

The New Novels

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Harper's Illustrated ADAM BEDE. 19ms, Morocco Cloth, 75 cents.

MILL ON THE PLOSS. 19mo, Morocco Cloth, FELIX HOLT. 12ma, Morocco Cloth, 75 cents.

To be followed by Goo. Hiso's other Novels. IN SILK ATTIRE. By WHAIAN BLACE, Author of "Love or Marriage?" 8vo, Paper, 60 cents.

FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Year,"
"One of the Family," do. 870, Paper, 50 cents. COUNTESS GISELA. By E. Manney. Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 36 cents.

META'S FAITH. By the Author of "St. Clave's," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

PAISE COLORS. By ARRIS THOMAS. Svo. Paper. HETTY. By Hanny Elmonton. Svo, Paper, 26 cents.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. Svo, Paper, $1 98.

CORD AND CRIERR. By the Anther of "The Bodge Clah." Blustrated. 8vo, Paper, 75 cents.

THACKERAT'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations. VANITY FAIR, 27 illustrations, Svo, Paper, 50 cta.

THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Illustrations. Svo. Pa-THE NEWCOMES. 162 Blustrations. Svo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 liinstrations. Svo, Paper, 80 cents. HENRY REMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER, 12 illustrations, Svo, Paper, 80 cents.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS:

HARD CASH. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Blustrated. Svo, Paper, 25 couts. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, 870, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Svo. Pa-POUL PLAY. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.
WHITE LIES. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.
EST To be followed by Churche Brade's other Novels.

EF Harrin & Berricus will send one of the above books by mail, postnor free, is any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

A NEW DISCOVERY!! PHALON'S Salvation for the Hair.

For Restoring to Grave Hair its Original Color

Phalon's "Vitaria" differs utterly from all the "dyes," "colorers," and "restorers" (१) in use. It acts on a totally different principle. It is limpid, fragrant, and per-fectly innocuous, precipitates no muddy or flagranters may no muddy or flactulent matter, requires no shaking up, and communicates no tain to the skin or the lines. No paper curtain is necessary to conceal its turbid appearance, for the simple reason that it is not turbia. It is, to all intents and purposes, A NEW DISCOVERY in Toiler Chemistry.

Pharen's "VITALIA" is warranted to effect a change in the color of the hair within 10 days after the first application, the direction being carefully observed

IT IS AS CLEAR AS WATER! AND MAS NO SEDIMENT.

Price, Pne Dollar per Box, CONTINING TWO BOTTLES.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

If your Druggis has not "Vitalia" on hand write, enclosing $1.00, and we will forward it immediately.

> PHALON & SON, 517 Broadway, N. Y.

STERROPTICONS, MAGIC LANTIGUES, and DIS-SOLVING-VIEW APPARATUS, with the im-proved Calcium Light, for Public Exhibitions, Sun-day-Schools, &c. Easily and cheaply managed, al-ways sitractive, and pays well. Send for Catalogue. T. H. McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassas St., N. Y.

OLD FOGY" LOST his lead-pencil. Use the Notetity Pencil-Holders, and avoid losing pencils.

BE BEAUTIFUL .- If you desire beauty you should use HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM.

It gives a soft, refined, satin-like texture to the complexion, removes Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Tan, &c., and adds a tinge of pearly bloom to the plainest features. It brings the bloom of youth to the fading cheek, and changes the rustic country girl into a fashionable city belle.

In the use of the MacNOLTA BALM lies the true secret of beauty. No lady need complain of her complexion who will invest 75 cents in this delightful article.

LYON'S KATHAIRON is the best Hair Dress-

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Sapono will make Tins resemble Silver.
Use only Sapono to clean White Paint,
From Marble Sapono removes all Stains.
For polishing Knives Sapono is unsurpassed.
For cleaning Brass Stain-Rode Sapono has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, use Sapono, suple cake sent by mall on receipt of 30 cents. Depot, 211 Washington St., New York.

Established 1899. Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for family use,

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE

nemore all nemarics for according to the system possesses great possible tool and appearing possesses are according to the according to the barriest food and appearing the barriest food and appearing the barriest food. dipast the heartiest food, stablishes robust health, source cared. Price Fifty feating treatine on the in-lists of restinguish, ruler DE T. IL ASSOTT, Justine ST. T. IL ASSOTT, Justine ST. SALE BY ALL DRUGO Caution.-Beware of humber initial [Trademark × Copyrighted.]

ANTED - AGENTS - 875 to $200 per month, every where, male and female ANTED — AGENTS—875 to $200 per saouth, every where, male and female, to intereduce the GENUINK IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will effich here, fell, inck, quill, cord, bind, braid, and embedder in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $2000 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more besuitful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the cut, and still the cloth can not be pailed apart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $15 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which who that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Firmatians, Pa., Boston, Mass., or 87. Louis, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other particles of worthless cast-from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genuic and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

THE LYCRUM,—No. 1,—contains the names, sub-jects, and terms of over two hundred of the best LECTURERS, MUSICIANS, and READERS of the country, with valuable advice to LYCRUM COMMIT-TERS. Specimen copy sent on receipt of stamp, by JAMES REDPATH, Boston, Mass.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Piance is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, electicity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase,

Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Saith & Nixon, Chicago, Els.; H. N. Hamp-strad, Milwankos, Wis.; Louis Tairr, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClubb, Nashville, Todd.; Kencker Bace., St. Louis, Mc.; C. M. Murseu, Cincinnati, Ohio; J. R. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohio; Brathand & Sons, Chrestand, Ohio; J. E. Gorle, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. C. Blubb, Pittsburg, Pa.; Clubby & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hamson, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Hinythenseris, Hinca, N. Y.; H. S. Magris, Roches-ter, N. Y.; H. Urlay, Buffalo, N. Y.; White, Serim, & Princi, Booton, Mass.; Coury Bace, Providence, E. L.; C. M. Leomis, New Haven, Coun.; Matthias Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordeninge, To-ronto, C. W.; E. Pielly & Bao., St. John, N. B.

ARE THE BEST AND CHEAPEST.

Because, being made of the best ma-terials, and every part being finished in the most perfect manner, they will run with great precision, and will not stop or run irregular, as is the case with other Watches.

We desire to increase the sale of these reliable time-pieces, and have reduced the prices much lower than formerly.

Silver Hunting Watches, - - - - $18 Gold Hunting Watches (18-carat cases), $80 Gold Hunting Watches (Ladies' size), $7()

Every Watch warranted by Special Certificate.

We send single Waithes to any place by express, with the bill to collect on delivery, and we give the purchaser the privilege of opening the package and examining the Waith before paying, and if, after it is taken and paid for, it should not prove satisfactory, we will exchange it or Refund the Money.

We have sent thousands of these Watches by ex-press, and he every section of the country, and by our improved method of packing they will go safely to any distance. Persons living in the distant States and Territories can save from 80 to 100 per cent. by buying from us.

Do not order a Watch till you have sent for our Descriptive Price - List, It explains the different kinds, gives weight and quality of the cases, with prices of each.

When you write for a price-list please state that you saw this in Hanner's Wangay. Address, in full,

HOWARD & CO.,

Jewelers and Silversmiths,

No. 619 Broadway, New York.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water cures all diseases of the Kidneys, Skin, and Blood more promptly than any other known remedy.

128" Call for Testisections of Crais. Soil by Denglets.

Caution.—All genuine bears our trade-mark, and the bottles and corks are beaned? "Nature's Remedy." Address J. LAN JOSEPH .

Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Trens. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Or, S. H. Scripture, 100 Broadway, New York,
General Agent.

BULBS for FALL PLANTING

MAILED, POSTPAID, AT CATALOGUE PRICES.

B. K. BLISS & SON,

No. 41 Park Bow, and 151 Nassan St., New York, have just received a large assortment of the shove, comprising all of the most desirable varieties of Hydelants, Tulips, Lilies, Narcissus, Croess, &c., &c., Our New Autume Catalogue, with many beautiful lituitrations, including a splendid two-page colored lithograph of the celebrated Litius Augustus, will be mailed to all applicants enclosing Ten Cents.

Address, as shove, P. O. Box No. 5715, New York.

A HOUSEHOLD WORD!

CHINA, GLASS, SILVER-PLATED WARE, CUTLERY, and COOKING UTENSILS,

AT BASSFORD'S,

COOPER INSTITUTE, N. Y.,

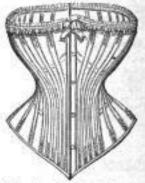

and save 20 per cent.

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Novelties by nearly every Steamer. Fine Supply of Finey Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches. M. J. PAILLARD & CO., 689 BROADWAY, N.Y.

HAINES BRO'S

"GLOVE-FITTING"

The Most Popular Corset over introduced into the American Market.

The strongest proof of the excellence and popularity of this Cornet is found in the numerous attempts to palm off worthless essintations as the grounds respected "Gloss-Furnay." We therefore call special attention to our stamp, which is always to be found on the general stamp, which is always to be found on the general stamp.

TRADE MARK THOMSON'S PATENT IMPROVED CLOVE-FITTING

N.B.—All infring-ers of Patent or of our Copyright in Name, "Glove-Fit-ting," will be pros-erated.

THOMSON, LANGDON, & CO., 391 Broadway, N.Y.,

Sole Importers and Patentees for the United States.

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE,

PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-saving machinery, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in

ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BEAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY,

Can not be Excelled. All goods bearing our trade-mark,

"Improved Electro Treble Plate,"

ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED; and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded. OFFICE AND FACTORY, WALLINGFORD, COSS., SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N.Y.

At all Seasons, in all Climes, by both sease, and by individuals engaged is all kinds of employment, active or selentary, Tanasav's Estranyasers Aranasav will be found invaluable as a means of regulating the lowers, toning the liver, and preventing indiammatory discovers. of regulating the bo-venting inflammator;

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LANTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LANTRUMENTS, 84 pages.
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.,
124 Chestrut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Bend for Price-List.)

THE REISSUE OF

Vor. XIII.—No. 668.7

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1869, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

FATHER HYACINTHE.

FATHER CHARLES LOYSON HYACINTHE may be properly called a "Catholic Protestant." His present position may be best explained by a brief allusion to the peculiar claims and dogmas upon which Pope Pros IX. so strenuously insists. When this Pope was first elected great hopes were entertained by the best educated and most were entertained by the best educated and most advanced of Roman Catholics that a new era would then be opened for the Church—an era characterized by a liberal policy, which, while it maintained the Catholic faith, would denounce errors and correct abuses. These hopes have been disappointed. Netwishstanding the liberal political spirit manifested by Pros IX, at the be-ginning of his Pontific-sts, he has provided.

ate, he has proved one of the greatest enemies to the progress of the age. If he had been content with a negative or neutral policy, he would have been secure against opposition from within the bosom of his own Church, But he has assumed a belligerent attitude, and has arrayed the ultramontane or anti-liberal par-ty against the Gallican or liberal. By calling an (Ecumenical Comcil, to meet next Detion of universal eccle-siastical supremacy, he has awakened the spirit of opposition, of which Father HYACINTHE is one of the best and ablest representatives.

Father Hyacustus was born at Orleans, France, in 1821, and completed his education at Pau. In 1853 he was ordained at St. Sulpice, in which parish he subsequently officiated as a priest; but in the mean time be studied theology four years and taught philosophy at Avignon, and afterward theology at Nantes. Having passed ten years in the Lyons Convent of Carmelite Friars, he became a member of the order, and was first a preacher in that city. While there his sermons delivered at the Lysee were considered remarkable. During Advent, in 1863, he preached at Bordeaux, and in the Lenten season of 1864 at Peri-gueux. It was during the summer of 1864 that he made his first appearance in Paris, ching at the of the Madeleine, and afterward at Notre Dame, having prepared a course of sermons for Advent. Here be at once, by the eloquence and boldness of his utterances, attracted publie attention and gained a brilliant reputation. He is a most popular preacher, and it is from this fact that his recent letter protesting against the coming Council, and the fearful policy which that Council is pledged to support, excites such wide comment. It is reported that Fasher HYACINTEE has left the convent, and that he will at the home of his parents await the decision of the Council.

Father Hyacustus is known in Paris as the "preacher-monk." Some idea of his appearance, and of the effect of his elequence, is conveyed in the following graphic sketch, written by one of his heavers in 1867:

"But now the tail Swiss halberdier, making a passage along the nisle, announces the approach of Pere Braceway, and instantly this whole sea of faces is turned toward him, with an expression of sympathy so intense as seemed enough to electrify one who eame in all simplicity and sincerity to bring to them the words of life. He followed slowly, with his eyes cast down, his face pale, and, mounting the steps of the palpit, he knelt down and buried his face in edicat prayer. Then rising, he stood, with creat and majestic form, and for some moments regarded in silence those to whom he was to speak, while a deep sigh involuntarily secaped from his large chest.

Although I was already under the magnetism of this extraordinary man, my eye, as an artist, took in all the surroundings of the scene. In scenic effect nothing could exceed the beauty of the tabless—the dark back-ground of the pulpit, in ancient curved oak; the form of the preacher, rendered more striking by the robe of his order (he is a Carnetite monk, and wears a long sarge gown, with only sandals on his feet), with his while cowl thrown back upon his short fell upon his bace bead, and his countenance, so sad and beautiful, yet responding with quick sympathy to all seemed to wear a deeper gloom, as if in sympathy with the darkness which was described; and when he repeated our Saviour's words, "My God, my God, why hast thou farasken me? It seemed as if every heart shuddered at the cry.

"As Carist suffered and agonized for man's salvation, so should usen himself struggle and suffer unto death, that he may be saved—there was his thems. But how do men carry on this apritual was? Here the preacher turned from the Drine Sufferer to the world which He came to redeem—a world fall of sorrow and sto. Instantly we were in the midst of the nineteeroth centery—with examples of guilt which all could recognize. He does whis pictures from actual life, portraying the tempter and the tempted; and is his charges of cellishness and crime be seemed as if he would array all men at the bar of Divine justice. He did not space my class or profession—not even his own—but drew a fearful picture of the unwarthy prices.

"It is not by hypocriar," he said, "that the head." priest. "It is not by hypocrisy," he said, "that the bad

In this connection the following extract from the letter of Father Hyacustrus, which has cre-ated so much excitement, and which was ad-

FATHER CHARLES LOYSON HYACINTHE .- (PROTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.)

the regards turned toward him. Surely, if he had stadied all this wase ex sense, he is a muster in the art.

"He began to speak, and from that memoral I wished to believe in the sincertry, in the picty, in the Christian faith of this man—for if he is not all that, he profites the most beautiful gifts of Providence. Never did a voice more sympathetic strike my carr never did art more perfect captivate and control the human heart.

heart.

"He amounced his text, first in Latin and then in French. It was in Ecclasiasies—a warning to difference and activity, which he applied to stimulate men in the work of salvation, repeating with emphasis, 'Agonize for your faith; combat for your soul!' He described the agony of Christ that he might hold Him up as an example. As it is the season of Leet, all thoughts are emposed to crowerge toward that central theme, and all motives to radiate from the Great Sufferer. He depicted the sorrows of the Saviour of the world, and the drops of blood failing to the ground, and the last spens on the cross. During this description all was knaked and still. The wast cathedral priest dishonors his ministry. Hypocrisy is a thing velight and bese, soon ministed, which can not long deceive any one; but it is by that cold, real Pharisa-ism, which puts the letter in place of the spirit, the dogma in place of charity, is a religion which is all love. It is not with hands hard and cold that the priest must tooch the watends and series of humanity, but as a mother, in her love for her children, covers the plague spots which mask the outbreaking of revolting disease. It is with bursting lips that he is to sack the poison from the very blood of the death-smitten; it is with tears of charity and of tenderases that he is to wash and to purify the sinful soul? As he said this there was it his voice, and in the whole expression of his sed and beautiful countermore, something of the tenderpess of a father; he seemed to years toward those who listened to him with an irresistible attraction; and with one of his electrifying gestures he threw open his arms as if he would take upon his own heart the griefs and the removes of every troubled spirit.

"I give you but a faint outline of his sermon, though dressed to the General of his order at Rome, will prove interesting to our readers :

dressed to the General of his order at Rome, will prove interesting to our readers:

"The present hour is solema. The Church passes through one of the most violent, dark, and decisive crises of its existence here below. For the first time in 800 years an Geomesical Council is not only conviced but decisred accessory; such is the expression of the Holy Father. It is not in such a moreout that a preacher of the Gospel, were he the hist of all, can consent to remain as the mute dogs of fersel, unfaithful guardians, whom the prophet represches as unable to bark. Carse west, see salents intrare. The saints were never effect. I am not one of them: but nevertheless I belong to their race, fish sencerum susua, and I have always been smolitions to place my steps, my bears, and, if recessary, my blood, in the tracks which they have left. I raise, therefore, before the Holy Pather and the Council, my protestation as Christian and preacher against these doctrines and practices, calling themselves. Beman, but which are not Christian, and which in their encreachments, always most anderlous and most baseful, tend to change the Councitudion of the Church, the hasts as well as the form of her teaching, and even the spirit of her jetty. I protest against the divorce, as implious se it is incare, which it is sought to accomplish between the Church, who is our mother according to eserally, and the societ' of the sincicenth century, of whom we are the some according to the times, and toward whom we have also some dolless and attachments. I protest against the more radical and dreadful opposition to human mature, which is attacked and made to revolt by these false doctrines in its most indestructible and holiest appirations. I protest, above all, against the spirit and the latio races in general, are delivered over to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the particular, and the Latio races in greate, are delivered over to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the principal cause is without doubt not in Catholicism has during a long

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1869.

TT A New Story, splendidly Illustrated, by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Moonstone"), will be commenced in HARPER'S WEEKLY in November, 1869. New Subscribers will be supplied with the WEERLY from the beginming of the Story to the end of 1870 for $4 00.

THE NEW YORK CAMPAIGN.

THE platform of the late New York Republican Convention will be regarded with the utmost satisfaction by every citizen in the country who sympathizes with the fundamental principles of the party, and it is strongly and honorably contrasted with the Democratic platform of the previous week. The Convention declared that the national bosor should be maintained without equivocation, that the Fifteenth Amendment, securing in the Constitution the equality of all citizens of the United States, should be adopted, and that the Government should be supported in the recognition of Cuban belligerency, whenever the facts in its possession should justify such a declaration.

The platform is positive and frank. We should have been glad to see an approval of the proposed reform in the civil service, and a recommendation of the new Constitution of the State. But what is said is so well said, and is so important, that we can wait. It is enough that the civil service reform has not yet been generally discussed, and is perhaps too imperfeetly understood to be a subject upon which the party could wisely prenounce, while the Republicans are known to be the authors of the proposed improvements in the fundamental law of the State. Upon the chief points of present political interest the Convention has spoken plainly, and it remains for the people to decide whether the voice of New York shall swell the chorns of hostility to the great principles of public policy which are associated with the prondest and most beroic epoch of our history.

It is evident from the tone of the resolutions of which we speak, as from that of the State conventions generally, that the main interest of the antumn elections, although they are State elections, is national, and not local. The reason of this is that the great issues involving the honor and prosperity of the National Government have not yet been settled, and every expression of public opinion at the polls affects that settlement. In Ohio, for instance, the Democratic party supports Mr. PENDARTON, who was a favorite candidate for the Presidency against General GRANT, and who is the representative of a financial policy which is virtually repudiation; a policy which, until it is conclusively condemned by the American people, will disastronsly affect the untional credit and honor. In Pennsylvania the Democratic candidate is Mr. PACKER, a gentleman known only as a Copperhead in the days when that term had a most serious significance. Both Mr. PENDLETON and Mr. PACKER were opposed to the war and to the policy of reconstruction, and are, of course, equally opposed to the Fifteenth Amendment, which removes from the domain of politics the vexing question that occasioned the war, and finally secures the honest results of the struggle.

The elections have thus inevitably a national aspect. They are the expression of opinion upon the very gravest measures of public pol-icy. Should the Democratic party prevail in Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New York, it would not be unfair to conclude that the people of those States, and possibly of the country, had decided that the national honor would not be sullied by a course which no honest private person would countenance in his own affairs, and that they did not recognize any relation between the security of equal rights among American citizens and the prosperity and permanence of the American Union. It would be impossible to separate the national from the State issue.

The election of Mr. PENDLETON and Mr. PACKsm could not honestly be regarded as a person-al preference of those gentlemen to General HATES and General GRARY as Governors of their States, but it would unavoidably be regarded as a decision of much more important questions.

This may be regretted. It may be unfortunate that the people can not vote for Governor in Ohio or Pennsylvania, nor in this State for Comptroller or Secretary of State, without saying whether they wish to be honest to the national creditor and just to all their fellow-citizens. But that is, nevertheless, the situation. It is not a personal question. Candidates of both parties may be equally honest and capable —if not, the dishonest and inespable should be scratched—but they represent a view of public affairs and a public policy which would be as effective in the State as in the nation. Thus the success of the Democratic party in New York would defeat the State Constitution, which removes an arbitrary restriction now imposed upon a class of voters; while the success of the Republican party would ratify by the popular voice the action of the Legislature in adopting the Fifteenth Amendment. The party that can be most safely intrusted with the national may as wisely be charged with the State administration; and of course the State that elects a Governor or a Secretary would, at the same polls, elect a President of the same party.

Every man who votes, therefore, at the next State election unavoidably expresses his opinion of the general character and tendency of the two great parties of the country. If he thinks that the financial policy of Mr. PEN-DIATON is wise and honorable, and that the principles and antecedents of Mr. PACKER in Pennsylvania, and of his friends in New York, promise harmony, economy, and peace to the country, he will vote the Democratic ticket in whatever State he lives. But if he believes that it is better to pay our debts honestly, and to do justice to our neighbors, to put the national faith beyond question, and to finish the work which the war left incomplete, he will support the party of the noblest record and of the best promise in our history, the Hepublican

THE NEW YORK REPUBLICANS AND CUBA.

Tmn New York Republican Convention resolved that "whenever the facts in possession of our Government will justify the recognition of Cuban belligerency we shall heartily approve such recognition, and pledge our hearty support to any action on the part of the Govern-ment tending to the final annexation of Cuba whenever she shall have achieved her independence and her people desire such action." is a resolution of confidence in the Administration with which every Republican will cordially agree. The country reposes with satisfaction upon the consciousness of which we have more than once spoken that we have an Administration singularly free from Buncombe of every kind, and which will regard our international conduct from the ground of the best American traditions and of perfect good faith.

The gun-boats which were lately detained by the Government may lead to a discussion which has thus far not been found necessary. The question presented is whether, under the circumstances, the United States shall be made the base of Spanish military operations against Cuba. We have treaties with Spain, and our markets of ships and munitions of war are open to all the world. If the Spanish Government comes as a customer to buy a fleet and equipment, and we have no reason to suppose that they are to be used in hostilities against a nation with which we are at peace, upon what ground can the sale be prohibited by the American Government if the security is satisfactory to the American merchant? The only recognised ground of interference with such transactions is that we have declared our neutrality, and that both belligerents are equally prohibited. But we have not recognized the belligerent rights of the Cubans, nor are they an independ-

Yet they are our immediate neighbors, and they have been struggling for a year to throw off a foreign government which has hitherto been most harsh; and our very situation makes us almost a fatal neighbor to them so long as the present situation continues. They and their friends do not fail to remind us that in earlier days France belped the American colonies when they sorely needed succor. But the French recognition of the colonies, although most timely and serviceable, was a conscious and intentional act of aggression toward England. The treaty of alliance of 1778 contemplates and provides for a rupture between France and England; and the United States agreed that if France captured the British West India Islands they should belong to France. The cases are in this at least essentially different, that we do not wish to injure Spain, while we certainly have a more legiti-mate sympathy with Cuba than ever France had with the American colonics. Still the unpleasant fact recurs that our geographical position makes us peculiarly harmful to the Cubans striving for independence. Spain leans ber riffe upon our shoulder.

Particular contract of the con

This, however, does not change the great principles that underlie international comity, and which require that no insurgents shall be recognised as belligerents—which is the beginning of a recognition of independencethey show, as the American colonies had shown in 1778, not only a hope but a power to secure independence, attested by the virtual unanimity of the country and the undisputed civil supremacy of the Congress. These are the "facts" which is the which, in the contemplation of the resolation that we have quoted, would justify the recognition of Cuban belligerency. But meanwhile our neighborhood and the nature of the struggle authorize us to make the most strenuous and persistent efforts at mediation between Spain and Cuba. This, we have no doubt, the Administration is doing with the utmost selfrespect and with the sincerest sympathy for the Cubans. The latter, when they began the struggle, doubtless relied upon our neighborbood as an advantage in many ways; but they should have seen that it was an equal disadvantage. Those who move in great enter-prises are morally bound to count the cost, The Cubans may be sure that the United States will be just to them; but the best ground of their confidence is, that the United States will be just to all their duties and all their friends.

LAWRENCE vs. DANA.

Tun late decision in Boston, in the case of WILLIAM B. LAWRENCE Against RICHARD H. DANA, Jun., is very interesting and important. Mr. Lawnence, as is known, was a former editor of Wheaton's great work upon international law, and Mr. Dana is a later editor. The family of Mr. WHEATON were dissatisfied with the edition of Mr. Lawrence; and when that of Mr. Dana appeared, Mr. Lawrence charged that Mr. Dana had appropriated his labor in the notes, and asked that Mr. Dana's edition be enjoined as a plagiarism.

But the reading matter in Mr. Dana's notes so to speak, the thoughts, suggestions, arguments, ideas; the analysis of debates and of diplomatic correspondence-all indeed that professes to be original, is allowed to be of such value that the edition can not be enjoined. The Court then considered the question of the use made by Mr. Dana of the raw material of Mr. LAWRENCE's notes. This was merely a question of the relation of the second annotator of a work to the first, and does not involve character. All of Mr. Dana's manuscripts were before the Court, and the question was really one of law only, not of good faith. Mr. DANA claimed that he had studied and used the notes of his predecessor as he had the works of other authors, and no further; and that, dealing with the same authorities upon the same topics, the appearance of similarity was unavoidable. The Court upon this point laid down a rule, which it held that Mr. Daxa had in some cases infringed; and a master is to examine and report upon such instances.

If Mr. LAWRENCE's intention, therefore, was to suppress Mr. Dana's edition altogether, as an infringement of his copyright, he has failed, for Mr. Dana's edition is not declared an infringement and is not enjoined. The Court says that in some instances he has transcended the proper limits of use of the labors of the previous editor, and those excesses, when determined, must be hereafter omitted. The decision of the Court shows that Mr. DANA is, even under its own rule, indebted to Mr. Lawnumers for nothing but material which the seissors can cut off, and which may possibly be spared without injury.

Mr. Dana, of course, reserves a right of appeal as to the justice of the rale laid down by the Court; but the great point in the case is decided in his favor.

THE BYRON STORY IN ENGLAND.

Mas. Stown's paper upon Byrox is still discussed in England, and one publisher announces a volume containing the literature of the debate, while another advertises a "Vindication of Lord Byron." The tone of the remarks in the journals upon Mrs. Srown herself has been much the same as in this country. One paper, indeed, says that she will presently be thanked, as all those who are bold enough to tell the truth always are; and on the other hand, a correspondent who calls himself a member of Congress writes in Paris a little feeble scurrility intended for the family of which Mrs. Stown is a distinguished member. The most striking characteristic, however, of the communications which the subject has drawn out, is the irrelevancy of their arguments and statements to the stial point under consideration.

The note of the family solicitors is not a denial of the story, nor an assertion that evidence exists which will disprove it. Lord WENT-WORTH, the grandson of Lady Brace, writes that a manuscript was found among her papers containing an account of some circumstances connected with her marriage, but no accusation of so grave a nature as that which Mrs. Stown asserts was communicated to her. Lord LINDSAY also prints a letter written by Lady Byrow to her confidential friend Lady ANNE BARNARD, in 1818, alluding to the separation, but not mentioning the cause now alleged. This, however, is not in itself inconsistent with the impression conveyed by Mrs. Srows that Lady Byros had told it to no one except to Dr. (then Mr.) Lussusoros in 1816. Lord LINDBAY believes that Lady BYRON was a littie deranged upon the subject, and Mr. WILLIAM Howerz describes her as inexplicably cold and moody. Mr. Joux Robertson, also, declares that many persons, among them the Rev. Fran-ERICK ROBERTSON, believes Lady Bynon's mind to have been "touched," and he asserts that abe told many persons the story of the separation, and in many ways. He and two other friends of hers decided that Lady Bysos was of unsound mind upon the subject; and he adds that the story she most frequently told is not susceptible of proof, while the one related by Mrs. Srows is new and utterly incredible. But Dr. Founus Wixslow considers that the theory of hallucination is incompatible with the known facts of Lady Bynon's life; and certainly had there been good reasons for supposing her insane upon the subject of the separation, Miss Mansketch of Lady Byron.

It is evident that the story itself is not so universally discredited in England as it seems to be here, although, as we said, there is little mercy for Mrs. Stown. The Spectator and the Saturday Review, papers of the best reputation, incline to believe the story as told. The Spec-tator says that the truth of Mrs. Srown's story is "on the evidence more likely than not;" and the Saturday Review concludes that "either we must accept this hallucination theory, or we must accept Lady Byrox's story," while the ANNE BARNARD'S letter by emphasizing the fact that, as Lady Bynos did not tell the story to her parents, she would not be likely to con-fide it to her friend. Meanwhile, in the gen-eral debate there has been great force wasted upon unimportant details. Thus, when Mrs. STOWE'S article was first published it was remarked, with vehemence, that she did not spell Lady Bynox's family name correctly, and that she asserted that she lived two years with her husband. But these were not the kind of inaccuracies that would weaken the probabilities of the story. It was of no significance whether Lady Byzon lived with her husband a mouth or twelve months after she knew the truth, but that she lived with him at all.

So the Philadelphia Press, in some friendly and courteons strictures upon the observations of the Easy Chair in Harper's Magazine upon the general subject, points out certain discrepancies which do not affect the essence of the question. Thus it is said in the Magarise that Lord Buron traveled for three years before his marriage. No, says the Press, only a little more than two years. Again, it is said that two or three years after BYRON's death, at the request of Moone, Lady Brnox wrote a statement. No, says the Press, it was six years ofter, and in reply to Moons, not at his request. But evidently "two or three years" seans a few years, and although it is inaccurate to say that it was at MOOKE's request, the substantial fact is that there was a statement of Lady Byrow's, and that it was occasioned by Moore's Life. Perfect accuracy of dates and times is indeed desirable. But in this kind of discussion the vital points are alone im-

The Press, with the utmost good-nature, exorts its editorial brethren to be "posted" before they engage in the debate. But it instantly says that CAMPBELL was fully aware what he was about when he printed his commentary upon the " Defense of Lady Byron." Yet Blackwood says that the most merciful conclusion in regard to it is that "it was written under the influence of stimulants, which, for the time, bad deprived the illustrious author of 'Hohenlinden' alike of judgment and taste;" and Miss MAR-TINEAU says that " he excused himself by saying it was a mistake of his-that he did not know what he was about when he published the paper." All that CAMPRELL says in the letter quoted by the Press is that it "was a bold step on my part," which it certainly was. The Press also says that it is known to the readers of the MS. memoir of Braon that the statement made by Lady Brzos to Dr. Lusumoron in 1816 does not in the least resemble "the horrible revelation" made to Mrs. Srown in 1856. Does the Press suppose that Lady Byson's statement was to be found in Lord BYRON's manuscript? How could the readers of that manuscript, Lord Bussell, for instance, or Washington Invine, possibly know what Lady Byron told Dr. Lusu-INGTON, but did not tell her mother?

And is not the strongest probable proof of the substantial truth of Lady Bynon's story to be found in the fact that Dr. LUBRINGTON, to whom she told it in 1816, who is still living, and who could settle the whole matter by a word, remains effent? His simple assertion that the story told by Mrs. Stown is not what Lady Byson told him could not be regarded as an improper breach of professional confidence, and would dispose of the question. His silence is more convincing than all that has been said and written upon the subject.

A LOOK AT THE SITUATION.

In the midst of a healthy and active trade, beneficial alike to importers and distributors, the most unscrupulous gamblers of Wall Street, elevated to position and power by seizing the Erie Railroad-a sort of drift which its early friends had cast away from the impossibility of making it profitable—suddenly, as if a bolt had come from the clear sky, ran up the price of gold, buying and loaning it as it rapidly advanced, until, having reached 160, margins were called in, settlements in the consternation produced were made, a vast amount of currency was accumulated in the hands of the cornerers and, while brokers for the combination were acting in one direction, the principals, on the sudden collapse of the conspiracy, took different roads of escape; and but one rule of action appeared to govern, which was, to pay nothing and hold on to ill-gotten gains—the Board of Gold Brokers being held at arm's-length and treated with the indifference and contempt which will now be generally applied.

Instead of sending in to the Board the re-quired statements of each dealer, which would conduce to a complete settlement, an injunction was preferred, its effect being to leave the vast transactions of Friday unconfirmed; to leave the gold at high prices in the hands of borrowers, while those who applied to the courts locked up enough currency to confuse the whole business of Wall Street. The fact of withholding a statement resulted from the conviction that the general settlement of the transactions of Friday would be disastrous, or from want of confidence in the association. What was wanted there was some controlling mind, to carry such amend-ments to the by-laws as would bring outstanding parties to terms. This the injunction could

It would appear from the estimate made by a Committee of the Board that, upon final li-quidation of all sales and purchases on Friday which in the aggregate were several hundred millions-one set of parties remained short six millions to another, which was long to the same extent. As the corner was advancing toward 160 or 1621, persons who sold at 160, and on the turn of the market covered at 150, find themselves, with gold at 130, ruined, as the purchaser from them can not take, while they are No transaction in Wall Street at any previous time has so much defied its sagacity, or produced greater confusion or more serious consequences. While it was the rule before Friday to trust any one in the Board, in reliance upon the honor (?) which was supposed to control, now nobody trusts any body. The Gold Exchange Bank has gone into bankruptey. Of this, therefore, the country may be assured, that the gambling fraternity are so extensively weakened, and confidence is so impaired among them, that a new set will need to grow up be-fore the general business can be disturbed by their unseemly operations. Many of the banks of the city contribute by their loans, and by the direct action of their officers, to such opportunities for injuring all useful industry. It would be well for stockholders to drive from official position all who, under any circumstances, specplate in stocks. The taste for it grows with indulgence, and will generally eventuate in ruin and fraud. The object is not just. Accumulation of wealth, when it is the fruit of honest exertion in a useful pursuit, is not inconsistent with the general interest; but, when sought as the result of speculation with borrowed means, the actor betrays a desire to obtain what industry has produced without rendering an equivalent, and generally will become unscrupulous in its propopolishment.

Every officer known to be tainted with speculation should be weeded out of all financial institutions, as it constitutes a clear fraud upon the trust and contributes to the general demoralization. Our credit circulation is now so guarded from depreciation or diminution by the wise provisions of law, which authorized its issue. that the country can stand more of disaster than it could have stood under the State bank system. We shall ride out this storm with safety; but if speculators are not ejected from control, and our banking institutions handed over to the prodent and wise, who will keep the gambier at arm's-length, the time may come when a hail-storm to beat down the coming harvest, or some event not more damaging than the recent raid upon Wall Street, will bring down the whole structure of public credit beyond re-lief from judges who attend upon speculators to aid them at critical moments with injunctions.

The institutions of a financial character which | are scattered over the Union wield an influence the very greatest over its fortunes and its morals. The time has arrived for exerting it with energy, as not pecuniary safety alone, but the general safety, is affected by their management.

Is will be recollected that last year a lock-up in funds, brought about by the Eric clique, ar-rested the prosecution of the fall trade of 1863, and inflicted wide-spread damage. The Eric road was abandoned by prudent capitalists some years ago, when it was discovered that no profit to the stockholders could be made from it, considering the expense of construction and operation over a difficult route, and the competition to which it was subjected from a rival route in this State better situated as to grades and population. The Erie, thus abandoned by its unfortunate projectors and friends, fell into the hands of those who, to cover the annual loss from operating the road, and to furnish the opportunity for speculation, issued convertible stock under a very questionable power con-ferred by the general Railroad Act.

The interests of the Company, whose joint liabilities for stock and bonds have been extended to considerably over one hundred millions of dollars, have been entirely lost sight of in these nefarious operations, and the road is run and managed chiefly to advance the speculations of some of its directors. If the judiciary were what it was of old, a receiver appointed in the interest of some of its mortgagees-it is doubtful which of them will ever derive benefit from the road—would be appointed, and this scandal upon the fair fame of the State, the judiciary, and indeed the Union itself, would be terminated.

The last Legislature of New York passed an ect to prevent the ejection at a single election of the present Board from office. It was doubtless done because it was the intention to unload the worthless stock upon the market, and permit a repetition of some scheme of plunder such as occurred in Wall Street on Thursday and Friday.

The most alarming feature of our condition is this, that such legislation can be purchased at Albany, and that entire immunity from punishment in the courts can be purchased from a part of the judiciary. A shrowd observer said a few days ago that we were approaching the time when our personal property would be claimed by thieves who would have the effrontery to say, "You are mistaken; this is mine; I own it, and have in my pocket also the judge who will so decide."

The wants of the city per day of gold for commercial transactions reach from about a half to three-quarters of a million of dollars; but such is the aid extended by banks to gambling in Wall Street, that the operations of Friday at the Gold Exchange were between three and five hundred millions - operations which had no connection with the commerce which the banks are expected to foster. will in some degree be remedied by resolutely placing the country on the track to specie pay ments. This policy will require from each bank to withdraw from speculation, and ally itself to the substantial interests of the people.

LIGHT IN SOUTH AMERICA.

THERE seems to be little doubt that LOPEZ has been at last hopelessly defeated, and that l'araguny is relieved of a most odious tyranny. There are those who have insisted upon calling the government of that country a republic, but it was as absolute a personal despotism as can be found upon the globe. From the begin-ning of the struggle there has been nothing which should excite sympathy for Lorez or inspire hope in his success. The contest has been directly for the freedom of the river La Plata, and indirectly for the progress of civilization in that obscure and generally uninteresting region. We have yet to bear Minister M'MARON'S account of the condition of the country and the rule of Lopez, but that of Minister Washburn has been repeated. The ferocities of the "President," as related by Mr. Washmuns, are sickening; and the world will gladly know that an alliance, of which the Argentine Republic under President SARMIENTO is a member, has obtained control of the river.

Indeed, the interest of the people of the United States in all the countries of South America is so vague that the importance of the Presidency of Mr. SARMIENTO has not been properly estimated. He is a man not only thoroughly familiar with our institutions and history, but profoundly sympathetic with their spirit. He perceives both the advantages of a popular government and the necessity of general intelligence for its security and permanence. During his long residence in this country President SARMIENTO made the most extensive and accurate study of our public school system; and he is sparing no effort to clerate the standard and to extend the range of education in his own land. Such a me devoting to the highest interests of his country his shillities and the wisdom of his experience, is the most significant and interesting figure in South America. In the Argentine Republic there is a real tensioncy toward high civilization, and a sagacious and representative goverament. The great principles of liberty and the political safeguards of freedom are pondered and practically sought. It is a country to which, especially under its present administration, our kindest thoughts and sympathies should be given; and which, if not the most extensive and powerful, is certainly the most promising of the South American States.

Brazil, on the other hand, is a country from which little is to be hoped. The Emperor, who seems to be a good-natured and somewhat cultivated man, has a way of charming visitors from the United States by praising the works of some of our authors; and when the pleased visitors write home that the Emperor of Brazil reads Longressow and Invino, there is an effect produced which, measured by the fact, is very comical, as if Brazil were a peculiarly ednested and refined country, the truth being that it is most ignorant and backward. The Emperor occasionally, also, makes remarks about emancipation. But they evidently mean nothing more than his praises of our poets. He would probably like to see slavery abolished in his empire. But it is one of the languid, ineffective feelings common to all men of good dispositions. From all that we can learn, slavery is firmly rooted in Brazil, and will yield very slowly to the growing humanity of the public opinion of the world.

It is not altogether satisfactory to observe that the victorious General of the allies in the Paraguayan campaign was apparently the Count D'Ev. If it had been a native of the country, that consciousness would have inspired a self-respect which would have been of the greatest service to the future development of the people. It is unfortunate for all the allies that they should feel that they owe their success to a foreigner. But, on the other hand, Mr. Sarmento is the representative of a higher success, which may justly stimulate the best hope and effort, at least of his own countrymen. How grave, in contemplating him and his career, seems the responsibility of every citizen of the United States to justify the earnestness with which men like SARMIENTO, upon this continent and the other, cite our example and the beneficent working of our system.

NOTES.

EVER since the brave Sir HUMPHERY GILsant was lost at sea three hundred years ago, saying, "Heaven is as near by sea as by land," the profoundest, but also a mournful interest, has invested Arctic travel. This feeling is deepened by the story which Captain Hall now tells. He has removed all doubt from the tragical tale of FRANKLIN's fate, and that of all his companions. They tried to make their way from their ships to the outposts of the Hudson Bay Company, and perished miserably by exposure, dis-ease, starvation, and possible fool play. Yet the heroic devotion which led a quiet citizen of Cin-cinnati to penetrate the Arctic solitudes and live among the Esquimaux, that he might learn the fate of his predecessor, can not be regarded with-out admiration. The Northwest Passage is discovered. There remains now nothing but to reach the North Pole, an enterprise which Cap-tain Hall already proposes. But familiarity does not destroy the charm of mystery and fearful romance that bangs over the Arctic world. The boys of to-day will read with the same ea-gerness the story of Captain Hall that we older boys read that of Captain Paker and Captain Book. Is there not something attractive, too, in expeditions not to find gold or ivory, but to explore regions of eternal ice and silence solely to enlarge the bounds of knowledge? Man shall, indeed, "subdue the earth," and extort all its closest secrets.

This beautiful engravings which we published last week of the four famous trotters, "Lady Thorne," "Goldsmith Maid," "American Girl," and the "Mountain Boy," have excited great interest among the frequenters of the course. The first three of these pictures were from photographs by Schrettere & Son, animal photographers, of Philadelphia, to whose courtesy we have been indebted for many valuable favors.

State Constitution, Mr. THURN said at the Democratic Convention that "men of stainless integrity, undoubted ability and learning," must be nominated, who will stand "grandly erect, and prove to the people the purpose of the Democ-racy to insure a good judiciary to the land." Did Mr. Tilden serenely mean Judge M*Cuxx?

Masses, OLIVER DITSON&Co, have perchased at a cost of over $100,000 the entire collection of musical works, upward of seventy in number, hitherto published by Mason BROTHERS. The catalogue includes, among their well-known books, the popular "Mason and Hondley Piano Method," "Root's Cahinet Organ Instructor," "Carmina Sacra," "Jubilee," etc. We are informed that this addition to the list of publications to Mason Mason Discount Communication to the list of publications to Mason Discount Communication to the list of publications to Mason Discount Communication to the list of publications to Mason Discount Communication to the list of publications to Mason Discount Communication to the list of publications t tions by Messra. Drrson & Co. makes it equal in extent and value to that of all other publishers in the United States combined.

HISTORY and poetry celebrate no sublimer act of devotion than that of Almar G. Darckns, the watchman of the Passaic River draw-bridge, on the New York and Newark railroad. The train was doe, and be was closing the draw when his little child fell into the deep water. It rould have been easy enough to rescue him if the father could take the time, but already the thundering train was at hand. It was a cruel agony. His child could be saved only at the cost of other lives committed to his care. The brave man did his duty, but his child was drowned. The pass at Thermopyles was not more heroically kept. Sir Pattar Stower giving the cup of cold water to the dying soldier is not a notice figure than that of ALBERT G. DRECKER keeping the Passaic bridge.

THE DRAW-BRIDGE KEEPER.

Duncken, a draw-bridge keeper, openea wide 🔮 The dangerous gate to let the vessel through; His little son was standing by his side.

Above Passale River deep and bite.

While in the distance, like a mosn of pain.

Was heard the whistle of the coming train.

At once brave Drecker worked to swing it back,
The gate-like bridge that seems a gate of death;
Nearer and nearer, on the elender track,
Came the swift engine, puffing its white breath.'
Then, with a shrick, the loving father saw like during boy fall headloug from the draw,

Either at cace down in the stream to spring And save his our, and let the living freight Rush on to death, or to his work to cling.

And leave his boy unbelied to meet his fate, And leave his boy unbelied to meet his fate, Which should he do? Were you as he was tric Would not your love outwelgh all cles bestde?

And yet the child to him was full as dear As yours may be to you—the light of eyes, presence like a brighter atmosphere, The household star that show in love's mild skies— Yet side by side with duly stern and grim, Even his child became as nought to him.

For Drecker, being great of soul and true,"
Held to his work, and did not aid his boy,
Who in the deep, dark water sank from sien.
Then from the father's life went forth all joy;
But as he fell back pailed with his pela,
Across the bridge in safety passed the train, 3

And yet the man was poor, and in his breast "
Flowed no ancestral blood of king or lord; # True greatness needs no title and no crest. To win from men just honor and reward; Nobility is not of rank, but mind, And is inborn and common in our kind.]

He is most poble whose humanity Is least corrupted. To be just and good ? The birth-right of the lowest born may be. Say what we can, we are one brotherhood, And, rich or poor, or famous or unknown, True hearts are noble, and true hearts alone.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

CUBAN EXPEDITIONS.

AMERICAN Sympathy with the Cohan cause has been shown more strongly than berendere by the number of expeditions resemily fund out and now in preparation for the aid of the Cohans. A telegram received in this city from Persandina, Florida, October I, Informs us that the expedition which a short time since IP. New York on the Aldonase may not forth in anfety and arrived of the Florida cross, where the Alabama, no pointed by the Lobin and Thart, having 1808 mea, 10,000 rifles, 500 select, and 20 pieces of artillery on board. General Goicar's was in command. We are also informed that another expedition on a fourth reseal was being organized by Guserial Steadman and Magrader. The entire force was expected to concentrate at a common traderwas off the Cohan coast. The military expeditions will be protected probably by the Cubs, of which we give an finishistion on page 601. It is stated that 500 American volunteers for Caha are still in depot along our Guif coast.

KEWS ITEMS.

The New York State Republican Convention met at Syracuse September 19. George William Cartia was nominated for Secretary of State, but has since was nominated for necessary to the control of the c decrease during September of seven and one-half millions.

A terrible seeddent occurred at the State Fair at Indianapolis, Indiana, October I. A mean belier attached to a portable sew-mill reported, killing outlight 19 persons, and more or less severely wounding a large number. Governor Baker narrowly escaped death, and his coordman was seriously injured.

"Hortsee," the famous Wordern race-horse, died September 18. He was owned by Major B. G. Thomse, of Lexington, Kentucky. He was three and a half years old. His dam was "Dixle." Lest spring, on the Backeye Course, Cincinnata, he made a mile in 1.43%, said to be the best time ever made in this country.

"Lady Thorn" trutted at Sarraganesti Fark, Actober 1, napinest 1 e "American Girl," "Goddenith Main," and "George Palmer," winning the race in three straight heat.

Nearly 190,000 inculgrants arrived in this country during the year ending with June.

FOREIGN NEWS.

FOREIGN NEWS.

A commission of fifteen Depaties to the Cortes has been charged with the daty of reporting on the various candidates for the throne of Spain.

Reports from Madrid represent that the republican movement in Catalogia and Andahusa promises to decrive the hopes of its instigators. In the mean time great alarm has been occarboned by the interruption of telegraphic communication between Madrid and the provinces, and n new set more extensive reactionary movement is apprehensivel.

General Sociale has not withanswe his note concerning Caba. That letter has certainly had one good result in industring the Spanish Government to adopt a more humanic policy toward the Chhans.

Fifty lives were lost by the full of the bridge at Konkesborg, Provide, during the festival in honer of the King on the 14th of September.

The Sweet Casal is practically open, water having been introduced by removing the barriers from Rister Lake, and a steasmer has yeased through the canal from Fort Said to Sucr is fifteen bours.

The Prench Senate and Corps Legislatif have been convaked to meet November 22.

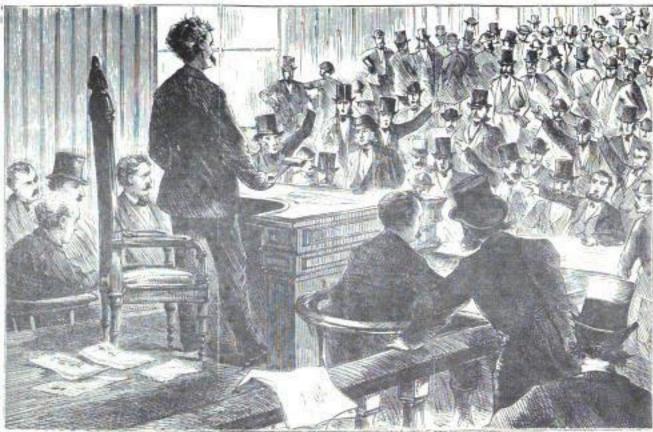

Prince Napoleou has written a letter to Colonel Berten, Chalarman, and other American sedouroing in Loudon, thanking them for their address congraralating him on his liberal speech in the Senate. The Prince seminds them of the bonds which have always united France and America, and continues: "The present position beaut resemblance to that at the close of the last contary. France seeks to found a liberal democracy at the moment when America emerged from a gignatic struggle for the destruction of sheety, which dishonored the Republic. The methods of Prance and America are diffusively ustablished in France will place the political seatiments of France and America are diffusively at abilities of France and America are diffusively but the doct in the season. Constitutions il Brenty at abilities in Prance and America and States will place the political seatiments of France and America and Capa at a state of the season.

N. Y. GOLD ROOM AND STOCK BOARD.

We gave last week a record of the fluctuations of the New York gold market during the memorable 28th of September. These fluctuations were not paralleled during the war period. No such scene as that presented in the Gold Room on the 24th has been witnessed since the Jay Coons, and Chassinaning of May, 1864.

panager May, 1864.

The Balls when they met that morning were confident. Some of them beasted that they read entry gold up to 200. Much of this confidence are due to the first that the Bidds felt severe as to any interference on the part of Secretary Bornwell. So they ldewige their bubble: they contried gold up to 100), which point it reached at thirty soft minutes past eleven of chel. A M. Among the promisent operators were Assurer Secretary, Hester Carons, Honack Watton and his brother, Mr. Contava, of the farm of Texton a Contava, Messay, Runar & Hutas, and fifty others. In order to bring before the reader's mind the scene of this exciting conflict between the Bulls and Bears—namely, the New York Gold Room—let him imagine a hippothestron, with a little fountain in the centre. The centre of the fountain is a bronze Cupid with a dolphin in its arms. From the head of Capid arises a tiny silver stream, which falls in jets into the basin below. Fracey as iron rading ninety feet in circumstructure about this basin, then a space of some twenty feet in circumstructure about this basin, then a space of some twenty feet in circumstructure about the fauntain, and to the fauntain, and to the fauntain, and the fauntain, and the fauntain, with the some for the errord hose, and the upper for the yearstrows. Beyond the fauntain, with his back toward New Screen, stands the Serretary, recombing the sales which he entered the server of the server. Wires run from his machine to nearly five hundred brokers officers, who are thus instantly informed of the stant of the market, and state of the market, and are enabled to make their hids undi-turbed by the furious expressent which rules in the Gold Room on important occasions.

THE NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE BOARD IN SESSION, SEPTEMBER 25, 1809.

SCENE IN THE GOLD BOOM, NEW YORK CITY, DURING THE INTENSE EXCITEMENT OF FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1869.

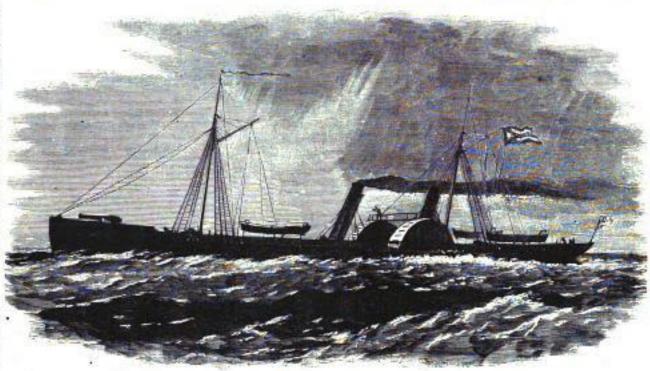

GEN. CARLOS MANUEL CESPEDES, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA.-(Str Page 663.)

GEN. MANUEL QUESADA, COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF OF THE CUBAN ARMY .- [See Page 663.]

Well, as we have said, at 11.36 a.m. the Bulls were triumphant. The Bears were nowhere. In one hour and thirty-six minutes gold had sprung from 150 to 162\(\frac{1}{2}\)—12\(\frac{1}{2}\) per cent. The scene in the Gold Room at this point baffles description. It was a scene of furices, raving, shricking termula. Then there was a wavering among the Bulls. A rumor had reached the Gold Room that Secretary Bottwell $4,000,000 of gold that same day. In twenty minutes gold went down to 140. But three minutes after (11.59 a.m.) it was up again to 160. From that point it went down steadily until the close of the session, at 3 o'clock P.M., when it stood 133\(\frac{1}{2}\). On the 25th the excitement which had ruled in the Gold Room on the previous day was trans-

On the 25th the excitement which had ruled in the Gold Room on the previous day was transferred to the Stock Board. We give on page 660 a picture representing the scene during the session of the

THE FIRST CUBAN MAN-OF-WAR, THE "CUBA," FORMERLY THE "HORNET."-[SER PAGE 663.]

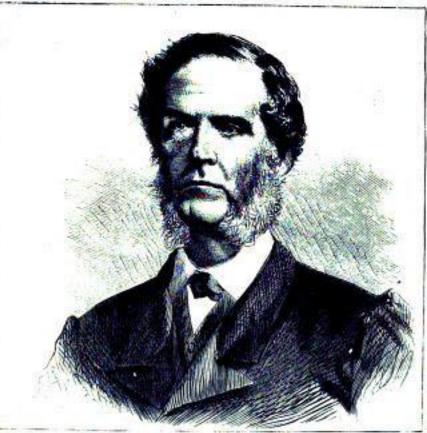

Stock Board on the 25th, It is said that one hundred and fifty of the operators in the Gold Room are also members of the Stock Board. The confusion, therefore, produced in the laster by the operations of the 24th may be readily imagined.

24th may be readily imagined.

An idea may be formed of the immense business of Friday, the day of the great panic, by a perusal of the following telegraphic statistics. On that day the Franklin Telegraph sent 5000 messages; the Bankers' and Brokers', 2232; the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company at the Gold Room, 2000; the office of the same line at 21 Wall Street, 800; and the main line, about 5000. More than four-fifths of this number were quotations of gold. It is stated that under the pressure the wires of the telegraph in the Gold Room were melted. The entire amount of gold sold in Wall Street September 24 is estimated at $500,000,000. This amount, upon a rough estimate, allowing sixteen dollars to an ounce, and sixteen ounces to the pound, and two thou-sand pounds to the ton, and one ton to each cart, would require a thousand carts to move it; and allowing twenty feet to each horse and cart, the string of carts would be about eight miles long.

GEN. PREDERICO P. CABADA, COMMANDING DISTRICT OF LAS VILLAS.—[SEE Page 601.]

GENERAL JUAN G. DIAZ DE VILLEGAS, -[See Page 661.]

THE RIPPLES' REQUEST.

Taratow on a sunbeam to play with t We'll break it and shiver it, Shake it and quiver it.

All to the tune that the noon-breezes sing.

The wild rose that blushes The wild rose that blushes 'Mid green stelles and rushes The sky-gazing Bly our coming that fears,
In vain try to catch it;
We waters will match it,
And break it in sparkles of diamonds and tears.

Throw us a flow'ret to play with I Three us a flow'ret to play web !

We'll resist it and whirl it,

And spin it and whirl it,

Giddly tree it and float it along.

Vainly it chower.

To the half-downing leaves

That stooy'd from the basks and are prisoners too.

Green weeds can not save it,

The herers plack'd and gave it

To us, and we'll play with it all the day through.

Send us-ra, send us a myocheam! No longer we'll rist, But quict, so quiet, Deep sleep we wil feige, lest it leave as again; For the obsery beam Loves to lie on the stream,

And to stream but dream, while the night-breezes sigh;

And we scarce dare to creep

Round the blies asleep,

For fear it should like once again in the sky.

A LOVER'S LEAP. By JUSTIN M'CARTRY.

In one of the few quarters of New York which innovation and progress have not touched, or which, to quote a famous jorne of Grattan's, "modern degeneracy has failed to reach," is a queer, quaint, mouldy-looking little sad church or chapel. How old it is I, unskilled in the archicology of the region, have no means of knowing; but I should think it might well have echoed to the heavy tread of stout Peter Stay-vesant; for the houses which now nearly gird it round are themselves asseignt of days—almost medical for a place like New York; and yet they have evidently grown up gradually keep since the building of this church or chapel. I ray this is critical, because I take it for granted that no mortal ever yet set about building a church where there was not more or less of a clear space around it; and this little church is now blocked up on three sides with houses. In fact, it stands, one might say, in a nicke formed by the encrowbing and almost encircling buildings. Its place is just a little distance back of a considerable and busy thoroughfare. You step aside into a little narrow and irregular gauge of small, decaying houses, and there before you stands the gate and the little church yard, reduced now to a more parch of dank grass railed around with a pulsade of rusty and moddering iron. Then you see the church, low, squar, square, built mainly of brick which once was red, but has failed to keep the natural rube of its checks; with a very low and stantest tower or belfive and a green despect of sullmans about it as of a structure which feels itself out of date and out of place, but which, nevertheless, positively refuses to surrender to the peogress of andirious change. Bound the three soles of the church tail bourses, swarming with popula-tion, have risen; and they have left so hitle breathing-space for the waverable building that there hardly seems a clear way for a decent donkey-cutt between its railings and their doors and stoops; and if one of those were to fall it would have no choose but to come crushing down into the church yard. The houses con-tain, floor over floor, offices of small mysterious agencies for cool-conquoies and building-compassies and such like; empenters' work-rooms, artificial flower-makers, gold-heaters, here-sellers; here and there a restaurant or a German conditorel; and that there are many laundresses in the region is made evident by the fact that al-most every roof is festioned with fluttering shirts, pantalets, and chemises.

In this dingy and melanchely region lived and bloomed a pretty girl as one might wish to see— Elsie Clairon. Elsie's granifather and grand-mother were French Canalians, who settled in Now York, and the family had gone on growing there since; and Elsie now lived with her father and mother, the only child left to them; for her three brothers had gone West, and were farming in different States. I.bie's father was a watch maker in rather a small way. He and his wife were persons of some coheation and taste, and they had had Elsie well taught. Among her other accomplishments she had some gift of music, and actually now held the important and lucrative post of organist in the drear little church

I have described. Now there had once been a sad calamity in Elsie's family. She had a sister, a handsome, dark-eyed girl, too attractive and too reviews for her surroundings; and she had been seen for her surroundings; and she had been seen somewhere by a young man from a better quarter of the city, and she had gone with him to the park and to concerts; and the rest need hardly be told. The poor girl repeated bitterby; and her parents would have forgiven her and still kept her with them, but New York was hateful to her; and as one of her brothers offered to give her a home she went with him, and her father and mother had to part with her. We do not meet with her directly in this story; she is mentioned thus early for the purpose of explain-ing and emphasizing the keen and almost morbid anxiety with which Elsie's father and enother watched over her as she grew to be a wo-man, and the beauty of her bright eyes and her graceful figure became more and more evident.

Continue

Elsie used to practice on the organ a good deal in the evenings, and even until it was quite dark very often. She had the key of the little church. She would let berself in, lock the door, mount to the organ-loft, and there practice her playing; and her father and mother, who lived in one of the houses on the right side of the church as you looked from the open struct, could hear the sweet, solemn notes of the organ, and they knew that their daughter's fingers were calling forth the music; and they were happy. Happier still, perhaps, were they when she thought she had practiced enough and descended from the organ-loft, came out of the desolate little church into the almost equally desolate little church-yard, locked the doors behind her, and was home, looking bright and winning and and ran home, looking bright and winning and full of love.

But what a darksome, grewsome place must have been that dreary church-tower for Elsie Clairon to spend evening hours in! She must have had a good conscience, and been very little afraid of ghosts, to endure that place alone in the gray, grim, evening hours. To stand alone in the church-yard outside, even though there be houses all around, would be trial enough for some norres at certain hours of shadow—and some nerves at certain hours of shadow-and yet this girl sits abone in that awasome organ-loft and plays for hours, long after the stars of the summer evening have begun to look out. Take this particular evening, for example. late; the sun has gone down a full hour; the season is the very latest verge of summer; the right has already begun to drop its curtain of gloom; the clouds cover the sky so that no stars sea he area, the sky so that no stars can be seen; the air is heavy, thick, surcharged apparently with electricity; there is evidently a thunder-storm approaching. Yet you can hear the tones of the organ distinctly; and when you hear them you may know that Elsie Clairon is sitting there in that doleful tower. It is very ghostly here—one wonders what it must be like

Well, the story-teller enters every where, and can take his audience with him, as the Diable Roiteux could carry Don Cleofas, and with Don Cleofas all the world of renders. We enter the church—and truly it is a dismal edifice. Things look far drearier within than even without. All is gray, gloomy, mouldering, sepulchral. The dismalness and darkness oppress the soul. How one Elsie endure the place? We follow the strains of her music till we find ourselves just on the last step of the tortnous, rickety flight of stoirs leading to the organ gallery; and there we purse. We will not intrude; but we will listen while the pretty girl plays, and we will admire the comage which enables her to brave this spectre haunted gloom.

Spectre-haunted! The word let fall carelessly noust have a genetic meaning here. There positively are ghosts—for there is a figure sitting by Elsic's side! And she knows it, and is not afraid. She still plays on; her skillful fin-gers never pause in their thrilling labor; but the goldin speaks to her in low, whispering tones; and Elsie whispers back in reply; and their heads are sometimes very close together.

Fish, my love," whispers the spectre, "don't you trust in me?"

She looks sadly, lovingly at him, and whispers

"Trust you? Als, if I did not trust you wholly, should we be here now together? I ever have allowed this to go on? Should I have risked so much? Robert, you know and Heaven knows-and only Heaven and you-how much I trust you."

'And you love me, Elsie?"

'Baye I not told you so, more than once?
And did you not know it even before ever I told you?

I am no cold-blooded creature, to weigh every word I ratter and gnazed every look-and you know it, Robert, before you ever pressed me

"I did, indeed; and therefore I loved you all the more. But since this is so, why will you not trust yourself to me-come with me and be my wife?

She shook her head.

"Your wife openly, Robert?"

"Openly; yes, after a while—a little while, just. I have a strong reason for it; I expect to be very soon in a position to have a claim your father even will admir."

"Can we not wait until then? I shall not

" But it may not be so soon as I expect; there may be delays; and I love you so much, Elsie, that I can not bear to wait. I want to be certain of you, come what will. "And I love you so much, Robert, that I can

All this time the organ kept on its playing, and gave an accompaniment of solemn psalmody to the word-duct of the lovers. For the figure by Elsie's side was clearly that of a lover, and not of a ghost; and now we know why the young orist was not afraid of the desolate darknesses of the old church.

The lover pleaded warmly, pensionately, vain-At last it became so late that Elsie must go; ly. At last it became so into that Elsie most go; and then their lips approached for one moment, and they parted. But here comes a strange part of the story. I have spoken of the old staircase which led up to the organ-loft. It mounted then a little farther up into the old belify or tower. Now, when the lovers parted, Elsie came down the stairs and Robert went up. She positively came down the stairs alone, crossed the floor and then the threshold of the old church, went out into the church-yard, locking the door behind her and carrying away the key! Has she then locked her lover into that dreary, ghastly solitude for the night? It is certain that, after Elsio's departure, nor man nor monse crossed the threshold of that dismal edifice.

Lincoln

Something like this went on during many occasional evenings of succeeding weeks. The lovers met and sat together and whispered; and Robert-frequently urged Elsie to marry him secretly, and she always refused, and spoke of her interested her like the loved her all the more even for her denial. Always, when they parted, she came down stairs and he went up; she locked the church door, and enter the tower and draw in the and she always refused, and spoke of her fa-ther and mother, and pleaded so tenderly that he loved her all the more even for her denial. Always, when they paried, she came down stairs and he went up; she locked the church door, and took the key away. What became of Robert? If he followed the staircase until it stopped he came into the court, some tower or helfer. come into the squar, square tower or belfry. Surely not a pleasant place to pass many successive nights in! This belfry had two windows. One looked out on the wider side of the church-yard, and scross it to the range of houses in which Elsie's parents lived; and nar-row as the passage was between the church and these houses, yet I promise you that no man could traverse in a leap one-third of the distance. On the other side the distance, to be sure, was much less; and there was a carpenter's work-room in one of the houses just opposite the tower window; and out of the carpenter's window there did some-times project a luge beam. Still, even between that beam and the turret window, there was a distance no man I ever saw would like to try to cross by a leap, even if we suppose our lover was insane enough to risk his life thus night after night. Moreover, there was a young carpenter almost constantly at work in that room; and he must have seen any such aerial exercises, supposing them to be possible.

Still there were eyes watching the lovers of which they never dreamed. Every pretty girl like Elsie Clairon has had to reject importunate admirers; and Elsie had had to repel, at last very sharply, the advances of Stephen Roseberry, who was clork to a low-class lawyer in the neighborhood, and Stephen was thoubly of course borhood; and Stephen was thereby, of course as every mean and selfish creature would be, con as every mean and seanal creature would be, con-verted into the enemy of the woman who would not have his love. One night, Elsie, not expect-ing her lover, and indeed believing him to be ab-sent from New York, did not lock the church door when she went in to practice, and the lover did come, after all; and Stephen Roseberry, happening to pass by the church and hearing the organ, went in, poor wretch! in the hope of meeting Elsia. As he entered he felt convinced that he heard her talking with semebody in the organ-loft. Yes—he listened, and he distinctly organ-tott. 1es—ne niteried, and he distinctly heard an affectionate good-night. Then be heard Elsie coming down; and he crouched in one of the pews to watch her. She passed along alone! She went out of the church alone—she lorked the door behind her—she locked Stephen in! Much as he was vexed and horrified to find himself locked in amidst the growing darkness of that glassly place, he yet had courage and energy enough to search through the church for Elsie's hidden companion. It was a small building, and the search was soon over. There was nobody there but himself. He searched up stairs and down stairs; in the organ-left and the helfry, and he found no one. No but himself was in the church? No human creature

There was no way for him to escape that night, unless, perhaps, by dashing out a window and creating an alarm, or tolling the bell. He wisely elected to avoid scandal, and so slept quietly in a pew until morning; then hid himself until the sexton opened the church doors, and so set out avoration!

so got out unnoticed. Now Stephen Roseberry was no believer in ghosts. Such belief is not a common weakness among lawyers' clerks. Moreover, even if he had believed in ghosts, he could never have been got to believe in the possibility of a pretty young woman spending an hour in a darksome church to cummune with a spectre. He therefore took it for granted that Elsie Clairon had been conversing with a living, flesh-and-blood lover; and as he could not guess how the lover had got out, he merely came to the conclusion that there was a way of getting out as yet unknown to him, and he went to work patiently to discover it. He thought of subterranean passages, trap-doors, gratings that could be lifted, and so on; and be lurked about the church yard of nights, and spied into every opening and outlet within his reach, as if he had been a professional detective. He discovered nothing. Elsie always came out alone; and yet he felt convinced that she had not been alone in the church.

At last, this very night that we have been speaking of, Stephen's patient meaking watch-fulness was rewarded. A mere chance showed him what his sugacity might never have discov-ered. He was at his post as usual, and he saw Elsie depart alone. The thunder-storm which had been threatening came on, and he ran for shelter to the side of the church where the houses approached nearest. The first flash of lightning made him look up involuntarily, and he started in wild surprise and excitement; for lo! above his head, he beheld the solution of the mystery.

Opposite the tower window was the carpenter's work-room with the projecting beam. From the tower window was pushed a long pole, apparently with a book or grappling-iron of some kind attached, for it caught firmly to the beam; and then along this pole, which looked to Stephen hardly thicker than a walking-case, the figure of a man crept astride with wonderful quickness and dexterity until it had reached the stoot beam, and then the window of the carpenser's work-room. It was but the affair of a moment, and the pole was drawn in, and all trace of the serial the pote was drawn in, and all trace of the aerial flight was gone.

There was the mystery explained! The houses, among which was the carpenter's room, were nearly all occupied in the upper stories by offices and working-places which were closed and descrited long before dark. Once the dusk of evening set in, there was hardly any one there to note the aerial fact of the daring lover. On swiftly up, and enter the tower and draw in the pole. He darted out of the church-yard and into the house where the carpenter's room was; rushed up the stairs, found to his joy that the room door was not locked, went in, dragged back by main strength the beam from the window, put down the glass of the window—it had no shutters—and ran down stairs exclaiming, as he went, "I have the rat now caught in the trap!" Then he burst into the apartments of old Clairon as the latter sat pottering over his watches, and told him a story which made Clai-ron's pulses thrill, and the veins in his forehead vell, and his eyes flash with a maddened light. Our lovers sat in the darkening church, and lsie's fingers still sent out their music. The Elsie's fingers still sent out their music. lovers were happier than they had been for some time, because Robert Dallas was able to tell her some news which gave them hope; and they both looked forward to a near-approaching time when mystery and concealment and clandestine meetings, and the whole system of secrecy, which meetings, and the whole system of secrecy, which was especially distasteful to Elsie's clear, pure nature, should be at an end, and the lovers could meet openly, and boldly demand the approval of their love. So, as they spoke together in low, hopeful, happy tones, there came a knocking at the church door, and old Clairon's voice called angrily to his daughter.

"Elsie, my dearest," said Robert, calesly, "it will not do for me to be found even now. Goodwill not do for me to be found even now. Goodwill not one; give me just one moment—keep on by, love; give me just one moment—keep on playing—and then open the door."

And he sped up stairs, nothing doubting that he should find the way of escape easy as usual. Elsie's color was heightened and her limbs trem-bled at the mere alarm of the knocking at the door; but she, too, never dreamed of any inter-ruption to her lover's flight. Robert Dallas sprang to the window and seized his pole. Suddenly he fell back amazed and star-tied, for on looking across he saw that the beam on which he relied had been withdrawn, and that the window of the room was closed. A sicken-ing sensation came over him as he thought of the odious suspicious to which poor Elsie would be subjected if he were how found there. Even in that moment of confusion it was evident to him that none accordance in the service to at least have shown a consciousness of innocence.

him that some enemy was at work, that some exposure had been planned and intended, and exposere had been planned and intended, and that the object was to injure Elsio. He knew what the fears and projudices—only in this case too natural—of old Clairon were likely to be; and how little he could blame the poor parent if he thought the west. Even if he had remained in the organ-loft with Flace and braved the anger of her father it would have been better; it would But now to have hidden, to have fied, and to be discovered after all—could any thing look more guilty? No—nothing could seem more guilty; and never were two human beings in the world more innocent. Elsie's fame was at stake! Every second that passed was fraught with rain.
Robert raged and chafed wildly — he almost thought of flinging himself out of the window headlong. Then he gathered his judgment and resolution about him, and calmly surveyed the place. Between him and the carpenter's window there was indeed a dark, wide, awful gulf. But a during and athletic gymnast might leap across it; and Dallas had been trained in the best gymit; and Dallas had been trained in the best gymnastic schools of England and of Germany. He hold his breath, guzed for a moment, made his inhealation, and decided. He scrambled into the tower window, and thence, summoting all the strength of his fibres and frame, sprang feet foremost, and holding his pole as if it were a lance, right at the window of the carpenter's room. He had not overrated his strength, agility, and accuracy of calculation. With a flight that almost took away his breath he crossed the space between wall and wall. His feet crashed through the glass and the sashes of the carpenter's window, and he might with the shock have ter's window, and he might with the shock fallen backward, only that the moment he drove his pole through the window he suddenly turned it into a horizontal position, and made it a bar which more than spanned the window inside, and enabled him to hold on safely and maintain his place. Then he descended quietly into the room. His hands and arms were cut and scratched, but his face was quite uninjured; and in a mere mo-ment the window was open, the broken sash taken away, the beam projected anew, and a young carpenter in his shirt-sleeves was planing away at the inner part of it.

When Elsie ran down to open the church door she had but one resolve, and that was—if her father came alone, and came with any suspicion of her lover's presence—to throw herself on his affection and tell him all. But her heart was chilled when she saw Stephen Roseberry, and knew at a glance that he had played the spy, and had filled her father's heart with suspicion.

had filled her futher's heart with suspicion.

Indeed, she got no opportunity of saying any thing. Her futher only pushed her aside, and, led by Roseberty, ran up the stairs of the tower. Roseberty apenng triumphantly into the tower, looked wildly about him, ran to the window, glared out of it, and then fell back utterly discomfitted. There was no one in the tower but himself and Clairon. In the window of the carpenter's room opposite a lamp was now burning, and the industrious young carpenter was quietly working away in his shirt-sleeves.

"Sold!" exclaimed Roseberry, hourse and almost breathless with excitament. "Clairon, I swear to you, he was here only five minutes ago."

"And flew out of the window there, like a bird, I suppose," replied Clairon, grimly. "Roseber-ry, you have been drinking, or your jealousy has taken away your wits. Only that I can make allowance for a disappointed man like you I would make you suffer for this. Go down stairs and get away, you fool! I was a greater fool still for paying any attention to your story. Take your dime romance tales somewhere else next Roseberry descended, silent and sallen, and went his way, still determined, some time or oth-er, to convict the lovers and establish his own justification. Old Clairon said not a word on the subject to his daughter, but was very kind and tender to her all the evening. For her part, she felt deeply compunctions, and only waited until her next meeting with her lover to declare to him that she would keep the secret no longer.

Her time of trial was nearly over. after, a handsome, very gentlemanly young man came into old Clairon's room, and told him he had come to ask for his daughter in marriage,

'I belong to a family one member of which did you a great wrong, Mr. Clairon," he said, gravely; "but I am glad to be able to tell you gravely; "but I am glad to be able to sell you shat he has to the best of his power endeavored to repair it. You will hear within a few days from your daughter Alice. She is now Mrs. Edward Dallas, and is the wife of my brother.

I am Robert Dallas—your daughter Elsie and I have long loved each other; but until the wrong done to you had been repaired we did not venture to ask you to consent to our marriage. My brother has a good heart, and some feeling of conscience and honor, and he is repentant, and will do his best to make one of your daughters happy. Give me the other."

happy. Give me the other. Needless to say that Robert Dallas was accepted and welcomed.

Then you were in the church that night?"

cld Clairon said, with twinkling eye.

"That night, and other nights—it is quite a remantic story, I assure you. I was the carpenter in the room yonder—I hired the room for the purpose. I always had a taste for amateur carpentering. I planned the pole and beam ma-

"Hut how did you escape that night? Rose berry swore he took away the beam and shut the window,"

"Just a little venture, and a leap across a few fect of space and through some panes of glass, But we mustn't tell Elsie of that—for the pres-ent, at least. It would alarm and distress her, perhaps. When the whole affair has faded into a little distance, I will venture some night to amuse her with this odd story of a lover's leap."

THE CUBAN REVOLUTION.

WE give this week, on page 661, portraits of the most prominent leaders of the Cuban revolu-tion, which we have obtained through the courte-sy of the officers of the Cuban Junta in this The officers of the Junta, believing that many of our readers may desire to obtain pho-tographic likenesses of President Cuarmons and of General Oursana, the Cuban Commander-in-Chief, have made arrangements to furnish such pictures, upon application at their office at No. 71 Broadway. The proceeds from the sale of these interesting photographs will be devoted to the alleviation of the sufferings of sick and wounded soldiers of the patriot Cuban armies. Cartos Manuel De Cespedus was born in ayamo, April 18, 1819. His parents were Just MARIA DE CESPEDES and FRANCISCA DE BOS-JA LOPES DEL CASTILLO, both belonging to most respected and honorable families of that city.

CARLOS MANUEL passed his boybood in country, where he breathed in from the exhila-rating air of the mountains an ardent love for liberty. Afterward he entered a convent, where he studied Latin and belles-lettres, remaining there till he attained the age of fifteen; he then went to Havana with the intention of studying law in the University, and completed the course, graduating in 1838, having passed a brilliant ex-

Now a lawyer, with the degree of Bachelor, he returned to Bayamo, and married Maria DEL

CARMEN CESPEDES, who died very recently.

In 1840 he sailed for Europe, and resided for some time at Barcelona. Here he made the necessary studies for the grade of a licenciado of the law, which he obtained in 1842.

He improved every occasion to defend Cuba acks which wer lands, and also formed a close intimacy with General PRIM, taking an active part in the republic an conspiracy which that distinguished man had incited. He was on this account banished to France by the Spanish Government. In 1844 he came to America, and fixed his residence at Bayamo, his native city. He obtained there great reputation as a lawyer, cultivated literature, and acquired a considerable fortune. In 1852 he was arrested in Bayamo because of a lemonstration which he had made at a banquet in favor of Cuban independence. From the pris-on of Bayamo he was sent to Morro Castle, in Santiago de Cuba, where he was held for five

In 1867, and during the early part of 1868, he suffered new persecutions from the government, and, escaping as he best could, he began anew to devote himself to the cause of his country with great carnestness, attending Masonic associations and assisting at revolutionary juntas, which were commenced in July of 1868, in which be always declared himself firmly for the independence of Cuba and its emancipation from the Spanish rule. He was also an advocate of negro emancipation,

The discontent of the country increasing, the result was new attempts for reform in the system of taxation, which was as ruinous as it was unjust, under Lansuspr's government. These attempts, with other influences, in the end brought about the revolution.

On the 8th of October the patriots began to assemble in the mill "Dernajagna" of Caspadas; and, with him at the head, five hundred patriots, on the evening of the 10th, swore allegiance to the flag of liberty.

The first encounter with the Spanish troops was at Yara. The revolutionary column, num-bering one thousand, marched to Barrancas, which was taken on the 15th; and on the 17th they advanced upon Bayamo.

Here the number of patriots was increased to three thousand, and after three days of siege and combat the garrison of the town was obliged to capitulate.

At this decisive moment CESPEDES desired to perform a great act of justice. He granted ab-solute and unconditional liberty to all his slaves, and took with him in his army all who wished to accompany him. From this time Caspanus has accompany him. From this time Caspenus has been at the head of the Cuban revolution, exhibiting the greatest patriotism, and renouncing all selfish aggrandizement. To-day he is President of the Republic of Cuba, and history will register his name among those of the great benefactors of humanity

General MANUEL QUESADA was born in the city of Camaguey on the 29th of March, 1833, and belonged to one of the principal families of Cubs. He emigrated, at the age of nineteen, to Mexico, impelled by the love of adventure.

Inclining to a military life, he entered the serv-ice of the Republit in 1856, and was always distinguished for his valor and isselligence. It is not necessary to say that he embraced the Lib-eral cause, fighting first at Partido Beaccionario, and always leagued against the Emperor Max-

As chief of a column be obtained very brilliant triumphs, and in battles with the French he had the glory of defeating them successively at Fortin, Tepojee del Rio, Arroyo-Sarco, Calpulalpan, San Martino, Fesmelucan, and in several other nctions, among which figure the memorable battles of the 5th of May, 1862, at Puchla and at Pachuca, where he was honored with the rank of His most brilliant victory was that of Palo-Gacho at Vera Cruz, where he muted a large force of African Cazadores and other cavalry with a much inferior force. It was at Calpulalpan that he attained to the rank of Colonel, and soon after to that of General, for his gallant con-The battle of Palo-Gacho was the first which took place between the Mexican and French troops, and this was soon followed by that of the Cruz-Blanca, or White Cross. General Quesana received medals of honor for the 5th of May and for Pachuca, and was selected to fill high official posts, among others that of Governor of the States of Flascala, Con-huila, and Durango.

In 1865 General Quesada came to New York, where he has devoted himself exclusively to the cause of liberty for his country, and has labored incessantly for that object, exciting in the Cuban patriots an enthusiastic desire to strike a deathblow to the Spanish rule in their island. Two months before the heroic President of the Cuban Junta gave the cry for independence in Yara, General Quesada was at Camagury, incognite, secompanied by the distinguished patriot Parlo Perse, they having gone thither for the purpose of organizing the insurrection, and providing for any deficiency in their military resources. He afterward proceeded to Nassau, from which place he superintended the insurrection of Yara.

He was enabled to collect resources there for the purchase of some thousands of arms; and with these and a handful of distinguished patriots of the Sociedad Habanero he embarked in a small vessel, in the midst of a violent storm, on the 23d of December, 1868. He succeeded in reaching the port of Guanaja, and disembarked the 27th of the same month, in spite of the fury of the elements and the fire of a small Spanish

General OURRADA did not astire to any command in Cuba, but the Court of Camaguey named him General-in-Chief of the troops of Comarca; and on account of his labors for the organization of the army, and his great services to his coun-try, he was named by the Congress, or Junta, General-in-Chief of the troops of the republic.

General FREDERICO FERNANDEZ CARADA, the son of an employe of the Spanish Govern-ment and a lady of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was born at Cienfuegos, Cuba, in 1832, fession of a civil engineer; but finding himself in this country at the beginning of the late war, both his sentiments and his convictions impelled him to join the Federal army, in which he served actively, with the rank of Captain, through the campaigns of M'CLELLAN, distinguishing himself in the operations of the Army of the Potomac, and finally taking part in the battle of Gettysburg. Taken prisoner in that battle, with a part of the regiment that he was commanding in the capac ity of Lieutenant-Colonel, he was with General GRAHAM, under whose orders he was serving, carried to the Libby Prison in Richmond, where he remained confined for nine months, suffering the greatest distress and privation. wrote, at the suggestion of his companions in misfortune, a little book, entitled "Libby Life," which he afterward published, and which met with great favor. After having been exchanged, and notwithstanding his feeble health, he accept-ed the position and performed the duties of Adjutant-General on the staff of General Binney; but on account of his sickness, which increased dur-ing the campaign against Richmond, he was compelled to give up the service.

Returning to his native country be was ap pointed by the United States Government to the American Consulate at Trinidad, which position he held from his nomination up to the outbreak of the Cuban revolution, the cause of which he ardently embraced. His position in society and his domestic happiness were sacrificed by Cababa at the call of duty; and, leading the uprising in the Cinco Villas district, he began the series of arduous operations which have caused the largest portion in the Central Department of Cuba to be rescued from Spanish tyranny. Major-General Canada is actually the Commander-in-Chief of the Cinco Villas army, by official appointment of the republican government of Cuba.

JUAN G. DIAZ DE VILLEGAS, a son of Cuban parents, and belonging to a respectable family, was born in Havana on the 24th of June, 1821. He lost his father at a very early age. His edueation commenced in his native city; but later he came to New York, and entered the college he came to New York, and entered the college of Mr. Provent. On account of the circum-stances of his family, he remained but a short time in this metropolis, and returned while yet young to Havana. There he found himself his own master; and it being very difficult for him to pursue a literary profession, he devoted his attention to the management of his estate in the country, and became a skillful planter. At twen-ty years of age he married, in Cienfuegos, his cousin, the daughter of his worle. José Guygo. cousin, the daughter of his uncle, José Graco-nio Diaz on Villagas, a distinguished and wealthy lawyer, whose landed property he man-aged until 1846. At that time the conspiracy of General Nancino Loruz was betrayed by one of the conspirators. In that plot VILLBOAS was engaged, as were also his father-in-law and his oldest brother, FRANCISCO, These two, although unconvicted, were imprisoned, and suffered the most cruel treatment at the hands of the Spanish Government, being confined for eight months in dark and fifthy dangeons. VILLEGAS escaped by reason of his being at the time in Havana. On the fullure of the LOPEZ conspiracy VILLE-

6.48 returned to his rural occupations, but always cherished a lively hope for the deliverance of his country from the tyranny of Spain. The glorious outbreak of Yara, therefore, found his patriotic feelings rendy to be awakened. VILLEGAS immediately decided to aid that outbreak by a revolt in Cienfuegos, and he devoted all his atten-tion to the securing of men and the accumulation of arms for that purpose. As he enlisted the general sympathies of his countrymen, these hastened in great numbers to compromise them-selves in the movement, choosing him as their in the movement, encouring must but the want of arms, unfortunately, provented his profiting by the services of all. Vit-LEGAS spent four months in this dangerous work of preparation; but at last it became impossible longer to conceal his operations, and on the 7th of February he took the field, leading a band of patriots, badly armed, but devoted to the cause. Their arms consisted of pikes, mucheter, pistols, and shot-guns.

VILLEGAS left his son LEGFOLD in the city, ordering him to accompany his mother and sis-ters; but the young man, desirous of serving his country in the field, disobeying his father's or-ders, abandoned the city and presented himself at his father's head-quarters, saying to him, "Though I am obliged to obey your orders as a father, you can not forbid me to serve my country as a soldier; and I ask of you a place as private in the ranks of the Liberating Army." Very soon did the young man prove that he was a true soldier of a noble cause; he distinguished himself highly for his courage and intelligence.

JUAN G. DIAR DE VILLEGAS IS to-day one of the most distinguished chieftains of the Cincos Villas army, and it is hoped that through his courageous efforts this part of Cuba will soon be completely free from Spanish thralldom,

On the same page with the portraits of these illustrious Cubans we give a representation of the first Cuben man-of-war, the Cube, formerly the Horaet. She is now fairly at sen, flying the Cuhan flag, with a full crew and a heavy armament, prepared to make war upon Spanish commerce. The history of this smart blockade-runner during the last few months has been an exciting one, from the time she left the yard of REANEY, NEA-FLE, & Co., at Kensington, until she completed her equipment as an armed privateer during the last few days. She has slipped successively through the fingers of the customs and revenue officers of Philadelphia, the authorities of Hali-fax, and of the port of New York; has shipped men, provisions, coal, arms, and ammunition within a short distance of the latter port; and is now at sea, and likely to do no little damage among the Spanish steam and sailing marine.

The armament of the Cuba consists of three 24-pound brass howitzers, forty or fifty copper torpedoes, ten tons of powder, and a large quan-tity of shot and shell, besides small arms.

On the 29th of September the Cuba hoisted the Cuban flag, and disclosed her true character. is commanded by Captain H100188, formerly of the United States Navy. She is a very fast vessel, and her only immediate trouble is likely to arise from a short supply of coal. In our news column will be found an account of the recent expeditions which have been fitted out for the aid of the Cuban patriots.

We give on page 668 an illustration of one of the Spanish gun-boats which, as our readers will nember, were ordered to be seized by our Secretary of the Navy a few weeks since. These boats received their hull at Mystic, Connecticut, but with this exception they have been constructed at the Delamater Iron Works of this city. Our illustration shows the first one of these Your that has been completed on her trial trip up the Hudson. She is a very sing little propeller, modeled somewhat after the old Savannah and Charleston line of steamers—a miniature Hwats-ville, in fact. She measures 105 feet on the keel, is fore-and-aft-schooner rigged, and carries an engine of 150-horse power. She has accommo-dations for a crow of forty men all told, and will carry a 100-pound Parrott gun. She can steam ten namical miles an hour, the speed obliged by the terms of the contract, and easily accom-plished by her on her recent trial-trip up the

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Way was Pharach's daughter like a broker!—Be-cause she got a little prophet from the rushes on the bank.

SESTIMENTAL YOUTH. "My dear Maria, will you share my lot fee life?"
PRACTICAL GIRL, "How many acres in your lot, Siz?"

When should a newspaper be the sharpest !--When it is filed.

Sheridan's Dance.

"Barstoga and Long Branch—you have seen them,"
Said Charley one morning to Joe;
Fray tell me the difference between them,
Foe bether my wig if I know."
Such Joe, "The the ensiest matter
At once to distinguish the two—
At the one you go into the water,
At the other it goes into you."

A Louisville matron, whose husband enores badly, sceps a clother pin underneath her pillow, and when his smoring awakes her she adjusts the pin on his head organ, and then slumbers pescefully.

Mr. Simms says if it wasn't for the hole in the hoop you couldn't put it on the barrel, and the barrel would burst.

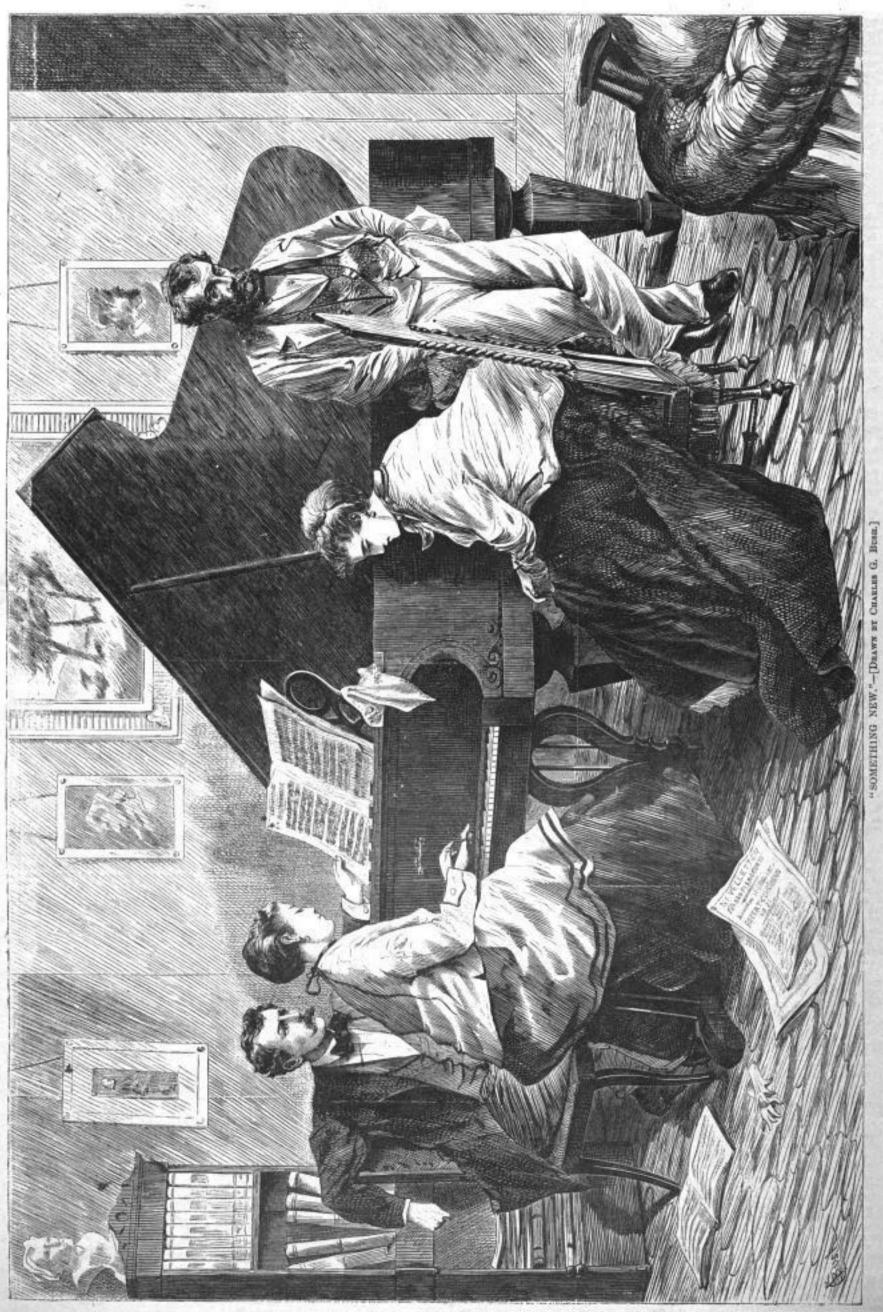

Gold at 160

Gold at 130

Digitized by Goodle

Digitized by Google

BYRON, THE FORBIDDEN.

THE DAYS THAT ARE NO MORE.

On, memories of green and pleasant places, Where happy bards their wood-notes twittered lew! Oh, love that it the dear familiar faces We beried long ago!

From barren heights their sweetness we remember, And backward gare with worful yearning eyes, As hearts regret 'mid snow-drifts of December The summer's sunny alors, Glad hours that seemed their rainbow tiats to borro From some illumined page of fairy lone; Bright days that sever lacked a bright to-morrow; Days that return no more.

Fair gardens with their many blossomed alleys, And red-ripe roses breathing out perfume; Dim violet rooks in green sequentered valleys, Emperpled o'er with blosts.

Sumets that lighted up the brown-leaved beeches, Turning their dusky glooms to shimmering gold; Moonlight that on the river's fere-fringed statches ed, white cayed, silvery cold

O'er moorlands blook we wander weary-hearted. Through many a tengled wild and thorny mane, Remembering as in drama the days departed, The by-gone happy days,

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aust Margaret's Trouble."

In gibe Books .- Book E.

CHAPTER XIII. JOE DOWSETT'S NEWS.

It was not far from ten o'clock when Joe Dowsett returned from Shipley Magna. Joe was in some respects an excellent servant, but he had his failings—among which might be reck-oned an inability to resist strong liquor when proffered gratuitously. During twenty years Joe had not been known to be drunk at his own expense. But a visit to the Crown at Shipley Magna, where he was an old crony and customer of the head hostler, was pretty sure to result in Joe's partial intoxication.

On the present occasion he had ridden to Shipley and back on the old pony, the sole benst of burden belonging to the vicar. And Joe attrib-uted the enormous amount of time occupied in the journey to his own remarkable humanity to the pony.

"Mustn't press him hard, the old beast," Joe on his retern, standing before the kitchen fire, the best of which caused his wet clothes to fire, the best of which cancer has we thinke to steam again.

"No fear of you pressing him hard to come away from the Crown," retorted Josepha. "I advise you to get to your bed, and take off them damp things. Else you'll be getting a fever, or the rheumaticks, or something. Only," she added, under hor breath—" only we know there's a special providence for certain folks; and I'm sure you're one on 'em this night, Joe Dowsett.

"All right, Jo-anna. I feel pretty comforta-ble, thank ce. No, no; musta't press the old pony. The merciful man is merciful to his

At this moment Catherine came back from the sitting-room, whither she had been, according to orders, to give her master the tidings of Joe's re-

"Master's fine and vexed," she said, "at Joe being so late. He said he wanted to send Joe to fetch home Miss Veronica if he had come at any reasonable hour. But now it's too late,"

"Why was he unwilling to let her stay at

Mrs. Plew's ?' asked Jonnua.

"Oh, I don't know. Miss Veronira has studd there before. But the vicar said as he'd have gone to fetch her hisself, only it's such a night, and been getting worse and worse since sun-down. I think master feels lonely after being used to Sir John's company. And then both the young ladies being away the first evening and all -it's made him cross. He says he shall go to bed, and you're to send him up a slice of dry teast and a glass of negus, with not too much nutmeg in it. "Negus ain't a bad thing," observed Joe Dow sett.

"You go to your bed, Joe, for mercy's sake!"
"You go to your bed, Joe, for mercy's sake!" eried the old woman, impatiently. "Then't stand a steaming there like a copper on washing day."

"I feel pretty comfortable, Joanna. I se friend of yours at the Crown this evening-Mr.

"Paul at the Crown!" excloimed Catherine. "Yes, Paul at the Crown. He pretended not to see me, and skulked through the tap-room like a rat. Sir John's a gentleman. I say no-thing against Sir John. But Paul—Paul's a sneak."

"Don't you talk nonsense. Paul never did you no harm," said Joanna. "And I don't believe you saw him at all to-night." "You don't believe --?"

"You don't believe - ?

"No, I don't. Him and his master was to sleep at Dancester hist night, and go off by an early train this morning. It ain't Elely as I'and should be at the Crown at Shipley Magon all alone. You must have took scenebody else for him. Paul would have spoke to you if it had been him. Why shouldn't be?"

Joe turned on her with crashing severity, "P'raps you'll say I was drunk next, Jo-

O Lord, no, I shan't say so. Maybe you are dreaming. But never mind now. Go to were drenming. But new hed; there's a good man.

It proved very difficult indeed to induce Joe to bed, bowever. He protested over and over go to bed, however. He processed over and over again that he felt presty comfortable. Then he required Joanna and Catherine to declare sol-county that they believed his statement about having seen Paul; which, finding it hopeless.

to get him to go to bed on any other terms, they unscrupulously did. Then he very unex-pectedly derlared that he and Paul had lived together like brothers; that there was no one for whom he felt a warmer regard; and that Paul's cold and unkind behavior had cut him to the heart. At last, by dint of scoiding and coaxing, he was got to his own room, the door of which Joanna shot, with a fervent prayer that they might not all be hurned in their beds, and with a gleam of comfort in the knowledge that the end of candle intrusted to Joe could not last above five minutes.

"Ain't is queer, Joe taking that notion about seeing Paul?" said Catherine, when ahe and Jo-anna were alone together. "Do you think it could ha' been—could ha been—what's that you call it when a person's ghost walks before they're dead, as a kind of a warning? Like that story you tell of the eldest son where you lived kitchenaid long ago. Oh, I know—a fetch. That's ie name. Do you think it could ha' been Paul's the name.

"Pooh, child! Servants don't have no fetches. Them kind of things only belongs to great families. Don't you go scaring your wits with such fancies, or I shall never tell you no more of my

"But," persisted the girl, "Joe said that the figure passed through the room very quick and silent, and with its head turned away, and—"

Well, if its head was turned away how was Joe to know who it was? It's just a drunken man's fancy, I tell you. Go to your bed. It's nigh upon eleven, and I have seen to the fasternings of the doors. Good-night. When Joe's sober to-morrow he will tell another story, I warrant."

But the next morning Joe told no other story. On the contrary, he persisted in his former as-sertion, and confirmed it by proof which it was impossible to doubt. He had remarked Paul's presence at the Crown to his friend the head hostler, and the hostler had said, yes; he knew him well enough. He was the foreign servant of that rich barrowknight as owned such nest nags, and had put up at the Crown for his hunding quarters. But in reply to a question as to what I all had come there for the hostler professed ignorance. It might be to fetch some traps of his master's. The hostler believed that there had been a porkmanty or something of that kind left in the landlord's care. Faul had brought a fly from the hotel at Danecester, and was to go back in it. So he (the hostler) supposed that he had to carry luggage.

"But why Paul shouldn't speak to me I don't know, nor I don't much care," said Joe Dowsest, whose feelings toward his dear friend had come down to their ordinary level of stellid indifference since the influence of his potations had subsided.

couldn't have believed as l'aul would have give hisself such airs," exclaimed Catherine, with a toss of her head. She felt that Paul's slight of Joe Dowsett was a reflection on the rest of the vicar's household.

About eleven o'clock in the forenoon Mand arrived from Lowater. Captain Sheardown had driven her to Shipley, and had set her down at the vicarage without alighting himself, purposing to proceed to Haymoor.
"Where is Verouica?" was Mand's first ques tion to her guardian.

"Veronica has displeased me very much," anveronics has dispensed the very misch, answered the vicar. "She went to drink tex with old Mrs. Plow, and chose to remain there all night, although she knows—or raight know if she had any sort of filial desire to ascertain my scatiments on any subject whatever-that I ob ject to her putting herself under any obligation of that kind to the Plews."

Mand looked grave, but said, sweetly, "Please don't be very angry with her, Uncle Charles. It was a dreadfully stormy night. Perhaps she was afraid of the walk home."

"She was assuredly not afraid of incurring my displeasure, whatever else she may have feared," said the vicar.

Mand made no further direct efforts to avert her guardinn's wrath; but she took the most effectual means of putting him into a good-hu-mor, by gayly chatting about all the little inci-dents of her visit to Lowater, the concert at Dancester, and the people who had been to the

She was in the midst of her talk, sitting, still with her hat in her hand, in the vicar's study, when the door of the room was opened a very little way, and a voice cried; "Miss Mand! Miss Mand! Would ye please step here a moment?"

The voice was old Joanna's; but so stronge and muffled in its tone that an unreasoning ap-probension of impending evil fell upon Maul's She sprang up, and foreing a smile, said:

"Uncle Charles, I must go for an instant to say a word to Jounna. I'll be back as soon as pos-sible. The dear old woman has some mighty mystery on hand." She closed the study door with an instinctive care, for which she could never afterward account, and faced a countenance which seemed, like Medusa's folded head, to turn her into stone.

The countenance was Jonna's, But so changed, ghastly, and aged was it that Mand would hardly, under other circumstances, have recognized the familiar features.
"What is the matter, Joanna?" she asked, in quick, low tones, whose firmness surprised her

"My dear Maudie," answered the trembling old woman, "my swest young lady, don't ye lose your head. It's all we've got to depend on! I feel my years now as I never felt 'em befure." Mand made a silent, eloquest gesture of im-

"Yes, I will speak, deary. Mr.—Mr. Plew's bere. He looked in by—by—chance like. And —O Lord be metriful to us, and spare us!—be says, Miss Veronica is not at his mother's, and what's more, basn't been there all night. And what to do, or what to say, or what will become of the vicar, I don't know!

Where is Mr. Plew? Take me to him. There is some mistake, some misunder-standing. No harm can have happened to Veronica, here, in her own home, among her own people! It is impossible!"

people! It is impossible!"
"Oh, my deary, Mr. Plew is more like a mad creature than any thing else. And as to harm—
My innocent young lady, it goes to my heart to hurt you, but I'm afraid—I'm sore afraid—" "Of what?"

The old woman made no answer, but mouned

and wrung her hands.

A dreadful apprehension took hold of Mand that Mr. Plew had brought some fatal and decisive tidings; that Veronica was dead, and that the old servant was endeavoring to break the news to her. Collecting her senses as well as she could, she bade Joanns take her to Mr.

Piew at once, and let her know the worst.

Joanna pointed to the door of the dining-par-lor, and Maud sprang into the room.

CHAPTER XIV.

FLED,

JOANNA had not much exaggerated in saying that Mr. Plew was "more like a medman than any thing else." He did seem to have nearly lost his se

"Oh, Miss Desmond!" he cried, as soon as he caught sight of Maud, and then stood dumb with clasped hands.

"Please to tell me at once. It will be kinder, indeed it will! Is she dead?"

The utterance of the word seemed to force a gush of tears from Maud's eyes, but she struggled hard to command herself.

The little surgeon recovered some spark of manhood and courage at sight of the young girl's piteous, innocent face. His professional helpfulness came to his aid, and took him away from the contemplation of his own distress.

"Hon't try too violently to force back your tens," he said. "Let them come. You will not let them master you. No: I do not think Veronica is dead. No, on my honor. I would not deceive you."

"What is it then? Is she ill? Has there been any accident? Is she in danger?

I wish to Heaven, Miss Desmond, that I could answer your questions. All I know is, that Miss Levincourt did not sleep at my mo-ther's house last night—did not even go there at all—and yet she sent word here by the boy that she meant to do so."

"But the boy may have mistaken her message. She may have said that she was going elsewhere. Have you asked? Have you inelsewhere. Have you asked? Have you in-quired in the village? Joanna's face and—and yours have infected me with terror. But I can not-I can not-believe that there is any real ground for alarm."

"Alarm!" echoed the voice of Mr. Levin-court, and the next instant he stood in the oom. Any attempt at concealment was out of the question. A glance at the faces of Maud and Mr. Plew sufficed to show the vicer that some terrible misfortune had happened.

"Dear Uncle Charles," said Maud, taking his hand, "Mr. Plew has told us that Veronica was not at his mother's house last night. Don't, pray don't, give way to terror, dear Uncle Charles. It has been some mistake of Jemmy Suck. I am sure, quite sure of it. What harm one have happened? We should have been sure to hear of any accident, you know. Ill news always travels quickly. We were startled at first, but now I am coming to my senses a little, and I see how foolish it was to be so frightened!"

The poor child was trembling in every limb, and the hand with which she clasped the vicar's was as cold as marble.

Some men in Mr. Levincourt's case would have rushed instantly forth; would have sought here and there; would have inquired feverishly; would, in brief, have been spurred by their anxiety into immediate energy and action.

But the vicar was at first stunned, not stimu-Inted, by the blow. He sank down in a chair like one whose bodily powers had been suddenly

The first thing to be done," said Maud, " is to send Joe into the village. Let him go to Sack's farm and try to find Jenamy. Then he might go or send to the Meggitts. It is possible that Veronica may have gone there. Miss Tur-tle and the girls were always asking her. And you will make inquiries, won't you, Mr. Plew? I see more and more how foolish it was to be so frightened!"

The vicar, as he recovered from the first shock, and as Maud's elastic courage and young hope-fulness rose higher and higher, and began to chase away the first ghastly fear that had crushed him, displayed an unexpected phase of feeling: he grow angry. He resented the pain he had been made to suffer. "I think, Mr. Plew," he said, in a voice whose trembling tones were by no means under control, "I must say that I think it highly inconsiderate on your part to come here and cause so very ter-rible—so unspeakably terrible—an alarm with--so unspeakably terrible-on alarm without having better grounds for it."

The little man, who seemed to be entirely uninfluenced by Mand's cheering suggestions, stood silent, and cast an appending glance at the young girl.

"Law dear, Sir!" cried old Joanna, who had
"Law dear, Sir!" cried old Joanna, who had remained in the room, "don't ye say that! Mr. Plew came here without knowing a thing about Veronica. He was took aback and scared well-nigh as much as you was when I opened the door and asked him where she was, and why she hadn't come home with him."

"Is Joe gone? Is he going?" exclaimed the vicar, rising from his chair, and speaking now with nervous rapidity. "Why does no one ex-ert any energy? I shall go in one direction myself—Joe must take another—to Sack's farm—d'ye hear? And, Plew, you will—you will search—" Then a sudden terror overcame him, and he fell back into the chair again with a groan. "My child! my child!" he cried. "Oh, my child! At this moment she may be —dead!" -dead

'No, no, no-not that!" exclaimed Mr. Plew, eagerly. "Not that! I do not search dead. I do not believe she is hurt. That is not what I fear."

"Then, Sir, what is it you do fear? It is not this, and it is not that! What means have you of knowing? And how should you understand or anowing? And how should you understand a parent's natural apprehensions, or undertake to limit them? Have you," he added, suddenly, having caught a glimpse of intelligence that passed between the surgeon and Joanna—"have you any information that you are concealing from me?"
"No! No!"

"You have! I see it in your face—and in hers. Joanna, I insist, I command, you to speak! Plew, if you think it kind to keep me in suspense you are cruelly mistaken. Tell me the truth!"

the truth!"

"Mr. Levincourt, as God is my witness, I know nothing! I do not, upon my soul! But I—I had a momentary fear—a mere momentary suspicion—that—"

"Suspicion, Sir!"

"That—that Miss Levincourt might have left her home, purposing not to return to it."

"H—how dore you?" gasped the vicar; and then suddenly ceased, as though the words were arrested in his throat and were almost choking

"Untie his neckcloth!" cried the surgeon, springing forward. The vicar waved him off, but suffered old Joanna to obey Mr. Plew's di-

Mand looked from one to another in an agony of bewilderment.

"Left her home!" she exclaimed. "Veron-

"Lett her home, purposing not to return to it! How? Why?"

"Whisht, my deary!" muttered Joanna, still busied about her master. "Don't ye give way. It may not be so had as we're affeard."

"So had as what? What does Mr. Plew mean? What are you all afraid of? Oh, Ve-ronica!"

"Here be is, Sir! Here's Jemmy!" cried Joe Dowsett, dragging Jemmy Sack into the room after him. "I was on my way to the farm when I met him. Now speak, you young rascal, and tell his reverence what Miss Veronica said to

The boy was flushed, penting, and very much frightened. Joe had expended a great part of his own painful excitement in hauling Jemmy Sock to the vicarage with very unnecessary vic-

Hence.

"I bain't a young rascal!" said Jemmy, driven to bay.

"And I told the message here last night as Miss Veroniky said, so I did."

"Don't be afraid, Jemmy," asid Mand, trying to soothe the boy.

"No one will hart you. You have done no harm."

No, I knows I haven't!" retorted Jemm "But you will tell us what—what Miss Ve-ronics said, won't you, Jemmy? We are all in sad trouble because we're afraid some harm has happened to her, and we want to find out where

The sight of the sweet, pale face, down which the tears were now streaming fast, and the sound of the sweet, tremulous voice, instantly melted the boy's heart, and he professed his readiness to say all that he knew. But that amounted to say all that he knew. But that amounted to very little. He had seen Miss Veronica at the school-house. But she had not remained until the end of the practicing. Before leaving she had said to Jemmy that she was going to Mrs. Plew's house to drink tee, and that, as the evening was turning out wet, she should sleep there. Jemmy was to go and take that message to the vicarage. But he was not to go until quite late; not until after seven o'clock at all events. And Miss Veronica had given him a silver sixpence, and bade him earn it honestly silver sixpence, and bade him earn it honestly by doing exactly as she told him.

"And so I did," protested Jemmy. "I niver goe'd near the vicarage until nigh upon eight o'cleck, and it was powering wi' rain, and I was seaked through, and when I got home daddy threshed me." thrashed me.

thrashed me."

Old Joanna stood by, emphasizing every word that the boy uttered by a nod of the head, a sigh, or a gesture with uplifted hands, as who should say, "Ay, ay: it is just as I thought!"

Ever since the speaking of those words by Mr. "Plew which so aroused the vicar's indignation. the latter had sat passive—almost sullen—in his chair. He had listened to Jemmy Sack's story in silence, and had apparently relinquished his seek his daughter. Now purpose of going forth to he rose, as though struck by a sudden idea, and hastily left the room. His footsteps were heard ascending the staircase and entering the apartment overhead. It was Veronica's chamb The steps ceased, and there was silence in the house. The little group in the dining-parlor stood staring blankly at each other, Mand's tears had ceased to flow. She was frozen by a new and but half-comprehended

Presently Catherine ran in from the kitchen. People had come to give what information they could. By this time the whole village was acquainted with Veronica's disappearance. Hoger the plowman's wife had seen Miss Levincourt by berself walking along the Shipley Magna road very fast. Miss had not said good-afternoon to her. But she (Roger's wife) thought she might not have seen her, for she was going along in a quick, scared kind of a way, looking straight before her.

Immediately after this woman appeared a witness who testified to having seen the vicar's daughter in a carriage, driving swiftly on the road between Shipley Magna and Danecester, between five and six o'clock on the previous even-

This man was the Shipley-in-the-Wold and Danscester carrier, who knew Veronica well by sight, as he did most people within a circuit of twenty miles round Shipley. He had just heard, he said, down at the Red Cow that the young lady was missing. So he thought he would step up and say when and where he had last seen her. On hearing the first words of this man's story Mand had rushed breathlessly up stairs to call her guardian. In a few minutes she returned alone to the door of the dining-room, and beckoned

Mr. Plew to come to her.

The babble of voices, which had arisen high and confused when she had left the room, ceased suddenly as soon as her white face was seen again in the doorway. There was a pause of expect-

What is it?" whispered Mr. Plew, obeying

Mand's summons.

"Will you please step into the study to Uncle Charles for a moment, Mr. Plew?"

She preceded him into the study. The vicar was sitting there with a paper in his hand.

"Is there news?" cried Mr. Plew, eagerly.

The vicar's face showed a strange agitation an agitation different from the first emotions of surprise and slarm which he had exhibited on learning that his daughter was not to be found.
"Yes," he said; "there is news. I am-happy-thankful-that Veronica is in safety. has been a false alarm-a-a mistake. I am quite relieved.

"Thank God!" cried the surgeon, fervently.

Mr. Levincourt tried to speak with some de-gree of self-control. His hand shook, and his tures twitched.

"I have cause to be thankful," he began, and then suddenly broke down and turned away.
"Tell him what I wanted, Maud," he murmured in a stifled voice. Then he bent his arms on the table, and bowed his head, and hid his face in his hands.

"Will you do us the great kindness," said Maud, addressing the surgeon, "to get rid of all those people? Thank them, and say-what is Enting."

"But what am I to say?"

Maud glanced at the vicar, but seeing him motionless, with his face buried in his hands, she answered:

"Mr. Levincourt wishes them to be told that Veronica is in perfect safety. There is no cause for alarm. He has found a letter from her." "Impress upon them," marmured the vicar, with still averted face, "that there has been a— misunderstanding. If I had seen the letter soon-Miss Levincourt did not leave my house without informing me."

Mr. Piew still hesitating, Mand made an imploring gesture.

"Prny, pray, Mr. Plew, send those people

Mr. Pless proceeded to obey the vicar's directions as well as he could. The poor little man's heart was aching and his spirit was troubled. At length he succeeded in inducing the little crowd to depart. They went unwillingly and with a perfect bunger of unsatisfied curiosity. They would fain have lingered in the kitchen to talk and to hear; but old Jonna very unceremoniously bade them begone, and was obdurate to-ward all attempts at discussing the question of Miss Veronica's departure. "I know no more than my betters chooses to tell me," said Joanna. "Thank God the lass isn't murdered, nor any way hurt, nor yet drowned, nor yet kidnapped. That's all I know. And her father knows where she is. And so I don't see as the rest is any of our business."

"Mr. Plew," said the vicar, when the surgeon, having knocked at the door of the study, had been resemitted by Mand—"Mr. Plew, if I showed undue resentment for what you said just now, I ask your pardon."

"Oh, Mr. Levincourt! Don't, pray don't speak of my pardon! But—Miss Desmond said you had found a letter—"

"I have found a letter from my daughter, and I am going to London to-night.

"To-night!"

"To meet Miss Levincourt?" To meet Miss Levincourt if possible. I take Mand with me. I may be absent some time, and she can not remain here alone. I shall place her under the protection of her aunt, Lady Tallis, who is in London. If you are asked about Miss Desmond, I wish you to be able to say that she, at least, is in safety."

There was a bitterness in the vicar's tone as he spoke the last words which sent a pang through the surgeon's heart. He was, as Joanna had spoke the last words which sent a pang through the surgeon's heart. He was, as Joanna had called him, "a soft listle man."

"I hope," said he, wistfully, "that I may be able to say so of Ve—of Miss Levincourt too."

"Mr. Plaw, I believe you are a sincere friend, and that you wish well to us all," said the vicar, suddenly. "I will trust you."

"You may, Mr. Levincourt. I—of course I knew all along that it was of no use; and I never—accretely ever—allowed myself to feel any thing like hope. She was so superior in every way. But I am not altogether selfish. Veronica's happiness is very dear to me. It's all over now, of course. But if—if there is any thing in the world I can do for you, or for her, you may be sure I I can do for you, or for her, you may be sure I shall not flinch."

shall not flinch."

The vicar took the little men's hand. "Ah!"
he meaned, with the cruel candor of a man absorbed in his own trouble; "it might have been better if she had been able to bring herself to

SERVICE TO THE PROPERTY OF THE

Any thing would have been bet-She has run away, Mr. Plew; care for you. run away with that—"he checked himself, "with Sir John Gale."

"I knew it!" cried the surgeon. surprised." But his face grew dea But his face grew deadly pale as he spoke.
"Let it turn out as it may," resumed the vicar, "I can not easily forgive her. She has been ungrateful and deceitful. But she is my child, my only child. I can not abandon her to her fate. She writes me here that Sir John had private reasons for making a secret marriage-

"Marriage! Is she married?"
"If she is not be shall answer it, the infernal villain! But," added the vicer, recovering him-self somewhat, "you perceive how all-important it may be not to give evil tongues a handle. You will speak of—you will defend—a runaway match, while worse. That is had second. I must no nothing more. That is bed enough. I must go to London to-night. A train leaves Dancester at midnight. I might drive to a by-station at once, but I should be no better off. We must wait for the twelve o'clock mail; there is no direst train to London between this hour and midnight. Every hour seems an age."

"Yes, yes; you must go. God grant you may find her! Have you any clew?"
"A few words despend by the seems." "A few words dropped by that man's servant. And his own intention, expressed some time ago, of going to Italy. If I can but be in time to prevent their leaving England-

"And Miss Desmond goes with you?"

"Yes. My poor Mandie! Ah, how little your mother thought to what contact with misery and disgrace she was exposing you when she bequeathed you to my care!"

They were the first words of consideration for any human being's sufferings, save his own, that the vicar had spoken.

Arrangements were hastily made for the departure that evening. Mr. Plew was helpful and active. He ordered a vehicle to take the vicar and his ward to Danecester at seven o'clock. Joanna was to be in charge of the house. Cathrine sobbed as she packed up a few clothes for Meud.

Seems like as if a earthquake had comed and swallowed us all up, miss," said Catherine. The vicar had fought hard to show a brave front to the servants, to keep up appearances; but without much success; for there was no conviction at the bottom of his own heart to enable him to persuade others that all would be well with his daughter. He was too much a man of the world to give credence to the assertion made in the hurried letter left behind her by Veronics, that weighty private reasons had prevented Sir John Gale from openly demanding her hand, and had indoced him to urge her to consent to a clandestine " For a man of his age and position marriage. there can exist no such reasons," mattered the vicar between his clenched teeth. "Misemble, wrenched, misguided, degraded girl! But if there is justice on earth he shall marry her. He shall find that he can not thus outrage and defy the world. He shall marry her by—"

The dusk was failing when the vicar and his ward drove away from the garden gate of the vicarage. As they passed the spot where Sir John Gale had been found bleeding and insensthis on the ground Mr. Levincourt closed his eyes and grouned aloud.

Mand started, as the scene recalled to h mind the fact that the accident had happened little more than two mouths ago.

"Two months!" she said to herself, while the tears blinded her eyes and streamed down her cheeks. "How happy we were only two months ago!"

BIOLOGY.

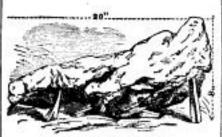

Among the various departments into which tience is subdivided, biology is one which is explained to be the dortrine of forms and functions. Certain it is that nature acts by determinate laws in reproducing the same forms in the animal and vegetable kingdoms through indefinite periods of duration. How it so happens that the brilliant colors in the plumage of the peacock, or the stripes on the zelon, or spots on the leopard's skin are there, is quite beyond our ken. The fact is undeniable that it is so, and there philosophy leaves the subject. Each one of the internal organs has a definite shape, color, weight, and specific function to perform. Why all that oc-curs, or how each and every one of them should he so, can no more readily be elucidated or exned than external forms.

Physiology is better understood than biology, yet that barely opens the way for thoughtful speculations, without affording very satisfactory information on the laws of life. Both of those studies have their value, because they carry a convincing evidence on their frontlets that if we can not explain the rationale of what is transpiring in vegetable or animal growth, or what makes the sap run in the one or blood in the other, we can not deny the existence of a Superior Power somewhere, which originated all vitalized mechanism and set it in motion. Forms and functions, therefore, are the definite expressions of Almighty agency.

CANNIBALISM.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY has expressed an opinion that in the earliest ages of the world the first im-pulse of man was not to love his neighbor, but paise of man was not to love his neighbor, but to eat him; and at a recent meeting of the Archaeological Society of Copenhagen the sa-vans assembled from all parts of Europe, in-cluding such well-known names as Worssas, Hildebrand, and the celebrated Belgian profess-or, M. Spring, unanimously agreed that canni-ballem provailed among the primitive inhabit-sate of the globe. On one point, however, opinious are divided, some holding that meneating was a matter of taste, while others are in-clined to look on it as a religious, or rather superstitions, observance. As late as the year 785 Charlemagne issued a decree sentencing to death any individual convicted of having enten a witch in order to destroy her spells. Witch-eating in order to destroy her spells. Witch-eating can hardly have been a matter of taste, as even "those who were fond of the flesh could not have been partial to bones." Heckle quotes comparatively recent instances of anthropophagy connected with religious feelings, in Germany during the Thirty Years' War, and in Scotland at about the same period. Among the most curious documents produced at the meeting was a manuscript of St. Hieronymus, who asserts, on the authority of a native of Great Britain, that children were a staple article of food in that country. that country.

BIG NUGGET OF GOLD.

Tens nugget, now on exhibition in San Francisco, weighing 95 pounds, and valued at $22,000, is the largest piece of gold ever found in Cali-fornia. It was taken out from the Monumental Quartz Mine, situated about twelve miles north of Downleville at the Serra Buttes. The nugget was found at a depth of 25 feet from the top on the 18th of last August. There had been taken from the mine up to the 1st of September $70,000 with the labor of three men; and it is still pay-ing at the rate of $1500 per day, the gold being washed from the decomposed quartz with com-mon pans. Our picture is from a sketch by L. R. Townsand

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

HARTER & BROTHERS paid over Fire thousand dollars in Gold for the Early Sheets of George Elia's Needs, which they have issued in five handsome duodecime volumes, at 75 cents each, but which Forum, Owners & Co. are now engaged in reprinting on that house in an inferior style and at a higher price.

"Cannot corn," as it is technically termed, is doubtless a well-known and favorite article of diet with many of our readers; yet few, perhaps, have watched the process of preparing and homostically scatting the fresh corn, as dense on a large scale in numerous fac-tories in the country. In the "beight of the essent," which has just passed in New England, we visited one of these cars factories, located in a flourishing town in Maine. It is said, by-the-way, that the excet-corn grown in New England, and in the higher failtnies generally, is sweeter and richer than that produced eleewhere. Be that as it may, what we caw at the factory we visited looked and tasted nice enough for any one's table.

The corn is brought fresh from the fields, and the first process, husking, was performed out of doors by nimble-handed boys. On entering the first room of the establishment we found a busy throng of lade and lasties, each seated before a wooden trough; one division of which was filled with the burked corn, and into the other division they cut the corn from the cobs, the compassing through into a tin receptacle beneath The kulfe used in this process is of curious make, hav-ing a gauge so arranged that the kernels are cut only to a certain depth, usually about half through, the re mainder being scraped off with the back of the knife; thus the hull is excluded. The corn thus prepared is conveyed to immense tin vessels, and kept cool by blocks of ice. From one of these reservoirs a man fills a small sort of hopper, while another places undementh one of the tin cane which is to hold the even Down goes the hopper, and the can is filled. It is immediately taken, and with surprising quickness weighed by a third assistant, who adds or sub-trarts a little, as the case may require. A fourth, with sponge and water, cleauses the outside of the can from any juice there may be upon it: a fifth puts on the cover and purches in it a minute hole, when it is passed to the smith to be soldered. Thence it is conveyed, with numerous companions, to the boilers, where thousands are boiled for hours. Before the covers of the huge boilers are closed, however, each set of came is tested; and if any one is not air-tight, it is taken out and specially ductored. After boiling the requisite time the case are taken out, punched again to let out my stray bubbles of air, soldered up, and then subjected to a second boiling. By this time the bright tin cans have become sopewhat discolored by heat. They are polished, the labels pasted on, and then they are packed in boxes for market—a large proportion being sent to New York. Every thing conected with the establishment indicated acrupatous nicety, so that we shall est cannot corn next win ter with even more relish than hisherto.

An ingenious Prussian has invented an ice and cold An ingenious Pressure in as invented as see and cook producing machine, the action of which is based on the priorities of producing cold and warmth by the expansion and compression of atmospheric air. The machines require no chemicals, nothing being used in them but water and atmospheric air; they may be wrought by steam, water, or wind, and they produce from 100 to 1000 pounds of toe per hour according to

The New York Medical Genetic draws attention to the fact that in this sity $12 more deaths occurred to the first than in the second week of January, 1969; and pertinently inquires, "Were these deaths occa-sioned by an over-supply of bad confectionery gives to children, and an expose of discipation by men? In the fourth week the deaths were $90 less than in the first. The number of deaths in the first week was not assist member by the inventor fourth week was

The anthracite coal-fields of Pennsylvania comprised in six counties, underlie 470 square miles of mountain and valley, and, so far as yet discovered, contain the only anthracite deposits of the conti-nent. More than $40,000,000 has been absorbed in mining capital, and about the same sum in capale, and $10,000,000 in milroads, constructed simost sole-ly as means of transportation for coal. In the whole anthracice region there are about two hundred firms and incorporated companies, which have equilito the market during the past year about 16,000,000 tons of coal. Of the market production nearly 6,000,000 tons were sent by the three great companies. Deleware, Larkswams, and Western, Delaware and Hudson, and the Pennsylvania Coal Company.

We see it stated that Henry W. Raymond, eldest son of the late Henry J. Raymond, will take an edi-torial position on the New York Trees in October.

An international land and labor agency is now bo-ing established at Birmingham, England, by Hon-Elibu Burritt. Its object is to facilitate the settlement of English farmers and mechanics in the United States, and also to supply American orders for En-glish laborers and domestic servants of all kinds. Large numbers of servant-girls in England would be glad to come to America, but are anable to pay their passage-money, and unwilling to start without knowisg where they are to go on arriving. This agency advances the passage-money, which is to be deducted from the first wages.

Tobacco has really been applied to a useful pur-pose, lock-jaw having been, in one instance at least, cured by it. A soldier in Illinois was wounded in the foot, and, having taken cold in it, lock-jaw ensued. No medicines could be procured, and, as death seem-ed inevitable, an experiment was tried by one of the officers. He cut off a square of tobacco (about three inches square), put it in a moss-pan with boiling water until it was heated through and saturated with the water; allowing it to cool, so as not to blister, be then fasticued it out, and placed it on the pit of the man's stomach. In about five minutes the peticul turned while about the lips, which also began to twitch, and in nine or ten minutes his jaws fell open. Indeed, it seemed as if the patient would fall spart, so onterly was his whole system relaxed. The tobacco was immediately removed, and some whichy-grand given to stimulate him. The next day the man was able to be carried in an ambulance, and was some considerabe carried in an ambulance, and was soon convales. cent. In lock-jaw it seems necessary to produce nan-ses that the rigid muscles may relax, and tobacco, The remedy, how applied externally, has this effect. erer, is very powerful, and should be used with ex-

Some time ago several instances were in the lowusis of the day, indicating that persons had been pois-oned by wearing colored seeks and under-garments. Experiments have proved that many of the fashionaxierthems have proved that many of the histocra-able dyeing ingredients are artive poleone, and liable to produce a painful local affection, induced by the ab-sorption of the dye through the skin. A gentleman in London lately purchased some socks with a Magne-ta stripe. He were a pair of these one ware day, and at night he felt a good deal of irritation and tingling-in his test, which he ascribed to the attack of a time. in his set, which he ascribed to the attack of a name-less asimal. In ignorance of the true cause he excitinged wearing the weeks for two or three days more, by which time the skin of the beeks had become red and inflamed, where the edge of the shoe caused most friction, and this was succeeded by a time of vession-tion around the heel and side of each foot. The disease thus artificially induced was symmetrically placed on the two feet, and compounded with one of the colored stripes.

The "Bibliothique Internationale Universelle" is a literary undertaking of vast extent which has been projected by a society of savans in Paris. It is to con-sist of two hundred volumes in large octava, to be issped at the rate of two volumes each month, and has for its object the reproduction of all the mester-pieces of literature, both ancient and modern. The French Government has recognized the importance of the work, and has approved its publication, and many eminent men have promised their co-operation.

Br. Charles F. Hall, the distinguished Arctic explorer, recently arrived at New Bedford, in the bark 6765s, from Repulse Bay. He brought with him, as among the results of his five years' residence in the Arctic regions, the most interesting intelligence in regard to the death of Sie John Franklin and his commentations, and coordinate record that new of the panions, and conclusive proof that none of them ever reached Montreal Island. He saw the natives who were the last to look upon Crosler and his party, and brings with him the remains of a young man who be-longed to that ill-faced band of explorers, with various relies of the expedition. A report of the expedition will soon be given to the public.

A terrible double tragedy is reported from Burou County, Michigan. A Mr. and Mrs. Hayes were one day at work is a field some distance from the house, having left their infant child at home in its crib. At having loft their infant caud at besse in us crin. At length Mr. Hayes beard the child cry in an musual manner, and anxiously requested his wife to go to the bouse and ascertain the cause. She replied that she thought the child would seen compose itself to sleep; and her opinion appeared a correct one, as the sounds gradually ceased, and the child seemed to sleep. Nothing more was seriously thought of the matter, and at noon the husband and wife repaired to the bone for dinner. But upon sutering the room in entering the room to which the babe was lying a horrible spectacle met their view. A mouster serpent of the blue racer spe-cies had entered the open door, crawled to the cradle, and twined itself around the body of the infant, placed its bead in the child's mouth, and thus deprived it of its life. The husband, upon beholding the hideous mouster and comprehending its fatal act upon his child, in a fronty of excitement turned upon his wife, whom he had bidden while in the field to come to their child, and, without a word of upbraiding of warning, struck her a fearful blow on the head with the hoe which he held in his hand. Hhe sank to that the toe which he head to see hence. One same to unit door and immediately expired, the sharp edge of the hos having plerced to her brain. The brashand, find-ing himself wifeless, childless, and a murderer, rashed from his home to the neighbors, proclaiming his guilt,

A Boston minister was very pleasantly remembered the other day by a few members of his church. He was apprised of the fact by a young man who drove to his residence, and after handling him a note, went away on foot, leaving at the door a spleadid here and buggy, with harness, robes, whip, and every thing complete. The note requested the paster's ac-ceptance of the horse and carriage as a token of ap-preciation and personal affection.

THE ANDAMAN MONKEY.

As interesting stranger at the Gardens of the Zoological Society of London, in Regent's Park, is the female monkey, of a species hither-to unknown to naturalists, which, having been for some time domestiented on board one of the shipe of the Hoyal Navy, has learned rune of the sasion tricks. This new and unique monkey has been presented to the Zoological Society I speain Beows, R.N., of her Shorts ship Foreign. It dates a paining the sine's company from let Blair, Andrimon Islands, in the buff of Bengal, lat. 11: 43 N., high 92: 47 F., on the year 1864. time (for that is her name) is supsai to be eight or nine years oblfor the last four years she has "served" on board the ship, and leaving passed all the dangers of the Abassinian comparign, being too longed with a first class cor-lection and silver claim and model but good emidist, is now waiting to receive her since of the prizes taken during the time shows in her Wijesty's orange, Jenny stands and two feet 6 m meles in height. In general appearance she is most carrie nemestances), but is at once in remarkable arrangement of the nor on the top of the head, which is somewhat of a V shape, and is furted down the middle. The hair itself is very fine, and is elegantly arranged round the ears. The first impression upon seeing this animal is that it is intermediate between Macacus rhesus and Macacus ne-mestrinus. The face is by no means fierce; the features may even be called good-natured. She has been made a great pet by the sailors. The result is that she has been edscated to an extraordinary degree of eleverness. She is fond of com-pany, and her constant companion is a chicken (a regular ship chicken, with hardly any feathers), which lives with her in her eage day and night, and accompanies her in her recombulations. She walks surface.

night, and accompanies her in her perambulations. She walks upright on her hind-legs with remarkable facility, and with much less effort than even the performing monkeys as seen in the streets. When in an erect attitude she will carry things. Thus she will pick up her chicken, and run about with it, helding it in her arms as a nurse does her child. The chicken does not seem to mind this in the least. chicken does not seem to mind this in the least.

At the word, "Throw her overboard!" Jenny throws the chicken smartly away from her. It has been said that monkeys would talk, but that they know that if they talked they would be made to work. Now the Andamanian Jenny forms an exception to the "working" part (only that is very agreeable work) of the story; for if a soda-water bottle is given to her she will set to work to untwist the wire. This done, she will get out the cork, if it be not too tightly fixed, and then drink the contents of the bottle. Her attitude in drinking is something quite new. She sits down on her haunches, holds the bottle with both hands, and tilts the end of it up with her hindfoot, so that the liquid shall flow at the proper level into her mouth. In this attitude her appearance is highly comical, and at the same time very interesting. The most extraordinary part of Jenny's performance is that she smokes a pipe. Other monkeys will carry a pipe in their mouth, and pretend to smoke, but this is the first monkey smoke, but this is the first monkey that we have ever known actually to smoke lighted tobacco out of a pipe. Other monkeys will drink grog, but Jenny is especially fond of it, and always takes her glass with her pipe, which she enjoys quite as much as Forecastle Jack after he has been reesing topsalls.

THE ANDAMAN MONKEY AT THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, LONDON.

LADY PALMERSTON.

THE place which Lady Palmerston held for many years in Lon-don society will not be easily filled don society will not be easily mea-up. There was a sunshine about her Saturday overing receptions at Cambridge House which is not usu-ally seen in gatherings of a simi-lar nature. The most insignificant guess was sure to be welcomed by pleasant smiles from Ludy Palmer-sten, and by a warm greeting from her tunband. Ludy Palmerston's good manners were the more reflection of her true kindliness of heart, and it is this which made them so festinating to all around her.

Nothing is more cleameseristic of the typical grounds done of the past generation that the thorough busi-ness habits which she combined with the grace and gavery of the woman of fashion. A memoir of Lady Polmerston in the London Times shows that she undertook the entire management of the household at Brocket, Cambridge House, and Brondlands, as well as that of her own property: personally inspect-ing the accounts, leaving nothing to agents, stewards, or head serv-ants but what fell strictly within ants but whet fell strictly within their respective departments. Her visiting book also was kept with all the regalarity and precision of a merchant's ledger. Her services to her husband extended far beyond the creation of the brilliant sales at Cambridge House, and the cheering sympathy with which she soothed his labors. She had great tact in extracting information from as well as answering visitors, and was thus as answering visitors, and was thus of great value to Lord Palmerston in his political enterprises. With all this she found time, too, to keep a journal. Another characteristic which Lady Palmerston shared with the elder generation was her predilection for youth and beauty for its own sake. She would have "those two pretty girls at her party;" and she would not have "that fat woman with her ugly daughters," although the fat woman was she wife of a county member, and the two pretty girls had neither fa-ther nor brother in either House.

SPANISH GUN-BOAT No. 1-TESTING HER GUNS AT COLD SPRING, ON THE HUDSON .- [SEE PAGE 663.]

JAMES FISK, Jun.

IT is peculiarly fitting in this Number of our paper, in which we give especial attention to the recent operations in Wall Street, that we should give the portrait of James Fish, Jun. Three years ago the subject of our sketch was comparatively unknown. Now there are few men in our city who command so large a share of pub-lic notice. He is a man of large wealth, and is the centre of attruc-tion in Wall Street, in theatrical tion in Wall Street, in theatrical circles, and in the law courts.— Persons he has not genius; his education may be deficient; but his praction shrewatness, his al-most reckless buildness, and his unparalleled efficutory, make up for the absence of these maintaintions. He is known as a man who may be a friend to-day and arenemy to-murrow; us one who comes to his conclusions repair, and almost by instinct cand as a man wasse bostiley can not be provoked with immunity. Having as regards his popular characterdetace ?

dames Fish, dame, in the son of a Vermont periods. At the nee of sevention to obtained similar ment of a very humble character in Vas American's menagene, his occupation being to ussist in the erection of tents and to success out and keep clear the crows or the animals. His employer, walching his capacity, promoced him to the position of a ticket collector. In this capacity he accompanied Van Augusta in his various tours through the United States, the Ambunght in his various foursthrough the United States, the Canadas, and Europe—a service extending over a peaisd of eight years. Leaving Van Amuricus at twenty-five years of age, he determined to pursue the calling of his father, and returned to his native State of Vermont for that purpose. He commenced his career as a peddler by selling small articles, such as pencils, pens, etc., on the sidewalks of the different towns of the State. In this way, by dint of perseverance, he saved a little money, and having succeeded in raising a small additional sum, he raising a small additional sum, he purchased a horse and wagon, and purchased a norse and wagon, and made a fresh start in life as a ped-dler of dry-goods. He visited all the principal towns and villages of Vermont, and succeeded in gainfing so large a custom in the places to which he traveled that his humble one-horse wagon was no longer capacious enough for the conveyance of his goods. He discarded it, there-fore, and invested in a much larger one drawn by four horses. By-and-by he extended his field of | operations, and traveled through Massachusetts and Connecticut as well as Vermont, until, finally, the gross amount of his sales attracted the attention of a Boston firm from whom be was in the habit of buying goods. In 1860 they made proposals to him to join their house, to which he assented, and James Fisk, Jun., became a pairner in the firm of JORDAN, MARSH, de Co., of Boston. But the firm do not appear to have been so well pleased with James Fish the part-mer as with James Fish the cus-tomer, for at the end of two years-they paid him down the large sam of $614 000 to leave the firm

JAMES FISE, JUN.-(PROTOGRAPHED BY BRADY.)

It so happened that it this time some parties in Boston were anxious to purchase the Stonington ions to purchase the Stoningson line of steamships, then owned by Mr. Dantill, Driew, James Plant was aware of this circumstance, and, thinking he could turn this knowledge to good account, he come, in 1445, to New York. Obtaining an intended to 1811, he was a large of the starting of Draw, he samaged so to ingenta-ate himself into the first of that gentleman that he employed him to epoduct the impatiation for the sale of the stemsers. In this liveres eminently successful. The sale was completed entirely to Mr. Duck's entiringing and the althity and showdness which Figs had displayed diranghout the segreta-tion gained for him Mr. Dusw's good will and patronigs, and an introduction to Wall Street.

Figure optimization to operate on his own necessit; he entered into a variety of speculative transactions is government stocks, gold, actions in government atocks, gold, and other securities. Success, however, did not attend him in Wall Street as it had done when peddling through the country; the greater number of his speculations were dissertous in their results, and to two years time. James Fase had lost every dollar he had in the world. He had, however, a friend in Mr. Davier, Durw, who is 1863 assisted him to form the firm. 1865 assisted him to form the firm of Figs., Beautre, & Co., for the purpose of carrying on the basiness of stock-brokers, and gave thom substantial aid by putting business into their hands, and employing them as brokers in many large undertakings.

In 1867 Mr. Fisit, in connection with Mr. Jav Goutto, succeeded in making a lerge sum of money by operations in first stock.

They get control over stock to the amount of $10,000,000, and were thus able to depress the general value of Erie stock from 72g to 35. Mr. Fisk's share of the profits resulting from these operations amounted, it is said, to $1,800,000.

Mr. Fisn's next operation was to purchase the whole of the block of which Pike's Opera-house forms a part for the sum of $320,000. This transaction was a highly profitable one. He leased to the Eric Railroad Company a small portion of the property for 19 years, at an annual rental of

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILBOAD-PASSENGER TRAIN PASSING THE PALISADES, TEN-MILE CANON, NEVADA .- [SEE PAGE 670.]

$75,000. This was in itself a very handsome return on the gross amount invested in the whole property; but Mr. Fiss, retained to himself the Opera-hosse, all the large stores, and a great number of private bouses. He has also bought the building formerly known as Brougham's Theatre; and having somewhat unceremonicus-ly oussed that gentleman and his company, he installed there Mademoiselle 1888 and a French troupe of opera bouffe singers.

With his more recent operations, including the proprietorship of the French Theatre in this city, our readers are well acquainted. Mr. Fisk is now about thirry-nine years of age.

VIEW ON THE CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Tun Pacific Railroad is no longer a thome of conjecture, but an accomplished fact. Passen-gers, mails, and freight pass between New York and San Francisco with the same regularity, celerity, and convenience as between Boston and Washington; the Pacific coast has been effectually brought within the national railroad

We give on page 609 an illustration showing n passenger train passing the Palisades, Ten mile

Cofton, Nevada, on the Central Pacific Bailroad. The business of the Central Pacific between Sacramento and Promontory Point, between which places it has been operated for the three months siree the opening on the 10th of May, are (approximately) as follows, mainly in gold: Gross earnings, $1,703,350; opening expenses, $920,341; net earnings, $783,009. This in-come, of course, will be largely increased with the continually increasing business of the road,

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I HAVE USED IN WHEELER & WILSON SEWing Machine six years without the least repairs, doing all my family sewing, consisting of coats, overcoats, pants, and vests, down to the finest of sewing, even patching old coars and pants. Besides that, I have carned six hundred dollars ($600) in the six years. I carned thirty dollars with one needle. Give me the WHEKLER & Walson in preference to all others.

New Milford, Conn. Mrs. Lucy Dungy.

A SCEN REMEDIT for Cuttle and PEVER. Aven's Agen Come never fails. [Clos.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH PATCHES, FRECKLES, and TAN from the face, use PERRY'S MOTH AND FRECKLE LITION. Propered only by Dr. B. C. Poner, #9 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Draggists.

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

Cons-Silven Hunning Casta, $31; Extra Pine, $38. SOLID GOLD

Hunting-Case Full-Jewood Lever Watches, $45, $48; Lailles' Size, $36; Extra. $49; Enameled, $46.

COIN-SILVER

HUNTING CASES, $14; Extra Quality, $16.

AMERICAN MOVEMENTS, Every variety. Latest, Lowest Proces. And Watches of every description, in fine Guid and Silver Cases, at Importer' Entes. Goods sent by Express, to be paid for only after they have been received, caustined, and accepted.

S. H. MODRE & CO., Importers, Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y.

Full Descriptive Price-Lists sent free.

FURNITURE.

We invite impress to vielt our extensive wavercoms and examine our large stock of Suites for Parlors, Chrombers, Dining Rosers, Libraries, &c. Manufactured under our supervision, from the best materials, and warranted in every portfendar.

With monumed facilities and a sipe experience in manufacturing, we are conscious that we do not promise too much when we say to buyers that, taking quality into consideration, we can not be besten in prices.

WARREN WARD & CO., Wholesale and Retail Manufacturers and Benfers, To and 77 Spring Street, corner Crosby.

DOSET'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.
A Complete Catalogue now ready. Seat free.
Basing's "Bailed Singer," the new Hell-Dime Series of the Best Songs. Sold serry where, or specimen number mailed for Pire Cents. 644 Broadway, N. T.

storpless, thoughed, and best Kniming Machine ever in-vented. Will knit 20,000 stircles per minuse. Liberal Inducements to Arceits. Address AMERICAN KNIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Lonis, Mo. orplest, cheapest, and best

COLUMBIA COLLEGE,

NEW YORK.

The next Academical Year will begin on the ler Monary (4th) of October. The statement of the Col-lege will attend for matriculation on that day at $16 A.M.

lege will alloud for maintenance on the Parameter Spig A.M.

Candidates for the Parameter Class will present thereselves for examination on Friday, Oct. 1st, and Saintriay, Oct. 2st, at 10 A.M.

Applicants for admission to advanced classes, and those required to be no-examined, will present themselves on Saturday, Oct. 2st, at the same hour.

For Catalogues and Earlier information, apply to Rev. Ds. BARNARD, President, or 10

BENEY DEESLER.

Senior Professor and Acting as President.

S1.— TAKING THE REINS

GRANT, BONNER, & DEXTER.

By JOHN W. EHNINGER, N.A.

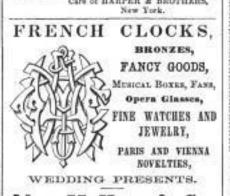

"It is a striking likeness of the horse, and, I have no hesitation in saying, the best representation of a horse in action that I have ever seen

"ROBERT BONNER."

This splendid photograph, embodying three life-like pourgles, is 12% x 7% inches, exclusive of mount. Hent free of expense on receipt of $1.00.

Larger Edition, 13 x 7), beautifully mounted on India that, at $0.00; Ten copies for $55.00.

Address PILKINGTON JACKSON, Art Publisher, Care of HARPER & BROTHERS,

New York.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-ction to be found in the city, and are offered at tr Sign of Gold Telegraph. _at

$100 every THOUSAND

We have lately introduced some new

Boxes of Initial Stationery, with faccy RUSTIC Stamping, which we think will meet the approval of the public.

And to further facilitate the sale of this really first-class article, we propose, as an inducement, to pack $100.00 in every Thousand Boxes, in Prisee varying in amount from $1 00 to $50 00. Put up in next boxes, and sent to any part of the country, postpaid, for 50 cents.

Address MERRILL & MACKINTIRE, SALES, MASS.

LW Special Terms to Agents.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Alaminism Bronce is a steal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges, have been decrived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only tabled forth the enlogiums of the press in consequence of its pressing properties, but has see obtained a Gold Medial at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are reconstitution as excellent time-keepers.

Pans root site 70 875.

Frother details will be found in my pemphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.
Goods sent by Express, C. O. B., with charges, Address JULES D. BUGUENIN VUILLEMIN, No. 44 Nassau Street, New York.

MAPLE LEAVES, calarged and improved.
The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine published, it will be sent from now to the end of 1810 for 50 cents. Send in your subscriptions without Acts.

O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Nassau St., New York. A LADY who has been cured of great nervous debility, after many years of misery, desires to make known to all fellow-anderers the sure means to relief. Address, enclosing a stamp, MRS, M. MER-SITT, P. O. Box 2023. Bostos, Mass., and the pre-scription will be seat free by return mail.

IMITATION GOLD WATCHES and DIAMOND JEWELRY

"Popular Music at Popular Prices."

HITCHCOCK'S SHEET MUSIC

IS SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS AND NEWS-DEALERS, AND MAILED, POSTAGE PAID, ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, Se. PER COPY.

HITCHCOCK'S HALF-DIME MUSIC .- Now Ready : Barnebaw

Tute. Glover. Knight. Millard. Scooch. do. Balfe. Claribe

do Clippingdale Seer. Chflon

Rogers. Macfarren. Wild. Raymond.

TCHOOCK'S HALF-DIME MUSIC.—New B

AND TA Ask my Mother.
Have You Seen Her Lately?
The Hard to Give the Hand.
She Wore a Wreath of Rosea.
Spanish Muletter.
Within a Mile of Edinboro.
Coming through the Rys.
The Peace of the Valley.
I can not Sing the Old Songs.
Jane's Choice.
Strangers Yet.
Water-Livy Polka.
Would You be Young Again? Chopin Row, Brothers, Row. Doet and Chorus.
Call Her Back and Kins Her.
The Bloebied Polka.
The Bloebied Polka.
The Bloebied Polka.
The Bornet Galop.
Hamiet, Prince of Denmark.
Basset Galop.
Hamiet, Prince of Denmark.
The March of the Silver Trumpets.
It ham the Prince of Denmark.
The British not thus to be.
In Happy Moments.
Old Simon the Cellarer.
The British Rose.
The British Rose.
The Drawing-Boom Schottische.
Do The Stipper and his Boy.
She is not Fair to Outward View.
Cheen the Swallows Homeward Fly.
Vou and L.
Only a Lock of Halr.
Mary Emma Polka.
O'Take Me to Thy Heart Again.
Scotch Lassie Jean.
Dancing Shadow.
The World is Full of Beauty.
O'Take Me to Thy Heart Again.
Scotch Lassie Jean.
Dancing Shadow.
The While Bloesomed Tree.
Music Again.
Shadow.
The While Bloesomed Tree.
Music Shadow.
The While Bloesomed Tree.
Music Shadow.
The While Bloesomed Tree.
Gare God I while you're Young.
Gistalina Walin.
O'Ge Mat I week I all.
Beautiful Hope.
The Cavaller.
Continental Scottische.
O'Ge Waster Lass Solly.
The Costiller.
Costiller.
Costiller.
Costiller.
Costiller.
Sally.
Sally.
Sally. Gaglielmo, Rogere, Viviani, Abt. Wallace, Hatton, Bedg wick, Rodwell, Balfe, Sedgwick. Donglass. Gabriel

Sullivan Ciarlbel Balfe Abt. Claribel, do.

do.
Rogers.
Balfe.
Pusbody.
Rogers.
Raymond
Flowers.
H. Fase.
Waverly.
Hime.

Musgrave.
Cüppingdale.
Carrington.
Waverly.
Offenbach.
Lover.
Norton.
Lover.
Bard.
Giover.
Hogors. Beautiful Rope,
The Cavaller.
Continental Scottische,
Of what is the Old Man Thinking ?
Sally, Sally,
Ra-Soule-arm,
Nothing size to Do,
Crescent-City March,
Puddle your own Canon.
Scotes that are Brightest.
Contine in the Air. Hogers Knight Lover 91. 90. 89. Btewart. Hatten Vallace Adams. Hunt. Glover. opeland. symoud. Scotch.

Williams Glover, Stewart, Colver,

Waverly

Profile your care Brightest.
Castles in the Air.
The Bell goes a Ringing for Sarah.
Ritty Tyrrell.
School for Jolly Dogs.
Willie west a Wooing.
Maggie Morgan.
Hary of Argyle.
Larboard Watch. Duet.
The Bashful Young Lady.
After Daris.
Blachelor's Hell.
The Fairy's Well.
The Fairy's Well.

Blamphin. Taylor. Guglielmo. Guglielmo. Covert Sarivall. Lover. do.

After Dark.

Bachelor's Hall.

Bachelor's Hall.

The Fairy's Well.

Oh would I were a Bird.

Oh, you Pretty, Blue-Kyed Witch.

My Angel.

The Fidgety Wife.

Law and Night I Thought of Thee.

My Mother Itear.

Barbey O'Hea.

Chestont-Street Belles.

Becton Belles.

Be Watchful and Beware.

Where there's a Will there's a Way.

The Foreign Comm.

The Lancabire Lass.

Meet Me in the Lane, Love.

Mabel Walts.

The Smile of Memory.

Sweetheart. do. Glover. Saer. Lloyd. Raymond. Blamphin. Irving. Waverly Balle

鐵龍孔板鐵鐵打鐵鐵路鐵鐵鐵鐵鐵鐵鐵

Balley.

Caribel.

Baymond.

Baymond.

Baymond.

Baymond.

Baymond.

Baymond.

Balley.

Balley.

Caribel.

Baymond.

B

Belles of Broadway.
Flying Trapese.
Fower of Love. Inst'l.
Scaan's Stary.
I will not sak to Press that Cheek.
The Rosy Wreath.
The Life Boat.
Light of the World. (Sacred Song.)
Bewariful Bells.
Lion Galop. 跳的跳跃跳跃跳跃 Claribel Gabriel

Inion Galop. Raymond, Hullah, Handel, Claribel, si, Luior Galop.

30. Olympic Schottische.
20. Up to a Balloon.
23. There's a Charm in Spring. Inst'l.
25. There's a Charm in Spring. Inst'l.
26. Schottische Beart.
26. The Passing Bell. (Sacred Song.)
26. Scill I Love Thee.
27. Waitzing Bown at Long Branch.
28. Hiding Down Hroadway.
29. She might not Suit your Fancy.
20. Arm-lo-Arm. Polka Mararka.
29. The Rose of Erin.
29. Silver Chimes.
20. The Old Cottage Clock.
20. His Love Shines over all.
20. Margle's Secret.
20. Little Maggie May.
20. The Danish Boy's Whistle.
21. Cume Hisher, my Baby, my Darling.
21. Generieve Waitz.
20. Shating Hink Polka.
20. Champagne Charley.
20. Fraise of Tears.
20. Fraise of Tears. do. Dobson, Andrews. do.
Millard.
Biransa.
Benedict.
Claribel.
Molloy,
Forbes,
Claribel.

Blamphin, Graff, Graff.
Wiener.
do.
do.
Lee.
Schubert.
Gubriel,
Hatton.
Lloyd.
Molloy.
Claribel 10. Skating-Rink Polka.

9. Champegne Charley.

11. Really don't Think I shall Marry.

12. Good-by, Sweetheart, Good-by.

13. Word Settler Ride a Wee.

14. Won't You Twil Me Why, Robin?

15. Captain Jinka.

16. Captain Jinka.

17. Any of our publications can be had of Music, Book, and Periodical Dealers generally throughout the United States and Canada, or by mail on recript of price. Other choice selections will rapidly follow.

18. Lev.

18

HARPER & BROTHERS.

RANKLIN SQUARE, NEW YORK.

Have just Published;

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF ISIS; or, Diustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Ecography, Seepery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Bassoos J. Lessiwa, Author of "The Pictorial Pield-Book of the Bevointion." With 888 Illustrations, engaved on Wood by Lossing & Barriit, chiedyfrom Original Sketches by the Author, Complete, in One Volume, 1988 pages, large Syo. Price, in Cloth, 87 00; Sheep, 88 bc; Full Roan, 49 00; Hair Calf or Haif Morocco extra, 210 00.

UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Philosophy: embeacing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Tuonas C. Urzas, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Bowedon College. In Two Volumes, Vol. L.: Intellect, Language: Vol. II.: Sensibilities, Will. 12mo, Cloth, $1.75 per volume.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM HENRY WARRELL, Professor of Anchest Languages in the University of Georgia. 12ma; Cloth, $1 00.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James GREENWOOD, the "Amsdeer Cascal," Author of "The True History of a Liue Hagamentin, " Reachen Bay-inger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Syo, Pa-per, 19, cents. idger," "Wild per, 16 cents.

PAMOUS LONDON MERCHANTS. A Book for Boys. By H. R. Fox Bornes. With Portrait of George Peabody and 24 Illustrations. 25mo, Cloth, $1.00.

SIGHTS AND SENSATIONS IN FRANCE, GER-MANY, AND SWITZERLAND; or, Experiences of an American Journalist in Europe. By Reward Gould Burrew. 12mo, Cloth, 41 26.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Popil, the School. By Nathabura. Sands. Sec. Cloth, $1.00.

A PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Flars-cia A. Marcia, Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology in Lafayette College, Author of "Method of Philological Study of the En-glish Language," "Comparative Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language," &c. 10mo, Cloth, 40 cents

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-ful Consideration of the Question of Profit and Loss as involved in Amateur Farming, with much Valu-able Advice and Instruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Prices in the Bural Districts. By Rossaw B. Rossawan. With Characteristic Il-lustrations. 12mo, Cloth, $1.56.

THE MALAY ARCHIPKLAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Faradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Simison of Man and Nature. By Alexan Bressn. Wallace, Author of Travels on the Amazon and Bio Negro, "Falm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Fifty-one elegant Hissirations. Crown Svo, Cloth, $3 50.

The New Novels

PERCORD PT

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Harper's Illustrated

ADAM BEDR. 12mo, Morocco Cloth, 75 cents. MILL ON THE FLOSS. 12mo, Morocco Cloth, FELIX HOLT. 12mo, Morocco Cloth, 15 cents. ENT To be followed by George Elite's other Names.

IN SILK ATTIRE. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of Love or Marriage ?" Svo, Paper, 60 cents. FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Year,"
"One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

COUNTESS GISELA. By E. Mariery. Translated by A. Nahmer. 8vo, Paper, 35 cents.

META'S PAITH. By the Anthor of "St. Olave"s," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents. THACKERAY'S NOVELS:

New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Anthor's own Hinstrations. VANITY FAIR. 28 Hinstrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cts. PENDENNIS. 179 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 75 cts.
THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, To comis.
THE NEWCOMES. 162 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper,

The adventures of Philip. Portrait of Author and 64 illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents. HENRY ESMOND as LOVEL THE WIDOWER. 13 illustrations. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS: HARD CASH. Binstrated. 5vo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Bustrated.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. Svo, Pa-LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 840, Pa-FOUL PLAY. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.
WHITE LIES. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.
EF To be followed by Charles Rende's other Novels.

FOT HARRER & Becomess will send only of the above hooks by mail, postage free, to any part of the United Etales, on receipt of the price.

GREAT ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC TEA COMPANY,

NO. 8 CHURCH STREET New York City. P. O. Box 5506. An organization of capitalists for the propose of importing Teas and distributing them to Marchants throughout the country at Importers' prices. Estab-lished 1802. Send for Price-Lin

VINEGAR - HOW MADE FROM CIDER, by Molasses, or Sorghum, in N EUA R. WINE, Molasses, or Sorghum, in ours, without using drugs. For circulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

A HANDSOME FULL-GILT Photograph Al-Abum, helding 10 full-size pictures, mailed, post-paid, for 55 cts.; 5 5 or 81; 52 50 per dozen. Circulars free. Address C. SEYMOUR, Holland, N. Y.

$25 A DAY. - 25 new articles for Agenta. $1140 Now I made it in Six Months. Secret and

BOY WHALER;

YOUNG ROVERS.

MOST EXCITING SEA STORY EVER PUBLISHED

Commenced THIS WEEK, in No. 49 OF THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY, NOW READY.

THE

BOY WHALER

was written expressly for the

NEW YORK WEEKLY, By Leon Lewis,

Author of "The Silver Ship," "The Water Wolf,"
"The Boy Magician," etc.

THE

BOY WHALER,

Now Ready in No. 49 of the

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

contains the most wivid description of strange adven-tures on land and sea, in most of which the young here, the

BOY WHALER,

takes a prominent part, and by his daring deeds proves himself the personification of juvenile bravery. Exe-ry boy should read the exciting story of the

BOY WHALER,

which is just commenced in No. 49 of the

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

and every young woman also should read the BOY WHALER

NEW YORK WEEKLY for the female mind will be encaptured with the lovely heroine, the charming Law Lawauson, who shares the fortunes and trials of the

BOY WHALER.

The current issue (No. 49) of the Greatest Story and Sketch Paper in the World, THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

should be purchased by parents and read to their chil-dren, for the great story of the shows that although wirtne may for a time be unable to cope with villainty, it will in the end rise triemphant.

BOY WHALER

NEW YORK WEEKLY takes pleasure in presenting to the public the great

BOY WHALER,

for it is undoubtedly the masterpiece of its Author, and was written expressly for the

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

Boys! Boys! Boys!

Every boy who delights to read of daring deeds and thrilling adventures will linger in admiration over the story of the

BOY WHALER,

Now Ready in No. 49 of the

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

and for sale by every News Agent in the country. PRICE SIX CENTS PER COPY.

Don't Forget to Buy No. 49 OF THE

NEW YORK WEEKLY, which contains the commencement of the

BOY WHALER.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

Gold Watches and Jewelry. THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY

GENUINE OROIDS. The $16 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones costing $100. Those of extra fine finish, at $50, are not surpassed by $500 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, so imitation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal to gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

to gold. Every waich fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS PROM 23 TO 28.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal—Pins, Ear-Rings, Sicere-Bultons, Lockets, Stude, Pinger-Bings, Bracelets, Charma, Odd-Pallow and Masonio Pins, &c., all of the laiset and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUES:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money seed not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no agents: orders, therefore, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write pisinly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our own owners is No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up stairs), New York.—C. E. COLLINS & CO.

HENRY WARD

${f BEECHER'S}$

SERMONS IN PLYMOUTH PULPIT

PLYMOUTH PULPIT
Are being read by people of every class and denomination all over this country and Karope. They are full of vital, beautiful religious thought and feeling. Physosoth Pulpis is published weekly, and contains Mr. Beecher's fermions and Prayers, in form estimate for preservation and binding. For sale by all Newedealers. Price He.
Yearly subscriptions received by the publishers, £1,
giving two handsome volumes of over 400 pages each.
Hall-yearly, $1 Th. A new and superb Steel Portrail of Mr. Beecher presented to all yearly subscribers.
Entracritisary Offer! Plymouth Pulpit (30), and The Church Umion (£250), an Unsectarian, independent, Christian Journal — 16 pages, cet and stitched, clearly printed, ably edited, sent to one address for 50 weeks for four delices. Special inducements to canvescers and those getting np clubs. Specimen copies, postage free, for 5c.

J. B. FORD & CO., Publ's, 30 Park Row, N.Y.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS OF

. T. BARNUM

WRITTEN DY HIMSELF. IN ONE LARGE OUTAVO VOLUME—NEARLY 800 PAGES—PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

It embraces Forty Yrano' Recontactions of ble Bosy Life, as a Merchant, Manager, Bankor, Lecturer, and Showman, and gives accounts of ble Imprison-ment, his Fadlers, his Successful European Tours, and important Historical and Personal Resistance ores, re-plete with Humor, Amerdator, and Entertaining Nac-rative.

It contains his celebrated Lecture

rative.
It contains his celebrated Lecture on the Axy or Mosey Gerenso, with Rules for Soccess in Business, for which he was offered $2000. We offer extra inducements to Agents, and pay freight to the West. Send for Mysque Circular, with Specimen Engraving and Terms to Agents. J. B. BURR & CO.,
Publishers, Hartford, Comm.

SWEET
QUININE.

Sweet Question to corrected equal—dose for dose—to the sulphate (bitter) Quinine, with the important advantage of being sweet instead of bitter.

SVAPNIA.

SVAPNIA.

Sold by druggists, preacribed by best physicians.

Sold by druggists, prescribed by best physicians. STEARNS, FARR, & CO., Chemists, New York.

TYLER WATER WHEELS.—Over 3000 In operation. Address the manufacturers, Sofficers Macking Co., Claremont, N. H., for reduced price-list.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New Seven-Octave Pismos, of first-class makers, for $275 and upward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and upward. Second-hand Pismos, Melodeons, and Organs from $40 to $175, at 461 Broadway, N. Y. BORACE WATERS.

WANTED, live men, who can give security for goods received, to distribute "packages" of "Wooder of the World" smorty families, and onlect the same. Address J. C. TH.TON, Pintsburgh, Pa.

TROY FEMALE SEMINARY.—This In-sitution offers the accumulated advantages of over 50 years' successful operation. For circulars, apply to 30HN H. WILLARD, Trop, N.Y.

SALESMEN.—Wanted, a few reliable, energetic salesmen, to sell by nemple standard goods.

Address H. H. RICHARDS & CO.,
413 Chestnat St., Paliadelphia, Pa.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED for trated Editions of the

LIPE OF CHRIST and BUNYAN'S
PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.
The week ready for delivery. Address for Catalogue of the best-selling Subscription-Books published,

W. W. HARDING, Philadelphia, Publisher Harding's Pictorial Pamily Bibles.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving touch time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cats, borders, &c., &c., 35 cents. ADAMS PRIESS CO., 53 Murray Street, New York.

SPARKLING LITTLE BEAUTIES are S Gents' Lava Diamond Pins. Exquisite specimen mailed, 34 cts. R. LEE & CO., 1979 Broadway, N. Y.

THE CHURCHMAN.

THE BEST and LARGEST Weekly Newspaper, with the LARGEST directation in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Sent FREEE for one mouth for examination, and till Jan. 1, 1870, to new subscribers for that year. Si a year, in advance. M. H. MALLORY & CO., Hartford, Coun.

F. K. PHCENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

RAPID SALE!

25,000 ALREADY IN USE.

The Demand Increasing.

The Choral Tribute!

BY L. O. EMERSON. Choristers and Singers unanimously agree that it irpusess all other works of Church Music by this popular amber.

(Until November 1, Clergymen, Choristers, and Teachers who have not yet examined this valuebie work will be supplied with a single copy at $1 75, postage paid.)

Price $1 50; $11 50 per dosen.
Price $1 50; $12 50 per dosen.
OLIVER DITSON & CO., Beston;
C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acres. 18th Tear. 10 Green-Houses.
Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable associated, very low for cash.

Apples—including most magnificent stock of year-lings: also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duches, Oldenburg, Hishop, Transcondent, and other Crab Apples—I, S, and 3 year.

Funchs, Pears, Cherries, Pinna, Quinoss, Grapes, Forest and Energeon Trees, Nursery Stocks, Ossay Ovange Hedge Plants, Roses, own roots; Taips, Hyanistic, Services, Fra. Spatis, Lilius, Speciasura, Auratum, &c. Also superior reduced plates of Fruits and Flowers.

Bend 19 cents for Catalogues.

F. K. PHONNIX, Bloomloyton, McLean Co., III.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Sixton cliffs on both seles. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Clereland, Ohio; Hoston, Mass.; or St. Lonis, Mo.

EVERY ONE WILL FIND

ENTERTAINMENT, PROFIT, AND NO BARM IN THE NEW YORK OBSERVER.

$3 50 PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., 27 PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

WANTED AGENTS.—$75 to $200 per month, NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thire, with the latest improvements. Price for Hand Machine, $15; with Table and Foot power, $25. Send for Circular, with Cat. of Machine and terms to Agents. Address W. S. Hill., Manchester, N. H.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wooderful inventions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

$100 to $250 per Nonth guaranteed. Shere pay. Salaries paid weekly to Agents every where selling our Palent Revolution White Birst Chabes Loss. Call at, or write for particulars to the Girard Wire Mills, 261 North 2d St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or burd to a permanent Block or Brown. One Comb sent by mall for $1. Per sale by Merchants & Drugglists generally. Address Magic Cond Co., Springfold, Huss.

$3600 a Year overanted to Apente. Address J. Shitimore, Md.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

Harpen's Magazine, One Year..... $4 00 Harpen's Weekle, One Year...... 4 00 Harpen's Bazas, One Year...... 4 00

ARPEN's Magazine, Haupen's Weski-7, and Haupen's Baran, to one address, for one year, $10.00; or any two for $7.00.

two for $1.00.

An Extra Copy of either the Manazine, Weerly, or Bazas will be supplied grates for every Chib of First Sciencements at 24.00 cech, in one remillance; or, him Copies for $20.00, without esters copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Manazine theorite a year, for the Weerly or Bazas, to cents a year, pupilisy yearly, send-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Sujectipitions from the Dominion of Canada which be afteringuished with 14 cents additional for the Manazine, or 20 cents for the Weerly or Bazas, to propay the United States postage.

postage.
The Volumes of the Magaziner cremmence with the Numbers for June and December of each year. Soluscriptions may commence with any Number. When no lime is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Werker and Barak commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number bext after the receipt of his order. Subscribers to the Manariss, Wiscars, or Barak will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Odice Order or Draft papable to the order of Harsan & Buoruma is perforable to Bunk Notes, since, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be renewed without loss to the senter.

the sender.

In ordering the Manazirez, the Weeker, or the Bazze, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

TERMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERSONICALS. Harper's Hoverine.—Whole Page, $150; Half Page, $150; Quarter Page, $10-sach insertion; or, for a less space, $1 80 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Weekly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line—each insertion.

Harper's House, $1 00 per Line—each insertion. Horper's Suner.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 55 per Line—each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS,

PRANKLON SQUARE, New York,

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year . . . $4 00 HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year . . . 4 00 HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year . . . 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WERKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratis for every Club of Five Sunscribers at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, Six Copies for $20 00, without

[For Prospectuses and particulars for Remitting Moneys, Postage, &c., see the fourth column of this page.]

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New YORK.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE contains nearly Double the Amount of Matter furnished in The Galaxy, The Atlantic, Putnam, or Lippincott. It exceeds in about the same ratio any English Magazine of the same general class, such as Blackwood, Fraser, Macmillan, Temple Bar, Belgravia, or The Cornhill.

A New Story, splendidly Illustrated, by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Moonstone"), will be commenced in HARPER'S WEEKLY in November, 1869.

Persons desiring to tenew their Subscriptions to HARPER'S PERIODICALS will much oblige the Publishers by sending in their Names as early as convenient before the Expiration of their present Subscriptions. This will obviate the delay attendant upon re-entering names and mailing back Numbers.

New Subscribers will be supplied with either of the above Periodicals from the present time to the end of the year 1870 for Four Dollars.

. . .

NEW YORK, Oct. 15, 1869.

THE CELEBRATED

BRAND BLACK ALPACAS.

This Brand of Alpaca, on account of its fluences of cloth and richness of color, has become the Standard Alpaca now used in the United States.

Algorium now used in the United States.

These goods are greatly inspected in Weight, Electrical Shade for the Fall and Winter wear; and, being made of the very fixed material, they are obschizely superior to any Alpacas ever sold in this country, and are now one of the most fashionable and economical februs were. fabrica worn.

These heautiful goods are sold by most of the lead-ing Retail Dry-Goods Morrhants in New York, Brook-lyn, and in all the leading cities and towns through-

WM. I. PEAKE & CO., Sole Importers of the Brand for the United States.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

[Patented June 1, 1869.]

Superior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-antages of the French patents, with wonderful SIMPLICITY, DURABILITY,
and CHEAPNESS.
Lovers of GOOD COFFEE are unanimous in its praise.

POR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. 41 SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO.,

SOLE MANUFACTURERS, Wallingford, Conn.

Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

Middletown Mineral Spring Water are all diseases of the Kickers, Skin, and Based one prompily than any other known remedy. EF Call for Testasonians or Cram. Sold by Caution.—All genuine bears our trade-mark, and the bottles and corks are beanded "Nature's Remedy."

Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Trens. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Oc. S. H. Scripture, 102 Brosinsy, New York,
General Agent.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING,

MANUPACTURED BY WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Bend for Price-List.) Baltimore, Md.

FOUNTAIN PENS. One dip writes 4 pages.

Fall 30 a gress, postpaid.—Fenknife and Peocil combined.—Eraser and Pen-Holder combined, and its Fountain Pens, 50 cents, postpaid. Sell at sight, Access Wasters.—CITY NOVELTY CO., 604 Library St., Philadelphia, Ps.

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY lies in the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM for the complexion.

Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Freckles, and Tan disappear where it is applied, and a beautiful complexion of pure, satin-like texture is obtained. The plainest features are made to glow with healthful bloom and youthful beauty.

Remember, HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM is the thing that produces these effects, and any lady can secure it for 75 cents at any of our store

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lvon's

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO.

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Sarotto will make The resemble Silver.
Use only Sarotto to clean White Paint.
From Marble Sarotto removes all Stains.
For polishing Knives Sarotto is unsurpassed.
For cleaning Brass Strir-Rode Sarotto has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, use Sarotto.
ample cake sent by mail on receipt of 20 cents.

Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. Established 1809.

Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for family use.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

[Trademark x Ospyrighted.]

ANTED - AGENTS - 875 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, in interdace the GENUINE IMPIDIVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stinch, hem, felt, inck, quilt, cord, bind, beald, and embedder in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years. We will pay $1000 for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more clastic scan than ours. It makes the "Ensite Lock Stitch." Every second stitch can be rest, and still the cloth can not be pulled spart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $15 to $200 per month and expenses, or a commission from which beier that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO. Pittistenan, Pn., Boutes, Mass., or Sr. Lous, Mo. CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties pairwing off worthless cast-from machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only generate and present and present and present and conditions and really practical cheap machine manufactured.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 121 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LANTERSS and STEREOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 54 pages.
JAMES W. QUEEN & CO.
154 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Piance is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to suit any who may desire to purchase. Circulare and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

ADDRESS TO SMOKERS.

In reply to the many inquiries made daily in regard to Meerschaum Pipes, we wish to state that we recommend, especially for home and office nee, the plain Humgarian and Egg Bowis, with Welchaed Stemms. They hold the most tobacco, and are the most durable and practical ones, being the easiest to clean. Or the Hamburg Bowis, having the largest surface to show color. For travelling and street smoking, we recommend the London Straight and London Bend.

Being represented extensively throughout the country by our goods, we are desireus to have our Pipes—which are considered equaled by none—still more extensively used by those who reliah a good smoke, and find Cigars too expessive. Therefore we have reduced our prions to the following:

We will sell a No. 3 Pipe for $5, and charge $1 additional for every number higher: therefore No. 4 coats $6; No. $55; No. 13, $55, $6. Pipes from No. 4 to No. 8 are considered fair-sized coses; from No. 9 pyward, large coses. In the price is included a Case and Stem. Nice Amber Monthpieces for Welchael Stems we are selling from $1 to $3 a piece.

We send by Express to collect on delivery, amount and charges; but suggest that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save consignes that the amount be sent in Registered Letter or Post-Office Money Order in advance, to save consignes that the amount be real Amber, genuine Meerscham, and to color, and will readily give every information in regard to it, based on thirty years' experience in the Irade, having received our Diploma in 1826 by the respective combissions in Europe; and we will ever uphold the fair fame we have acquired in the introduction of the MANUFAC-TURE OF GENUINE MEERSCHAUM GOODS into this country.

We cut Pipes and Cigar-Holders of any shape or design, mount them, do repairing, belling, and polishing. Also, Amber Work doze. And, main of all, do not charge exorbitant prices. For reference, we are in possession of commendations from thousands of our customers, representing all chause

POLLAK & SON, Manufacturers of Genuine Meerschaum Goods. STORES: 519 Broadway, St. Nicholas Hotel, and 27 John St., 27 John. SEND FOR DIAGRAMS, CIRCULAR, AND PRICE-LIST TO LETTER BOX 5846.

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kaness Pacific Railway, now in successful op-scration from Kaness City to Sheridan, proposes to build an extension to Denver, Colorado. The Gov-ernment has granted Three Millions of Acres of the finest lands in Kaness and Colorado, which are mort-gaged for the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in profitable operation, and will open the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and connect it with the great markets of the East. It is considered to be one of the best loans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

The ican has thirty years to ran, principal and in-terest payable in gold, semi-annually, seven per cent. The coupons will be payable semi-annually in either Frankfort, Loudon, or New York, and will be free from Government taxation. The bonds for the present are sold in currency at 96, with accrued interest. Circulars, many, and namphies sent on armitection.

Circulars, maps, and pamphlets sent on application. DABNEY, MORGAN, & Co., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y

M. K. JESUP & CO., 12 Pine Street, N. V.

A HOUSEHOLD WORD!

Buy your CHINA, GLASS, SILVER-PLATED WARE, CUTLERY, and COOKING UTENSILS,

BASSFORD'S,

COOPER INSTITUTE, N. Y.,

Keep the Stommeh in Tone, the bowds open, and the liver active with Tannar's Erranza-oner Servers Avenuer, and you brave any climate without fear.

NO DRUGGIST IS WITHOUT 17.

HUBSON RIVER INSTITUTE and CLAVERACK COLLEGE offers a Four Years' Collegiate Course for Ladies. Graduates receive the Baccalannesia Degree. A Three Years' Seminary Course for Ladies and Gentlemen. The best college perparation for young men. Board and tuition in the entire course $300 a year. He-opened September 4. Address Rev. Algorio Flack, A.M., Claversck, N. Y.

FRENCH BRANDY

Chemically Pure, Twenty-three years old, for Medicinal Purposes and Weddings, $0.50 per Botile, or $14 per Gallon. Sent C. O. D. Imported for fine Medicinal Use. P. LATOUR & CIR., 100 Pearl St., New York.

DEAFNESS & CATARRH, Specialty. Cares legally guaranteed or mosey reintreed. By the Inventor of the Celebrated Patent Invisible Or-ganic Vibrator for Incurable Deafness. Treatise on Deafness and Catarrh sent for 10c.

Da. T. H. STILWELL, 166 Broadway, N. Y.

FREEMAN BURR.

FALL

WINTER CLOTHING,

138 & 140 Fulton St., New York.

FREEMAN & BURR'S stock for the present season is of annuaralieled extent and variety. Their spacious Warercoms, 100 feet by 50, are entirely devoted to the display of a magnificent stock of Men's and Boys' Pall and Winter CLOTHING, giving purchasers an unequaled assortment from which to make selections, OVERCOATS for all seasons. Prices ranging from $8$ to $50.

$6 to $20.

SUITS for any occasion or occupation.

BOTS SUITS and OVERCOATS for all ages from 5 to 15 years.

A LOT OF SLIGHTLY DAMAGED STOCK AT LESS THAN HALF COST.

SELF-MEASUREMENT.—FREEMAN & BURR forward CLOTHING to all parts of the country, and guarantee perfect fitting in all cases, by their new rules for self-measurement, which, with price-list and patterns of goods, they mail free on application.

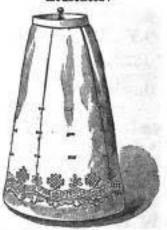

The Gonzalus Hat,

For Gentlemen's wear. Just out. Something Entirely New. The Trade supplied.

DANIEL D. YOUMANS,

HATTER & FURRIER, 717 BROADWAY, New York Hotel.

IMPORTER OF ENGLISH HATS. No Longer "A Skeleton in every Household !"

THE RESILIENT DRAPERY SKIRT "MONOCRAT,"

THE ONLY PERFECT SKIRT!

It is a complete Balmoral or Muslin Skirk, with which steel eptings are combined in a novel and ingenious manner, rendering it Blayent, Comportable, Duracks, and Safe.

The aprings may be removed by any one with perfect case, so that the skirt may be maked at pleasure. For sale by all first-class Dealers.

WATERMAN & MAYER, Patentees.

THOMBON, LANGDON, & CO., Sole Manufacturers. E DWARD SEARS' ENGRAVING ESTABLISHMENT,

THE REISSUE OF

ARPER JOURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol. XIII.—No. 669.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. S4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE of fifteen be writes that he Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1809, by Harper & Bosthers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

LORD AND LADY BYRON.

Is his prime — between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-eight - Brnox was undoubtedly one of the undoubtedly one of the handsomest men that ever lived. His head, though beautifully shaped, was in-deed somewhat too small for his body. Out of a whole regiment of soldiers there was only one who could wear his hat. In his youth he was very fat. At eighteen he weighed 207 pounds; but this tendency to obesity disappeared as be came to manbood. His height was five feet eight and a half inches, and his nessal weight about 17.5 pounds. He was long and strong of limb; and, not-withstanding his slight lameness, was a proficient in athletic exercises. He in athletic exercises. He was a magnificent swimmer, a clever boxer, a good cricketer, and a fair pedestrian. The defect in one of his feet has been greatly exaggerated. At his birth—owing, as he affirmed, to the "prudishness" of his mother—one foot was twisted out of its position, and so much distorted that in his childhood it amounted to a noticeable deformity. But in the course of time, by

to a noticeable deformity.

But in the course of time, by the use of an apparatus contrived for that purpose, the foot was brought to its proper position, and was perfectly well-shaped, only it was an inch shorter than the other; but it remained comparatively weak, and at times gave him intense pain. The weakness was mainly in the sole, but extended somewhat to the ankle and the muscles of the calf. At the age had just been able to wear a common boot upon this limb. Nothing was appar-ent of the defect but a slight lameness, amounting only to a scarcely noticeable limp. So slight was this that it is even now uncertain which was the limb affected. Moone was whol-ly mable to decide from his own recollections; but after inquiring of those who knew inquiring of those who knew him when a boy, who remembered that it was the "off leg which limped ashe walked up the streat," he decided that it was the right one. Jackson, his teacher of puglism, came to the same decision by calling to mind whether he was a right or left hand hitter. Moreover, if Moone is to be credited, the shocmaker who worked for Byis to be creatined, the swee-maker who worked for Bx-nox for years stated that it was the right foot. But that same shoemaker has furnished a written certifi-cate that it was the left foot; and this is confirmed by the Countess Guiceson. The strength of his limbs, and the soundness and capacity of his lungs, are shown by the fact that he could swim

LADY BYRON.

BYRON. It that he could swim for three or four hours without touching bottom. Until he had impaired his constitution by his excesses in Italy, he seems never to have known what sickness was. In the ordinary course of nature he ought to have overpassed fourscore, and been alive to-day. During the last five or six years of his life his early icularity to obesity returned, and he became decidedly fat; while, wing to his earlier abstrace from exercise very last or helic. owing to his entire abstinence from exercise, except on horseback, his limbs became so much shrunken that THELAWHER, who stole a view of the corpse, averred that both legs were shriveled from the knee downward. The portrait which we give is from the picture which is acknowledged to be the best likeness of Byrnon in his best state, just before his marriage. The portrait of Lady Byrnon is from a picture painted some years later. She sat for this picture for the express purpose that it should be used as an illustration for an edition of Byrnon's prems; and it was so used, of course, with her express knowledge and consent.

TYPES OF THE CUBAN PATRIOT SOLDIERS .- [See Page 674.]

TYPES OF CUBAN SOLDIERS.

This illustration on our first page, "Types of Cuban Patriot Soldiers," is principally interesting from the fact that it shows the importance of the negro element in the Cuban revolutionary army. It must be remembered that these negro subdiers are not lighting for the freedom of Cubaalone, but for their own also.

THE FOUR-LEAVED CLOVER.

Is it be true or no
That lock's in a four-leaved clover,
As the old stories go,
This night I mean to discover.

Analo-deep in the dew
(With thoughts too sweet to be spoken),
I searched the grass-plot through Till I found the fairy token.

Shyly hiding from sight.
The molding grasses under;
I brought it forth to the light—
Here is my four-leaved wender!

A small affair, if you scan
Its outward presence merely,
To theid the heart of a man
With the hope that he holds most dearly.

But love has its mystic lore— You may make it superstition— And loop is the open door, Sometimes, to a sweet fruition.

One thing this night shall show, Or call one no true lover— If it be false or no 'that back's in a four-leaved clover!

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

Saturday, Остопек 23, 1869,

"The Movember will be commenced" MAN AND WIFE," a new Serial Story, splendidly Re-Instituted, by WIEEE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Mounstone"). Also Subscriber will be included with HARDER'S WEEEL from the commencement of the Story to the end of 1870 for $4.00.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE DUTIES.

N the present condition of our politics no scratism of the regard and confidence of policical friends can be more flattering, and none night to be more persuasive with every good citizen, than the unsolicited summens to tomorable office. The very fact that a nominaand that it does not always full upon worthy persons, gives it, when wholly spontaneous, a Those who ecrtain commanding authority. feel that a man who asks for an elective office is by no means necessarily the one who ought to have it, and that it is the dary of all wellmeaning citizens to do what they can to cleante the tone of politics, and to engage in them the sympathy of the best men, naturally and properly expect that no man will refuse a summons such as we describe without the most serious

We cordially agree with this view. Nothing should persuade a man to dorline the summons lot on honorable and therefore imperative regood for existing duties and engagements which make the right discharge of the new daties inpossible, or a consciousness of peculiar unfitness for the office. Either of these reasons will justly release him from the duty of obeying the call. And in this country, when, as often nophe sulf comes to an editor need other reason may be suggested. If an editor who is constantly engaged in comment and criticism upon public men and public affairs becomes a part of the executive government, is he not laid under the strongest temptation to ferego she frunk treatment of all public acts and persons, whether national or local? Upon a while range of topics with which he has an official connection, would not his observations almost mentally be suspected? And is not an enter who does his duty intelligently, conaccentionals, and courteonaly serving his State, his country, and his party quite as efficiently as he could serve them in any office?

The independence of the press, of which we hear a great deal of proud rhetoric, is the independence of the editor. But every editor knows, and every reader can see, how easily that independence may be disturbed. If, for instance, an editor privately solicits for his friends appointments to offere, and is successful, his pen becomes naturally very reluctant to censure the appointing power. On the other hand, the appointing power, in fear of newspaper hostility, is sorely tempted to appoint the editor's candidate, even if he does not appear to be altogether worthy. Indeed, to preserve the strict and unsuspected independence of the press, and therefore to enable it to fulfill its real function in our political society, the editor must carefully avoid every thing that creates personal political obligation. By keeping bimself free from "entangling alliances" he maintain his highest authority his best influence.

tains his highest authority, his best influence.
Yet not the less grareful is the generous call of political friendship which aummons him to other duties. If he can not listen to it, he can never forget it. It inspires him to more faithful endeavor. It arimulates him to prove both that the confidence was not misplaced, and that his decision was as wise as it was unavoidable.

NEW YORK TO THE RESCUE!

THE State elections in the year following a Presidential campaign are often languid. There is a reaction from the national effort of the pre-vious year, which is generally most seriously felt by the successful party. Of course this is peculiarly true if that party is one which, like the Republican, includes the more intelligent and independent voters; for such men are more impatient of strict party discipline, and are willing to express dissatisfaction by staying at home. Yet it is at these elections that the friends of the successful administration ought to appear in force, that they may encourage and support it. They should remember that there is another inevitable reaction following a victory in the national election, and arising from the disappointment which some portion of the party can not help feeling. No administration goes far enough in some ways for some of its friends, and it goes a great deal too far in other ways to satisfy others. A sensible man, therefore, who understands the duties and responsibilities of a citizen, will consider whether, upon the whole, he thinks the administration should be abandoned by its friends; and if he decides that it should not be will know that the very nature of our politica demands an active and positive support.

The way to give this support is to vote for the candidates and the principles of the party, when they are both unexceptionable. In this State no Republican will orge any conclusive personal objection against any of the candidates upon the ticket. Men of higher personal character or of purer official reputation are not often presented by any Convention in any State. In the hands of such men, even if their polisical sympathics were unknown, the interests and honor of the State would be secure. But they are, also, the representatives of the prinriples upon which alone the country ent hope to establish peace and to attain the highest welfare. Necessarily, and for reasons that we have before stared, the election in the State is the expression of sympathy with a national While the fundamental issues of a morally honorable payment of the debt, and of the constitutional grarantee of equal rights are still open. New York can not vote without supporting or opposing both. To vote for Mr. Nanas, the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State, and for his companions upon the ticket, however personally honorable and officulty officient they may be, is to vote for Mr. PERDLETON, and to throw doubt upon the national faith, and to vote against the Fifteenth Amendment as a just and wise policy.

It is a vote, moreover, against the adoption of the new State Constitution, which the Demoeratic platform condemns, and it is a censure upon the administration of President GRANT. The State of New York undoubtedly east its honest vote for him. But a stopendous system of fraud, at which the present Governor Hour-MAN, by his proclamation as Mayor of the city, counived, apparently gave the vote to Mr. Sex-MOUR. There is no doubt whatever in the mind of any candid mun who has investigated the subject that enormous frauds were practiced, and almost exclusively by the Democratic party, and not without the knowledge of many of its recognized leaders. The effort to defraud the honest voters of the State will, of course, be reto look listlessly on, and, because General GRANT is elected, suppose it to be of no importance whether New York sustains him or not?

During the seven months of President GRAST's administration the public debt has been decreased by nearly fifty-seven millions of dollars. The greater vigor and efficiency which he has introduced into our contemptible system of the civil service are universally known, The quiet and efficient maintenance of our obligations to other nations is not less familiar. The simple, unestrutations, and honest method and respect of his administration are most honomble, and appeal to American pride and sympathy in the best sense of those words. Does any citizen of New York who sineerely supported the late war and rejoiced in its result, who believes that whatever the difficulties may be yet that the adoption of the Fiftcenth Amendment is essential to a permanent settlementdoes any such citizen wish that Mr. SEYMOUR were President in place of General GRANT? Allowing, as we must allow in all administrations, that every appointment has not been what it should have been, is it therefore desirable that the essential honesty, ability, and lofty purpose of the administration should be condemned?

It is a plain alternative. To vote for the Democratic ticket is to vote that it is a pity that Saymour and Blair were not elected President and Vice-President, and the policy of Mr. Pendlaron was not made the financial policy of the country. Do we wish to keep these questions of dishonor and of injustice rankling in our politics forever? Does not New York stand by the war and its settlement? Is not New York resolved upon peace and upon the only conceivable conditions of peace? She said so last year, and her voice was stifled. Let her say so this year in a tone that no gag of fraud can choke.

THE BRITISH UNITED STATES.

TENNYSON'S " federation of the world" seems to be passing into the vision of practical poli-ticians. Mr. CARDWELL, the British Secretary of War, in a late speech, alluding to the impracticability of a longer continuance of the British colonial government system, soured into prophetic flights, and exclaimed, "When the time comes, and England calls for the support of her colonies, there will be a confederation such as the world never saw under a single sovereign." This idea is elaborated elsewhere in England, and there is undoubtedly in the minds of some Englishmen a splendid fancy of a vast consolidation of all the dependencies of the crown into an invincible imperial league. India, Canad Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the West Indian British islands, bound in a commen interest, ruled by a common Parliament, and taxed by equal laws—that is, a British United States. This is the fancy, and Mr. Carowers's speech merely hints at the possibility. It says, "How excellent such a plan would be, even if we can't exactly see how

Yes, as the Pull Mall Gazette truly observes, in such a league the power of the sovereign and the Parliament of the United Kingdom to declare war for which Australia would be taxed, must necessarily be modified. That implies another kind of assembly truly representative of the whole empire-an imperial Parliament, by the side of which the present body would dwindle into a secondary importance, like our State Legislatures by the side of Congress. How should such a Parliament be elected, where should it meet, what should be its powers? Its powers must of course be defined in a written Constitution; and there must, therefore, be a Supreme Court to interpret the definition, and subordinate imperial courts to administer the law so interpreted. This, under different names, is the American system. Then comes another inevitable question, the relation of India to the united empire. Shall its government be left as it is, or committed to the new assembly, or shall India be included with the rest, making the British United States "principally Hindoo and largely Mohammedan?" Must it be governed as the Territories of our Union are? In any case, India must necessarily be an exceptional question,

The proposition seems to be a dream only at present; but it is carious that it is gravely disenssed. It implies such a renunciation of power by the United Kingdom that nothing would appear to be more unlikely than that it should be entertained for a moment. It would, besides, be very difficult to make the real influence of the smaller parts upon the general policy so evident that they would be willing to take the risks. The eminent member of the imperial Congress from New Zealand, however powerful his talents and persoasive his eloquence, would find that Australia, and Scotland, and England, with Malta and Cape Town, were too strong for him. Yet a mere dream of this kind is prophetic. It is something gained that there should he even the conception of a political fraternity so cosmopolitan. A very little of the wisdom that contemplates this possibility, could it have been infused into the British counsels of a century ago, would have avoided the jealous hostility that has so long divided the two great ma-

TRANSPORTATION OF FOREIGN CONVICTS TO THE UNITED STATES.

DR. Larrent has written to Secretary Pism apon a very important subject—one upon which Mr. RATHOND introduced a bill in Congress, late in the rescion, in 1867, that passed the House of Representatives but did not reach the Seante. It appears that foreign governments are in the occasional habit of transporting their coarders to this country, and Dr. Larrent very properly claims that the matter should be settled by treaty. The latest, most flagmant case, is that of the Government of Saxe-Cobarg-Goths, which furnished some incurable criminals with money and the opportunity of salling from Bremen to the United States. There is something so offensively uncounterons in such a transaction that it seems hardly credible. Would any members of the Government of that duchy, as private gentlemen, throw rags infected with pestilence over the fence into their neighbors' gardens? Yet this is what they officially do, when they send criminals to this country. If they can not manage their criminals, why do they pretend to be a Government? and what would be the condition of civilized states if each should make the other a penal colony?

Dr. Likeux states that about a year ago the Prison Society of New York received a letter from an officer of the prisons in England asking whether some arrangement might not be made by which we should receive a certain class of English convicts who had served a certain part of their penal term, and who promised well; and Sir James Granam, when Home Secretary, made a rule that every convict who had behaved well during two-thirds of his imprisonment should be pardoned upon condition of quitting England. Of course they would come to this country. But the supply of that kind of population from Europe does not seem to require the stimulus of a premium. It is pleasant to know, however, that this kind of transportation is done clandestinely, and is denied when directly charged, for it shows a consciousness of its impropriety. But the custom remains, and its origin is evident. It springs from the old selfish doctrine and practice of national law. States acknowledged what may be called legal and treaty obligations toward each other, but not moral obligations in the true and generous sense,

The remedy, therefore, is as plain as the custom and its origin. It is to be sought in another and better principle, which Dr. LIEBER happily expresses; "The modern law of nations is founded first of all on the principle of good neighborhood." The perception and declaration of such a principle show the immensa and beneficent progress of public sentiment. This principle conceives nations as a fraternity, not as a league of naturally hostile tribes. gives significance to the phrase, the family of nations. It confesses a common sympathy, a common interest, and is an unexpected and none the less cheering proclamation of the consciousness that God has made of one blood all the nations of the earth. Dr. LENKE proposes, first, that we should stipulate by treaty that every attempted exportation of convicts to our shores will be considered a grave offense against the law of notions: and second, that the captains and owners of the importing vessels shall be heavily fined for introducing convicts, which shall be returned whence they came at the expense of the Government. This was the substance of Mr. Raymond's bill. He forther suggests that after such a law is passed, and in the absence of rearies, the Government of the United States should proclaim that it regards such exportation as an unfriendly act.

The subject is one that deserves consideration and action, and which the Doctor treats with his accustomed point and force.

THE UNITED STATES AND CUBA.

The Hornet, otherwise the Cuban vessel of war the Cuba, has been seized by the United States at Wilmington. If, as there is no reasonable doubt, it should be proved that she was equipped from ports of the United States for the purpose of making war upon a Power with which the United States are at peace, she will of course be condemned. Our markets, as we stated last week, are open both to Spaniards and Cubans. But the latter are not yet an independent Power. They have no recognized flag. They must, therefore, take the risks of the United States' laws of neutrality, which forbid the fitting out of warlike expeditions against our friendly allies. The facts of a Cuban commission, therefore, and of flying the "lone star" flag, and of calling an illegitimate cruiser a Cuban vessel of war, do not make the enterprise of Captain Higgsin in September essentially different from that of Captain Rrax in June.

It is not the least remarkable fact about the attempt to entangle the United States in the Cuban movement by hostile expeditions from our ports that the leaders of these expeditions are ex-Confederate officers and soldiers. Their for liberty and republican equal ri-Cuba or any where else we may be permitted to doubt. But there can be no doubt whatever that those who rejoiced in the escape of tha Alabama from Liverpool would not unwilling-ly place the United States in the same position in which that escape placed England, If Captwin Hucouse's performances should cause Spain. to address to us the same kind of demand, and spon the same ground, that we address to England upon the subject of the Alabawa, it may be presumed that Captain Higgins would not tear his hair with anguish. Such considerations do not, indeed, affect the duty of the United States under its own laws and international comity, but they are at least suggestive.

Meanwhile, before our paper appears, the United States will probably be challenged to show valid reasons for the detention of the Spanish gan-bosts. If they can not be preved to be intended to serve against Peru they must be relieved, even if they are destined for Cuba. Nor do we believe that the Government of the United States will regard that fact as sufficient reason for recognizing Cuban belligerency or independence. It is not the vigor and skill with which Spain attempts to maintain her authority, but the force and success with which Cuba resists, that supply the grounds of recognition. Our laws, our traditions, our honora-ble obligations, beside the moral duties of sincere revolutionists, were, or should have been, fully known to the Cuban chiefs.

It is now stated in the Tribuse, apparently with authority, that General SECKLES has withdrawn the offer of mediation that he made to the Spanish Government, and also that the offer, although declined, was received in the most friendly spirit. It is further reported in the World, whose correspondent is probably the President's confident, that General GRANT is satisfied with every word of General SICKLES'S sote, including the threat. Then there was a threat. And the Spanish Government received it in the most friendly spirit! It is a comfort that in the vast and conflicting murmur of remor a man may hear any thing that he wishes to hear. For ourselves, until otherwise informed, we do not believe that the United States have threatened Spain, nor that General Grant is a Captain Bohadil. But we do believe that the Government has offered mediation upon honorable grounds, and we trust that it will renew the offer. We feel also very confident that the United States will not recognize Cuban belligerency until the facts authorize and compel such action.

TRADE AND THE CROPS.

TRADE during the past week has suffered from apprehensions produced by the gold spec-ulations, from the difficulties attending the transportation of goods over lines injured by the great storm, and also from the belief that as the time approached for using extensively the new crop of cotton its price would fall, and carry with it some kinds of domestic goods. The price of some fine shirtings and some prints has been slightly reduced, and perhaps during this week a further reduction may occur; but as no general panic followed the disturbance in Wall Street, and stocks are low throughout the country, large sales are still expected in all departments of business

So far as our crops are concerned, immense loss has been suffered from the drought which prevailed all along the Atlantic coast, and from ecent storms. The two installments we have had of the equinoctial storm broke the drought and supplied a little pasturage; but the important wheat-growing States of the Northwest complain, and no doubt truly, of serious damage to wheat. The settlement of the Northwest has been so recent that farmers are not well provided with barns, and as many of them expect to thresh their wheat immediately after it is made into cocks, so as to avoid stacking, they were enught by the great rain-storm in the midst of this process. Their true policy, instead of straining a point to buy more land, which is the general tendency, is to erect barus to save their grain.

The loss on the two crops will diminish the amount exported to foreign countries, which will be unfortunate not only for us, but for them. England is now supplying herself largely with wheat from this country. The No. 2 Red West-ern is wanted for her laboring population, and the dry and crisp wheat of California is needed to mix with English wheat, which this year is damp, owing to rains in harvest time and the general moisture of the climate. The English crop of 1868 was flinty, owing to the drought which prevailed in England.

The considerable excess in the quantity of wheat taken from us by England for the year ending September 1 over any previous year, is explained on the ground that the English harsest this year was expected to be defective before it was gathered. To the drought of 1868, however, the English want is largely due. England is compelled now to buy from this country, inasmuch as she will require probably for d Septembe seventy million bushels of wheat over and above what her own fields produce. The admitted defective crops in Russia and other wheat producing regions in Europe, and what is known of the crops in this country, will induce her to store more grain than in 1868-'69. Last year the whole population was living from hand to month, as there was more confidence in the ability to obtain supplies than is now felt.

The grain dealers of Europe spread themselves over the whole world to purchase wheat and corn at the lowest prices. They obtain the most exact information of the excess which each market may have to sell, and operate with a view to command the most important markets by first draining the weaker ones, which are induced to sell low from fear of the ultimate competition of the largest growers.

The information obtained in the United States of the grain crops of other countries is derived mainly from English sources, and they reach us impressed with the tone which interest prompts. Our farmers are consequently at the mercy of those who skillfully avoid purchasing from us until prices are forced down to English limits. There is but one mode of remedying this difficulty which subjects this great interest in the United States to the loss of millions annually,

Our Consular system should be used to collect statistics from all other countries of the crops and productions which come into competition in the markets of the world with our own. The statements of the Agricultural Buresu at Washington of our crops of cotton and grain, as compared with those of the previous sar, are regarded as reliable and valuable. Foreign countries are thus informed of the quantity of our productions, but we have no statistics of what others produce to put our dealers on equality with the foreigner,

During the period when our commerce was active the Consular system was extremely beneficial; but as our commerce was destroyed during the war, and is not yet rebailt, no better employment can be given to the consuls of the United States than to devote them to this service. For this purpose it would be expedient to appoint Americans, and have them instructed examine diligently and report fully on this subject. The English have an interest the deepest that can exist to have the most exact knowledge of the condition of all foodexporting countries, as they annually expend est five hundred millions of dollars-measured in our currency-for food for domestic consumption; and the success of their competition with France and Germany in manufacturing industry depends largely on what may be saved in this foreign expenditure. But as our imports exceed our exports, and the balance has been settled by bonds which will be held over us for years, it is not only expedient but necessary that we shall have that knowledge of the productions of other countries that will enable us to meet the foreigner on fair

This is the more necessary, as other states in Europe are by the growth of population grad-ually reaching the condition of England when they will be added to the list of customers for our productions.

The wheat area in the United States is gradnally receding from the Atlantic on account of the habit common to most new populations of severe and rapid exhaustion of the soil. Successive crops of wheat are taken, and nothing is returned to the land, as it is cheaper for the time being to break up new prairie than undergo the expense of enrichment. The burden of costly transportation is thus placed upon the consumer on the sea-board and abroad, which affects our power to compete in the English market with other growers. But in wasting the inheritance of rich lands without strengthening the condition of the country in other respects, we sacrifice the most important interests. Our ability to pay our public debt must depend in great part upon the reasonable use of our great natural facilities. It is a crime injurious not only to us but to the world at large to exhanst the soil of its strength, and it should be panished by penal laws.

If our lands are cultivated on the plan of keeping up their strength, the foreigner will be obliged to pay the same profit upon what is thus raised as he pays now on a plan of exhaustion. The farmer now throws in this annual loss, and ultimately squanders his estate. The old portions of the Union, unable to compete in graingrowing with the West, are driven into other forms of cultivation; but he who makes his hand produce two blades of grass where only one grew before constitutes an exception to the gen-

We urge upon the Government at Washington to secure the establishment of a Boreau in one of the Departments charged with the duty of spreading before our people the most exact knowledge of the extent of the crops abroad. We have reached the condition when our resources must be made available for meeting great burdens, and we are satisfied that the industry of the country will be greatly benefited by being able to measure the wants of foreign countries with as much precision as they can use in ascertaining our productions.

NOTES.

It is one of the most significant of recent facts that what is called the "Conservative" party in Mississippi - which means the Democrats and late Confederates - have nominated a colored citizen for Secretary of State, who accompanies Judge Deer in his stamping tour. It shows that one of the tendencies of the Republican policy of reconstruction is to destroy the barrier of color, and make it necessary for politicisms to propitiate the new citizens. Ten years ago, we presume, the Conservative Democratic may presume, the Conservative Democratic cause in Mississippi would not have been strengthened by the candidacy of a colored man. But we remind Mr. Thomas Structure, the condidate in question, that however his nomination may prove the progress of public sentiment, yet the political allies of those who yote for him in Mississippi deny his race equal rights in New York and Pennsylvania, and oppose those rights every where in the country. Those who vote for him would gladly vote that he should have no vote.

THE Hon. E. G. SPAULDING, who was Chairnam of the Sub-committee upon Ways and Means in the House of Representatives during most of the financial legislation of the war, has prepared a very complete and valuable "Financial History of the War"—a subject which the historians of the rebellion have very insufficiently treated. Mr. Spattineso's work is a most serviceable manual, fully indexed, and containing an ample sketch of all the plans, debates, opinions, and laws in relation to the subject. Naturally the author is somewhat preminent in his work, for he was a conspicuous figure in the legislation he describes. But nowhere else will the student find such a collection of important facts and documents as in this history, which is published in Buffalo by the Express Printing Company.

Mn. Cox, a member of the late Democratic Convention in Minnesota, said to his brethren in that body: "For a long time we have been fight ing the nigger, and we have got whipped. e had nigger thrust at us until we are black in the face. The nigger has been a curse, and I am tired of him. He has filled our belly full, and taken our legs off-short!" In other words, he has done to the Democratic party precisely what that party has tried to do to him. And Mr. Cox might have added with truth that any party in this country which outrages human ma-ture and opposes human rights will, sooner or later, in his own phrase, have its legs taken off—

A COMMITTEE of the new Board of Education in the city of New York propose to provide for the instruction of forty thousand more children than now attend the schools, and with a reduction of $800,000 upon the school expenses of last year. This is to be done by consolidation of departments, by the establishment of a daily normal school for the fourteen hundred pupils who are now in the supplementary classes of the grammar schools, and by other minor medifica-tions. The Board has taken time to reflect. This is not unnatural: as a plan which proposes an immense increase of school facilities with a reduction of nearly a third of the current expense seems to accuse the recent management of incompetency, or of something else.

Even the World is aghast at the summary exclusion of Republicans as inspectors and canvass-ers at the polls in Brooklyn. But it is certainly not a surprising action. A party which could gravely carry on the enormous system of natural-ization and other frauds which were notorious as the election in this city last year, and which di rected its subordinates in the rural districts to report promptly what majority was required, would not hesitate to take entire possession of the ballot-boxes. There remains but one more step to be taken to complete the Democratic election system in the city of New York, and that is, to prevent the Republicans from voting at all. That eminent Democratic chief, James M. Mason, took this ground upon occasion of voting for secession in Virginia. He rather pininly suggested that any body who was so in sane as to vote against secession should be shot. Tammany need not, however, be at the expense of powder and shot. It knows a more pacific and effectual way. We appeal to Mr. Tillown whether the forbalding of Republicans to vote, as well as to count the votes and oversee the counting, would not make him as "serene" over the Democratic prospect as he was in September, 1868, when the news came from Maine? It cor tainly would be in accord with the other practices of the party that so profoundly respects the will of the people.

THE Evening Post gives the following notice of our neighbor, the Bazar, "Late numbers of Harper's Bazar show the unflagging zeal with which the proprietors and editorial staff maintain the interest and variety of its general contents. This paper has already attained an immense cirand unexampled popularity; but the exertions of all engaged upon it are such as would indicate a seeking after success on the part of new candidates for public favor. The young lady buys a single number of it is made a subscriber for life.

Captain C. F. Hall, who has lately returned from the arctic regions, with new information concerning the fate of the expedition of Sir Jours FRANKLIN, gave an interesting account of his discoveries before the Geographical Society in this city, on the evening of October 7. Capeain HALL, it is expected, will soon give a public lec-ture in this city, with full details of his late ex-pedition, and will also exhibit the relies which he found in King William's Land,

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

The President has proclaimed November 18 to be a day of National Thankegiving.

The Virginia Legislature was convened October 5. On the 8th both liouses ratified the Pouriseeth and Fifteenth Amendments. In the House there were only six votes against them, and in the Sennis only four against the Fouriseeth and two against the Fifteenth, out of the latter being a colored Republican Sensite, who declined vetting because the Legislature was filegal. The Legislature, by joint resolution, then adjourned till October 18.

The Spanish steamer Enterps took her charance from this port for Havana October 9.

Our national debt is $2,400,800,000, of which $2,100,-000,000 bear incress. Screetary Bostwell estimates that at the persent rate of reduction—$100,000,000 per year—the entire debt would be extinguished in Sourisen years.

During the eight months from January 1, 1889, out of 21,604 immigrants to San Francisco 11,500 were Chiesce. The number of Chiesce insulgenate to California from 144-to 1805, inclusive, was 165,000.

Fostmanter-General Creavell the opened terrofitions with the British Fost-offer Department for a further reduction of letter posings between the United States and Great Britain. By the existing postal convention which went into effect on the 184 of January, 1865, the single rate of possage for letters between the United States and Great Britain. By the existing postal convention which went into effect on the 184 of January, 1865, the single rate of possage for letters between the United States and Great Britain. By the existing postal convention which went into effect on the 184 of January, 1865, the single rate of possage for letters between the United States and Great Britain. By the existing postal convention which went into effect on the 184 of January, 1865, the single rate of possage for letters between the United States and Great Britain Processed now proposes a further reduction of the 184 of Processed now proposes a further reduction of the 184 of Processed now prepares effect on the 1st of Juniary, 1878.

Ex-President Franklin Pierce died at Concerd on the morning of October 8. President Grant publicly assounced this event, and ordered business in the Government Departments to be sispended on the day of the fineral.

The confisions under which the French Transectant Cable was allowed to be handed on the Anveloant Cable was allowed to be handed on the Anveloant Cable was allowed to be handed on the Anveloant of Cable was allowed to M.R. Krianger and Education of the Cable was allowed to M.R. Krianger and Education of the Cable was allowed to Properly and the the French Minketer of the Interfor by members of the United States Continuous Company for permission to land an Atlantic cable at some point on the French coast. This application, signed to two retired Generals and a Major of the United States Continuous Company for permission to land an Atlantic cable at some point on the French coast. This application, signed to two retired Generals and a Major of the United States volundeers and register army, and by noother American gentleman bodding a premisest properly of suspending the anger and factor. The propriety of suspending the anger and factor. The propriety of suspending the anger and factor. The propriety of suspending the anger and factor will probably be considered during the coming season of Congress.

October 5 was the opening day of the second anneal flower Fife at Narragament Fife. The last and great race was won by "Lady Thom" for a prace of State, Her competitors were "Palmer," "Goldstaith Maid," "Lucy," and "Ansertan Gird," Time, 2.192, 2.184, 2.194, 2.21.

October 9 was the army of the fife and the continuous warms of the day was won by A. Helmoont had been greated and the continuous warms of the day was won by A. Helmoont had a day to the continuous and the continu

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Spanish Cortes resumed its sessions October 2. The Republican insurrection appeared so alarming in its extent that the Government asked and obtained the passage of a hill ensureding the constitutional guaranties of personal rights during the insurrection. This excited great opposition among the Republican members. Two provinces—Analysis and Carlsonin.—have been declared under martial law. It is efficiently stated that combats have them piace between the unitous troops and the Republican insurpretts in Catalonia, Aragos, Old Castile, and Andalusia; and that so far the though have been victorious. It is stated that Sense Paul, a member of the Cortex, is at the bead of one of the Republican bands in the south of Spain.

the head of one of the Republican bands in the seath of Spain.

The Prussian Diet was opened October 6 by a speech from King William, who announced the necessity for increased taxation.

The supplementary elections for members of the French Corps Legislatif take place November I.

The island of 8L Thomas was taited September 17 by an earthquake which abook the city of St. Thomas to its foundations.

Ferdinand de Lesseps has published the official reculations for the navigation of the Succ Const. Navigation is permitted to vessels of all nations, provided they do not draw more than seven metros and a half of water; the transit being right metros days. Steam vessels may mavigate by means of their own steam power. Building vessels of about firly tone bardon must be towed by the erraice established for the purpose by the Company. The truncit due from one service to the other is to france per ton bardon, and its france per passenger.

page by the Company. The trunch due from one sear to the other is 10 frants per ton barden, and 16 frants per parsenger.

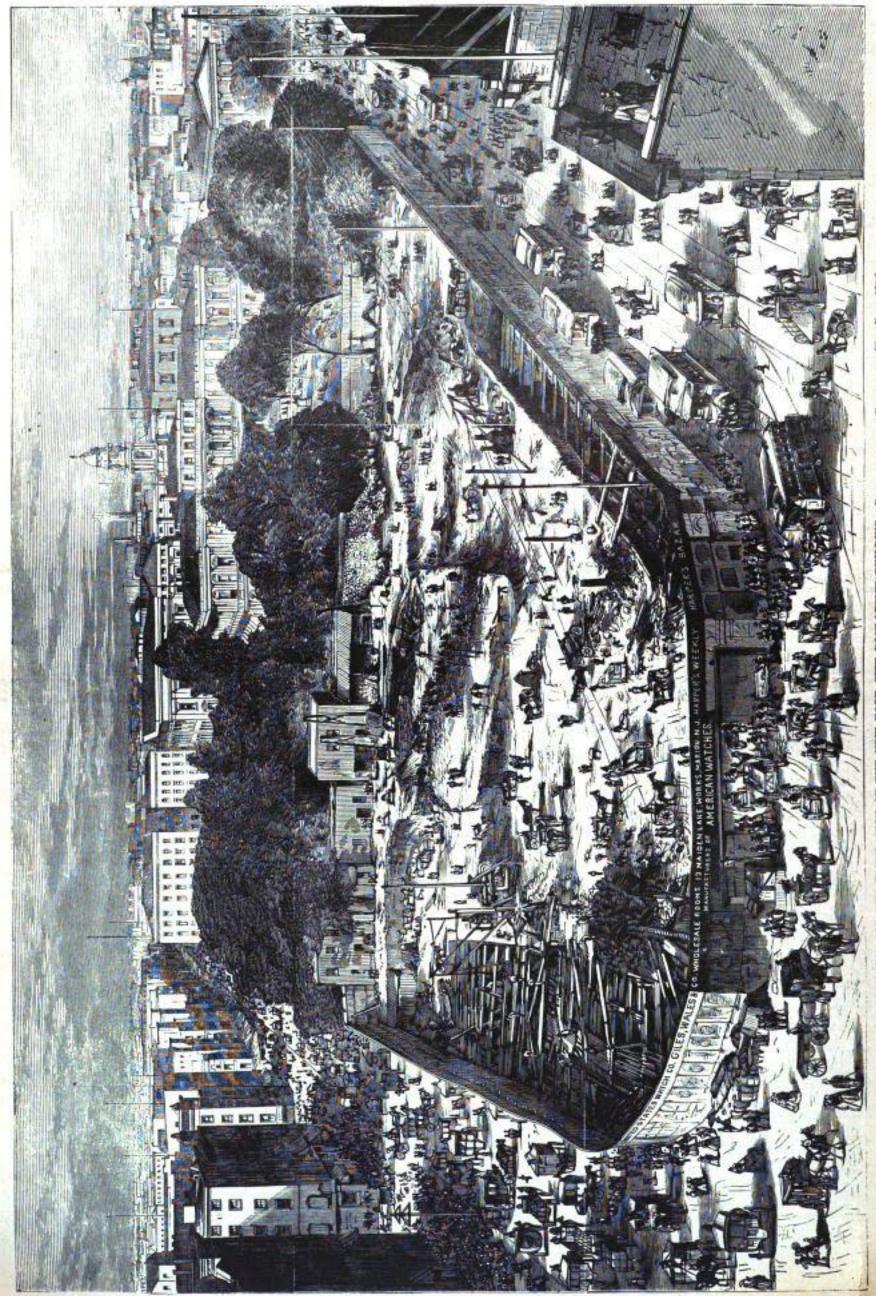

The files, Frederick Temple, D.D., the well-known Bead Marier of Hugby School, and one of the writers of the famous "Escays and Reviews," has been preferred to the Hisboryic of Exerce, in England.

A Poris correspondent of the Independence Reloc states that Father Hyacinthe's letter has thrown the Pathory Smith Germain into a tune of consternation. The Papal Nuncio was not in Paris when the letter are published, but he was framediately informed of it, and at once telegraphed every woul of it to Bome, It is stated that the document was submitted to the Architekhop of Paris before appearing, and appeared by him after some slight needifications. According to the Rayler, the engigned case of the superst the speech he delivered at a Proce Congress sent that since: and the second case of offense was another speech at a distribution of prizes. An early copy of the letter is said to have been communicated to the Emperor by M. Duverpier, the Minister of Grace and Justice, who had received it from Mgr. Darker, the Architekhop of Paris, Pather Hyacushe is coming to America.

Digitized by Google

大学 一大学 一大学 一大学 一大学

CAPTAIN HALL'S ARCTIC EXPE-DITTON.

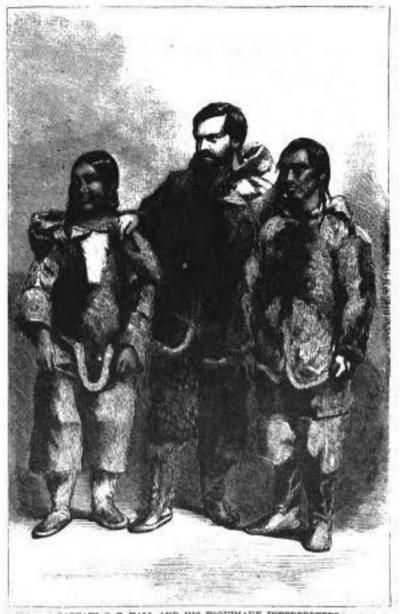

CAPTAIN C. F. HALL, who has recently returned home from his expedition into the Arctic regions, contributes to this Number of the Weekly numerous sketches of the interesting relics re-lating to Sir John Franklin's expedition found fating to Sir John Franklin's expedition found by him in King William's Land.

Captain Hall sailed in the Monticelle in the latter part of June, 1854. He took with him no sailing vessel, but made his ninety days' trip into King William's Land in a sledge. This was his second expedition, the results of the first having been already given to the world in his work entitled "Arctic Researches and Life among the Esquimasex." His first expedition occupied two years and four months, and the discoveries then made encouraged him to make a second aftempt to learn all that could be found out second attempt to learn all that could be found out concerning the fate of the FRANKLIN expedition. In his second, as in his first, exploration he de-pended entirely upon the native Esquimaux, and upon his own skill and resources in obtaining his information. In his letter to Mr. HENRY GUIN-

Information. In his letter to Mr. HENRY GRIS-NELL, dated Repulse Bay, June 20, 1869, Cap-tain Hall says:

"The result of my sledge journey to King William's Land may be summed up thus: None of Sir John Franklin's companions ever reach-ed or died on Montreal Island. It was late in July, 1848, that CROSTER and his party, of about forty or firty-five, passed down the west const of King William's Land in the vicinity of Cape Herschell. The party was dragging two stedges on the sea-ice, which was nearly in its last stage of dissolution—one, a large sledge, laden with an awning-covered hoat, and the other, a small one, laden with provisions and camp material. Just before Caoxina and party arrived at Cape Her-schell they were met by four families of antives, and both parties went into camp near each other. Two Esquimnux men, who were of the na-tive party, gave me much sad, but deeply inter-esting information. Some of it stirred my heart with sodness, intermingled with rage, for it was a confussion that they, with their companions, did secretly and hastily abandon Cnozzaz and his party to anffer and die for need of fresh prorisions, when, in truth, it was in the power of the natives to save every man alive. The next trace of Caozum and his party is to be found in the skeleton which M'CLISTOCK discovered a little below, to the southward and eastward of Cape Herschell; this was never found by the natives. The next trace is a camping place on the sea-shore of King William's Land, about three miles eastward of Pfeiffer's River, where two men died and received Christian burial. At this place fish bones were found by the natives, which showed them that CROXIER and his purp had caught while there a species of fish excellent for food, with which the sea there abounds. The next trace of this party occurs some five or six miles enstward, on a long, low point of King William's Land, where one man died and was buried. Then about S.S.E., two and a half miles further, the next trace occurs on Todd's lalet, where the remains of five men lie. The Inlet, where the remains of five men lie. The next certain trace of this party is on the west side of the inlet, west of Point Richardson, on some low land that is an island or a part of the main land as the tion may be. Here the awaing-covered best and the remains of about thirty or thirty-five of Cucatan's party were found by the native Poo-yet in, of whom Sir John Ross has given a description in the account of his voyage in the Pictory, 1829-34. In the spring of 1849 a large tent was found by some of the natives whom I saw, the floor of which was completely covered with the remains of white men, Close by were two graves. This tent was a little way inland from the head of Terror Bay.

CAPTAIN C. P. HALL AND HIS ESQUIMAUX INTERPRETERS.

"In the spring of 1861, when the snow was nearly all gone, an Esquimaux party, conducted nearly all gone, an Esquimaux party, conducted by a native well known throughout the northern by a native well known throughout the northern regions, found two bonts, with many skeletons in and about them. One of these boats had been previously found by M°CLINTOCK; the other was found lying from one-quarter to one-half mile distant, and must have been completely entombed in snow at the time M°CLINTOCK's parties were there, or they most assuredly would have seen it. In and about the boat, besides the many skeletons alliaded to, were found many relics, most of them similar in character to those relics, most of them similar in character to those M'CLINTOCK has connecated as having been found in the boat he discovered.

found in the boat he discovered.

"The same year that the Erelow and Terror were abundoned one of them consummated the Great Northwest Passage, laving five men abourd. The evidence of the exact number is circumstantial. Every thing about this Northwest Passage ship of Sir Jour Frankler's expedition was in complete order; four boats were hanging high up at the ship's sides, and one was on the quarter-deck; the vessel was in its winter bonsing of sail or tent cloth. This vessel was found by the Ook-joo-lik natives near O Reilly Island, lat. 68° 30° N., lon. 29° W., early in the spring of 1840, is being frozen in the midst of a smooth and unbroken floe of ice of only one winter's formation. From certain evidence I have smooth and unbroken floe of ice of only one uns-ter's formation. From certain evidence I have gained both at Ig-loo-lik and King William's Land, there must have been a dog of the grey-hound speries belonging to one or the other of the two ships. I only know this through native testimony. It is quite likely that some one in England can tell whether there was a dog on board either of the ships when Sir Jours Frank-try left in 1815. tex left in 1815.
"My sledge company from Repulse Bay to 250

RELICS FOUND BY CAPTAIN HALL IN HIS RECENT ARCTIC EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

King William's Land consisted of eleven souls, | all Esquimanx. Although they are as untama-ble as eagles by nature, yet by their aid alone I was enabled to reach points otherwise inacressiblo, and when there to gain much important in-formation relative to the fate of Sir John FRANK-LIN's expedition.

"Could I and my party, with reasonable safe-ty, have remained to make a summer search on King William's Land, it is not only probable that we should have recovered the logs and journals of Sir John Franklin's expedition, but have gathered up and entombed the remains of have gathered up and entombed the remains of nearly one hundred of his companions; for they lie about the places where the three boats have been found, and at the large camping-place at the head of Terror Bay, and the three other places that I have already mentioned. In the core, west side of Point Richardson, however, Nature herself has opened her bosom and given sepulture to the remains of the immortal beroes that died there. Wherever the Esquimanx have that died there. Wherever the Esquimanx have found the graves of Franklin's companions they have dug them open and rebbed the dead, leaving them exposed to the ravages of wild beasts. On Todd's Island the remains of five men were not buried, but, after the savages had rubbed them of every article that could be turned to any account for their use, their dogs were allowed to finish the disgusting work.
"Wherever I found that Sir John Frank-t.tx's companions had died I erected monuments, then fired salutes and waved the Star-spangled Banner over them in memory and respect of the great and true discoverers of the Northwest Passage. I could have gathered great quantities—a very great variety—of relies of Sir John Franklin's expedition, for they are now possessed by natives all over the Arctic regions that I visited or heard of-from Pond's Bay to Mac-kenzie River. As it was I had to be satisfied with taking upon our sledges about 125 pounds total weight of relies from natives about King William's Land. Some of those I will enumer sto: 1. A portion of one side (several planks and ribs fast together) of a boat, clinker-built, and copper-fastened. This part of a boat is of the one found near the boat found by M'CLINTOCK's party. 2. A small oak sledge-runner, reduced from the sledge on which the boat rested. 8. Part of the mast of the Northwest Passage ship. Chronometer box, with its number, name of maker, and the Queen's broad arrow engraved upon it. 5. Two long heavy sheets of copper, three and four inches wide, with counter-sunk holes for screw-nails. On these sheets, as well as on most every thing else that came from the Northwest Pressign ship, are numerous stamps of the Queen's broad arrow. 6. Mahagany writing-desk, claborately finished and bound in brass. 7. Many pieces of silver-plate—forks and spoons—bearing crests and initials of the owners. 8, Parts of watches, 9, Knives, and very many other things, all of which you, and others interested in the fate of the FHANKLIN expedition, will take a sad interest in inspecting on their arrival in the States."

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En gibt Mooks .- Back E.

CHAPTER XV. LADT TALLIS.

IT was not until Mr. Levincourt had ber ated for some time in the milway carriage that he remembered that he was ignorant of Lady Tal-lis's address. Young Lockwood had said that she was in Landon, but where the view knew not. "Mand!" said he, suddenly, "how are we to find your aunt?"

Mand was leaning her weary bend against the cushions, and her eyes were closed. She land not been sleeping, however, for she immediately opened her eyes, and repeated the vicar's words,

"How are we to find my sunt?"
"Yes, how? In the whirl and confusion and misery of this dreadful departure, it never occurred to me that I do not know Lady Tallis's address! Her last letter was dated from the

"Mr.-Mrs. Lockwood knows where Aunt Hilda is," answered Maud, after a moment's re-"Yes, yes, yes," said the vicar, with prevish itability. "Mrs. Lockwood knows! But here can these people be found? Merciful irritability. Heavens, it is enough to madden one! It is all confusion and hopoless misery!"

"Dear Uncle Charles, in this I think I can help you. I remember the Lockwoods' address. They live in a street called Gower Street. Do you know it?"

"Gower Street? Are you sure? How do you know?"

"Mr. Lockwood mentioned that his mother had a house there. Her husband bequeathed it to her, and she lives there."

Wall, I suppose we must drive there the first thing. I know of no other way."

After that the vicar closed his eyes also. But for a long time his brain was tormented by whirling thoughts. Occasionally a gleam of something like hope darted into his mind. Might it not be possible that all would yet go well with Veronica? Some fathers would have deemed that by no pos-sibility could it be altogether well with her. It could not be well to be the wife of a man who had induced her to leave her home clandestinely, to deceive and inflict torturing anxiety on her father; a man who had, at the least, caused a temperary slur to be east on her reputation, and who had risked tarnishing her good name for ever. But in his present wretchedness it seemed to the vicar that to know Veronica Sir John Gale's wife would in itself be happiness and peace of mind. And it must be remembered that Charles Levincourt was at heart a worldly man; that the somewhat lax tone of morals and want John Gale's conversation would by no means have induced him to refuse the baronet his daughter's hand had be asked for it openly. But he was keenly alive to the disgrace of his daughter's elopement; and not the least sharp pang he felt was caused by the reflection that Veronica had thoroughly deceived him.

At length he fell into an uneasy sleep, through which he was dimly conscious of mental pain, and of a dread of waking. From this slumber he was aroused by Mand's hand on his shoulder and Maud's voice in his ear, faltering out that she believed they must have reached London.

They were in London. The railway station looked inexpressibly dreasy, with its long vistas ending in black shadow, its sickly lamps blink-ing like eyes that have watched all night and are weary, and its vast glazed roof, through which the gray dawn was beginning to glimmer.

It was yet too early to attempt to go to Mrs. Lockwood's house. They must wait at least a couple of hours. The vicar looked so worn, couple of hours. The vicar looked so worn, aged, and ill that Maud tried to persuade him to seek some rest at the hotel close to the station, promising that he should be roused in due ime. But he refused to do so.

"Sit here," he said, leading Mand into a waiting-room, where there was a dult coke fire smouldering slowly, and where wanting-room, where there was a dun cote fire smouldering slowly, and where a solitary gas-light shed a yellow glare over a huge, hare, ahin-ing centre-table, leaving the rest of the apart-ment in almost darkness. "You will be safe and unmolested here. I must go and make some inquiries—try to find some trace— Re-main here till I return."

some inquiries—try to find some trace— Remain here till I return."

Mand thought she had never seen a room so utterly soul-depressing. No place would have appeared cheerful to her at that moment; but this railway waiting-room was truly a dreary and forform apartment. She sat there cowering over the dull red fire, sick, and chilly, and sad; listening nervously to every echoing footfall on the long platform without; to the whistle of some distant engine, screaming as though it had lost its way in the labyrinthine net-work of lines that converged just outside the great terof lines that converged just outside the great ter-minus, and were wildly crying for help and guid-ance; listening to the frequent clang of a heavy swing-door, the occasional sound of voices (once a man laughed aloud, and she involuntarily put her hands up to her startled ears to shut out the sound that jarred on every quivering nerve with sgouizing discord), and to the loud, deliberate ticking of a clock above the waiting-room door. At length—how long the time had seemed!—

Mr. Levincourt returned. Mand started up, and tried to read in his face if he had any tidings of Veronica, but she did not venture to speak. He snawered her appealing look

"I have seen the station-master," he said. "The tare not been here. I believe that much is certs.n. The man was civil, and caused inquire to be made among the people—oh my Get that I should have to endure this degradation!-but there was no trace of such people se-cribed. This man made a suggestion. eight have left the main line at Dibley, and either come to London by the other line, thus arriving at a station at the opposite end of the town; or -as I think more probable - have reached the junction that communicates with the creat railways, and so got down to the sea without touching London at all."

"Oh, Unclo Charles!"

"Come, my poor child, let me at least put you into a shelter were you will be safe from the con-tamination of our disgrace. You look half dead, my poor Maudie! Come, there is a cab waiting bere outside."

As Mand moved toward the door to obey his summons the light of the gus-lamp fell full on her pale face, and he almost 'xelaimed aloud at her startling resemblance to her mother.
It seemed to the vicar that the remembrance of his old love, thus called up at this moment, tilled his heart with bitterness even to overflow-

"Oh me!" he grouned; "I wish it were all over! I am weary of my life." The cab rattled over the stones through the still nearly empty streets.

Maud's remembrance of any part of London was very vague. She had never even seen the neighborhoods through which she was now being It all looked squalid, mean, grimy, and uninviting under the morning light. At last they came into a long street, of which the furend was veiled and concealed by a dense foggy vapor.
"What number, miss?" asked the cabman, turning round on his seat.

"What do you say?" asked Mand, faintly.
"What number, miss? This 'ere is Gower Street."

"Oh!" cried Mand, despairingly. "I don't

"Oh!" cried Mand, despairingly. "I don't remember the number!"
The cabman had pulled up his horse, and was now examining the lash of his whip with an air of philosophical indifference, like a man who is weighed upon by no sense of responsibility. After a minute or so he observed, with great calmness, "That's ockkard; Gower Street is raythur a long street, and it 'Il take some time to knock at all the doors both sides o' the way." Then he resumed the examination of his whip-lash.

"Oh, Uncle Charles, I am so sorry!" mur-ored Mand. "What shall we do?" mured

Mr. Levincourt jumped out of the cab, and ran to a door where there was a young woman washing the steps.

Digitized by Got a market

"Do you happen to know," be asked, "where-abouts in this street a Mrs. Lockwood lives?"

"Mrs. Lockwood!" echoed the girl, drying her streaming arms on her apron, "this is Mrs. Lockwood's.

The vicar beckened to the cabman, who had also slighted by this time, and who now led his raw-boned horse up to the door at a funereal

"My good girl," said the vicar, "will you take a message to your mistress of osce? It is of the greatest importance."

"Missis ain't up yet," rejoined the servant, staring first at him, then at Mand, and lastly at the calman, from whom she received a confi-dential wink, which seemed to claim a common rantage-ground of Cockneyhood between him-self and her, and to separate them both from self and her, and to separate them both from the vicar and his ward.

"I will send up this card to her," said Mr. Levincours. He took out a card and pencil, and wrote some words hastily. Then he gave the girl the card together with a shilling, and begged her to lose no time in delivering the former to her mistress, while she was to keep the latter for herself. for herself.

The administration of the bribe appeared to raise the vicar in the cabman's estimation. The latter officiously pulled down the window-glass on the side next the house, so that Mand could put her head out, and then stood with the handle of the cab door in his hand, ready for any emergency.

The progress of the servent to her mistress's bedroom was retarded by her efforts to decipher what was written on the card, an attempt in which she only partially succeeded. In about five minutes she came down again, and said to the vicar:

"Missus's best compliments, and the lady as

"Missua's best compliments, and the lady as you're a looking for its lodging in the 'ouse. She's on the first-floor, and will you please walk into the drawing-room?"

The vicar and Mand followed the girl upstairs into a front-room, farnished as a sitting-room. It ecommunicated by folding-doors, which were now closed, with another spartment.

The servant drew up the yellow window-blinds, desired the visitors to be seated, and asked, as the remarked to leave the room:

desired the visitors to be seated, and asked, as she prepared to leave the room:
"Who shall I say, please?"
"Mr. Levincourt, and— Stay! You had better take my card in to her ladyship, and say that her niece is here with me, and would be glad if she might see her."

The servant departed into the adjoining chamber, as it appeared for the sound of voices year.

The servant departed into the adjoining cham-ber, as it appeared, for the sound of voices very slightly muffled by the folding-doors was heard immediately. In a very few minutes the girl returned, begging Mand to follow her.

"She ain't up yet, but she'd like to see you, miss; and she'll come out to you, Sir, as soon as Maud obeyed her sunt's summons, and the vicar was left alone, standing at the window, and looking at the monotonous line of the op-posite houses. He was, in a measure, relieved by the fact that the first surprise and shock to Lady Tallis of his presence and his errand in London would be over before he saw her. He felt a strong persuasion that tact and self-pos-session were by no means poor Hilda's distin-guishing characteristics, and he had nervously dreaded the first meeting with her. Although he had placed himself as far as possible from the folding-doors, he could hear the voices rising and falling in the adjoining room, and occasion-ally could distinguish her ladyship's tones in a shrill exclamation.

shrill exclamation.

He tapped his fingers with irritable impatience on the window. Why did not Maud urge her annt to hasten? She knew that every minute was of importance to him. He would wait no longer. He would go away, and return later.

As he so thought the door opened, and there appeared the woman whom he had last seen in the bloom of her youth more than a score years ago. The remembrance of the beautiful Hilds Delaney was very distinct in his mind. At the sound of the opening door he turned round and beheld a figure startlingly at variance with that remembrance: a small, lean, pale old woman, huddled in a dark-colored wrapper, and with a quantity of soft gray hair untidily thrust into a brown tilk net.

"My dear friend," said she, taking both the vicar's hands—"my poor dear friend!"

Her voice had an odd, cracked sound, like the tone of a broken musical instrument which has once given forth sweet notes; and she spoke with as unmistakable a brogue as though she had nev-er passed a day out of the County Cork.

"Ah! you wouldn't have known me now, vicar's face.

"Yes," he answered, after an instant's glance
"yes, I should have known you." And, indeed, as he looked, her face became familiar to deed, as he looked, her face became familiar to his eyes. She retnined the exquisite delicacy of skin which had been one of her chief beasties, but it was now blanched and wan, and marked with three or four deep lines round the mooth, though on the forehead it remained smooth. There was still the regular, clear-cut outline, but exaggerated into sharpness. There were still the large, finely-shaped, lustrous bazel eyes, but with a glitter in them that seemed too bright for health, and with traces of much walling and with a glitter in them that seemed too bright for bealth, and with traces of much wailing and weeping in their heavy lida. She was a kindly, foolish, garrulous, utterly undignified woman.

"I have come," said the vicar, "to ask you to give shelter and protection to this dear child. My house is no home for her now, and Heaven knows when I shall return to it myself. I sup-pose Maud has—has told you?"

"Ah, my dear Mr. Levincourt, where would

"Ah, my dear Mr. Levincourt, where would the child find shelter and protection if not with my dear Mr. Levincourt, where would her poor dear mother's only sister? And hasn't is been the wish of my heart to have her with me all these years? And, indeed, when Clara died I would have adopted her outright, if I'd been though, to be sure, a boy would have been best, because of the baronetcy, and as never forgave me, I believe, for not giving him a son—of course I— But indeed I am truly distressed at your mirfortune, and I hope that things may not be so had as ye fear. A runaway mar'ge is objic-tionable, there's no doubt of that in the world. Still, ye know, my dear Mr. Levincourt, it won't be the first, and I'd wager not the last. And, upon my honor, I can't see but that the runaway mar'ges may turn out as well sometimes as those that are arranged in the regular way; though, goodness knows, that is not saying much, after

Here the poor lady paused to heave a deep sigh, and then, seating herself close to Mand, she took her niece's hand and pressed it affec-

The vicar perceived that Lady Tallis had but very imperfect conception of the real state of the case. The truth was that she had not per-mitted Maud to explain it to ber, being too much absorbed in the joy and surprise of seeing her niece to give heed or sympathy to the fate of the vicar's daughter. Her life had been so unserly joyless and empty of affection for so many years that the lonely woman not unnaturally clutched at this chance of happiness with the selfish eagerness of a starving creature who snatches as food.

"It is very, very dreadful, Aunt Hilds," Mand had said, lowering her voice lest it should reach the ears of the vicar in the next room. "Mr.
Levincourt will be heart-broken if he does not find her. And I love her so dearly. My poor Veronica! Oh, why, why did she leave us?"
But her aunt could not help dwelling on the hope that out of this trouble might come a gleam comfort to her own desciate life.

She had soothed and kissed the sobbing girl, and had poured out a stream of incoherent talk, as she hastily huddled some clothes about her. "Hush, dear child! Don't be fretting, my

"Hush, dear child! Don't be fretting, my poor pet! You will stay here with me, safe, now! Sure they'll find her beyond a doubt. Of course the man will marry her. And as to running away, why, my darling child, though I'd be loth to inculcate the practice, or to recommend it to any well-brought-up girl, still ye know very well that it's a thing that happens every day. There was Miss Grogan, of the Queen's County, one of the most dashing girls that ye ever saw in all year days slowed with a subaltern in a march. all your days, eloped with a subaltern in a march-ing regiment. But she had fifty thousand pounds ing regiment. But she had fifty thousand pounds of her own the very moment she came of age; so of course they were very comfortable in a workfly point of view, and the whole county visited them just as much as if they had had bens published in the parish church every day for a year. And yet, at first, her family were in the greatest distress—the very greatest distress—though he was the second cousin of Lord Clontarf, and an extremely elegant young fellow. But of course I understand Mr. Levincourt's feel-per and I am sincerely source for him.—I am in. ings, and I am sincerely sorry for him-I am, in-

So, in speaking to the vicar, her tone, although not unsympathizing, was very different from what it would have been had she at all realized the terrible apprehensions which racked his mind, "Ye'll stay and have a mouthful of breakfast with me, my dear Mr. Levincourt?" she said, seeing him about to depart. "I will have it got ready immediately. And indeed you must both be fainting, after traveling all night, too—What's the matter?"

What's the matter?"

The question was caused by a ghastly change which had come over the vicar's face. His eyes were fixed on the direction on an envelope which has on the table. He pointed to it silently. Lady Tallis stared in alarm and bewilderment; but Mand, springing to the vicar's side, looked over his shoulder at the writing.

"Oh, Aunt Hilda!" she gasped. "What does this mean?"

does this mean?"
"What, child? What in the world is the matter? 'That?' Sure that's a bill, sent in by my shoemaker!"
"But the name?" said the vicar, with a sudden, startling fierceness.

"The name? Well, it's my name; whose else should it be? Oh, to be sure—I see now!
Ah! ye didn't know that he took another name. about two years ago. Did ye never hear of his uncle, the rich alderman? The alderman left him thirty thousand pounds, on condition that he should tack his name on to his old one, and give him the honor and glory of sending down his own plebeian appellation with the baronetry. So, of course, when he changed his name I changed mine; for I am his wife, though I make no doubt that he would be glad enough to deny it if he could. Only that, being his wife, he has more power to tyranniae over me than he has over any body else. But then—"

"But what is he called now, Aunt Hilda?"

"But what is he called now, Aunt Hudar" interrupted Mand, seeing that her guardian was in an agony of speechless suspense. "What names does—does your husband go by?"

"Indeed, my pet, that's more than I can say; but his rightful style and title is Sir John Tallis Gale, Baronet, and I suppose you knew that much before!"

"Oh my God!" grouned the vicer, sinking into a chair, and letting his head drop on his hands.
"Uncle Charles!" screamed Maud, throwing her arms around him. It will kill him!" "Oh, Uncle Charles!

It will kill him!"

But the vicar was not dying. He was living to a rush of herrible sensations; grief, astonishment, shame, and anger. The indelibility of the diagrace inflicted on him; the hopelessness of any remedy; the infamy that must attend his child's future life, were all present to his mind with instant and torturing vivideess. But of these minufed emotions aners was the predomthese mingled emotions anger was the predom-inant one, and it grew flereer with every second he marked more by pride than by depth or tenterness. This pride was now trampled in the dust, and a feeling of implacable resentment arose in his mind against her who had inflicted the anguish of such a humiliation.

He raised his face distorted by passion. From this hour forth I disown and abandon her," he said, in quivering tones. "No one is my friend who speaks her name to me. In the infamy she has chosen let her live and die. And may God so punish her for the misery she has Maud fell on her knees before him and seized his hands. "Oh, bush; oh pray, pray hush, dear Uncle Charles!" she sobbed out. "Think how sorry you would be if you said the words! How you would repent and be sorry all your life

For mercy's sake!" exclaimed Lady Tallis, in a tremulous voice, "what is it all about? My dearest child, you positively must not sob in that heart-breaking manner! Sure you'll make your-

"And for one who is not worth a tear!" addand for one who is not worth a tear; added the vicar. "For one who— But I will never mention her name again. It is over, She is lost and gone irrevocably. Lady Tallis, I would have spared you this if I could have guessed the extent of the degradation that has fallen upon me. My presence in your house at this moment is almost an outrage." is almost an outrage."

The poor lady sat down in a chair, and press-

The poor lady sat down in a chair, and pressing her hands to her forehead, began to whimper.

"I'd be unspeakably obliged to ye, Mr. Levincourt," she said, "if you would do me the favor to explain. My poor head is in a whirl of confusion. I really and truly am not strong enough to support this kind of thing!"

"We have each of us a horrible burden to support," rejoined the vicer, almost sternly.

"And God knows that mine is not the least heavy. You have been entirely separated from your husband for some years?"
"Oh, indeed I have! That is to say, there never has been a legal separation; but-

The vicar interrupted her. "He has assumed another name and has been living abroad?" "As to the name, I am sure of that, because I learned it from his agent, to whom I am some-times compelled to have recourse for money. But for where he has been living, I assure you, my dear Mr. Levincourt—"

"The villain who has carried away my daughter-stolen her from a home in which he had received every kindness and hospitable care that my means permitted me to lavish on him—that black-hearted, thankless, infamous scoundrel, Lody Tallis, is—Sir John Gale."

THE END OF THE PIRST BOOK.

TRAFFIC IN SOULS.

A currous case of swindling was brought before a French police-court, which shows a pe-culiar state of things with respect to the traffic in these ceremonies. It need hardly be said that it is customary for surviving relatives of Roman Catholics to cause masses to be said for the repose of the souls of decessed persons. It that the demand for masses in Paris is so seems that the demand for masses in Paris is so large that the clergy in that city are not able to meet it. In order, therefore, to supply the requirements of the public in this matter, there are houses in Paris which undertake for a commission to send the fees and the orders to priests in the provinces. Availing themselves of this practice, two rogues, one of them a priest who had been laid under an interdict for francis in connection with this custom, issued circular. connection with this custom, issued circulars, which they sent to rural priests, offering to act has agents for them, and to negotiate what may be termed their bills for masses. So specious were these circulars that some priests fell into the trap, and sent undertakings to repeat masses, leaving the number in blank. As the signatures were genuine, the two persons referred to were able to discount these with the funeral furnishers or publishers who were intrusted with the fees and orders. But, instead of sending the vest-ments, or books, or whatever the priests desired to have, in return for their promissory notes, they appropriated them to their own uses. They were also open to receive orders direct from the public, and there was no guarantee that they did not pocket the fees without making any return, as the only prisoner who remained to take his trial declared that his was a ready-money business, and that he kept no books. It was no easy matter to get evidence against him, as the priests who had signed the bills of exchange were naturally reloctant to give evidence in a matter which, though it was affirmed to be in accordance with canonical rules, they felt was not cred-itable to them. One of these witnesses, for in-stance, had signed bills for 7618 france' worth of masses, and altogether he was under the ob-ligation of repeating 1200 masses, according to his own admission. How long it takes to say a mass is not stated, but the impression gathered from what was said is, that a priest must rise early in the morning and make long days for a considerable time to work off such an accumulation as this. But great as his liabilities were, they were triffing in comparison with that of the witness who followed him; he had bills in the ecclesiastical market to the amount in the aggregate of 11,265 masses. There were others whose liabilities were not much inferior; in the list of these may be mentioned one for 5812, another for 7151, another for 2736, another for 1764, another for 2250, another for 11,708, another for 2395, another for 9381, another for 9457, and another, who in proportion was a pike among minnows, whose liabilities amounted to 28,000 masses. So reckless, indeed, was one of these priests that he had signed bills to the amount of 100,000 frames, which, at the current rate of 1 franc a mass, rendered him liable to the same number of masses; so that it may be imagined that if his creditors had come upon him in a hody they would have been obliged to accept a composition. There is something to be said in excuse for these peculiar ecclesiastical bills in the case of some of the priests who took part in them. Take, for instance, the case of a cure in an out-of-the-way village, whose stepend would be despised by the worst-paid of English curstes, Say, for instance, that his clerical vestments were completely worn out, and that neither he nor his parishioners possessed the means of replacing them; a man in such a position could hardly be condemned for resorting to a method of raising means if he honestly intended to meet the liabili-ties he incurred; he could only be charged with acting dishonestly when, to indulge extravagance in this respect or in any other, he undersook to do more than he could perform. But it is just at this point that many of the priests are said to have sinned. In order to indulge their extravagance they became guilty of fraud. While al-ready liable for more masses than they could per-form, they incurred liabilities for the performance of others in return for books or other goods, which they immediately sold for what they would real-That the sensation excited by the discov-of these novel frauds and their magnitude has been great and painful may be easily imag-ined. Few of the persons who have ordered and paid for masses can feel assured that what they paid for masses can feel assured that what they paid for has been done, and, though some may smile at their credulity in supposing that any good can reach deceased persons by the perform-ance of masses, all right-minded persons will re-spect the motives which induced them to sacrifice their money for that from which they themselves could derive no benefit. could derive no benefit.

THE NEW POST-OFFICE BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Our illustration on page 676 gives an accurate and comprehensive view of the site of the new Post-office Building in this city, and of the cavations now being made for the foundation of the edifice. The site is in the City Park in front of the City Hell. The work of excavation is going on rapidly. By the first of this month 18,000 cubic yards had been excavated, and over 16,000 cubic feet of concrete, and nearly 17,000 feet of masonry had been com-pleted. In order to bank up the sides of the excavations and protect it from caving under pressure or from the influence of the weather, there had to be built over one thousand lines. feet of sheathing and shoring, leaving nearly nine hundred feet more to be put up. The structure, under the supervision of Postmaster P. H. Jowes, and the immediate direction of Superintendent HULBURD, will, it is hoped, be speedily completed.

THE GREAT FLOOD.

THE recent storm which has caused so much destruction to property along the Atlantic coast, though it is generally considered a part of our autumn equinoctial, may perhaps more justly be attributed to the same conjunction of the sun and moon which has caused the recent extraordinary tidal wave. It is where the tides have been the highest that the storm has been the most severe and destructive.

This great storm deluged a large portion of the country with rain. The rivers were swollen; canal embankments, bridges, and dams were swept away; railroads were submerged and the tracks destroyed; mills, houses, canal-boats, and railroad cars were floated off; and there must also have been a great destruction of human life. The Mohawk River, in this State, rose ten feet above low-water mark. The Schuylkill rose above low-water mark. The Schuylkill rose above the wharves of Market Street, in Philadelphia, carrying away immense quantities of lumber and coel, and interfering with the gas works of that city. At Norristown the river rose seventeen foot. The Lebigh River, in Pennsylvaries of that city.

The Lehigh River, in Pennsylvania, rose fifteen feet, doing immense damage in its valley and submerging the railroad tracks. In Connecticut the flood was equally minous. Hussann's cotton-mills, at Higganum, Middle-market houses.

sex County, were swept away; also several houses in Glastenbury. The Housatonic Dam was dein Glastenbury. The Housatonic Dam was de-stroyed. In Maine lumber booms and dams were carried away. In the valley of the Hudson the New York, the Troy and Boston Railway train was thrown into the Hoosick River, and three lives were lost.

It is impossible to estimate the immense damage caused by this great flood: it amounts to many millions of dollars, besides the large loss of human life which, either directly or indirectly, must have resulted from the storm.

From Portland the storm spread northward. At Eastport it took the form of a destructive hurricane. In Eastport alone it destroyed more than half a million dollars' worth of property. No-merous vessels were wrecked along the coast. Twenty-seven vessels were driven ashore at Rum-

CORMORANTS' NESTS ON MAGDA-LENA ISLAND.

THE scene depicted in our beautiful and characteristic engraving on page 681 is on the island of Santa Magdalena, in the Magellan Strait, re-cently visited by a British surveying expedition. This island is midway between the South Amer-ican main land and Terra del Fuego, and about twenty miles from the Chilian settlement of Punta Arena. On approaching the island hundreds of sea-lions and fur-seals were seen disporting themselves in the water or basking on the sand and shingly beach, while great numbers of cormorants were perched on the ledges of the perpendicular cliffs. Having landed and climbed to dicular cliffs. Having landed and climbed to the top of the cliffs, the party were met by a great crowd of penguins, which came rushing out of their burrows where they lay their eggs, and, screaming in very discordant tones, endeavored to hurry out of the strangers' reach. Their awk-ward gait as they shuffled along on their hind-flingers, believing their bedies with their short flippers, balancing their bodies with their short stus, and rolling themselves over the summits of the cliffs to avoid capture, caused a great deal of mertiment to the sailors. Many of those queer birds were soon knocked down. "When we got to the centre of the island," says Mr. BEDWELL, one of the party, "we observed a scene of the most curious description. A few shallow ponds of brackish water were surround-ed by thousands of cormorants, all seated on little mounds. On our coming into view over the ridge of hillocks which inclosed the small plain, the birds nearest to us took to flight, and as they passed over the others followed their example; but they were in such numbers that those underneath were unable to rise until those above had peach were unable to rise until those above had passed over, and the flapping of their wings stirred up the dry guano into a cloud of a most borrible and sickening odor. Some of the boat's erew ran in among them, adding to the confusion and noise. A rough estimate only of their number could be made, but 10,000 or 15,000 is not an exaggerated calculation. On further examination the little mounds on which they had been sitting were found to be their nexts, built up of sitting were found to be their nests, built up of earth and guano, and placed in rows with the most remarkable regularity, an equal distance being preserved between the nests, nearly all of which contained each two or three eggs. A few eggs had already been batched, and the scared little ones, though but a day or two old, ran off as fast as they could and puddled into the centre of the reserved word. The scort want of the reserved word. of the nearest pond. The sportsmen of our party had the satisfaction of bagging a dozen or so of wild-geese, such as are shown in the upper lefthand corner of the sketch; but the naturalist of the expedition was much pleased with the result of his visit to this interesting little island."

TYPES OF HINDUISM.

How striking a proof is it of the strength of the religious principle in human nature, that the grandest works which have ever been reared are those connected with worship! Were an in-habitant of some distant world able to look down upon our planet, his eye would be most attracted by the glittering and painted pagodas of China, Borneo, and Japan; the richly ornamented temples, and stupendous rock shrines of India: the dome-topped mosques, and slender minarets of Western Asia; the pyramids, and vast temples of Egypt, with their avenues of gigantic statues and sphinzes extending for miles; the graceful shrines of classic Greece; the basilicas of Rome and Byzantium; the semi-Oriental church domes of Moscow; the Gothic cathedrals of Western Europe; and the grand fire temples of Mexico and Pera, where, in the infancy of reason and humanity, human sacrifices were offered up, as if the All-Father were pleased with the agony of

Nowhere has that adoring principle reared grander temples than in India. Egypt may surpass them in vasmess, and Greece outdoes them in symmetry; but as exhibiting a marvelous combination of grandeur, beauty, and variety, the religious edifices of India find no parallel in any other country. The stupendous rock tem-ples of Western India, the magnificent and lofty domed topes of Ceylon, the gorgeous sculp-tured shrines of Southern India, the tall elliptical temples of Orissa, the lovely and exquisitely finished ones of Gazerst, combine with the Mohammedan mosques and minarets to form an un-surpassable assemblage of architectural art and

The Hindus have built these glorious temples, but filled them with images of gods frightful in the extreme, with one remarkable exception— the three-faced bust of Siva in the cave-temple of Elephanta. Here the Hindu God is repre-sented in the threefold character of Creator, Preserver, and Destroyer. No Grecian sculpture so well conveys the idea of Godhead. The repose which distinguishes the faces of the Creator and Preserver is not the meditation of the saint, but the calm of unbounded power; and the Destroyer's face portends not destruction so much as an-nihilation to the world. In every other instance representations of the Hindu deities are grotesque d horrible.

Some one has said that, in his exquisitely no-ble and beautiful idols, the Greek adored the divinity of his own nature—of humanity; whereas the Hindu's awful sense of the superhuman, of something unutterably superior to mortals, ren-ders the workmanship of the idol a thing of no moment, and he bows before the painted block of stone or wood with a deeper sense of the di-vine presence than the Greek had when standing in ecstasy before his divine Zeus or radiant

The great Indian peninsula is now peopled by nations of very diverse origin. Long before his-tory usurped the place of tradition the country was inhabited by races of men whose descendants still dwell in the jungles and wild hill-sides of India. The first invaders of the country, whoof India. The first invaders of the commry, was ever they may have been, drove the inhabitants of the plains of the North to the hill country of the region beyond. These the Vindhya and to the region beyond. These conquerors were themselves displaced by the Tamuls, who in their turn fled southward at the approach of the warlike Aryans, these last being the progenitors of the Brahminical Hindus of to-

Casting a glance backward as far as any history can take us, we find the land in nos-of at least four distinct races-the-original tribes, the first invaders, the Tamuls, and the Aryans. the line invaders, the Tamuis, and the Aryans. The religious belief of these later conquerors gradually diffused itself through the peninsular; but the genius peculiar to the people receiving it has left its mark to the present day.

It is generally conceded that the Aryans brought pure and bothy notions of a Creator from their home in Central Asia; but modern Himiustics in a greater well as a creater and their points.

ism is a strange medley, varying in complexion from province to province, and in some places exhibiting features directly opposite to its general character. Wherever the aboriginal element predominates the religion is dark and bloody; where the Tamul race is found it is cheerful. gorgeous, and licentious; wherever the pure Hin-du is in the ascerdant it is lofty in speculation

Our illustration on page 685 represents a Ta-mul pageda dedicated to the bull, one of the saered animals of the Tamul Hindus. This tem-ple is one of two on the island of Seringham, near Trichinopoly in the Carnetic, in Southern India. The island is formed by the river Coleroon and its branch the Cavery, and its pago-das are of high repute. The bull is of immense size, cut from one solid block of black marble; and so sacred is it esteemed, that it is with great difficulty that a stranger can land on the island and approach sufficiently near to realize the pro-portions of the ball and the exquisite architecture of the temple-now, however, fast crembling into ruin.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

A Case or Ass-rex-ra-A donkey tied up.

After all, there is not much difference between the followers and the opponents of Dr. Jenner. The one are Vaccinators, and the others are Vaccine-baters.

A farmer, who had engaged the services of a sen of the Emerahl Isle, sent blue out one morning to harrow a siece of ground. He had not worked long before nearly all the teeth came out of the harrow. Present-ly the farmer went out into the field to take notes of Par's progress, and asked him how to liked harrow-lag. "Oh" replied Pat, "it goes a bit smoother now since the pegs are out."

On a white stone, in an old cemetery at Concord, Massachusette, is this epitaph:

"This stone is designed by its durability To perpetuate the memory, and by its col To signify the meral character of Miss Abigail Dudley."

Not many years since a certain Vermont church was in need of a paster. One Sakbath the minister supplying the pulpit, well known for his eccentric turn of nimt, prayed for "a man from the Lord" in this fashion: "Send us not an old man in his dotage, nor a young man in his gostinghood, but a man with all the modern improvements."

Why is a solar eclipse like a woman whipping her by 2—Because it's a hiding of the sun.

"You have not one drop of the great Napoleon's blood in your veins," said testy old Jerome one day in a pet to his nephear the Emperor. "Well," replied Logis Napoleon, "at all events I have his whole fam-ily on my shoulders."

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN MAN AND THE CHIMPANZEE.

The chimpanzee was never known to gamble in stocks. First difference.

The chimpanzee was never known to pass its life in making itself hideons and ridiculous under the pretence of fashion. Second difference.

The chimpanzee sever sats without hunger, nor diffusis without thirst. Third difference.

The chimpanzee is not used to villify its fellow-chimpanzees, nor to publish libelous things against them. Fourth difference.

Willie P.—, a little five-year-old, was playing with a honey-bee, when the angry bee sking him. "On I grandma," cried Willie, "I defat' know bees had splitters in their feet!"

A Danker's Account of a Sermon..." Well, rahs, do sermon was upon de miricles of de louves and de fishes. De minister said how de seven thousand leuves and de five thousand fishes divided between the twelve apostles; an' de miracle was dat dey didn't best !"

A gentleman was praising the beautiful hair of a ledy, when one of those terrible children when Providence seems to have sent on earth as securges of hypocrisy and falsehood, cardelmed: "My hair would be as handsome as mamma's if she'd let me take as much tase of it as she takes of hers. Mamma never sleeps in her hair; but always puts it away in the ward-toke before she goes to bed."

An imaginative young man, laboring over the gra-ual encroschments of womankind on masculine ter-tory in the matter of dress, breaks into song as for

They took our coats—at first we hardly wissed 'on;
And then they sped our dichars and coarses;
They stole our point we only langued and bland 'an-Eatly, by allow and sure degrees, the witches Have taken all—our crain, hete, bests, and be

The following version of an ancient ditty is circulating as a means of fixing Vanderbilt in the juvenile mind:

"That is the man the hears have torn,
That married the maides all forders,
That took the Wall Shreet hall by the hear,
That took the Wall Shreet hall by the hear,
That took the Wall Shreet hall by the hear,
That took the Wall that took the story
That lay in the house that Vander-lift."

The Larger Quorations is the Maraneowial Manager.—Marriages scarce and depended; engagementa dail and but few coming forward; courtships long and linguring; mercantile business dail; standal market overstocked; beaux, supplies light, stock inferior and in good deman1; discarded lovers plenty and stock accumulating; tattling, a good assertment.

Bables are described as coupons attached to the

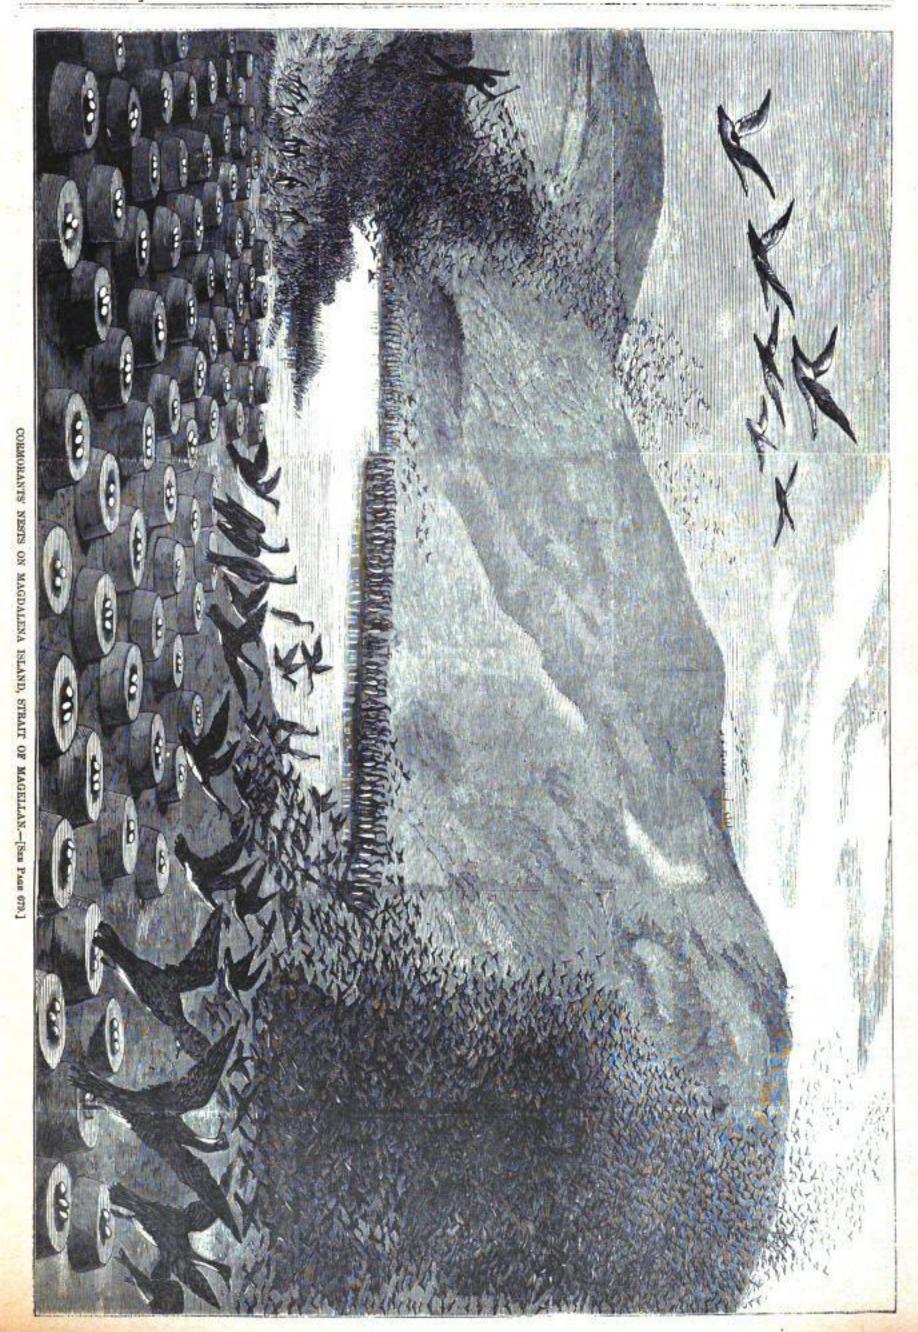

"Why don't the men propose, mamma, Why don't the men propose? Each one seems coming to the point, And then away he goes." "They are frightened at your cost, my dear; They are thinking of your clothes."

When Haddock's wife kicked him out of hed he said, "Look here, now, if you do that again it will be likely to cause a coldness in this family."

FATAL FALL-An unhealthy antumn.

Digitized by Google

MAKING THE BEST OF IT. By ANNIE THOMAS.

Beauty is easy enough to win But one isn't loved every day.

"My face tingles so from the cold air that I shall be unfit for publication for some boars. Let me off the dinner; leave me up here quietly till later-do, Dora."
"Up here" was in Dora Ralston's dressing-room; and the one who wanted to be left there was her cousin, Georgina Villars.

"Nonsense, Georgie; your face will do very well, and I won't have every one disappointed. Here for three days hope has told the flattering tale of your coming, and expectation has been strained to the atmost; and you did not come, and I have had to strain my imagination and suggest improbable causes for the delay. Now get up and dress.

The speaker was a pretty, graceful blonde, who was giving a good deal of attention to the reflection of herself in the glass, and to the disposition of some flowers in her hair. When she had satisfactorily adjusted the last petal, drawn on her gloves, and possessed herself of her fan, she turned round to the couch at the foot of her bed, on which in an attitude of ease and indo-lence Miss Villars was stretched.

"I am too lazy to move," the last-named young lady marmured, sleepily. "Do let me alone, there's a dear Dora. You look so joyous alone, there's a dear Dora. You look so joyous that I must shut out the sight of you," she continued, pulling her hat nearly over her eyes.

"No wonder your face tingles: you must be sufficated with all these wraps on," Dorn said, trying to get her cousin's closk and hat off.

"There is still twenty minutes for you. Do begin to dress-1 will help you."

Georgie leisurely drew a key from her pocket. "Unlock my trunk, then," she said, "and take out the first dress you find, and all that I want. When you have taken the things out I will get up."

"Mamma's maid shall belp you," Dora said, looking impatiently at the key. "I rather want to be down in the drawing-room, to tell the truth." truth.

"Yos, why?" Georgie asked.

"Yos, why?" Georgie asked.
"Mamma wishes me to go down," Dora said, falling back upon her sense of filial duty by way of obligation; "but I feet sure that if I leave you you'll stay where you are, and that would be too anneying. Really I don't know what to do."
"Put the key down and leave me to my own devices," Georgie said, springing from the sofa.

"You won't lot well enough alone, Dora."
"What do you mean?" Dora asked, half

"You would not rest till you got me here; and now you're in a hurry to show me, "Georgic said, walking over to the dressing table, "Well, I will do the best I can for myself, and be down before the second bell rings. I promise; so you may be off. If aunt can spare her maid, I shall may be off. If annt can epoch to be glad of her. Now go."

"Vory well," Dora said, and then she went away; and Goorgie Villars sat down again and looked into the fire.

"How many years is it since my pretty cousin first began to take pleasure in showing me all her new toys, and making me feel that no one would give them to me for love, and that I hadn't the money to get them? What is her new toy, I wondor? her anxiety to get me here betokens that she has one."

The girl who sat by the fire and thought this could vary well afford to speak of Dora Ralston as her "pretty consin." She, Miss Villars herself, was infinitely prettier and ten thousand times more attractive than the daughter of the house. The personal advantages were clearly on her side, even if she was judged now that she was wearied with her long journey, and her face was "tingling," as she herself said, "to a most unbecoming tingo."

She was infinitely prettier than the pampered blonde, who had never had a crumple in her roseleaf from the hour of her hirth. Yet she, Georgie Villars, had been compelled to rough it in a way that it would uttorly have crushed Dora to contemplate.

Miss Villars had now come half across the kingdom to spend a week or two of the Christmas holidays at Knighton Hall, her uncle Mr. Raiston's place. She would much rather have spent the short time that was her own with a eccently married friend in London. But Dora Ralston wanted her cousin to come and see how nature and successful she (Dora) was. So the poor governess gave up her pet plan, sacrificed herself to her family, and came when they re-

The way she had roughed it had not had a had effect upon her yet. She was as bright-hicking and as bright-hearted a beauty as could well be seen. A moderate-sized girl, with a lovely figure, at once graceful and stately, and a splendidly-shaped, richly-colored little oval face, lighted up by a pair of dark, melting eyes, whose brilliancy was tempered by long, curling lashes that would rest on her cheek when she lowered

"The affectionate solicitude of my uncle and aunt will be most sorely tried if I don't go down to dinner, I suppose," she said to berself, as she got up from her chair about ten minutes after Dora had left her. There was a little sneer on her lip for a moment, but it died away, and was succeeded by a beaming, blushing smile, as she thought, "Well, it's only for a while, it will soon be over." Then she fell to the task of dressing with a will; rolled her wavy dark hair high up round the top of her head in a luxuriant loose rable, opened her box, took out a mass of dra-pery, and in a few minutes stood in the midst of clouds of gray games, with strings of gray Homan pearls round her throat and arms, and gray gloves on her slender small hands.

She wasted no time in looking at herself after She wasted no time in looking at herself after she was ready. She opened the door and looked into a dark passage, for Mr. and Mrs. Ralston reserved all their lamps and candles for such portions of the house as fell under the observ-ation of strangers. This was essentially the family corridor, and the family had learned to stumble up and down in safety. Friends, in speaking of the Ralstons, described them as averse to "unnecessary expenditure;" those who were not blinded by affection or tongue-tied by interest called them "disgustingly mesn."

Georgie was nearly a stranger in the house, despite her relationship with the owner of it. When her father died, leaving her alone in the world without money, he recommended her to apply to her uncle Raiston for protection and advice. She was not twenty then, but she was far too clever to apply to Mr. Ralston; she wrote and told him of her futher's death, and he in return wrote in a of her father's death, and he in return wroce in a rebuking strain that was very hard to read. It was difficult to define what he blamed her for, but she had a feeling that he did blame her for something. The advice he gave her was comprised in the suggestion that she should "do something for herself, respectably, and always lear in mind that he should feel it very much if she disgraced herself." Being a very practical, tensible girl, she felt no resentment either at what he said or at what he left undone, but just took what he gave—the advice—namely, to do somewhat he gave—the advice—namely, to do somewhat he gave—the advice—namely, to do some-thing for herself respectably.

What she did was what thousands of women as young, as fair, as fascinating, and as unfit for it as herself have to do. She went out as a gov-erness, and ran the gauntlet of several families, in which more or less hard measure was dealt out to her. Once or twice a year, whenever she moved from one place to another, she wrote to ber relations at Knighton Hall, and apprised them of her well-being and whereabouts. These letters were generally answered by Dora, who said regularly that they "hoped soon to see her at Knighton"—a hope that had not been realized until this time of which I write.

When Georgie had with danger and difficulty got through the dark passage where none but the family were free to break their necks, she found her way down easily over a handsomely carpet-ed, liberally lighted staircase into a hall where a huge fire burned in a centre stove, and where two or three men in livery stood about. One of these advanced before her, opened a door, an-nounced her name, and the next moment she was, so to speak, in the bosom of her family. It was a warm, not to say a hot, welcome that was awarded her. Mr. Raiston-a rotund, pursy little man, about five feet high, with a fat crimson face, and no nose worth mentioning-strutted up to her as she entered, and patting her effinitely on the shoulder, vociferously declared her to be his "dear little niere, Georgie, by Jove! whom he remembered when she was that high" (holding his hand two inches and a half from the floor). Then he patted her again, and propelled her forward to receive the more subdued welcome Mrs. Halston offered her.

Mrs. Raiston was a hard-featured little woman, with dull gray eyes, and an acute, suspi-cious expression of face. A cold, cat-like, quiet little woman, who never offended people by rea-son of her extreme caution, but who could be antagonistic to thom to an extraordinary degree when she had once made up her mind that it beboored her to be so. She welcomed her husband's nioce, Georgie Villare, now with perfect polite-ness, but with none of the fervor that had char-acterized Mr. Ralston's greeting of the girl. And yet, for all ber aunt's comparative frigie Georgie had an instinctive feeling that she (Mrs. Ralston) was the one to be trusted most in the family.

She looked round on the rest of the guestson those to whom Dora had imperiously given her to understand she had been promised as a sight. And at the first glance she found them all wanting in all the elements that went to make people interesting to her. There were two or three elderly gentlemen and ladies of the unmis-takable type that speaks of squirearchy and se-clusion; country neighbors, evidently, who would take stock of the dimer presently, and return it in kind before the expiration of a month. There was one young lady—young at least by courtesy—who was unmarried still, and was therefore obliged, by her sense of duty to herself, to weary the boxes that were growing antique by play-ing croquet, and dancing whenever she was given the opportunity. And lastly, there were two men—evidently unappropriated men; and "which of them is Dora's new toy?" Georgie Villars thought as her eyes fell on them. Then, before she had time to speculate farther, one of these men was being presented to her as Mr. Buller, and he was offering her his arm to lead her in to dinner.

"Who is our vis-à-vis?" she asked, after a short time, when the dinner-table conversation -or gabble, rather-was in such full swing that there was no chance of her being overheard. Their ris-à-ris was the other evidently unapproprinted man; and it was equally evident that Fors Raiston did not mean him to be unappropriated much longer.

"Nir Lionel Arden," Mr. Buller answered, and instinctively, as he answered, he could help glancing keenly at the girl by his side, in order to see whether or not she appeared to be in the least degree impressed with the sound of

But Georgie's glorious eves surveyed her risà-ris with the same calm indifference that had lived in them before her companion had told the tale of the title. Presently these same glorious eyes floated languidly on and rested on her cons-in Dora; and then Mr. Buller, still watching her keenly, saw her lips part and her eyes deepen with amusement.

"Is he a new or an old Aubitus of my uncle's house?" she asked, after a pause; "I don't re-member his name even having been mentioned to me before.

"An old acquaintance, but quite a recent Activat," Mr. Buller replied. "He has been a comparative recluse for some years; but your cousin's charms have lured him out of his soli-tude, and, if report speaks truly, will lure him into matrimony again."
"Is he a widower, then?"

"Yes. His first wife died when they had been "Yes. His first wife died when they had been married little more than a year; she was very young, too, and very lovely, which added to the melancholiness of her death. Poor Arden! I, for one, never expected to see him sunning him-led in ladies' glances again."

self in ladies' glances again,"

Georgie was watching the man at her side attentively as he spoke, and it seemed to her that an element of bitterness mingled with his aston-ishment at "poor Arden's" relapse into com-parative happiness again. Could the bitterness be caused by her cousin Dora? She determined to try and find our.

was expecting too much of a man of that type of physique that he should be faithful to the memory of a shade forever," she said. "Yes, I suppose it was; nevertheless I, Ar-den's oldest friend, did expect it of him. Even as a very young fellow, he would not accept the flatteries and incidious courtesies that women have always been ready to lavish upon him for his handsome person and his fascinating address. Your consin appears to have conquered, however." He looked eagerly for an instance of the er." He looked eagerly for an instant at Dora as he said this, and from his look Georgie gathered that before Dora had attempted the con-quest of Sir Lionel Arden she had accomplished that of Mr, Buller.

"He has a handsome person. Of his fascinations I can't judge yet; but I think I should prefer another look than that almost boyishly-sanguine one in the man I married," she said, critically and artfully. Then her eyes rested on Mr. Buller's face for a moment—a face that was handsome enough, but that was lined with much thought and some care; and as she looked he fult all her beauty, and she felt "this man has a history.

Georgie Villars asked no questions of her cousin until they were standing before Dora's dressing-room fire, previous to parting for the night. Then she asked two, half-absently: "What is Mr. Buller, Dora?"

"What is he? Oh, rather a nice man, with very funny ideas. He had a good property until a year ago; then he gave it up, because some rubbishing paper was found, written by his fa-ther, requesting him to share the property that he had been brought up as heir to with an elder brother, by a private marriage, of whom he had never heard. Papa said the request would have been blown to pieces in a court of law. But Mr. Buller goes in for being honorable, and chivalrous, and all that rubbish; so he sacrificed to his unknown brother, and went himself as a tutor—fancy it!" Dora wound up in a tone of such angry scorn that Georgie Villars read off some back numbers in Mr. Buller's history very

And, I suppose, before he did this very des

"And, I suppose, before he did this very despicably chivalrous thing, that you had some interest in him?" she asked, sarrastically.

"Indeed I had," Dorn answered, carnestly.

"We were engaged, but I got peps to break it off at once; he's down staying in the neighborhood for the Christmas holidays now, and he will come here and let me see that he likes me still—though, of course, it's very painful to me."

Dora put her pretty little head affectedly on one side as she spoke, and looked pensively down at nothing through her long eyelashee fur a moment. Then she resumed.

"But, though a marriage between us is quite ment. Then she resumed;

"But, though a marriage between us is quite out of the question now, I have the highest respect for him, and I should like to see him happy; you would suit each other so well, Georgie. I had the possibility in my mind when I made you come down now. I hope you'll fall in love with one another."

"Thank you," Georgie said, dryly. "I thought that I should be offered a reversionary thought that I should be offered a reversionary increeses in one of your broken toys if I came down; it was always a habit of yours to do so, if you remember, dear; and I am duly grateful. What is Sir Lionel Arden—to you?"

"Nothing definite yet; we are not quite en-gaged, that is," she added, burriedly; "but he admires me more than any one he has ever seen —more even than he did the wife who died so ng ago."

"Has he told you this? If he has, it is def-

"Has ne took you ame," he has," like enough, I think."
"He hasn't exactly told me," Dors said, hesitatingly; "but I can read it in his manner, and in Mr. Buller's as well. Arthur Buller can't conceal the fact that he sees what Sir Lionel it's so silly of him.

"Did you ever love Mr. Buller, dear?" Geor gie asked, softly.

"Oh, desperately at one time!"
"But you showed him no favor when his for-no eyes for me, but the baronet has.

tunes fell? "I have shown him some now by introducing him to my lovely cousin," the heiress of Knighton Hall answered, lightly. Then Georgie yawned, kissed her cousin, and listlessly turned away to her own room. "The heartless coquents!" she said to herself, as soon as she was alone. "She will be punished. The hamished lover has no save for me hur the hamps has

With unwonted hospitality Mr. Ralston had invited Sir Llorel Arden to be his guest for the ensuing week; and when he had accepted the invitation he had acknowledged to himself that lovely, fair, volatile Dorn was the magnet that attracted him to Knighton Hall. However, he had not been there three days before he discorered that for him there was a powerful attrac-tion, in the shape of Dora's splendid cousin, Miss Villars. And Dora herself awoke partially to the fact; and, scenting danger, and unable to tell how best to avert it, she entreated her mother to get Arthur Buller there to stay." the sort of semi-romantic hero to take Georgie's fancy, " she said; "and at present Georgie does force her society on Sir Lionel in such a forward way."

"I always thought her a bold and unscrupulous young woman," Mrs. Raiston said, shrewishly. She, too, saw how things were going, Sir Lionel rarely left her husband's lovely niece's side. But on no account would she have blamed the man. The woman in such cases as these al-ways has to bear the brunt of it. So she called ways has to east the trunt of it. So she called Georgie bold and uncorupulous, and declared that it was evidently disgusting to bir Lionel the way in which she ran after him.

Mr. Buller came as invited, but his coming made no manner of difference to the pair of delinquents. It was utterly and entirely untroe that Georgie was bold or unserrupulous, and that the ran after or discussed him. But whe side out she ran after or disgusted him. But she did not shun him. The man had a charm for her quite independent of his title and his wealth; and, since he sought her, why should she deny herself the happiness which that charm shed over their intercourse? She did not shun him, and he sought her; and Dorn waxed very wrath, and strove to revenge herself by flirting veho-mently with her old love.

"Dorn, you're a fool to go on as you do," her mother said to her with cold decision one day; "but Georgie must go. I shall manage to get rid of her, and at the same time let bir Lionel know what her position is when she is not here He won't wish to marry a teacher out of a school,

So that day at luncheon the attack which was intended to rout Georgie was commenced in the following way:

"What length holidays do they give at your school, Georgie?"

"Six weeks," Georgie answered, blushing a little. She was not ashamed of the reference to ber position—that had been confided to Sir Lionel—but of the meanness of her aunt's attack she was most heartly.
"Dreadfully long!" that lady said; "most unjust to both parents and children, I think, to give such long holidays. Had you taken another sit-nation for the time, then, that you were so un-

"No. I wanted to go to some dear old friends to stay the whole time," Georgie said, spiritedly. "Lucky people! to be able to spare a room to one guest for the whole six weeks," Mrs.

Halston said, attempting a little laugh; and then Georgie said, simply, that she "would not monopolize a room at Knighton any longer." "Well, you see we have a good many friends to receive," Mrs. Raiston said, half-apologetical-ly; "and if you really would not mind, dear, and as your friends are so anxious to have you-"
Mrs. Raiston began to stammer and blunder under the fell consciousness of being keenly ob-served by both Sir Lionel Arden and Mr. Buller -keenly observed by them, and astirically observed by her nicee.
"I shall not mind it in the least, aunt," that young ledy said, smiling; "but I am not so sure about my friends—"

"Oh, I imagined that they were friends on whom you could rely," Mrs. Ralston interrupt-ed, sneeringly. "Of course if you can't go to

"I can go elsewhere," Georgie interrupted er sunt, "Rely! it does not do to rely on her aunt. any one, I am beginning to think," the girl added, sorrowfully. Then, remembering that a semblance of sorrow was in bad taste in superficial society, abe banished it, and resumed with "I must be false myself this afternoon-false to Dors. I promised her that I would go for a drive with her, and instead of that I must stay in and make some of my arrangements."

"My maid can pack for you, dear," her aunt said, suavely.

"You—and she—are very good; but it's not the pecking so much as some letters, which, by-the-way, must be written before post-time," she incoming up, and so dissolving a meeting in which were too many of the elements of embarrassment to be perfectly agreeable to any

About an hour after this Dora, exquisitely habited in a driving costume of black velvet and white arotic fox-skin, was standing on the lower step of the flight that led up to Knighton Hall, flickering her whip and watching her punies. They were a pretty pair, small grays, nearly matched, nicely groomed. But she was resolv-ing in her own mind that she would have someng very superior to them when she was Lady Arden.

It was a great relief to her that her cousin was not going with her this afternoon. It was an even greater relief that her cousin was going away altogether. Not that Miss Dora Ralston paid herself the poor compliment of imagining that she needed a clear field. Still Sir Lionel had not come to the definite point so speedily as she had believed he would do before Georgie came upon the ground. "The mere sight of too many girls bothers and distracts a m pretty beiress of Knighton told herself confi-dentially; "he is apt to get a feeling of being begirled, and to calculate the cost of so many costumes en masse." Then she turned round and darted an impatient look into the hell. Her cavalier, for Sir Lionel was going to ride by the side of her carriage, was long in coming, and Dora detested waiting.

She meant that this drive should do great things for her. Not that the actual proposal could be made during it, because her little tig occupied the perch behind; but it would be magnificent opportunity for paving the way to the actual proposal. Revolving these things in her mind, it was with a feeling of horror that she saw Mr. Buller approaching her. It was with a feeling of even greater horror that she heard him say:

"Will you accept my escort instead of Arden's, Miss Ralston?"

"What do you mean?" she stammered, not liking to refuse the old love such a trifling favor, and yet hating to grant it.

"I mean that, from what I gathered from him ten minutes ago, he will be too busy to keep his engagement."

"Impossible!" she said, angrily; and at that moment Sir Lionel Arden came out hurriedly toward ber.

"A thousand spologies, my dear Miss Ral-ston!" he began. "Something has occurred to prevent my having the pleasure I promised myelf this morning. Business of importance-"Takes you away?" she asked, engerly.

"Takes you away?" she asked, eagerly.
"It may almost immediately, but not to-day;
still, I must take steps toward settling it to-day.
You will excuse me and forgive me?" he pleaded.
"Both, certainly," Dora said, in a strained tone, as she got into her pony-carriage. Then she nodded a cool farewell to both the men, and drove rapidly.

"Piqued, by Jove!" Sir Lionel said, shrugging his shoulders carelessly. "I could do no other, though."

"Have you any business of importance on hand this afternoon?" Mr. Buller asked, dubiously.

"I have, indeed; about the most important a man can have, I fancy. I want to ask a woman to be my wife."
"And that woman is not Miss Raiston?"

"That woman is not Miss Ralston," the other one said, emphatically. "How it might have been if she had not seemed so sure of me I don't know. As it is, my business this afternoon is to try and get a word with her cousin."

The two men separated soon after this. One of them went into the house. The other one sammered away down the avenue that led to the entrance-gate, through which Dora would pass by-and-by on her way home. "She may listen by and by on her way home. "She may listen to me now," he thought, with that queer, inex-plicable hankering after a woman whom he felt to be unworthy of him which is a fee some men can not conquer. It is needless to say that the man who thought this was the discarded lover, Arthur Buller. The baronet had gone in to walt an opportunity for the fair sake of Georgie

Villars.
"She said she had letters to write, so she sure to come to the study in time," he thought, wending his way to that apartment. He had not been in Mrs. Ralston's house long; but he had been there long enough to discover that that excellent lady deemed that a bedroom was a place to sleep, not to write or sit in. According to the place to sleep, not to write or sit in. ly, there were no sids to caligraphy in any one of the bedchambers. People had to answer importunate lovers and wives and duns in the sight of all men down in the study. So in the dy Sir Lionel Arden sented himself, and presently unto him there entered Mrs. Ralston.

She gave a start of unmitigated surprise and displeasure when she found that he had not gone with her daughter; for both mother and daugh-ter had decided that a cosp would be made that day. "I didn't expect to see you here," she said; and he explained that he had important business to write and think about that afternoon.

"You're not thinking of leaving us, I hope she said, with anxious snavity.

"I have not thought about it yet, Mrs. Ral-ston; but I may find myself compelled to do so sooner than I had anticipated," he replied, po-

Dear me! how our party seems to be break-up!" Mrs. Halston said. "There is Georgie ing up!" Mrs. Ralston said. going unexpectedly, as one may say; but there -- that is nothing; Georgie always was glad to get away from her own relations to strangers who don't care a rap about her."

This, on the face of it, seemed rather unjust from the lips of a woman who had herself sug-gested that Georgie should go, Sir Lionel thought. But he held his peace, and Mrs. Raiston presently resumed: The willfulness of that girl is past belief, Sir The wintumers of that girl is past belief, our Lionel. I shall pity the man who marries her, if she ever does succeed in getting a man to do it; but, as I tell her uncle, she is too bold-faced about it. I am sure she has been nothing but an anxiety to us all her life;" and Mrs. Halston sighed as she concluded.,

How cordially the man wished that he could , "She shall be an anxiety to you no longer; is going to be my loved and honored wife!" the dared not do it. Georgie was poor and friendless, and he was rich and powerful, but all the same lifer assent was not to be taken for grant-ed. He restrained himself, therefore, and suffered Mrs. Ralston's tongue to run on apace unchecked. After a time the hostess withdrew. She had some rather important household business to attend to, but she would have gladly neglected it had the possibility of Georgie's coming down and finding Sir Lionel alone presented itself to her. As it was, she went about in happy unconscious-ness that, about half an hour after she left him, ness that, about nair an hour after she tert him, such an enormity did actually take place.

Now, before Dora came down equipped for comquest and her drive that day, she had told Georgie, in all but the plainest terms, that she was engaged to Sir Lionel Arden.

"I am a little late," Dora had said, carelessly, looking at her watch when she had adjusted her hat; "but one may venture to keep a man wait.

"but one may venture to keep a man wait-a little when he is only just fettered." And is be just fettered?" Georgie had asked; ing a little and Dors had replied:

"Yes, my dear; my days of frivolity and flirt-ation and freedom and female friendships are numbered."

This speech was in Miss Villars's mind as she

This speech was in Miss Villars's mind as she came slowly into the study. "He deserved something better than my butterfly cousin," she was saying to herself, when she canght sight of him seated at a Davenport writing.

"Is Dora home?" she asked, quickly.
"I don't know, Miss Villars," he answered, looking up cheerfully; and then, seeing that she hesitated about coming on, he rose up and advanced toward her, passed her, shut the door, and very much astonished her by doing these things. things.

"I could not avail myself of the honor your cousin offered me this afternoon," he said, com-ing up to her and speaking in a low voice. "I had other weightier business on my mind."

"Indeed," she said, quietly. "I will not dis-turb you;" and she turned to leave the room. Was the man going to confide to her that he was writing to town to have the family jewels reset for Dora?

"But you will disturb me most painfully if you do leave me," he said, earnestly. "Miss Villars, I have something to say to you. I came here thinking your coasin a pretty, innocent young girl; like a fool, I believed her to be interested in me really: and I thought that, if she was this, I might easily come to be interested in her, and to be happy with her as my wife. I came here, and that dream dissolved, and I am dreaming another in its place."

er in its place."
"From which you will awake as speedily,"

"From which you will aware as specially, she said, half scornfully.
"From which I trust I shall only awake to find it a reality," he said, eagerly. "I am dreaming of a nobler woman now, Georgie; of one who is more to me already than Dora could ever have been. I am open to the charge of loving hastly. I know; how lastingly I can love. ing hastly, I know; how lastingly I can love, you only can help me to prove."

He paused for an answer, and none can Georgie, flushed, bewildered, tearful, stood look-ing upon him with blank amazement. She had given him her beart hastily enough, and there was balm in the thought that she had not given was baim in the thought that see had not given it for nothing. But there was no balm in the memory that he was her cousin's affianced lover, and that she (Georgie) was a traitress, therefore, for listening to him.

"How will you ever look Dora in the face again after saying such words to me?" she stamered, at last.

ca's is a pretty face, but I don't care much about seeing it again," he said, laughing; "be-sides, she can't slay me for having evaded her

"But are you not engaged to her?" Georgie asked.

"Thank Heaven, no! I mean nothing disparaging to pretty Dora; but when a man has a chance, or fancies be has a chance, of the highest, he does not gratefully grasp at what may hanging beneath. You may answer me withou hanging beneath. Tou may answer me without a back thought of your cousin; even if you did not exist, I could not marry her."

"Then I will help you to prove that you can love lastingly," Georgie said, shyly; and they made their compact quickly, and scaled it with Love's own seal—a kiss.

Meanwhile Dora was making the best of it. Her discomfiture had been very great during her outward-bound drive; but on her way home she had met Mr. Buller, and her beart had softened at the sight of him as it never would have softened had Sir Lionel not wounded her vanity. She pulled up and spoke to him.

She pulled up and spoke to him.

"I would offer you a seat, but it's a shame to try the springs of my carriage by driving three people in it," she said, good-naturedly.

"Then send the boy home walking," he said, promptly; and as Dora did not definitely object, the boy was sent home, and Mr. Buller got up by Dora's side, and they drove slowly on together.

"Dora," he said, softly, after a few minutes" elleres, "do you ever think of the old days?"

"Pora," do you ever think of the old days?"
"Yes—sometimes," Dora said, confusedly,
"Do you ever remember how dearly I loved you; do you ever feel that it is good to be so loved by a man? I won't take advantage of any confession you may make to me; I only want to feel that you have not quile succeeded in obliterating the past."

"Not a bit of it," Dors said, promptly. "Why can't we resuscitate that past?" he pleaded.

"Why, you see," Dorn began, nervously, "you would do such a silly thing—give up every thing, and leave yourself so poor! It wasn't my fault. Papa broke it off."

You can't do without luxuries? Believe me, love is the greatest of them. I could keep you comfortably as my wife; but your father is a rich man, and could give you all you desired, and would, I believe, if you asked him."

Dors ponted. She did not wish to quite refuse or to accept this man. She wanted to keep him on until she could see how things would go with Sir Lionel. So the wily little diplomatist pretended to sob, and then said:

"I dare not listen any more now; I dare not, indeed; I feel in a cloud. I will answer you to-morrow, Arthur." Then she whipped her ponies, and drove home quickly; and he was steeped in happiness because a coquette had called him by his Christian name.

Astounding news met her on her return. Her mother came flustered and hot to Dora's room.
"Here's a pretty thing!" the agitated lady

"What is it, mamma?"
"What is it?" Mrs. Raleton said, mimicking
"What is it?" Mrs. Raleton said, mimicking
ser. "Nothing to mince about, I can tell you, foreseen from the moment your though I have foreseen from the mom papa and you were such fools as to urge that Georgic should be asked here. Why, she has entrapped Sir Lionel into making her an offer." "And she has accepted it?" Dors asked cagerly.

"Accepted it!—she has jumped at it."

the first displacement of the poor the same in the same of the sam ly, as if she had been shot,

"It does seem hard, horribly hard," she said at last, letting - few tears fall. "All our lives I have had the best of every thing, and Georgie has only come in for what I didn't care to take; I never thought she would have turned upon m in this way."

"Has he said nothing to you—nothing that we can take hold of?" asked Mrs. Raistoy.

"Nothing," Does said, defiantly; "it's no use to look savagely at me, mamma. I would have had him say things fast enough if I could, to please papa and you; although," she added, virtuously, "I never could have given him my heart, as I shall take care to let every body

What do you mean to do?" her mother asked, in some surprise.

"Marry where I love," Miss Dora said, quietly. "Now, mamma, let us be sensible; we should both hate to hear that people thought he had thrown me over for my cousin; and people will think that if we don't crush them with the fact of my prior engagement.

"But you have no prior engagement," Mrs. Ralston said, waxing more and more wrathful as she waxed more and more puzzled.

"But I can have one very easily. Arthur Buller proposed to me again this afternoon, and I told him to wait till to-morrow for my decision; now I will give it to him before dinner. so that peps will be able to give the health of the two engaged pairs. Now, mamma, it's no use; my plan is the only one to be followed: we must make the best of it."

So Dora's advice was taken, and the happy pairs were tousted most affably that night by Mr. Halston. The weddings took place on the same day, about two months after these events, and Dora had the intense satisfaction of giving the impression, and seeing the impression take root, that Sir Lionel would never have turned to Georgie had she (Dora) been free. She prides herself much on having made the best of it, and on having harmlessly deceived every one, including her husband.

As for him, he loves her for what abe is to him. He knows she is not a "perfect woman nobly planned;" nor a very high-principled oue, for that matter. But he is satisfied; and his great gifts of loving, and power of long-suffering, make him what Dora calls "very easy to live with." live with.

But he knows as well as Sir Lionel and Lady Arden do that speedy answer to his suit was not given gratuitously. It was paid down as the price of silence on the subject of her hopes re-specting the baronetcy. But, though there is something humiliating in this, Mr. Buller is wice enough to recognize that it is also expedient to make the best of it.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Ir may interest some of our readers to know the cause of the recent high tides. The new moon was on the earth's equator, and was at the same time in peri-gee (that is, nearest the earth)—a conjunction of cir-cumstances said to threaten high tides and destructive commences said to threaten high pides and destructive storms. On the 5th of October a straight line drawn from the centre of the earth would have passed directly through the moon and the sun, both being on the same side of the earth. The sun and moon thus exercised their greatest attractive power on the water, and a high tidal wave was the result.

An American watch-maker is reported to have made a chance discovery that the balance-wheel in nearly every watch is, if made of steel, converted into a mag-net. If this is a fact, the magnetic character of the wheel will account for many perturbations in watches which have althorto been inexplicable. A key or the steel blade of a knills in the same pocket as the watch will exert a disturbing infinence. But even if there should be no piece of steel in the pocket the magnet will necessarily tend toward the north, and so far interfere with the calculations of the watch-maker in a very delicate piece of mechanism.

The Trustees of the Avondale Relief Pund assure the public that the fund is specific; that it is given solely for the sid and relief of those persons who sur-vive the appalling death which involved husbands, fa-thers, brothers, and some; and that to no other chari-ty, present or prospective, shall any of the fund be sa-tioned. The prospective, that it is not all solely the signed. It is proposed that all but $40,000 be distrib-uted within a year to the widows and orphans. The $40,000 will be permanently invested.

In an interesting sketch of "the great American magazines" the Emming Mait places (Isa-per's Monthly at the head of the list—"a position," it remarks, "to which its age and general merit estitie it." The Mail goes on to say: "It was once the fashion, in the fal-low days of American liberary criticism, for critics to talk lightly of Borper's; but the public were, as always, practically indifferent to the critics, and true to their practically indiffe stee, and they bought the magazine i dred thousand. The variety, quantity, and adapted-ness of the matter furnished by this magazine are omething surprising. It does not claim to be a great literary moulding influence, or any thing of the ort. It only claims to give, and does give, for the literary moulding price, a surprising quantity of excellent matter, pro-fusely and well illustrated, and of a kind that the peo-

"A week ago I was worth $50,000 clear of the world. To-day every dollar I can get together will amount to just $65." Such was the remark of a gertleman in Wall Street one day during the late financial panic, and hundreds might have made somewhat similar statements. Said one broker: "I have been on the statements. Baid one occurred to the work and street thirty years, and I sever knew there were such thieves in existence until today." If gambling in gold and stocks brought, in such a crisis as has just occurred, its just punishment upon the dishonest gam blers only, it were well; but thousands and thousand blers only, it were well; but thousands and thousands have suffered innocently, and in various ways. There is a general sympathy expressed for some firms, who have been honorable and honest in their dealings, but who have experience? a total fallure.

It is rather unique taste that has induced Miss Midly Morgan to choose for her business one which has belonged especially to men — namely, cattle report-

Dorn heaved a big sigh and sat down sudden-as if she had been shot. It well stitled for this line of business. Horses shot ly well ditted for this line of business. However and other descentic animals have been a pusedon with her from childhood. Her inther was an Irish country gentlessas, and an enthusiastic tox-buster. His daughter shared, with pussion, his predilection, and the pusher of the pusher, the predilection of the pusher of the push doughter shared, with passion, his prediffection, and qualled at no obtained that her horse was stilling to leap. No hedge, ditch, or gate that her either-hunters cleared was refused by her; and notwithstanding several falls, and three dislocations of bones, her ander remained mechanism. At her father's death she wound up his estate, and sojourned in Italy after a course of European travel. Her extraordinary knowledge of horses attracted the notice of some noted persons in foreign countries, and she was even cumulasioned, at one time, to purchase horses for King Victor Rmanuel. She is about thirty, and is said to be in many respects a superior worsen, speaking several in many respects a superior worsen, speaking several languages, and possessing a well-cultivated mind.

One of the pleasantest affairs of the season was a musical entertainment lately given by Miss Clara Louise Kellogg, at New Hartford, Connections—pleasantest ant, because given with no thought of gain or gold. The andience consisted of about four hundred operatives belonging to various factories in the vicinity, who had been invited to the musical treat. Miss Kellegg presided at the plane, and song every variety of song, and in many different languages, so that every one would have something that entited their taste. The delight experienced by the poce surking-people increases with a servery. innguage fails to express. They were almost wild with enthusiasm. Those that could not gain admit-tance surrounded the residence, and from without en-joyed the delicious notes.

Professor Paber's speaking-machine has been exhibited at the International Horticaltural Exhibition at Hamburg. It is said to articulate various words, and even to snewer questions and simple sentences with wonderful distinctness.

It is satisfactory to bear that M. Armand, a French savant, has stated to the Academy of Sciences that he has discovered a sure antidote to alcother in the common water-creas. It destroys the poiscoons effects of alcotine, and yet does not alter the aroma of tebacco. A solution of water-cross may therefore be employed for steeping the leaves of tobacco, and would thus divest them of their noxious properties, sand, moreover, a draught of the same will act as a sure entidous to ulcotine. In the face of this important discovery, to blootine. In the race of this important discovery, anti-tobacce societies will no longer have any excess for the affectionate interest they have any excess played in the health of smokers, or for the lavish abuse they have so freely bestowed upon their victims. Instead of tracts, the anti-tobacconists abould

The following is a description of the manner in The londwing is a description of the manner in which marriages among the Scotch peasantry were formerly conducted: The food awain who had resolved to make proposals sent for the object of his affection to the village ale-house, previously informing the landflady of his intentions. The damest, who knew the purpose of the message, busked herself in her best attire and waited on her admirer. She was ber best attire and walted on her admirer. She was entertained with a glass of ale; then the swaln proceeded with his tale of love. A dialogue like the fatiowing ensued: "I'm gam to speir whether ye will tak me, Jeany," "Deed, Jock, I thocht ye micht has speir't that lang syse." "They said ye wad refuse me, lassie." "Then they're leves, Jock." "An' so ye'll no refuse me, lassie?" "I've tell't ye that twice over already, Jock." Then came the formal act of heterothal. The rarrier necessar the though of their were already, Jock." Then came the formal act of betrothal. The parties persent the thumbs of their right hands, which they licked, together, and vowed fidelity. The ceremony possessed the solemnity of an eath, the violator of such an engagement being considered guilty of perjary. In alleadon to this practice a favorite Scottleh song commences:

There's my thumb, I'll ne'er begulle thee."

In 1866 there were sent over the wires in the United States 19,964,770 messages, a larger number : Great Britain, France, and Anstria combined.

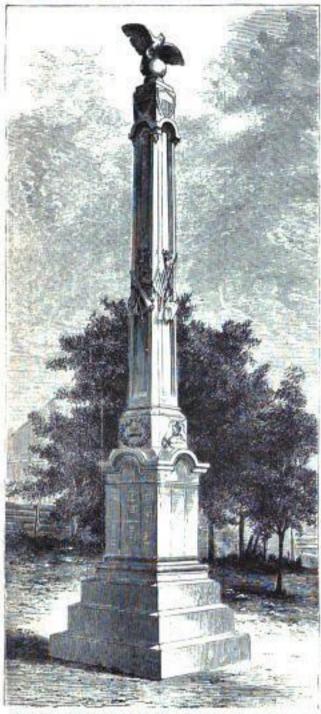

That English ladies are getting their fair share, at least, of literary work, will be seen from the fact that four magazines are now edited by ladies; and, also, hat three or four of the best known writers of magaine Sctions are of the gentler sex.

Among many sensible remarks of the late Lord Palmerston, his suggestions on the subject of legible bandwriting are well worthy of attention. Bis lordship, who wrote a very plain, clear hand himself, thought every body ought to be able to write in char-acters easily decipherable. We think so too; the object of all writing is that it may be read. Many of our eminent men write a most abominable acrawl. Every body knows Mr. Dickens's sketch of a learned sergeaut, whose opinions all the solicitors sought on the most abstrace points of law, and whose old cierk was the only person. In the world who could desipher them when the counsel had written them out. The great humorist binness, however, is an offender in this re-

Here is a man who would have delighted the Vicar Here is a man who would have delighted the Vicar of Wakadeld's heart. Jeremy Washbourne, when a young man, married, and when he had reached thirty his wife died, leaving him a father of ten children. He married again. At the age of forty-eight he was once more made a widower, and a father to the extent of seventeen children. Unawed Jeremy married again; and at the age of seventy relapsed into widowserhood, his third wife bequeathing to his love twenty-on children. The bone of Jeremy's bene, and the on children. The bone of Jeremy's bene, and the fiesh of his fiesh had been therefore multiplied into forty-eight. Of the offspring of the first batch be in the great-great-grandfather, of the second the greate; of the third of course the grandfather. grandfather; of the third of course the ; The statistics have credited him with th and twelve as his contribution to posterity. He lives at Hull, England, and is yet fresh and hearty.

The German savant, Falb, has been exciting the The German savant, Falb, has been exciting the greatest slarm among the inhabitants of South America, having predicted an earthquake more severe than that of last year. This slarm has been increased by the fact that some of the German professor's prophecies have been verified, as on the 19th, 11st, and 19th of Angust several abooks of earthquake were experienced, and at Louisne and Arica the sea receded or Argust several marks to tartuguate were experienced, and at Iquique and Arica the sea receded with great valocity, and afterward returned, causing much damage to small craft near the coast in that locality. All siong the sea-shore shocks m have been experienced, and the consternation

The late gale was disastrous to the oysters. In some beds fully one half were destroyed. At various points the oysternet find their prospective yield estity interfered with. The wind and tide lifted and transported was quantities of sand, d.stribating it over the beds, and completely burying the oysters.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS MONUMENT AT NORRISTOWN, PENN.
[PROTOGRAPHED BY WILLIAM STREET.]

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS IN PENN-SYLVANIA.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

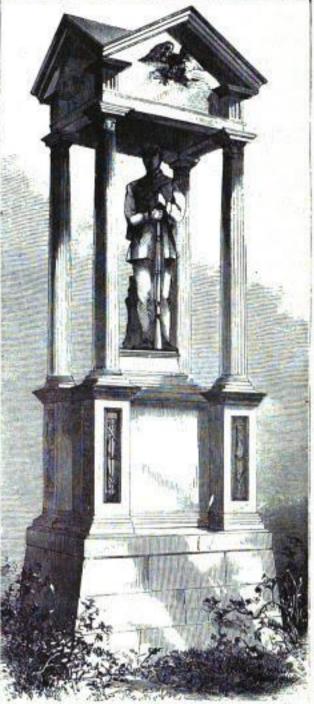

Next to the erection of homes for the widows and children of the soldiers and sailors fallen in the late war, there is no more fitting token of popular gratitude to the patriot dead than the perpetuation of their remembrance by means of monuments. We give on this page illustrations of two such monuments recently erected in Pennsylvania—one in the public square of Norristown, the capital of Montgomery County, the other on the grounds of Girard College, Philadelphia.

The Girard College monument was designed and executed by Stratthen & Sox, of Philadelphia. The scalptor of the statue, Mr. J. A. Batley, also produced the Washengrox statue in front of Independence Hall, and the colossal statue of Frankly on the new Leslyer building in Philadelphia. The statue, six feet in height, and of Italian marble, represents a young private resting on his musket. The canopy is built of sandstone from Ohio, of drab color, the whole block weighing fifteen tons. The height of the entire monument is twenty-two feet; its cost $6000. Each pediment has a bass relief, and on each face of the pedestal there is an appropriate inscription.

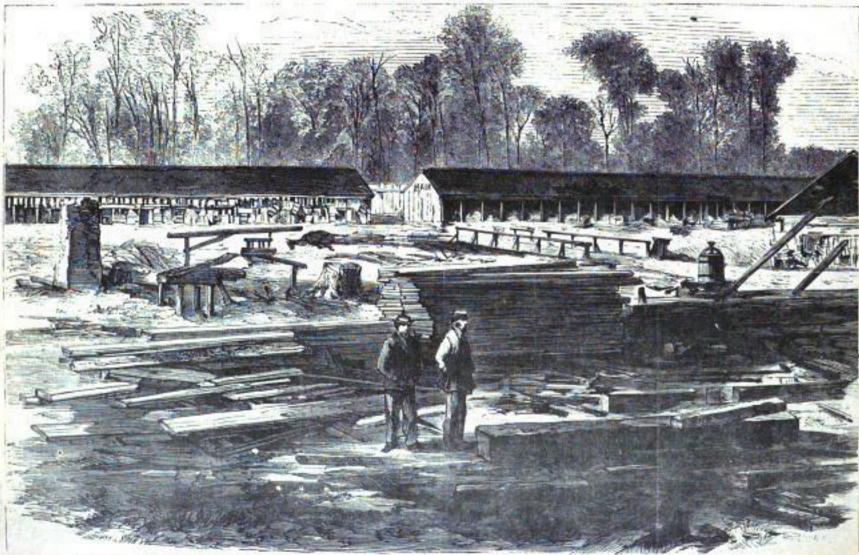

The monument at Norristown reflects great credit on its designers and those engaged in its mechanical execution. It has four bases, three of blue marble, and one of white marble, moulded. Next is the die, four feet square and four feet high, on which is engraved the names of five hundred and forty-seven soldiers, all that have been hitherto reported. On this rests an arched cap two feet high. Its lettered sides will tell by whom the monument was erected. Above this cap is a moulded die, two feet five inches high, having on its four sides, in high relief, the coat of arms of Pennsylvania, the coat of arms of the United States, and two wreaths of immortelles whose leaves of oal;, hurel, and ivy typify Liberty—the prisoner's pleasing dream—Victory and Friendship—Fidelier in Adversity. One wreath entireles the words, "Our Patriot Dead," the other the prophetic decla

THE INDIANAPOLIS DISASTER.

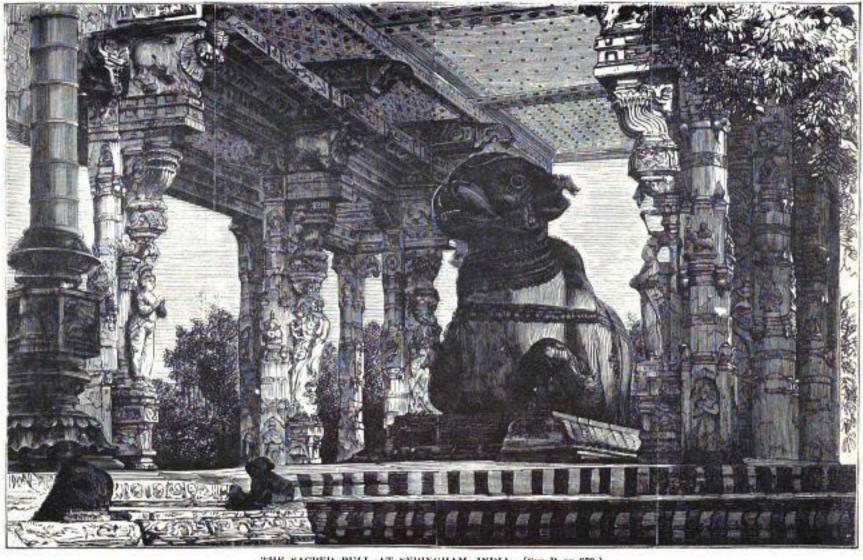

In connection with the State Fair at Indianapolis, Indiana, a frightful accident occurred on October 1. The fair had continued for four days under the most The fair had continued for four days under the most nuspicious circumstances, when, about four o'clock r.M., just as the thousands of spectators were about to leave the grounds for their homes, a steam-boiler connected with a portable saw-mill exploded. There was a large circle of interested spectators immediately around the machine, when a noise said to have been equal to that of an exploding park of artillery saluted the ear, followed by a volume of steam and a blinding cloud of dest and smoke, while the air was filled with debots of timber, HOLDIERS MUNUMENT AT GIRARD COLLEGE, PHILADELPHIA.

[SERTORED BY E. H. KLEMBOTE.]

SCENE OF THE TERRIBLE BOILER EXPLOSION AT THE STATE FAIR, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA.-(PROTOGRAPHED BY C. OTIS AND CO.)

THE SACRED BULL AT SERINGHAM, INDIA. -[See Page 679.]

pieces of iron, and shreds of clothing, mingled with the fragments of mangled humanity. A large piece of the boiler, weighing 500 pounds, was carried a distance of a hundred yards, such was the force of the explosion. Then followed the rush of the 15,000 people in that part of the grounds, some striving to escape, and others to reach the scene of the disaster, while many were trampled under foot. So far as could be ascer-tained there were 27 persons killed by the ex-phoson, and 56 wounded. The number of the wounded, however, is supposed to have been much larger.

Governor Bakun's coachman was standing near the horses, while the Governor, in company with Major WALKER and Captain DE LA HUNT, was standing just at the side of the carriage. Mrs. BAKER had left the Governor but a short time before, and for half an hour the Governor was in great distress for her safety.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION'S NEW BUILDING, FOURTH AVENUE AND TWENTY-THIRD STREET, NEW YORK CITY. PROTOGRAPHED BY ROCKWOOD. -[SEE PAGE 686.]

The coachman was badly injured. The escape of the Governor and his friends seems miraculous.

Several yards from the scene of disaster was found a pair of legs held together by the merest shred of flesh. At one place was the headless shred of flesh. At one place was the heacies tronk of a man; the arm of a man was found driven into a poplar board; while not far from Power Hall was seen the body of a man so horrilly mutilated that his heart, stomach, liver, and lungs could readily be seen. When first discovered his heart was still palpitating, and the motion of the organ was plainly observed.

Our illustration on page 684 represents the scene of the disaster as viewed from Power Hall.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCI-ATION BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Tire Young Men's Christian Association of New York has been a centre of influences for good that have extended over the entire country. About a year ago this association commenced the erection of a building on the corner of Fourth the erection of a building on the corner of Fourth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, opposite the Academy of Design. This building, of which we give an illustration on page 685, is now nearly completed, and will probably be opened about the middle of November.

This edifice is in the Renaissance style of architecture. Its frontage on Twenty-third Street is 175 feet, on Fourth Avenue 80 feet; it runs back 100 feet. The lastment will be mainly occupied by stores; but there is a gymnasium occupying a portion of it and extending apovard so as to include a part of the first story. On the first story there are to be eight stores. On the first story there are to be eight stores. The remaining space is occupied by the gymna sium and the estrances, including the entrance to the Lecture Room. The main entrance on Twenty-third Street is twenty-two feet wide.

On the second story there will be the rooms of the Association: namely, the Reception Room, Rending Room, three parlors, Dressing Room, and Wash Room. These are on the left-hand side. Opposite is the Lecture Room, which extends through the third story, and which is expa-ble of senting 1610 persons. The sents in this room are iron chairs. The Secretary's Room also is on the second-floor.

On the third story is a small lecture room, three class rooms, the library, extending through the fourth story, and the entrance to the gallery of the main Lecture Room.

The fourth and tifth stories are occupied by artists' studios, of which, on the fourth-story, there are 16, and on the fifth 20. On the fifth story there is a picture-gallery, lighted from the troof, for the exhibition of artists pictures. The height of the building, from foundation to the roof, is 72 feet, the Mansauri roof is 14 feet high, making the total beight of the building 86 The central tower on Twenty third Street, including its base, adds 34 feet to the height There are also four corner towers, each 8 feet in height. The whole building is to be heated by

The cost of this edifice is $500,000. There is, however, apward of $100,000 still remaining inguid.

The Library will, when filled to its capacity, contain 60,000 volumes. Every thing will be done by the Association to make this place of resort attractive to young men. Besides the Li brary, Rending Boom, Bath Rooms, and Coffor Rooms, and the pictures of the best artists, there are other important attractions. Among these we may mention a course of twelve lectures to be delivered during the winter by Professor Do-HENCS, B. WATERHOUSE HAWKINS, Mr. NOTES. and other gentlemen.

WESTERN FARMS.

Few of our readers in the East have any ade quate conception of the extent of the prairie farms of the West. In a recent issue of the New York Times we find the following description of one of these farms: "While at Jacksonville this week I made myself arquainted with some facts relating to one of our prairie farmers, who occupies a princely estate near that beautiful city, and also has a mountoon could form of 26,500 acres in Champaign County. It cost him $400,000, and is styled, with much appropriateness, "Broad-leads" It is needly seen wides from north to lands." It is nearly seven moles from north to south, and six from cost to west; and its cattle capacity for summer pasturage, when fully grass stocked, is estimated at 10,000 head. On the west side of the farm are two postures one and a half miles by three unles, that contain nearly 3000 acres each. To the cust of these is a 'putch' of corn half a mile wide and three miles On the fame there are 5000 acres in corn, which, it is calculated, will yield, at a low estimate, 250,000 bushels. Of course such a form as this is worked by the most approved machin ery of all descriptions applicable to agricultural labor, much of which is made on the "place," as there is a blacksmith shop, as well as a harmolo and corpenter shop in constant operation. The working stock consists of fifty voke of oven, and fifty spans of horses and mules; and the working force of a superintendent, a general foreman, six assistant foremen, a book-keeper, a baker, a corpenser, a batcher, and about one hundred and fifty other operatives. The head-quarters are in the creater of the farm, and there are six out sta-tions fully equipped. The average cost of board-ing is thirty-five cents nor day.

The farm is divided by two reads, two miles agart, north and south, and one through the centre east and west. These are lined with fifty-four moles of hedge, which was mostly set four years 200. Heiges have been, or are to be, set on evsection line. Screnty-five miles were set in the spring of 1868, and twenty-five last spring,

These bedges are to supersede the post and board fence, of which there are now eighty miles. This has required about 50,000 posts, 640,000 feet of lumber, and eighty kegs of suils. "Mr. Alexander is the owner of this farm, and his operations are stated to be, as nearly as prac-ticable, every year, as follows: He first pur-chases 4000 head of Texas steers, which cost him $140,000; cost of handling, interest, etc., $47,-000; making an aggregate of $187,000. His average sales are $70 per head, or $290,000, leaving him a profit of $93,000. The profits upon the grain and other crops of the farm bring the whole up to nearly $200,000, after paying all expenses, and including a cent or interest of $4 per acre on the land." $140,000; cost of handling, interest, etc., $47,-

Heat, in the poor man's riches, the rich man's bliss, is found in Aven's Managers, after a fruitless search among other remedies. A word to the wise is sufficient.—[Com.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

TO remove MOTH-PATCHES, PRECKLES, and TAN from the face, one PERRY'S MOTH AND PRICKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Penry, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all Druggists.

нітсисоскъ

New Monthly Magazine.

Read what Moore's Rural New-Yorker says:

Read what Moore's Rural New-Jorser says:

Hirmococus's New Movemay Magagine.—If the excellent laste which characterizes this first terms of a new musical periodical is but a pretude of what is to come, then its publisher may rest assured of success.
Handsomely illustrated, beautifully printed, and well edited, these eighten pages of internative especially interesting to towers of music—such as biographics of Maginaax and Leonatro Da Vivot—and vocal and instrumental music, are very attractive and valuable.

JUST PUBLISHED: FIRST NUMBER

OF HITCHCOCK'S NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE,

CONTENTS: CONTENTS:

MADAME MALIBRAN. Pottest and Biography.
LEONARDO DA VINCE. Pottest and Biography.
MABRIAGE IN GREAT BRITAIN.
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS. Editorial.
ART NOTES.
DRAMATIC NOTES.
MUSICAL, NOTES.
POETRY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

THE STARRY PLAG. For Voice and Piano.
NY SOUL TO GOD, MY HEART TO THEE. Do.
KITS WALTE. Plano.
KIT PLANAGAN'S FAIRY. Voice and Piano.

Specimen criptes mailed free, on receipt of price, 25 cents such. Sold by Bookselters and Newsdealers. Address BENJ. W. HTCHCOCK, Publisher, M Beekman St., New York.
FF Agende wanted enery where. Write for Terms.

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

COUN-SILVES HUNTING CARRS, $31; Extra Pine, $28. SOLID GOLD

Hunting-Case Full-Jeweled Lever Watches, $45, $48; Extra, $88. Ladies' Size, $36; Extra, $46; Enomeled, $46.

COIN-SILVER BUNTING CASES, $14; Extra Quality, $16.

AMERICAN MOVEMENTS, Every variety. Lavest, Lowest Pances.

And Watches of every description, in fine Gold and Silver Cases, at Importers' Rates. Goods sent by Espeess, to be paid for only after they have been received, examined, and accepted.

S. H. MOORE & CO., Importers, Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y. Full Descriptive Price-Lists sent free.

TAKING THE REINS.

GRANT, BONNER, & DEXTER.

By JOHN W. EHNINGER, N.A.

"It is a striking likeness of the horse, and, I have no hesitation in saying, the best representation of a borse in action that I have ever seen.
"ROBERT BONNER."

This splendid photograph, embodying three life-like portraits, is 12½ x 2½ inches, exclusive of mount. Nent free of expense on receipt of $100. Larger Edition, 13 x 21, beautifully mounted on India that, at $3.90: Ten copies for $55.00.

Address PILKINGTON JACKSON, Art Publisher, Care of HARPER & BROTHERS, Liberal Terms to Agends,)

SALESMEN. Wanted, a few reliable, energetic substructs, to sell by sample standard goods.

Address H. H. EICHARDS & CO.,

413 Chestner St., Philodelphia, Pa.

THE CURABILITY

CONSUMPTION

WINCHESTER'S HYPOPHOSPHITES

has been concludively established by its Unvanal. Anna Secones during the past TWELVE YEARS. There can be no doubt of its matchless excellence. Each successive year adds to its renown, and leaves no room for doubt or tablelief. Those who have experienced its efficacy can be found in nearly every town and hamist throughout the land, and very many of these, according to their own testimony, would have been in their graves but for this Remedy. THE HIGHEST MEDICAL TALENT in this country and Europe acknowledge its virtues, and have resorted to it with the most gratilying success in combating the ravages of this terrible Scottings of the Bunass Race.

Upon some one loved member in every family circle has CONSUMPTION laid sto withering grass, and havried the pale victim to a premature grave, despite the exertions of friends to save. Who is these that does not now know some one gradually wasting away under the clutch of this terrible mailady to whom the knowledge of this MAGNIFICENT MEDICAL DISCOVERY would bring

HOPE. IOV. AND LIFE?

HOPE, JOY, AND LIFE!

HOPE, JOY, AND LIFE?

If each one would therefore do his or her duty in extending to all sufferers within the circle of his or her acquaintance the welcome intelligence that CONSUMPTION is no longer to be regarded an increasing homeon. The time will soon arrive when this maindy will powder to be regarded an increasing homeon and his maindy will powder to an increasing maindy will powder to an increasing maindy will powder to an increasing the section of the soon arrive when the maindy will powder to one of will not be set and invisor that it is not appropriate, as it is the SPECUPIC REMEDY, for all NERVOUS APPROTIONS, DEBILITY, LOSS OF STIENGEY AND VIGGE. DYSPETSIA and INDIGENTION will be provelyly maintynth and CURED by its use, as will seld increase arising from a diseased and improvershed condition of the Blood. WINCHESTER'S HYPO-PHOSPHITES is a NEIVE FOOD, recording the visit energy and reinstportating all the functional processes of life. It is especially valuable to all leading a sedentary life, such as EDITORS, LAWYERS, CLER. GYMEN, AUTHORS, ARTISTS, PROFESSIONAL MEN, and ALL WHO LABOR WITH THE BRAIN, imparting MENTAL STRENGTH and preventing and relieving NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

DELICATE LADIES

DELICATE LADIES

PELIUATE LADIES will derive great benefit from WINCHESTER'S HYPOPHOSPHITES. It will grouply care those pecuhar NERVOUS AFFECTIONS to which they are subject. It will invigorate the Nervous Bysiem and drive away lassitude and cannot by an increased flow of animal spelits. It will Supart browsers and cheerfulness to the feelings, awaken New Life and Energy, and, by strengthening the Nutritive Functions, excitating and surfaying the Blood, will beamily the form and suffice
the complexion with the delicate BLOOM OF YOUTH AND REALTH.

We cheerfully recommend this STANDARD Medicine as an univaled

NERVORS TONIC AND INVIGORATOR

NERVOUS TONIC AND INVIGORATOR to all persons who are on the down-hill of Life, whose bodily powers are failing, and in whom the BLGOD is becoming child and that. To such this Remedy will prove a REJUVENATING BLIXIR. Increased Strength and Vitality and a conclouences of a New Lease of Life will result from its use.

WINCHESTER'S

HYPOPHOSPHITES

has no superior in its power to bring out the LATENT VIGOR of the Constitution, to develope its STAMI-NA, to call its vitality into full play, and thoroughly arouse the ris sendentivis mainra—the power of throwing off disease—by which the system is braced up and fortified against unwholesome influences.

The prompt and hendrial results of WINCHESTERS HYPOPHORPHETES will both SURPRISE and CHARM you. Circulars and Advice free.

EF SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS, AI

J. WINCHESTER & CO. Promitters.

J. WINCHESTER & CO., Proprietors, 36 John St., New York.

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 15 and 77 Spring St., corner Crosby.

ESTABLISHED 1680.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDDIOOM, PARLOR, DINING, and Li-BRARY PILKITURE, MATTERNSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c., solitable for city and country resi-dences.

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED

L ACE CURTAINS, Styles for 1870.—

Made after our own designs, and imported by no other beuse in America. Nottingham Lace Curtains, over one hundred different patterns, many of them now first introduced in this market.

Curtain Materials and Fermiture Coverings of Brocheite, Bep, Terry, Damask, &c. Curtains and Lamberquins made to order. Manufacturers of Tassels, Cords, Giraps, Fringes, and Trimmings. Window Shades of all kinds on hand or made to order. Wholesale or retail. G. L. & J. B. EELTY & CO., No. 441 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Sts.

N. 8.—FURNITURE STORE at No. 661 Broadway.

N. S ... FURNITURE STORE at No. 661 Broadway. E MPLOYMENT—"PLEASANT AND PROF-E PLANE" BOOKS. Soud stamp for perticulars to S. R. WELLS, No. 389 Broadway, New York.

TROY PENALE SEMINARY, This lover 50 years' successful operation. For director, apply to JOHN H. WILLARD, Troy, N. Y.

IMITATION GOLD WATCHES and DIAMOND JEWELRY

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

PUBLISH ARE ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED .- The Station, N. Y.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Hanrie's Western is an illustrated record of, and commentary upon the events of the times. It will treat of every topic, Political, Historical, Literary, and treat of every topic, Pointest, Historical, Literary, and Scientific, which is of current interest. In November will be commenced the new story "MAN AND WIFE," by Witzers Coulsies, the Author of "The Forest in White," "No Name," "Armsdule," and "The Monatons." Subscribers will be furnished with the Weekly from the commencement of the story to the close of 1870 for $4 00, Published Worldy, with profess Illustrations.

The young lady who buys a single number of Han-way's Basas is made a subscriber for life.—S. F. Evening Post.

Happen's Bazan is a Journal for the Home. It is especially devoted to all subjects pertaining to Do-mestic and Social Life. It furnishes the latest Fash-ions in dress and ornament; describes in-door and ont-door Amizements: contains Stories, Essays, and Poems—every thing, in brief, calculated to make an American Home attractive.

Published Weekly, with profess Illustrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world.-N. Y. Ob-MITTHE.

Harper's Alme.

The Number for November completes the Thirtyminth Velume of Harran's Magazina. While no change is contemplated in the general character of the Magasloe, the Conductors will not fail to avail themselves of any suggestions which may add to its present interest or permanent value. Special and increased attention will be given to the departments of Popular Science and Industrial Arts. Papers on these subjects will be profusely illustrated. It is proposed that the various Editorial Departments shall give a complete resume of the times. The Eng Chair will comment upon topics relating to social life and manners. The Book Table will criticise the important books of the day. The Monthly Record will note all important political events. The Presser will present the facetise and specificates of the time.

Hasraviar's Magazinas contains from fifty to one hundted per cent, more matter than any similar periodical leagant to the Northly because.

sed per cool, more matter than any similar periodical issued in the English language. Thus the ample space at the disposal of the Conductors will enable them to treat fully of all the tropics embraced in their plan. The Publishers feel themselves warranted in asking and anticipating for the future a continuance of the favor which has been accorded to their enterprises in the roat.

Published Monthly, with profuse Illustrations.

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BATAR.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, ODS Year. $4 00 Harper's Weerle, One Year..... 4 00 Harper's Barar, One Year..... 4 00

Harren's Magazine, Harren's Weekly, and Harren's Bazan, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $1 00.

two for $1.00.

An Entra Cupy of either the Magazina, Werker, or Basia will be supplied gratts for every Club of Priva Susseminate at $4.00 each, in our resultance; or, his Captes for $50.00, without entra capy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Magazina is cents a year, for the Werker or Basia so cents a year, payable yearly, semi-yearly, or quasterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Canada must be accompanied with it cents additional for the Magazina, or 50 cents for the Werker or Basia, to prepay the United States postage.

Pre Volumes of the Managing commence with the scriptions may commence with any Number. We no time is specified, it will be understood that subscriber wishes to begin with the first Numbe the current Volume, and back Numbers will be reconclined.

the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wexkey and Bazar commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. Subscribers to the Magazine. Wexkey, or Bazar will find on each wrapper the Number with which their subscription expires. Each periodical is atopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remaiting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Braft payable to the order of Hanra & Beorners is preferable to Bank Notes, since, should the Order or Braft be bost or studen, it tan be renewed without loss to the sender.

the sender.

In ordering the Macazzez, the Wessety, or the Bazz, the name and address should be clearly written. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one most be given.

TERMS FOR ADVENTISENG IN HARPER'S PARIOTOGRAM.

Harper's Reserver. - Whole Page, 2039: Half Page, 2139: Raif Page, 2139: Quarter Page, 270-cech insertion; or, for a less spoke, 21 59 per Line, each insertion; or, for a less spoke, 21 59 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Workin, Inselie Pages, 21 59 per Line; Outside Page, 22 59 per Line,—each insertion.

Harper's Bear,—21 50 per Line; Cuts and Display, 21 25 per Line—each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS,

FRANKLIS SQUARE, New York.

Digitized by Google

S. W. GEERY,

B. W. GEERY,
DIPORTER,
Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cipars, and CHOICE FARILLY GROCKRIES,
Pormarly I. & W. Geery, No. 110 Broadway.
Established in 1804. New York.
The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special business of this house for years.
My stock comprises some of the Olders Liquore in the country.
Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every morning, if destred.
Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK.

The next Academical Year will begin on the law Mownay (4th) of October. The students of the College will attend for matriculation on that day at 9% A.M.

Candidates for the Paramaian Class will present themselves for examination on Friday, Oct. 1st, and Saurelay, Oct. 2st, at 10 A.M.

Applicants for admission to advanced classes, and these required to be re-examined, will present themselves on Saturday, Oct. 2st, at the same hour.

For Catalogues and further information, apply to Ray. Dr. BARNARD, President, or to HENRY DRIBLER, Senior Professor and Acting as President.

FRENCH CLOCKS,

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-ction to be found in the city, and are offered at

13" Sign of Gold Telegraph. .41

HENRY WARD ${ t BEECHER'S}$

SERMONS IN

PLYMOUTH PULPIT PLYMOUTH PULPIT

Are being read by people of every class and decoming tion all over this country and Europe. They are full of vital becausiful religious thought and feeling. Plymouth Project is published weekly, and counties Mr. Beecher's Sermon and Prayers, in form suitable for properties and biedries. For asic by all Newsdealers. Price 10c.
Yearly subscriptions received by the publishers, $3, giving two handsome volumes of over 400 pages such.
Ball-yearly, $4 12. A new and superb Steet Portrait of Mr. Beecher presented to all verifs subscribers.
Entracerioners Offer Plymouth Pulpit ($3), and The Church Union ($150.), an Unsectarian, Independent, Caristian Journal—16 pages, cut and attacked, clearly printed, ably edited, scal to one address for 61 weeks for fine delices. Special induce whith to canvisivers and those gesting up claid. Speclines coyies, postage free, for 5c.
J. B. FORD & CO., Pob's, 30 Park Row, N.Y.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium
Bronze is a metal difficing cutirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even larigue have been deceived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientife men, and has not only called forth the cologiums of the press in consequence of jupeculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal
at the Paris Exposition.
The movements are well inguissed, and as all these model are

The movements are well fin-ished, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Parox races $16 vo $22.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpoid, on demand.

Goods sent by Rapress, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,
No. 44 Names Street, New York.

PIANOS and ORGANS.

Prion greatly reduced for Cnab. New Seven-Octave Planne, of Sevi-class makers, for $275 and apward. New Cabinet Organs for $45 and apward. Second-hand Planne, Metodoons, and Organs from $4 to $275, at 480 Benedway, N. Y. HORACE WATERS.

GREAT ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC TEA COMPANY,

NO. 8 CHURCH STREET, P. O. Box 5506. New York City.

An organization of capitalists for the purpose of importing Tens and distributing them to Merchants throughout the country at Importers' prices. Estab-lished 1889. Send for Price-List.

DSYCHOMANCY, Functionation: or, Science of the A Soul, as applied to the pierposes of life. 400 pages, Cloth. By Hinkson Ha sectron, B.A. A curious brook for laundstire people. It contains complete instructions to acquire this wanderful privar over men or animals. Can be obtained by rending protage etamp and address to T. W. EVANS & CO., 41 South sith Street, Padladelphia.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1999 Chestnut St., Phimdelphia, Pa.

VINEGAR, WINE Molasses, or Southern, in to hours, without using drays. For elevation, soldross F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Conn.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

Gold Watches and Jewelry.

THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE OROIDE.

The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones costing $150. Those of cutra fine fin-b, at $50, are not surpassed by $200 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, a imitation of gold can begin to compare with the Cotlins Motal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

to gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS FROM 25 TO 26.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Colline Meta).—Pine, Ear-Ringe, Sicerc-Buttons, Lockets, Sinds, Finger-Rings, Eracelets, Charms, Odd-Fellow and Massoule Pine, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUREs—Where Sax Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as belle can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Contoners must pay all express charges. We employ no agreets; orders, therefore, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write plainly the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the cky will remember that our only orgues is No. 235 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up stairs), New York.—C. E. COLLENS & CO.

BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

STRUGGLES AND TRIUMPHS OF P. T. BARNUM.

WESTTEN BY BINESLY, IN ONE LABOR COTATO YOLTHE-MEASURY 800 PAGES PRINTED IN ENGLISH AND GERMAN.

33 Elegant Full-Page Engravings.

B embranes Foury Years' Resolutions of his Busy Life, as a Merchant, Manager, Banker, Lecturer, and Showman, and gives accounts of his Imprisonment, his Failure, his Successful European Tours, and important Historical and Personal Reminiscences, replets with Humor, Amendotes, and Entertaining Narration.

It contains his celebrated Lecture on the Aut of Morey German, with Rules for Sucress in Business, for which he was offered $2000. We offer extra inducements to Agents, and pay freight to the West. Send for 15-page Curcular, with Specimen Engraving and Publishers, Hartford, Conn.

The Grant Tailor three-country Association. Interpretable by the State, will Free State, and State State and State States are as a process. It field Experience faily University in great an appropriate faily University in the state of the State States are placed in each enveloper, which are the ringsity united, and when weaked are some left, just path, and the following priors, and experience States Themselve, and with permisses, the Every Rev. and elegant States Hamilton Wash as presented, the Every inspecting existing the healthy thread as presented as the public transformed, as no article to not each it would be than the inches of $100, interpretable of each of the world has than the inches priority of the state world State. States from the state of the Circulate States (States States St

CREAT INDUCEMENTS TO SUB-class Lady's Magazine and a first-class Weekly Paper send of cace for a sample copy of

THE LADY'S FRIEND

and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and see the unequaled inducements offered. $2.50 a year for each. $6 for both. Four crystee for $6, with a splendld promium engraving. Five copies (and one graths, $8. Bample copies of both will be sent (postpaid) for fifteen cents. Address

DEACON & PETERSON,

No. 319 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED for Blanding's New libralisted and Blandrated Editions of the LIFE OF CHRIST and BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

The works are now ready for delivery. Address for Catalogue of the best-selling Subscription-Books pub-lished, lehed, W. W. HARDING, Pasadelphia, Publisher of Harding's Pictorial Pamily Bibles.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every max can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, our, borders, &c., &c., 16 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 68 Murray Street, New York.

CATARRELL: SORE THROAT! LOSS OF VOICE! Dr. Norton's New Hemedies for Cotarris, and mode of treatment, retirens at once, and literally stringuishes the disease forever. Send stamp for Pamphiet. Office, 18 Ann Street.

THE Nov. No. of Bemorest's Monthly Magazine, with a splendid array of Novel and Reliable Pash-bus, now ready. Price 25 cts, mailed post free; et send for Circular.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-can Hultting Hachine, Price $15. The simpless, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever in-vented. Will knit 20,000 stitches per misute. Liberal inducements to Agenta. Address AMERICAN ENIT-TING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Legis, Mo.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To apents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best mathize is the world. Start adds to both side. First machine on trial. For further particulars, eddress

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED AGENTS. -575 to $200 per month, NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new filing, with the latest improvements. Price for Hand Machine, $15; with Table and Foot power, $25. Send for Gleenler, with Cut of Marthine and terms to Agents. Address W. S. Hill, Manchester, N. H.

Agents! Read This!

WE WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY
of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a large commission, to sell our new and wanderful incentions. Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

THE American Chemical Pire Engine, for extinguishing fire every where. Always mody for instant one. No temprosed gases. For circulars, address COWING & CO., No. 76 Chambers St., N. T.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or beard to a permanent Slack or Brown. One Comb sent by mail for all. For sale by Merchants & Druggista generally. Address Maric Comb Co., Springfeld, Hoss.

SPARKLING LITTLE BEAUTIES are Gente Lava Diargood Pies. Enquisits specimen D Gente' Lava Distanted Piers. Exquisite specimen mailed, 24 cts. R. LEE & CO., 1272 Broadway, N. Y.

and is accampled to be the best and and is more general use than may other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardwire Realers. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 50 BEERMAN ST., N.Y.

Bloomington Nursery. 500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses. Pruit, Ornamortal and Nursery Stock, tramenee and reliable assuriment, very low for cash.

Applies—including most magnificent stock of year-lage: also hardy Northern series, such as Durhous, Oldenburg, Hielop, Transocudent, and other Crub Apples—1, 2, and 3 year.

Peaches, Pietra, Cherrica, Phenu, Quinces, Gropes, Pietra—1, 2, and 3 year.

Peaches, Fierra, Cherrica, Nursery Stocks, Osape Orleans Holey Flands, Roses, new roots; Thips, Muscinthe, Nurseasus, Iris, Spesille, Lisies, Speciosem, Asvanton, &c. Also emperior colored plates of Fruits and Flowers. Send 10 cents for Catalogues.

F. K. PHERNIX, Riccomington, McLean Co., III.

FURNITURE.—New darigns and new styles, lew prices for first-class warranted goods. Original drawings farmfelled, with estimates for finishing dwellings with hard word and firmiture adapted to the style of house and rooms. Only seasoned and steam-dried lumber used—none other will stand farmace heat.

G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO.,

601 Broadway, new Amity St.

N. B.—Curtain and Farmiture-Covering Store at No. 461 Broadway.

GOOD READING

AND NO INPURE ADVERTISEMENTS IN THE NEW YORK OBSERVER.

$8.50 PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE. SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., 27 PARK ROW, NEW YORK,

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheapest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY.

Price of Presses, $5, $15, $16. Offices, $15, $20, $20, $20, $30 dor a circular to LOWE PRESS CO.

15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mace.

THE CHURCHMAN.

THE BEST and LARGEST Weekly Newspaper, with the LARGEST directation to the Protestant Episcopal Church. Sent PRESE for one month for exemination, and till Jan. 1, 1870, to new anbearfeers for that year. 85 a year, in advance. M. H. MALLORY & CO., Hartford, Comp.

BOOSSY'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sunt free.

Boosey's "Salled Sweet," the new Half-Dime Series of the Boot Souge. Sold overy where, or specime number mailed for Five Cents.—646 Broadway, N. Y.

MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the chespest

Magazine published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1879 for 50 cents. Send in your subscriptions without delay.

O. A. ROGERBACH, 100 Nessau St., New York.

THE EXCELSION 1—Edited and published by boys. Denoted entirely to the buys and girls of America. Always filled with the best of javenile interature. Towns, Ger, per year. No specimens. Address THE EXCELSION, Box 2, Woodbridge, N. J.

POCKET REVOLVERS, SEX Shoots A neat, durable weapon; Sur-inch barrel. Price $1.6 postpaid. Address S. G. AUSTIN, Elsie, Mich.

A WATCH FEEE_gizes pratieto everylive man who will act as agent in a new, dgin, bosorable basiness paying $20 a day. No gift enterprise, an humbug, no money is advance. R Mouroe Kennedy, Pittsburg, Pa.

WANTED, live men, who can give security for goods received, to distribute "packages" of "wonder of the World" smoot families, and collect the same. Address J. C. TH.TON, Pittsburgh, Pa.

A HANDSOME FULL-GILT Photograph Al-bum, helding 20 fall-size pictures, malled, post-paid, for 20 cts.; 5 for $1, $2.25 per dozen. Glenhard, free. Address C. SEYMOUK, Bellund, N.Y.

$25 A BAY. - 55 new articles for Agents. Supples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Me.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and shuning, 35 cents a package. Lasnaxy or Long, 50 cents. Bend to W. C. Warres, S Asior Place, N.Y.

THE MYSTERIOUS PUZZLE, A Great Servation. Stat for 16 cents. WALTER BOLT, 101 Navsan St., N.Y. Box 1838.

$1140-Bow I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample mailed fron. A. J. Philom, N. F. TYLER WATER WHEELS. Over 2000 in operation. Address the manufacturers, Soffman Machine Co., Clarescont, S. H., for reduced price-list.

$3600 a Kear quantitied to Accura. Address J. Allicate, Md.

The New Books of the Season

PUBLISHED BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

EW Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Harper's Illustrated Library Edition. Pimo, Morocco Cloth, 55 cents per volume. ADAM BEDR.

THE MILL ON THE PLOSS.

PELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE and SILAS MAR-NER, THE WEAVER OF RAVELOE. ROMOLA. (Nearly Ready.)

PRANULIN SQUARE, N. Y., Oct. 7/A, 1969.

FERNELIS SQUARE, N. Y., Oct. 1/A, 1969.

Efforts having been made in certain quarters a excite the sympothy and companion of the public and the press on account of our inscine, from our old plates, a cheaper and better edition of GERINGE ELICOTS NOVELS them the one published by Meurs. Puries, Ourone, & Ou, we think it proper to say, in explanation, and in raphy to the expect affects upon as:

That we were the first to publish these Works in this country, and that for the Early Shorts thereof we have putil from time to time in the approprie the sum of Fire Themsend Dellars in Gold.

BARPER & BROTHERS.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1818; ec, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Scenery, Relice, and Traditions of the Last Wer for American Independence. By Bussow J. Lossina, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 682 Blustrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Bartit, chiefly from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large 849. Price, in Clock, $7.00; Sheep, $6.50; Full Roan, $2.00; Half Calf or Half Morecon extra, $50.00.

8.
THE MINISTER'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Oct-ruser, Author of "Carceleles of Carlingford," "Perpetual Curate," "Life of Edward Hvieg," "Becwalows," "Agues," &c. Seo, Paper, 15 coats.

UPBAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Phi-losuphy: embracing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sersebilities, and Will. By Turanas C. Urstas, D.B., Professor of Mental and Moral Phi-losophy in Bosedoin College. In Two Volumes, Vol. L.: Intellect, Language: Vol. R.: Sersibilities, Will. 12mo, Cloth, $1 To per volume.

IN SILK ATTIRE. By Welliam Black, Anthor of Love or Marriage? Sec, Paper, 50 cepts.

COUNTESS GISRLA. By E. Manners. Translated by A. Nahmer. Seo, Paper, 25 cents.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS, By WILLIAM HENRY WALLSTLE, Professor of Auctout LANGUAGES in the University of Georgia. Plano, Cloth, 9t 66.

FOUND DEAD. By the Author of "Carlyon's Year,"
"One of the Family," &c. wo, Paper, 50 couts.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James GREEN COUNTY, the "Amaleus Cassal," Anthor of "The True History of a Little Bagsanuffin, "Benken Dav-idger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Svo, Pa-

PALSE COLORS. By Annie Trowns. Svo, Paper,

32. SANDE'S PHILOSOPHY OF TEACHING. The Teacher, the Popl, the School. By Naturalies. Santa. See, Chith, $1 00.

12.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. New Edition. 800, Paper, $1 25.

11. FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucida-tion of the Attractions of the Country, and a Care-fal Consideration of the Question of Froit and Look as involved in Amazone Farming, with much Valu-able Advice and Fratruction to those about Purchas-ing Large or Small Phoces in the Rural Districts. By Beacur B. Reservar, With Characteristic Il-lustrations. 12mo, Cloth, 31 50.

14. META'S PAITH. By the Author of "St. Clave's," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents

PARSER AND ANALYZER FOR BEGINNERS, with Diagrams and Suggestive Pictures. By Fearsets A. Maseu, Professor of the English Language and Compactive Philology to Latiyate Codings, Anthro of "Mathot of Philological Study of the English Language," "Comparative Grammer of the Anglo-Sazon Language," &c. 16mo, Cloth, 40 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, benetifully printed, with the Author's own Blustrations. VANITY PAIR. 88 Blustrations. See, Paper, 68 etc.

PENDENNIS. 179 Illustrations. 8ro, Paper, IS etc., THE VIRGINIANS. 180 Illustrations. 8ro, Pa-per, IS cours. THE NEWCOMES. 162 Illustrations. Sec., Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER, 12 Distrations. Swo, Paper, 50 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Collectes, and for Private Study. By Rev. E. O. Havan, D.D., Ll. D., President of the Northwestern University. Hum, Cloth, $1.50.

CHARLES READES NOVELS:

GRIFFITH GAUNT: or, Jealousy. Blustrated. Svs, Paper, 25 cents. IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, Sec. Ph.

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 410, Paper, 25 cents.

FOIL PLAY. See, Paper, 25 cents.

WHITE LIES. See, Paper, 25 cents.

PRG WOPPINGTON, CHRISTIE JOHNSTONE, and Other Stories. See, Paper, 30 cents.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orner-Ulron and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Secules of Mas and Nature. By ALBANA Reseat. Wantaces, Author of "Travels on the Areason and Rio Nagra," Poin Trees of the Areason, "So. With Tru Map and Fifty one clegant Illustrations. Crown Sec, Cloth, $9.50.

EFFECT OF MEDIATION.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planes is fully established as being unsurpassed by may for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and fluish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being rewonable, they can not fail to suit any who may desire to purchase.

Circulars and information cent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS. 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Surrn & Nixos, Chicago, file.; H. N. Henr-STAIN, Milwaukee, Wis.; Louis Ther. Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McCloux, Nashville, Tenn.; Kuscaul Bros., St. Louis, Ma.; C. M. Menen, Cincinnuti, Ohio; J. R. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohio; Brarmann & Sons, Cleveland, Ohio; J. E. Govar, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mes. C. Blewz, Pittsburg, Pa.; Clevet & Sons, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hammer, Rhinebeck, N. Y., J. H. Hinyerassyres, Bhacs, N. Y.; H. S. Magne, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Uvley, Beffeld, N. Y.; Wertz, Serra, & Prent, Boston, Maise; Court Bros., Providence, R. L.; C. M. Loonis, New Haven, Coun.; Mayritan Grav, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nordenmers, Toronto, C. W.; E. Piello & Bro., St. John, N. B.

A Seven per Cent. GOLD LOAN.

$6,500,000.

The Kansas Pacific Railway, now in successful operation from Kansas City to Sheridan, proposes to build an extension to Deaver. Colorado. The Government has granted Three Millious of Acres of the finest lands in Kansas and Colorado, which are mortgaged for the security of a loan of $6,500,000.

This loan is secured in the most effectual manner. It represents a road in profitable operation, and will open the trade of the Rocky Mountain Country, and coinsect it with the great markets of the East. It is considered to be one of the best leans in the market, EVEN BETTER IN SOME RESPECTS THAN

GOVERNMENT SECURITIES.

The loan has thirty years to run, principal and in-terest payable in gold, semi-sannally, serson per cent. The cospons will be payable semi-sannally in either Prankfort, Loadon, er New York, and will be free from Government taxation. The bonds for the present are sold in currency at 96, with accrued interest. Circulars, maps, and pamphiets sent on application.

DABNEY, MORGAN, & CO., 53 Exchange Place, N. Y. M. K. JESUP & Co., 12 Pine Street, N. Y.

ANTED - AGENTS - $75 to $200 per month, every where, make and female, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED
COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING
MACIJINE. This Marchine will stitch, hem, felt, tack, quilt, evert, bind, braid, and embroider in a most superior manner. Price only $18. Fully warranted for five years,
We will pay $1000 for my machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic seam than ours. It makes the "Elastic Lock Stitch." Every second slitch can be cut, and still the cloth can not be polled apart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $18 to $200 one month and expenses, or a commission from which twice that amount can be made. Address SECOMB &
CO., Pyrrace son, Pm., Boston, Mass., or $r. Logs, Mo.
CAUTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties painwing off worthless cand-tron machines, noder the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only geanlace and really practical cheep machine manufactured.

Musical Boxes

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Novelties by nearly every Stanner. Fine Supply of Fancy Goods, Swiss Carved Goods, Fine Gold and Silver Watches. H., J. PARLLAND & CO., 660 BROADWAY, N.Y.

A HOMESTEAD FREE to every one.

Address
JAMES R. STRONG, 22 WESSER St., Room 20, N. Y.

$2,500,000

There are in the United States over Six Million Pamilies. Wherever the ground has been thoroughly canvassed, at least every second family, on an average, has subscribed for WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE. According to this calculation, there are yet about three million families ready to subscribe for our Magazine as soon as they shall be propcely solicited to do so. Our Premiums, for the collection of these subscriptions, will amount to about $2,500,000 !

READ!! READ!! READ!! READ!!

IN ADDITION TO OUR REQUEST PREMIUMS, we offer the following extras: To the senders of the five largest cluis before February 1st, 1970, One Hundred Dollars cack. Also, to each subscriber in the largest club, any premium which we now furnish for six subscribers or less; for the second largest club, any which we furnish for five or less; in the third, for four or less; in the fourth, for three or less; in the fifth, for two or less. All subscriptions, to count, must be received by us before the first mail on February 1st. The names of the persons who send the clubs, together with the of subscribers they send, will then be pub lished, and the premiums duly forwarded.

8. S. WOOD. Nawarness, N. Y., October 1, 1860.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE.

WARLATTED TO REPORT ALL DRIBLATES TOLLACE. In entirely repossible and household. In further and entitles the blood, invigorable, the system possesses gives recutables and the blood, invigorable, the system possesses gives recutable as and the recently of the accordant for the property of the property

[Trademark × Opprighted.]

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 113 pages.

OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 12 pages.

MAGIC LANTRINS and STRREOPTICANS, 100 pp.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 34 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 96 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY lies in the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM for the complexion. Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Freckles, and Tan disappear where it is applied, and a beautiful complexion of pure, satin-like texture is obtained. The plainest features are made to glow with healthful bloom and youthful beauty. Remember, HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM is the thing that produces these effects, and any lady can secure it for 75 cents at any of our stores.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lyon's

Middletown Mineral Spring Water cires all diseases of the Kidneya Skin, and Blood more promptly than any other known remedy. LEF Call for Testimosiate or Come. Sold by Druggists.

Caution.—All georine bears our trade-mark, and the bottles and corks are branded "Nature's Remedy."

Address J. JAY JOSLIN,
Trens. M. M. S. Co.,
Middletown, Vt.
Cc. S. H. Scripture, 188 Broadway, New York,
General Agent.

A HOUSEHOLD WORD!

CHINA, GLASS, SILVER - PLATED WARE, CUTLERY, and COOKING UTENSILS, BASSFORD'S, COOPER INSTITUTE, N. Y.,

and save 20 per cent.

If Predisposed to Billousness, nothing is easier than to proven this constitutional tendency from colminating in scate disease, by taking Taxant's EFFENTACKY SELVER ATTRIBUT IN SMAll does, as an alternity.

SOLD BY EVERY DRUGGIST.

E DWARD SEARS.

The Gonzalus Hat.

For Gentlemen's wear. Just out. thing Entirely New. The Frade supplied.

DANIEL D. YOUMANS,

HATTER & FURRIER, BROADWAY, New York Hotel. IMPORTER OF ENGLISH HATS.

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO,

POR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Sarouto will make Tins resemble Silver.
Use only Sarouto to clean White Paint.
From Marble Sarouto removes all Stains.
For polishing Knives Sarouto is unsurpassed.
For cleaning Brass Stair-Rode Sarouto has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, no Sarouto, ample cake sent by mail on receipt of 80 cents. Depot, 211 Washington St., New York. Established 1809.

Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE,

WITH PURE SILVER.

The experience of FORTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpson, and the use of new and ingenious labor-saving machinety, enable us to offer to the trade a line of goods in

ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BEAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY,

Can not be Excelled. All goods bearing our trade-mark,

"Improved Electro Treble Plate,"

ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED: and, if found defective or not as represented, can be returned, and the money will be refunded. OFFICE AND PACTORY, WALLINGFORD, COME. SAMPLE AND SALES ROOM, 19 JOHN ST., N. Y.

MERICAN INSTITUTE EXHIBITION. Open DAILY from 9 A.M. to 10 P.M., on THIRD AVE., Cor. 65d St., near Central Park.

THIRD AVE., Cor. 66d St., near Central Park.

The Machinery in Motion is a Grand Display. The Exhibition is collivered WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY APTRINGONS, and EVERY EVENING, by A FINE ORCHESTRA Estreaments of the Best Kinds, at Moderate Prices, in the building.
Scassin Tickets for Gentlemen, $3; for Ladfes, $2;
Single Admission, 50 cents; Children under 12 years, 25 cents. Packages of $5 tickets, for shope, at 30 cents cach. Entrances on Second and Third Avenues.

STEREOPTICONS

MAGIC LANTERNS.

Priced Catalogue of the same and over 5000 views mut free. W. MITCHELL McALLISTER, 128 Chestout St., Philadelphia.

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING. MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, to Send for Price-List.] Baltimore, Md.

OLD FOGY" LOST his lead-pencil. Use the Novelty Pencil-Holders, and avoid losing pencils.

GEORGE ELIOT'S MOYELS.

HARPER'S LIBRARY EDITION.

ILLUSTRATED.

12мо, Моноссо Слоти, SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS A VOLUME.

VOL L ADAM BEDE.

II. THE MILL ON THE FLOSS.

III. FELIX HOLT IV. SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE AND SILAS

MARNER

V. ROMOLA, (Nearly Ready.)

"George Effot's" nevels belong to the caduring lit-erature of the country—durable, not for the fushiona-bleness of its pattern, but for the texture of its staff. —Examiner.

Forwarder.

Few women—no living woman, indeed—have so much strength as "George Effot," and, more than that, she never allows it to degenerate into course-ness. With all her so-called "masculine" vigor, she has a feminine tenderacus, which is nowhere shown more plainly than in her descriptions of children.—Batton Transcript.

It was once said of a very charming and high-minded woman that to know her was in itself a liberal adjustion; and we are inclined to set an almost equally high value on an acquaintance with the writings of "George Effot,"—Lenden Revise.

EST HARRE & BROTHERS will send any of the above volumes by mail, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 15 arests.

INIVERSITY OF

Vol. XIII.—No. 670.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1869.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1968, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

H. W. BEECHER AND H. B. STOWE.

HENRY WARD BEECHER and HARRIET BEECH-ER Stown are brother and sister, being children of Rev. Lymax Bercher by his first wife, Rox-ana. Harrier was born at Litchfield, Connecticut, June 15, 1812. HENRY WARD was been at the same place, June 24, 1813. HARRIET, therefore, is just one year and one week older than HENRY WARD.

H. WARD BEECHER graduated at Amberst College, Mass., in 1834, and studied theology under his father at the Lane Seminary, Cin-cinnati, Ohio. In 1837 he was settled as a Presbyterian clergyman at Lawrenceburg, Indi-ans, where he remained for two years, afterward removing to Indianap-olis. In 1847 he ac-cepted an invitation to become the pastor of the Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, N. Y. He is still the pustor of that church.

Mr. Beacmen is the greatest pulpit orator in America. He is distinguished as a lec-turer; he has taken a prominent position in journalism, baving been one of the found-ers of the Independent; but his characteristic function is that of a preacher of the Christian gosped. It is not enough to say that he has the largest uniform congregation in the United States. That might be secured by qualities totally different from those pos-sessed by BERGHER, It is very rarely that the emotional nature is so completely under the regulation of the intellect as it is in him, With a large heart, pulsating in sympathy with every progressive moral movement, he has also a large head and a well-balanced judgment to prevent him from becoming a ning a mere sentimentalist or fanatic. One of the inent of his qualities is his common-

Mr. BEECHER's mind has been well stored with book-learning; but his principal studies have been of life in nature and in man. To few men have been revealed so clearly the springs of human acways from experimentnl knowledge; his words are born of his own life, or are the re-flection of his observa-tion. His sermons are perver purely metaphysical; they are never doctrinal, in the ordinary acceptance of the term; but they are the results of life studies. He studies mostly outside of his library. Usually he does not know the subject of his Sabbath morning's discourse until within a few hours of his appearance in the pulpit. His mood, the incidents of the day, or some great moral question that de-mands attention, will decide that. Early Sunday morning this decision is made; a few leading heads are written out in full, and all the details of the sermon are left to the inspiration of the moment. No, it is not inspiration; it is a well-disciplined and well-filled mind that moves into thought and speech before the waiting audience of sands that longs upon the speaker's words.

ARPERS

HARRIET BELCHER at the age of fifteen was sociated with her elder sister CATHARINE as

HARRIET BESCHER were married. Up to this time HARRIET had been known only within a limited circle; but she had, in what little she had written, shown her power of delineating character, especially the character of New England pos-ple. In 1831-52 Mrs. Srown published "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as a serial in the National Ero, guages of Europe, and was dramatized and acted gauges of zerope, and was dramatized and acted in almost every thentre in Europe and America.

"I have not read a novel for thirty years," said
Lord Palminston; "but I have read 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' three times, not for the story, but for the statesmanship of it." It is impossible to calculate the excent of the influence of this novel upon the political affairs of An

In 1853 Mrs. Stown visited Europe, and was warmly welcomed among all classes. On berreturn she published "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands." She She made a second Euromade a second Earo-pean tour a few years later, and on her re-turn published "Dred." Her "Minister's Woo-ing," "Agues of Sor-rento," "The Peut of Orr's Island, "and "Old Town Folks, "published during the last twelva years, though by no means as successful as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Uncle Tom's Cabin, have still been received with great favor.

To really appreciate Mrs. Srows it is necessary to be upon inti-mate terms with her, to see her in her hours of repose, when she is really stronger than in activity. All who thus know her are her sworm friends. She has that remarkable quality so rarely possessed by man or woman — namely, absolute self-posses-sion. In her manners, as in her conversation. there is no appearance of effort. She is not fussy in her entertainment, and even those who are shy and awk-ward are in her pres-ence perfectly at ease. She has lived a remark. able life, even if we put out of sight that sphere of social sympathies and influences to which her literary success has introduced her. The interior life of Chanготти Впохта not more remarkable, whether we consider the individual characters of the two women, or the outward circumstances that awakened them into activity and controlled their development. The pictures of New England life given in "Old Town Folks" are simply reductions of the orig inal photographs made upon Mrs. Srowk's mind in early youth; sabsequent culture has only enabled her to rate the unessential from the essential. and to draw the outlines with greater skill and fidelity, "The Minister's Wooing in-dicates how strongly she was impressed by the religious problems of New England life, It is peculiarly fitting that we should give the portraits of Haxry

WARD BRECHER and WARD BESCHER and HARRIET BESCHER
STOWN in a single group as we have done. Not only are they brother and sister, of nearly the same age, but they have many mental, or rather, we should say spiritual, characteristics in common. Their mission in life, too, has been the same—namely, to agitate the human heart, not to fanatic enthusiasm, but to conflict against wrong.

HENRY WARD BEECHER AND HARRIET BEECHER STOWE.-(PROTOGRAPHED BY J. GUENEY AND SOK.)

principal of a female seminary at Hartford, Con-necticut. In 1883 she accompanied her father, who had been elected President of Lane Theo-latinal Seminary Control of Lane Theological Seminary, to Cincinnati. Associated with her father was Rev. Calvin E. Srowe, Professor of Biblical Literature—a man of culture and of great good sense. In 1836 Professor Srowz and an anti-slavery newspaper of Washington. Upon the publication of this novel in book form in Bos-ton it was found that the writer had achieved a memorable success—a success unrivaled by any that had previously been won by a literary woman: 400,000 copies were sold in America, and 500,000 in England. It was translated into all the lan-

IN OCTOBER.

A STILLMESS as of submm woods
In moonless morns, when winds are deal;
Soft seas of mist in all the vales—
Mist on the mountains overhead.

A drowsy day: warm sweat of dew About the hand-rail of the bridge; Beneath, the slow stream's flawless face Unruffled into rut and ridge.

At noon a sudden gleam of sun, And lightly from the lower grounds. The vapors climb, and being with them Starved echoes of the valley's sounds.

Oh time of truce from striving crowds,
Whose clamor drowns the poet's voice;
Oh days that make the poet's heart
With thrills of feller life rejoice!

Ah me! all aweet and wandering sounds Of country life have left mine ears; And scenes that stirred the soul to song Are baried with the buried years.

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1869.

In November will be commenced "MAN AND WIFE," a new Serial Story, splendidly Hilustrated, by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Mocostone"). New Subscribers will be supplied with HARPER'S WEEKLY from the commencement of the Story to the end of 1870 for $4.00.

WHICH?

I S there any good reason why an intelligent citizen of New York, who wishes to promote the highest welfare of the State and country, should support the Democratic ticket at the election in November?

Is there any thing in the principles or the antecedents of the Democratic party, or in the character and ability and patriotism of those whom it usually elects to office, which such a citizen ought to prefer to the principles and history of the Republican party and to the candidates whom it presents?

Indeed, is it not difficult to ascertain what the principles and policy of the Democratic party are? Hibald abuse of the President and the Administration, success at radicalism, and slanders of the colored population, can not be accepted as arguments; and the pertinacity with which they are urged merely reveals the want of legitimate and forcible objectious to Republican ascendency.

In this election there are really two serious issues, and only two. One is strictly political, and the other financial. One is the Pifteenth Amendment; the other, taxation and national honor. The Republicans propose by the adop-tion of the Fifteenth Amendment to settle finally, in accordance with justice and American principles, and with the action of the people during and since the war-the question that has so long tormented and convulsed the country. The adoption of the amendment will be substantially the declaration that the people of the United States, taught by the most disastrous experience the danger of maintaining unreasonable and unjust political distinctions, have determined to prohibit them altogether. The declaration will be made in the manner provided by the Constitution and in the most decisive form; and once adopted, the most irritating of questions disappears from our poli-tics. New York, indeed, has already adopted the amendment. But it is not yet a part of the Constitution, and a Republican victory in New York will be a popular ratification of the act of the Legislature which would have great moral infinence.

The Democratic party, the old bulwark of slavery, the opponent of emancipation, and the contemptuous slanderer of the colored population, opposes the amendment. In the Southern States, indeed, as a condition of reconstruction, it has submitted to the recognition of equal political rights among citizens. But its spirit may be inferred from the course of its chief leaders in those States during the Presidential campaign of last year, and from the vehement opposition to the amendment in the Neethern Democratic conventions of this autumn. Nothing whatever can be gained by the defeat of the amendment but prolonged and bitter agitation. The brain and heart and conscience of the country will continue to demand this peressury act of justice and common-sense until is becomes the fundamental If the sober and intelligent voters of New York wish that this angry question should be kept open, they will support the Democratic If they wish that it should be closed honorably, justly, and in the true American spirit, they will vote with the Republicans for equal rights.

The position of the two parties in regard to the financial situation is not less directly hostile. The Republicans demand that there shall be no equivocation, and that the debts of the United States shall be paid in gold, and that the immense injury constantly done to our credit by the suspicion that we may turn out to be a nation of swindlers shall cease. They point to the steady reduction of the debt under their auspices, and to the fair adjustment of taxation, and challenge the Democratic party to show that it presents any other financial policy than that of Mr. PENDLETON, which is fatal to the credit of the country. No people, indeed, like to pay heavy taxes. Upon this disinclination the Southern Democratic leaders counted when they rose in rebellion. They hoped that the necessary cost of war would disherten the country. But the people disappointed this hope, and defeated the rebellion; and now the Democratic leaders, who made the tax necessary, denounce it as odious. But Democratic force could not dissolve the Union—shall Democratic sophistry disgrace it? Whoever in New York wishes this result will support the Democratic ticket.

support the Democratic ticket.

Or is there a feeling that the Republican party has been spoiled by success, and that it is necessary to try the Democratic? The city of New York, in which that party has indisputable power, shows the character of its administration. Does the voter wish the economy and honesty that are shown there to become universal? The Democratic party has perfected a system of frauds upon the ballot-hox; it elects judges whose names are a stench; it depends upon ignorance and hate to swell lisvote; its management of the city makes men despair of a popular government. Is this the party—whose national history is summed up in a word, that it was the party of slavery—to which the honest voters of the State would intrust the general welfare? If it is, they will vote with the party which saved the country in the field, and would now secure its prosperity by a policy of justice and honor.

THE NEW YORK REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

THE Republican candidates in New York are men for whom it will be a pleasure for honest people to vote. General Scout is a fit reprosentative of the great German element in the population, a soldier whose renown was assured sarly in the war, and to whom the Convention earnestly looked as their first choice for the nomination. For reasons which were undoubtedly satisfactory, he forbade the use of his name. But when it became necessary after the adjourn ment to select a candidate. General Stong, vielded to the universal wish, and his nomination was made as much by the common desire of the party in the State as by the General Committee. His nomination is very strong and wise and conciliatory; and his acceptance, under the circumstances, will not be forgotten by the party.

HORACE GREELEY is almost the most familiar name in the country. Identified from the first with the Republican party, and devoting his great abilities as an editor to its service, he early made his paper its chief national organ. Frank in the expression of opinion; patient of obloquy and reproach, of ridicule and bitter hostility; in the judgment of many of his political friends often visionary, impracticable, and exasperating, he has never for a moment lost the public confidence in his honesty and patriotism; and his political influence upon public opinion has undoubtedly been greater than that of any other individual. Seldom called to office he has never asked for it, and, as he says in his letter of acceptance of his present nomina tion, he has never refused any honorable service which his party might demand. The higher praise is also his, that he would never decline any such service that he could honorably perform; for his party might call upon him for an honorable service that he could not justly undertake. His nomination is an indication of the determination of the Republican party of New York that its character and purpose shall appear in its candidates, and vindicate its claim to the sympathy and support of all honest men.

This appears also in all the other nominations upon the State ticket, and in most of those made for the Legislature. In Queens County the Republicans have adopted the Democratic renomination of the present Assemblyman, who was free from complicity in the outrageons tax-levies of the last session, one Republican Senator who voted for those levies has been renominated, and of the twenty or more tainted Assemblymen not more than four or five have succeeded in being renominated; and they will be defeated, we trust, by the action of the honest Republican voters of their districts. All these things show that the Republican party has the will and the power to purge itself of all hartful suspicion. It has no Tummany dictator, no man whose will settles nominations and determines policies, no regnlating ring. But its regulator is the general consciousness of its members that the spirit of a party is necessarily shown in the character of its candidates, and the determination, so conspicuously displayed at its last national Convention, that it will not be controlled by its bummers and soldiers of fortune. This is the reasonable and conclusive ground of the popular confidence in the party. This is its iu-spiration in the coming election in New York; and this, if every voter properly considers the great importance of the election, and if the city frauds are not overpowering, will make that party triumphant in November.

a conspiracy of four years against the rights of man and the honor and peace of the United States—why should it not be frankly stated?

JAMES BUCHANAM was the service instrument

THE AUTUMN ELECTIONS.

DREAMS, not elections, go "by contraries," and the vehemence with which the Democratic papers declare that the elections in Pennsylvania and Ohio do not show that the people sustain General Grant's administration, proves their consciousness that that is their exact significance. If Mr. PACKER had been elected Governor of Pennsylvania, the same papers would have loudly assured us that Pennsyl-vania condemned the Republican principles and policy. If Mr. PENDLETON had been elected Governor of Ohio, we should have been told that the Massachusetts of the West repudiated its ancient faith and embraced repudiation. Such a result would have been hailed as the tardy repentance of the country-the more striking because exhibited in a Republican State-that the candidates of Tammany had not prevailed last year against the candidates of the people. Indeed, the prodigious lessons that would have been drawn from the most attenuated Democratic majorities in those States are incalculable. But, as the majorities turned out to be Republican, the Democratic papers assure us that they mean nothing whatever, least of all an approval of the Republican principles and administration; and we are informed that the decisive defeat of Mr. PACKER in Pennsylvania and of Mr. PENDLETON in Ohio has demonstrated their great popularity almost as fully as if they had been elected."

If the Democratic party can fatten upon such hasks of comfort, of course no one will complain. But the Democratic leaders meanwhile know quite as well as every body else that the elections in Ohio and Pennsylvania mean precisely what they meant last year when General GRANT was elected President. They mean that the American people are still honest; that they intend to pay their debts without any kind of swindling; that they think it is quite time to acquiesce in issues that the war settled by the last resort; and that they do not look for a better conduct of public affairs to the party whose spirit and methods are shown in the system of electoral frands in the city of New York and in its municipal management. They show, moreover, that the natural reaction, the inevitable personal disappointments, the innumerable private griefs, that follow every Presidential election, the unlimited and unscrupulous slander that has been uttered against the President, the sneers, the derision, the foul insinuations, which are so easy to a clever pen, have totally failed to affect the great public heart that trusted the General in the field and with gratitude and confidence called him to the Presi-

So emphatic and significant a verdict is not to be argued down or sneered away. It re-veals that kind of tenacity which it is supposed that a republic can not possess, and which, amidst the universal skepticism of Europe and of multitudes of Americans, was displayed by this country during the war. It is the indication of the clear perception in the public mind of the fundamental principles upon which alone the peaceful progress and prosperity of the country can be secured. As the New York Tribuse truly says, the result should chide the croskers. It should show still more clearly the vitality of the Republican party, and of the conviction deeply seated in the popular heart that it is indeed the party of the people. It asks for no privilege nor exclusion. no class, and proclaims and secures fair play. The result of the October elections in Pennsylvania and Ohio should make every Republican surer and bolder, firmer to demand the constant elevation of the party standard, and even more trustful than ever of the fidelity to their truest interests of the American people.

As for Iowa, her Republican fidelity is as sure as the law of gravity.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

THY New York World complains of the tone in which the Republican papers speak of con-spicuous Democrats like Mr. Pranca and Mr. BUCHANAN after their death, contrasting it with that of the Democratic press in alluding to Mr. LINCOLN. If the tone is "reviling," it can not be more indecent than the incessant flings at Mr. LINCOLN in the personal column of the World for two or three years after his death. But while a "reviling" tone is, of course, indefensible, the press has no more imperative duty than to tell the whole truth of public men when they die. No man in his senses would think of asking or expecting that such official careers as those of Presidents PIERCE and BUCHANAN should not be censured in comparison with the Presidency of Mr. LINCOLN; and it is of the utmost importance that no conspicuous actor in our politics, whose public career has outraged humanity, liberty, and the better sense of the country, should disappear in a mere swash of

The administration of FRANKLIN PIERCE was

JAMES BUCHANAN Was the servile instrument of the slaveholding interest — why should the truth be concealed? That Mr. PIRRCE was an amiable man and beloved by his friends is true; but his interest to the public, which justifies criticism of his career when he dies, is not that he was a courteous and kind neighbor in Concord, but that he countenanced border ruffians in Kanses, Mr. Buchanan was probably a respectable gentleman, as the phrase is used; but, sworn as the Chief Magistrate to defend the Union, he declared that he had no authority to prevent its dissolution. It is not true that the colitical questions of their time died with these Presidents. They were questions that never die; questions of human rights and American If there is any political morality whatever—if there is any difference between a magistrate who strains every possible point against liberty and one whose heart embraces every man-if there is any difference in conduct which hopelessly rivets chains upon the inno-cent and that which joyfully breaks them, the official career of Mr. PIEBCE or of Mr. BUCHAN-AN can no more be compared with that of Mr. LINCOLN than the private repute of AARON BURR with that of GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Suppose that when Mr. Prance died the other day all the newspapers of both parties had said only, as the World says, that he was "one of the most estimable and upright of men." It would have been a suppression of the truth as flagrantly immoral as a falsehood. If the kind of offense against civilization of which his Presidency was so signal an illustration is to be regarded as a mere temporary political interest, that vast influence upon public conduct which arises from the consciousness of posthumous justice is destroyed, and to the exceeding injury of society. If every body, whatever the principles and character and result of his public section, is to go into history merely as privately estimable and upright, moral distinctions in public life are abolished altogether, and Catnoux is as admirable a figure in our history as old Jons Bnows.

The official conduct of Mr. Pinnen inflicted deep and terrible wounds upon the country. It confirmed the desperate assaults of the slave party upon the public conscience. It promoted a wide national demoralization. It was directly responsible for massacre and a bloody reign. of terror in Kansas. It depressed the hopes of every American citizen who aspired to see his country vindicate its origin and its best genius; and it disgraced the name of the United States wherever it was uttered. This was the service of FRANKLIN PIERCE to this country and to mankind. It is recorded in our annals. It will be the verdict of history. When he disappeared from the public scene, it needed only to have been mentioned as occasion made the reference necessary. But when, at his death, it is sobstantially claimed that nothing more should be said than that he was an estimable and ppright man, a decent regard for public morality requires that the whole truth be told. Nor is it, is is alleged, an unkindly rawage of the grave to tell the truth soberly, however strongly. Let every man in high office have a living consciousness that when he dies no fondness of private regret, no remembered personal urbanity, can woo to silence or evasion the tongue that tells his public story, and every such man will weigh well his apparent present advantage with his final renown; and every citizen will learn that no station is splendid enough to dazzle the just public perception of the moral character and tendency of official action.

A VOICE FROM MISSISSIPPL

Is the late lamented JOHN C. CALHOUN could return and read the platform of the Republican party in Mississippi, especially the first four resolutions, he would either groan that his country had so degenerated, or, illuminated by celeatial experience, he would join the party and proclaim its glad tidings more scalously than ever he preached "Southern rights" against the rights of human nature. In the report of the platform, the resolutions of which we speak go off, as it were, like a volley of triumph.

First. The Union first, last, and forever. Second. Freedom of speech and of the press. Third. Universal suffrage and universal nu-

Fourth. Free schools—their benefits to be extended to every child in the State.

The resolutions go on to declare for all the constitutional amendments; for the immediate removal of disabilities; and for the new State Constitution, without disfranchisement or proscription. How many of the noblest victims of the war, if they could have known that within less than ten years of their death a party with every prospect of success would proclaim such principles in Mississippi, and be cordially supported by the Administration, would not have felt, indeed, that they did not give their lives in vain! No great sacrifice ever produced more immediate and vaster results. In the four Mississippi resolutions lie the charms which are to redoem that State, and every other that went into rebellion-the policy which would have saved them all their sorrow had it been that of those States for the last generation.

These principles, and the measures that spring from them, and the spirit which accompanies them, are those of the Republican party of the United States every where. If the observer turn his admiring eye to the great Northwest, the marvel of progress and prosperity, he is not surprised to learn that those great States have been always faithful to these principles, and are steadily Republican. If he look at New Enwhich is not ashamed of her history, he finds that the Mississippi resolutions have beartier echo than from Bunker Hill and the Green Mountains: and he is not surprised that to leave New England out in the cold was the singry wish of the haughty chiefs who were not for the Union first, last, and forever; and not for freedom of speech and of the press; and not for universal suffrage; and not for free schools. Those chiefs ruled the country by the Democratic party. Let the same observer look at any State or section which is indisputably cratic, and consider whether it is equally grateful to him with these as an American or

The great service of the Republican party in this country is that it has made a truly popular republic possible. Under Democratic supremacy, the fundamental principles of such a government were despised. Our system had be-come a vast propagandism of slavery. That has been overthrown, but its spirit and its traditions still linger in the party through which it worked. Nowhere does that party lead the van for the Union first, last, and forever, nor for freedom of speech and of the press; nor for universal suffrage, nor for free schools for all children. It clung to slavery while slavery lasted. It would have supported the South-ern black laws if Congress had not made them impossible. It would still maintain all of slavery that it can, denying the suffrage to intelligent and industrious men, and every where promoting that exclusive spirit of caste and race which will angrily agitate the country until it is laid.

By their works let the two great parties of this country be judged. And by them, because the general principles and policy of each are un-changed. Let any candid man answer, Which has been the party of liberty, of intelligence, of progress, of humanity? Which has been the party of retrogression, of igner once, of slavery, and inhumanity? The tend : - a, the imperative necessities of a political; or estronger than the hopes and wishes croome of its members. By those tendencies, by its unjust and inhuman spirit, by its wanton crimes against liberty, let the Democratic party be judged.

FATHER HYACINTHE AND THE CARMELITE SUPERIOR.

Tun correspondence between Father Hya-CINTHE and the Superior of his order at Rome has been published, and is of the utmost signif-The first letter of the Carmelite Supe rior was written in July, and deplores and laments and regrets Father HYACINTHE's course, and repeats and amplifies its grief and remonstrance at great length. The offense of the Parisian orator was what may be called outside work. Instead of following the rut of safe ecclesiastical tradition he thought for himself, and he freely expressed his thoughts. "I have earnestly exhorted you," says the Superior, "not to identify yourself with questions in dispute among Catholics, and on which all were not agreed." That may be the Carmelite method of advancing the truth, but it is not one that would carry the truth very far. And this seems to have been the opinion of Father HYACINTHE. The Superior then proceeds to a formal order that the Father shall not print any letters or speech; nor to speak outside of the churches; nor to be present at the Chambers : nor to take part in the Peace League, nor in any other meeting that "has not an exclusively Catholic and religious object."

To this order forbidding him to print letters Father Hyacistum ret With indignant ter which is already famous. eloquence he protested against that which, if Roman, was not Christian. He declared that his tongue should never be tied, and he threw off the robe of his monkish order, and left his monastery. In tones that have rung through Christendom he asserted religious liberty, and with a fervor that recalls the ancient days of religious protest he repudiated in advance the spirit of the assembling Council. To such an answer, from such a man, at such a moment, there could be but one response from his ec clesiastical superior, and that came on the 26th of September. The Carmelite Superior, in & little higher tone, recalls Father HYACISTER'S various acts of disobedience; and reminds him that a monk who leaves his monastery and throws off the robe of his order without regular permission is considered " a real apostate, liable to the greater excommunication. He orders the Father to return to his monastery and to implicit obedience within ten days from the date of the letter, or he will be deprived ennonically of his position in the Carmelite orsure. Father HYACINTES did not obey, and the penalty has undoubtedly been enforced.

The Superior treats the whole matter canonically. There are rules of the order, he declares, which Father HYACISTEE has violated; and he is therefore punished for disobedience Father HYACISTEE does not deny that he disobeys, but he absolves himself from all guilt in disobedience by withdrawing from the moral obligation to obey in leaving the order. But to leave the order under such circumstances would seem to be a departure from the Church

The spirit of the letter of protest is not spirit compatible with the rule of a Church which demands that a preacher shall not touch subjects upon which all are not agreed. Mr. CHOATE was said to have praised his pastor's sermons because they did not remind him of his secular life. His theory of preaching was that of the Carmelite Superior. He was a sheep who wished to be led by still waters. But Father HYACISTEE knows that the minister of God must deal with the storms of human passion of every kind-with doubts and questions and despairs—and that the moral aspect of no question which interests the human mind and beart, or which affects human life, is beyond the proper scope of his discours

Father Hyacustur's letter is that of a man who refuses in advance to submit to the decision of the General Council if his own judgment does not approve it. But if the Pope and Council together are not infallible, what authority expresses the infallible decisions of the Church l Father Hyacustus virtually denies the infallibility of the Church. Has he not then censed to be a Romanist?

THE GEORGIA JUBILEE.

THE Georgia State Agricultural Society propose to make their annual fair on the 16th of November a Peace Jubilee. The most distinguished guests have been invited, including the President, Vice-President, and Cabinet, Congress, the Governors, and the ex-Presidents, and "the principal generals of the two late hos-tile armies." Should they all come, or a rep-resentative number of them, the Committee, in their own words, trust "that when a large concourse of people, from all sections of the Union, shall witness the meeting and exchange of civilities between distinguished and trusted men from all sections—shall see the great and idolized chieftains of the two late contending armies most and shake hands on the same platform, surrounded by the emblems as well as the implements of husbandry-shall literally see the spear turned into the pruning-hook, and the sword into the plow-share'-shall actually witness a restoration of the union of the hearts of the people-much, very much will be accomplished for the country which has not been done by laws and garrisons."

The programme is a little dramatic. The Committee will find it hard to persuade General GRANT to play in a pantomime, nor ought it to count too surely upon the satisfaction to the country of seeing General Lun side by side with the President. General LEE has thus far wisely chosen to hold himself withdrawn from the public view, and he would yield to ill advice if he should abandon his retirement. The project is doubtless well meant; but of course the distinguished company will not come, nor would their coming be of especial service. Thus kind of spectacular emotion is not agreeable to "the genius of the people." The colonists were very much in earnest about freedom, but they did very well without a Goddess of Liberty; while the Frenchmen, who had the goddess, did not have the liberty. How much Italian patriotic seal has blazed away uselessly in the brillians rhetoric of ribbons! We hope, however, that the Georgia fair will be very successful; that the number and interest of the visitors will show how truly at heart they have the welfare of their State and of the Union; and that the orators will show how intimately allied the highest interest of the farming class is with the general prosperity of the country.

NOTES.

In alluding to an article in the Boston Advertiser upon the late Republican nominations in this State, the Albany Evening Journal says:

"But what Mr. Curves is blamed for most, however, is not that he declined, if decline he mast, but for the peculiarly demoralizing method of his declination. He buried the nomination back as if he decuised it as much as the Aderriser itself does. He might at least have communicated his declenation quietly."

Mr. CURTIS was in another State when the Convention met. The political situation in New York was not unknown to him. Too late to pre-vent it he saw in the New York papers that his nomination was probable; and before learning the action of the Convention every consideration that should have affected his decision, and which has since been urged, was fully considered by him. But as his acceptance was bonorably mpossible, and as there was but a month before the election, he felt it to be his duty, without awaiting the official notice of his nomination, and to prevent loss of time from remonstrances and misunderstandings, to make known his nevessary decision as soon and as widely as possider, and will remain under the established can- I big. In doing so he certainly did not use many words, but he chose such as he hoped would convey at least some impression of his profound sense of the honor which was offered him, not only by the fact but by the manner of the nomination He said: "While I am sincerely grateful for this most honorable and unexpected proof of the con-fidence of my political friends, with whose declaration of principles I cordially agree, it is impossible for me to accept the nomination. He mistakes nor me to accept the nomination. He mistakes both those friends and the force of words if his lotter is constant. letter is construed by them as hurling back their nomination as if he despised it; and he has no doubt that, upon reflection, th Evening Journal will own that it has, certainly with no ill intent, misconceived his action.

Mr. Dickers must have been greatly amused by the ingenious misunderstanding of the little phrase in his speech at forming namenal and his in the people governing was infinitesimal and his in the people governing was infinitesimal and his faith in the people governed was illimitable. It is surprising how many shrewd gentlemen, upon reading these words, shook their heads sagely, and remarked that they had long suspected that Mr. Duckness would somer or later declare his Toryism. One paper observed that he had turned his back upon all his books. Another, with indig-nation, asserted that he had given himself the lie. The misinterpretation was as remarkable as it was ludicrous. As it was generally received and an-grily criticised the remark was nonsense. For what could a man be supposed to mean who said that he did not believe that the people could gov-orn themselves, but that he had illimitable faith in the people? Faith in their ability to do what? He had begun by saying that he would tell his political creed. Consequently to say that his faith in the people governed was illimitable was to express the utmost political confidence in them. It was an astounding ingenuity of misconception to suppose that Mr. Dickers would stand before Jour Butgarr's constituency and declare his want of faith in the people.

Ms. Pillmork lately made a speech upon taking the chair at the Commercial Convention, in Louisville, in which, by alluding to his sign-ing the Fugitive Slave Bill, he showed that his mind was not at rest upon the subject. He said: mind was not at rest upon the subject. He said:
"I freely confess it was against my feelings. I examined it carefully, but found no defect in it. It was constitutional, and, although I knew when I signed it I was signing my political death-warrant, I signed, and would have done it, had it taken my right arm." Mr. Fillmone's feelings ance my right arm. Mr. Fill.nour's feelings did not approve the bill, and he was politically ambitious; but he outraged his feelings and blasted his political hopes by signing a bill that put every colored person in the country at the mercy of any slaveholder. The sacrifice of conscience and laudable ambition upon such an altar is not a very ennobling spectacle. Mr. Fill.nour. MORE, perhaps, does not remember that to catch slaves under this law was so much "against the feelings" of some of the United States sioners that they resigned rather than obey. If, instead of sacrificing his feelings and ambetion to sign a law imperiling the life and liberty of innocent men, women, and children, Mr. Fill-more had chosen to resign his office, he would have spared his feelings, served his ambition and humanity together, and have made his name for-ever honored in history.

On the 4th of October the Cincinnati Inquirer, a Democratic paper, said:

"Our advices from all parts of the State amount to ocitive assurances of the election of Mr. Pannaron positive assurances of the election of Mr. Passurances by a majority larger than the average against us in the past six years. We are not disposed to overestimate our strength or everstaic our prospects, but we are so certain of success in the contest to be closed on Tuesday week, that we feel it a duty to those who have belied in the good work about to be consumated to tell them that their labor has not been in valu. The people are at last aroused to a sense of their true interests."

The result of the election was the defeat of Mr. PENDLETON by a decisive majority. The New York World remarks of the election in New York in precisely the same vein :

"The editor of the Tvibone knows that it is just as morally certain that the Democratic State ticket will be elected by an overwhelming majority, and that the lower branch of the Legislature will be Democratic, as it is that the election day will come."

This is the way that the Democrats have counted their chickens for the last ten years.

Two Lyceums can this winter hear the latest adventures at the equator and the pole. Mr. Du Chanae, the African explorer, whose lectures to children are the most striking and delightful novelty of the lecture system, will speak in Boston on the 27th of October and the 3d of November; and Captain Hall, the newly-re turned Arctic navigator, who has made himself at home with the Esquimaux, and who is ac-companied by a family of that people, began his lectures in New York on the 18th of October, under the auspires of the American Geograph-ical Society. The address of Captain Hall is for the present at this office.

Mr. Augustus Mayanton, who has had a ong and practical acquaintance with editorial life in New York, and who is very competent to treat the subject with interest and point, has in press a volume upon "Henry J. Raymond and the New York Press for Thirty Years." It can not fail to be a valuable and entertaining historical work.

A PRIENDLY enthusiast writes to the Sun of Mr. GEORGE LAW that he has "locmed up among us and moved silently, as the great orb of day, for a number of years;" and that "he is of cay, for a manner of years agreed reader, has an extraordinary memory, and, next to Dr. Saures. H. Cox, is probably the best historian in the country." The enthrodest centis, however, to mention the titles of Mr. Law's historical works.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Ix Pennsylvania, Ghio, and Iowa there were fitted elections on the 18th of October. The Governors of Pennsylvania and Ohio were re-elected by a light majority. In Pennsylvania the Legislaturo has a Republican majority of 25 on a joint ballot. In Ohio the House is Democratic and the Scuate Republican. The Republican majority in flows is very heavy.

In Savansah, Georgia, Colonel John Screven, the Democratic candidate for Mayor, was elected October 11.

There was a mass-meeting of the working-men at Cooper Institute, in this city, on the evening of October 12. Among those who addressed the meeting was Mr. Thomas Commity, the accredited representative of the working-men's unions of Birmingham, England, to the trades' unions of America. The resolutions adopted advocate the policy of independent political action on the part of the working-men.

A large number of the working-men.

A large number of the informulal citizens of Philadelphia, including the principal mercantile stress, have addressed a memorial to their Representatives in Congress, recommending the support of Mr. Jencher's Civil Service bill. "B may be safely attirant," say these petitioners, "that no civilized community has a public service so costly and so incompetent as our own."

public service so costly and so incompetent as our own."

In an address delivered in Ohio previous to the late election, ax. Senator Hen Wade remarked: "I believe that, under God, the Administration is performing its duties with an housety of purpose, and a determination to do the right, to save severy doular that can be saved, and apply, it to the liquidation of the debt; and that is my idea of fluoreiring. It is a kind of becomes a formation to the right, to save severy doular that can be aswed, and apply, it to the inpulsation of the debt; and that is my idea of fluoreiring. It is a kind of becomes a Grant's Administration has quievred upon it with triumphant encourse, and ought to be sucheded. I seem that it would bave liked to vote for a tried states man when I voted for him. I did not know how itruly he held the great principles of the Republican party: and I would part with my life quicker than I would part with the principles in-day. I have sever yet secreted one single latch from them, and never will. I feared General Grantmight not hold to those principles on position which had called upon him to being their out. I would have chosen a man, if I could have held my own way, who had been tried by fire, and in whom we knew there was no shrinkape. Hot, Sire, thenced Grant has been tried. You see his dealings with the Government, and you find them all of the glurious strips you and I would want to pet in. We know, now, his heart is steeped in the grant Republican deciries. I am giad to ascertain the begins of the Governor Senter, of Tenersee, was inaugurated Gotober 11. In his recost message to the Legisla-

Governor Senter, of Tenoresce, was insuporated October II. In his recost message to the Legisla-ture he opposes repudiation, and strongly urges the ratification of the Pulicenth Amendment.

The Virginia Legislature reasonabled on the 18th for the election of United States Scratters. for the election of United States Senators.

In New York and other large cities on the 11th of October there was, in accordance with the order of the Central Republican Junts of Cobs and Porto Rien, a formal celebration of the anniversary of the Caban, a formal celebration of the naminerary of the Caban, according to the Cobsen particle, and is leoked upon by the Cobsen particles as the Fourth of Jely. The 10th this year fell on Sanday, and the celebration was deferred. Sigme M. Lemm, the Cobsen Mindeer to this country, presided at the mass-meeting heid is the evening at the Copper Institute in this city. The Cuban flag was saluted in the afternoon in the City Hall Park. One of the granters on that eccasion had the arm blown off.

At the recent election of litrectors of the Erie Initinore on that ectasion had the arm blown off.

At the recent election of librators of the Eric Ilmitroad, Gould and Fisk were again victorious. The old board was in the main reclected; and by a classification of the Directors, in accordance with a recent act of the Legislatory, Gould, Fisk, and Tweed do not go out of office until 18-4.

The free-trade discussion on the evening of October II in Beaton, between Professor Forey and Hon, Horses Greeley, drew out quite a large audience, who listened with attention to the dehats.

A Transcondingual Railrand Convention was held.

Estened with attention to the dehats.

A Transcontinental Railroad Convention was held at George October 7 and 8. There were about sixty delegates present. The main object of this convention was in examiner the speedy construction of an independent through line of railroad, by the most direct rouse practicable, from Portland to Chicago. By the conte raggested at the convention from Portland to Chicago, through part of Canada, and theore to connect with the great upper thoreighfure to Project Sound—the monal passage between China and Enforce would be shortened by over 2000 miles. With this advantage, added to that which it stready possesses in its fameure bashor, Portland hopes to throw New York and Boston in the shade as commercial centres.

The edicial figures at the Agricultural Department estimate that the cotton crop of the Southern States this year will be worth $200,000,000; while the total value of the exports of the South is set down at $235,500,000. At this rate the value of Southern products is about $51 $7 per head for the cultir Southern products is about $51 $7 per head for the cultir Southern products is about $51 $7 per head for the cultir Southern products. These figures per be show that the South is even now the richest section of the country. Charles William Elliot was inargurated as President of Harvard University October 12.

The Commercial Convention met at Lardwille, Kentecky, Celorier 12, and was presided over by ex-President Pillmore. One of the principal questions considered was that of immigration to the Neuth. On the lath there was a grand trade procession extending for other miles. There were 160,000 spectators in the streets.

ing for this miles. There were assessed and the streets.

The whaling schooner Sease N. Smith, of Boston, was lost in the herricane of August 28. All hands were drowned, with the exception of the captain and four seasons, who, after remaining on the wreck, which was on its beam ends, for eight days and nights, without food or water, were taken off and carried into London by an English bark. The captain's wife and two children were drowned in the cabin.

At the Jerome Park course on the 11th Mr. Came-two children were drowned in the cabin.

At the Jerome Park course on the 11th Mr. Cameron's filly, "Inversalsd,"wen the Jerome Stakes; one sails and three quarters. Time, 8.54i. The second race was wen by "Gorden;" the Members' Cupthird race—by "Metaire;" the Selling Stakes by "Harbinger." On the 14th the winners were "Linele Rogers," "Fineses," "La Polka, and "Corsican." On the 14th the winners were "Mitchell," "Remoracless," "Yespecias," "Abdol Rades," and "Duffy."

The Engineer of the Board of Health in New York has recently proposed to that Board a plan for utilialing the waters of East and North rivers for extinguishing free and cleaning the streets.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Emperor Napoleou has ordered that the trav-eling expenses of the French Bishop of Quebec, in going to and returning from the Ekumenical Coun-cil, shall be deflayed from the Imperial exchequer, A dergyman of the Church of England—Rev. Chas, Vayeey, rector of Illalungh, Yorkshire—has been preaching sermons so wildly betterdox in detrime as to provoke the interference of the Archhielesp.

The test of the Passymyan war to the alties is eq-timated to have been £66,500,600 and 288,840 men. timated to have been August, 600 and 199,500 men. Castellar, the lender of the Spanish Depublicans, has fied to Portugal. A number of the Provincial journals in Spain have been suppressed. The Republican Depublics of the Cortes refuse to attend the Chambers and arcsecvated in the city. Their arrest has been determined upon. In a recent debate in the Cortes General Prim is reported to save said that Spain only awaited a freezable result of the China was to grant the cookly an the refusing and Libertice Gestral.

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM M. BELKNAP.

THE NEW Secretary of War, Major-General WILLIAM M. BELENAT, is a native of Hudson, New York. He was born in 1831; his father was Brigadier-General Braenar, a soldier in the War of 1812, and in the Mexican War. On the death of his father Belenar moved to Iowa. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the army as Major of the Fifteenth Iowa. For gallantry at Shiloh he was made Lieutenant-Colonel and Provost-Marshal of the Fifteenth Corps. He afterward rejoined his regiment as Colonel; after the fall of Vicksburg he was brevetted Brigodier-General, and led the Iowa Brigodie in the Atlanta campaign. He marched to the sen with General Shermann, and, on the arrival of the Army at Savannah, was brevetted Major-General. He commanded a division of the Fifteenth Army Corps in the march through the Carolinas, fought his last fight at Benton-tille, and at the end of the war was offered the rank of Brigodier-General in the Regular Army, which he der lined. He delivered the address at the last reunion of the Army of the Tennessee. As to his competency for the exalted position to which he has been appointed, it is sufficient to say that President Grant has carefully followed his past career, and has given him the preference to all others.

THE HUSS COMMEMORATION AT PRAGUE.

The occasion of the commemoration at Prague of the fifth centenary of the great Reformer Huss has been associated with the recent proceedings in Bohemia having reference to that assertion of nationably against Austrian absorption which so long characterized the proceedings of the patriotic Hungarians. The leaders of the movement, remembering the obl fame of Bohemia, and wishing to see it restored, were determined not to let such an opportunity pass unimproved, and accordingly the festival assumed an almost solemn importance. The occasion was all that could be desired; the raising of a monument to Huss was certain to evoke a large amount of enthusiasm; and the result verified the promoters' expectations, for within the walls of Prague were assembled all those who had the Zeck nationality at heart. At their bend—as they are always the leaders on such occasions—were Palacet, Russen, Busting-Shiretsowski, Scallenowski, and some others less eclebrated. All the Sclave peoples recognizing the sowerignty of the house of Austria sent departations, all the trade corporations marched with banners and sung the National Hyma, and the same ceromony was being observed in every town in Bo-

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM M. BELENAP, THE NEW SECRETARY OF WAR.
(PROTOGRAPHED AT BRADE.)

hemia. The commemoration was started in Hussiners, a listle village where Josty Huss first saw the light in the fourteenth century; and the house in which he was born is still standing—a plain, unpretending edifice enough, resembling the ordinary dwellings of the Bohemian peasantry. It would seem as though its preservation had been decreed that it might remain a national monument; and it was an exciting spectacle to see defiling before so simple a structure 20,000 men adorned with the national colors and shouting patriotic hymns with a high enthusiasm that gave extra pathos to the wild and stirring aira. The town of Prague—most picturesque of ancient European centres of population—presented an impressive spectacle; but the crowning moment, when REGUER mounted a balcony, and addressed the assembled crowds, defies description. The people had taken possession of every point of vantage; and even the roofs of the houses were packed with caper assemblies waiting to listen to one of the most popular orators in the country. So great is his fame that even in Visuana silence reigns in every meeting where he drights to speak; and his very opponents listen with profound attention to his eloquent harrangues. It would be impossible to convey any adequate idea of his speech on this eccasion; for it would need the action, tone, and gesture that accompanied it, even if it could be properly translated into another language. Suffice it to say that every eye and every ear of the assembled thousands seemed to hang upon him as he went on, and the answering enthusiasm was fully equal to the ceremony that had called it forth.

LURKING LOVE.

Wsues turking love in ambush lies Under friendship's fair disguise, When he wears an angry mien, Imitating spite or spleen; When, like Sorrow, he seduces; When, like Pleasure, he amuses; Still, howe'er the parts are cast, 'Tis but "Lurking Love" at last.

THE WEBER CANON.

We give on this page a view of the scenery of the Weber River cafeon, near the Great Salt Lake, in Utah Territory. This wild gorge of the Wasatch range of mountains, through which the railway enters the Mormon settlement, was one of the most difficult parts of the line to construct. The Weber River, a large stream, with many rapids, cleaves its way through high bluffs that rise more than a thousand feet above its chatmel, and breaks out at the Devil's Gate into the plain of the Great Salt Lake. Several embankments, cuttings, tunnels, and bridges were needful within a short length of railroad. The tunnel, to which the opening is shown in our view, was excavated by the Mormons, being comprised in a contract known as "the hundred-mile job," taken by a party of those industrious saints, under the personal direction of Brionam You's himself. The train which appears on the line is traveling westward toward California. This point is about one thousand miles west of the Missouri River.

THE UNION PACIFIC RAHAROAD-WEBER CANON AND RIVER.

STOPPED HALF-WAY!

THE tender of the Hector was lying alongside the wharf, waiting for the last contingent of pas-sengers to go off to the ship. Few people, in-deed, except those accustomed to such scenes, could feel otherwise than perfectly distracted amids the hubbut that casued.

amidst the hubbub that ensued.

The steam-whistle from the tender blowing, the bell ringing with that maddening sound preluding every departure of this kind, convincing all timid people that they are inevitably too late, deafening them, and driving them nearly wild in their frantic efforts to make their voices heard above the din and uproar; harsh tones raised to shrillness in command, and echoes of responses to orders carried out; such sounds and sights are not to be forgotten, especially when we know that deep and touching human feelings and emotions are making themselves heard and felt all tions are making themselves heard and felt all

There were partings between mothers and sons, sisters and brothers, fathers and daughters, even husbands and wives; friends determining to go out to the ship, to get the last glimpse of their dear ones, some resolving to part at once. There were faces bathed in tears, others set and rigid, as they gazed their last, perhaps, into lov-ing eyes, now filled with looks of sad and yearning tenderness.

Among these groups I was struck with one of

Among those groups I was struck with one of three women, consisting of two young girls and an eiderly lady; but whether the latter was the mother of the younger ones, or merely some old and confidential nurse or housekeeper, I could not quite make out. They were questioning and consulting about the place of parting: should it be here, or should they all go off to the vessel?

The cluer female seemed to be in great sorrow, and the girls were dreading to leave her. The crould around them where they stood was very thick; and as they were jostled about from place to place I could not help noticing the extreme basety of the elder sister. She was charming to look upon—bewitching I may call her; for the feelings of the moment gave a marvelous mobility and amount of expression to a relous mobility and amount of expression to a countenance in it-off perfect in line and feature. countenance in it-alf perfect in line and feature. Masses of soft clustum-brown hair seemed to frame the delicate oval face, which was lighted up by a pair of dark blue eyes, shaded with long silky lashes. A small and rather provoking nose, an insimuating pouting little mouth, and dimpled chin, together with a beautifully formed head, gracefully poised on a tall and elegant figure, made up indeed a most fascinating specimen of feminity.

During the time occupied in the depositing of the mails I rentured to address the three women, for their perplexity seemed increasing every moment. I saw at a glance how matters stood. The steam-tender was terribly crowded, and they were evidently timid about going on board. I | parting with their old friend or nurse over at also made out that the girls wished to have the | once; so, after consulting a moment with Simmons, who seemed rather proud of having me under his charge, and ready to do me becow, and fall into my wishes in every way, I offered to give them a seat in our boat. In a well-managed aside, I ventured to say to one of the ladies, "Pray let farewell be said here." I felt that I was perfectly justified in addressing them under such circumstances, when all conventionalities are cast away, and all differences of position and rank are utterly ignored. I was sure that it could be only right to smooth away the difficulties that seemed to add so much perplexity to the sorrow that was unpermost in the ity to the sorrow that was uppermost in the hearts of these three ladies, for ladies in one sense they unquestionably were, although per-haps wanting a certain something in tone and haps wanting a certain something in tone and refinement.

"WE SAW THE THREE SAFELY DRAGGED OVER THE SIDE OF THE BOAT."

The removal of the gangway, and the departure of the stemm-tag, amidst load shouts and cheers, now absolutely compelled the young ladies to accept my offer. As nothing could be waited for after the mails were on board, it was necessary that the steam-tender should be along-side the ship, with its living cargo discharged, before the arrival of the mail-boat; thus I had still time to make some arrangements for the before the arrival of the mail-bost; thus I had still time to make some arrangements for the comfort of my fellow-passengers.

While purposely busying myself in this way the parting between my three friends took places. All passed quickly and quietly; but I own to having felt some very musual choking sensa-tions while glancing at the sorrowful faces of the girls as I handed them into our best, which in number moment was conting her way through gains as I manned them into our beat, which in another moment was cutting her way through the sparkling water toward the Hertor. For a time I knew that subs and tears must have their way with my two companions, and all my best and most chicalrons feelings were aroused as I noticed their weeping sail young faces looking so lovely in their sorrow.

lovely in their sorrow.

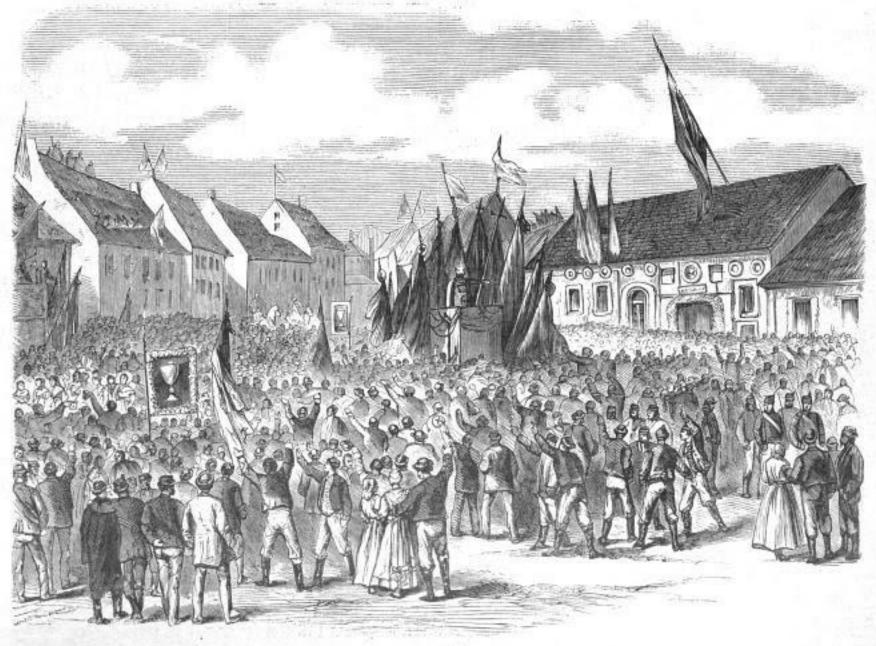

I could only glean from them, in a few broken words, that they were going to Cape Town, where a married brother resided. They were orphans, they told me, and had just juried from a very dear old nurse, who had taken charge of them from childhood. I also found that their name was Smith. The name certainly was fa-miliar to me; indeed, I am positive I had heard it before, but never had I seem such charming hearers of it.

As we neared the ship they began to recover themselves a little; and I almost wished that I, too, was going to the Antipodes, "A rounge with such companions," thought I, "would be, in truth, a very phoenix of royages!"

Arriving alongside the vessel, I did all in my power, in carrying shawls, hand-bugs, etc., to na-sist my companions up the ganguny.

Feeling that their position was really a very un-protected one, my first care, after having stowed away their little packages, found out their cobin

THE HUSS COMMEMORATION AT PRAGUE-CEREMONY BEFORE THE HOUSE OF THE REFORMER.

lowed, was to see the stewardess, and to interest ber in my fair charges.

Great confusion reigned even here, but there was order in it—no doubts, no counter-orders now! Partings were all but over; and, for weal or for woe, each heart there had to face a new future. I speculated much upon the fate of the elder of my two friends, who smiled most sweetly upon me as I bade her and her sister my last

On leaving the saloon I ran with great force, On leaving the saloon I ran with great sires, in my haste, against a young man, who, by his costume, was evidently an outward-bound passenger. I believe I must have burt him, from his look of mute and half-angry surprise; but it soon passed away, and I was both interested and amused by the manner in which he took my apologies.

"Don't apologise, pray," he said; "for my part, I should not have cared much if you had knocked the breath clean out of me; I don't find life a very enviable thing just now!"

He was a fine stalwart-looking fellow, but with somothing rather eccentric in his appearance and manner, which was increased by a peculiarly lach-rymose expression of countenance. He carried a small black leathern hand-bag, on which was painted in white letters, so conspicuous that I round not fail to read it, the name of "Cuthbort Deliverthe No."

Dolworthy, Esq."

At such times, when people are saying good-hy on the eve of a long voyage, social formalities are but little regarded; and those who have un-dergone a sorrowful leave-taking, or whose feelings are much excited by conflicting emotions, seldom scruple to fall into conversation, and even to include in confidences with complete strangers. Thus it was that, in a few minutes after our ren-contre, and after I had expressed my regret that life was so unsatisfactory a thing to him, Mr. Dol-worthy and I found conselves talking as if we had worthy and I found consolves talking as if we had been acquaintances of some standing. We came up on deck again together, and, continuing our dislogue, he went on to say:

"I am going out to Melbourne; and perhaps your mirth will be somewhat excited if I tell you for what purpose. People say I'm a queer fellow, and I dare say I am; but, the truth is, I want to ask a girl out there to be my wife. I only left Melbourne six months ago; I had made as much money as I wanted, and came to England."

"Why, in the name of fortune," I inquired, "did not you make your isomore's certain, as "did not you make your insmorets certain, as well as your money?"

"Ah! I don't know, I'm sure—want of pluck, perhaps; I was afraid she would refuse me; and though I'm a cool hand at most things, in this I behaved like an ass! But some women, you I behaved like an ass! But some women, you know, can make fools of strong men. I don't think she cared for me, and I hoped I might forget her by coming to England, but I can't, so I determined to know my fate, and here I am at the starting-point again!"
"If I were you," said I, tickled at his oddity, "I would hardly go so far for a wife. I can tell you there are two most charming girls on board; I have just established them in their birth, No. 4. The eider sister, my dear Sir, would harn any

The elder sister, my dear Sir, would turn any man's head! Now do take the goods the gods penside, make the most of your opportunity, for-get the young lady in Mellourne?"

"I forget a woman who has been in my thoughts constantly for months and months! I am not that sort of man, I can tell you! I love this woman now, and shall love her always, whether she cares for me or not."

He was going on, with many veriferations of constancy, when our dislogue was summarily interrupted by more bell-ringing, and shouts of "Now for the shore! now for the shore!" Then ensued a fresh hubbub and excitement, with more jostling and hustling, and I had but one moment to shake hands heartily with my new friend, and wish him "God-speed," before regaining the gangway. Simmone's task ended, we re-entered our beat just as the noble Hector's broad canvas began to belly to a favorable wind. I naturally fell to thinking about life on shipboard, and my acquaintances of the hour. People living in towns, in the bus-tle of large communities, are not readily prone to commit themselves in matters matrimonial; their thoughts flow in many divers channels; but dur ing a long sea passage all distinctions are level-ed. Every one falls into the same social position, no distinctions are made, and for months perhaps no opportunity is offered for comparing social de-I was but mortal, and could not help thinking of the pretty face of the elder of my two com-panions. If I had been going out in the Hector I should then and there have fallen head over ears in love with her. All the perplexities, objections, difficulties, and obstacles incidental to marrying upon nothing would have vanished into thin air ne across her in what is called socibut had I come across her in what is called soci-ety, it would have been a different matter. I could not have kept pace with my more prosperous and wealthy friends as a married man; for what had hitherto sufficed for one would have to do for two. and perhaps in time for half a dozen. But I own that these selfish considerations never would have found place amidst the boredom and ennul of a long sea voyage,

"Ah!" I thought to myself, "I would not give much for the chances of that young lady in Mel-bourne who has been so long adored in secret by my 'knight of the worful countenance' and won-derful name! He must be of adamant, that Cuthbert Dolworthy, if he passes the next two or three months unscathed in the society of such a 'Helen' as I have left him with on board the Hector,

My musings were brought to a close by our My massings were brought to a close by our reaching shore. I really had quite enjoyed my little escapade; for while having been greatly amused, I had also added to my store of philosophy. I often wondered how my sometime follow-passengers fared on their voyage; nor was it surprising that I kept a sharp look-out for them, and done such small offices as time al. for some news of the Hector. And in love fine lowed, was to see the stewardess, and to interest, morning, a few months after, I had news in-

With the keenest interest I read the subj story in a Portstower paper, which my friend Dick Crosbie sent me:

"GALLANTRY AND ROMANCE AT SEA.

45 From a private letter we are enabled to give the following account of a romantic and tragic incident which occurred on board the clipper ship Hector on her voyage between England and the Cape:

"There was a fair complement of pas and we had been at sea a sufficient time for them to settle into the little coteries and cliques which form a distinguishing feature of acciety during long voyages. The learned and literary had long voyages. The learned and literary had come together, and the very proper and serious people had fallen into their places, likewise the fast and noisy, who, in this instance, were the most numerous. Two brainless young men were conspicuous among the latter for a tremendous firstation, which they were carrying on with a couple of young ladies named Smith, bound for the Cape, and who were making the voyage, for some unaccountable reason, quite alone. These girls did not appear to have been accustomed to such attentions as they were then receiving and Two brainless young men were such attentions as they were then receiving, and the novelty of the life, the bracing air, the fine weather we were enjoying, and the general pleas-ant excitement which prevailed, seemed to have drawn them, perhaps imperceptibly to them-selves, into a course of conduct and behavior which something about them indicated was not the natural bent of their dispositions.

"Be this as it may, not an opportunity was lost for the partie curves for "carrying on," as the phrase goes, on all possible occasions. Madcap pranks, and an evident desire to chaff and make pranks, and an evident desire to chaff and make game of every body not in their set, formed lead-ing characteristics of their conduct. One of the chief butts of their merriment was a tall, good-looking, athletic young fellow, but who, from his melancholy mood, downcast looks, deep-drawn sighs, and 'banished lord' sort of aspect, formed a fair prey for their gibes and ridicule.

"This behavior fracuently bordered on down-

"This behavior frequently bordered on down-right rudeness, and little effort was made to sub-due their voices when indulging in their com-

"Many such expressions as 'poor old moody-mug!' 'don't disturb him!' 'be's in love, you know!' 'have pity!' 'dear old sober-sides!' etc., must frequently have been overheard by him. must frequently have been overheard by him. However, he was either unconscious, or unwilling to take any notice of what was going on. It appeared to make not the slightest difference to him; and, for anght one could tell by the expression of his face, he might have been deaf, dumb, and blind for any effect that this questionable conduct seemed to produce. The more questionable from the fact that, at the outset of our voyage, Mr. Dulworthy, as he was called, evinced a strong desire to be civil to the unprotected girls in a most courteous and respectful terted girls in a most courteous and respectful manner. For the first few days his attentions were received gratefully enough; but, after that, the advances made by Messrs. Binks and Bagman, the two fast young men above referred to, seemed to possess greater attractions for the Misses Smith, and gradually poor Dolworthy was snubbed and put aside.

"Modest and retiring, he accepted the conditions apparently as a matter of course; but one could not help feeling that it was the old story of brilliant, dashing superficiality, with plenty of brass and self-conceit, outweighing, in the eyes of thoughtless women, sterling worth and true chivalry,

"However, Dolworthy accepted his position in the stoical manner I have described; and the only distraction in which he ever indulged was in occasionally joining the sailors in hoisting, lowering, or re-setting the sails, and other employ-ments incidental to nautical life, showing therein considerable knowledge, and a keen rest for viggrous exercise.

"Now the weather was so fine that the boats, instead of being always made stug on dock, were sometimes (contrary to the usual custom at sea). for the sake of giving more room, thrust outside the bulwarks, hanging, as we landsmen common ly see them, over the water from the davits. Into one of these, the smallest (I forget what it is called), our two young ladies were frequently in the habit of mounting, by the assistance of their caraliers. There they would sit for hours, sometimes far into the evening, reading, or chattering to their friends on the deck. Occasionally, soined their friends on the deck. Occasionally, sciend by a sudden impulse, the result of high spirits, they would begin to rock the bost backward and forward like a cradle, by swaying themselves from side to side, getting what they called 'a swing.' In these efforts they were, of course, aided and abetted by Mossrs. Binks and Bagman.

"On more than one occasion they had received an official caution against doing this; but little beed was taken of any thing which was calcubeed was taken of any thing which was calcu-lated to interfere with their amusements.

"On a certain evening, not quite as fine as usual, there being a strong breeze, the little group of four were assembled at their favorite haunt; the young ladies seated in the stern of the boat, young men leaning over the bulwark, talking

"The sun had just set, and the majority of the passengers were below at tea. Few people happened to be on deck at the time-none near this particular boat. We were running briskly before the wind, and peals of laughter rang again and again from the party. They evidently were becoming very excited, and the swinging diversion was going on vigorously.
"Suddenly, Binks, who was standing near the stern davis, said, 'Hallo! I have got a new idea.'

"'Have you, by Jore!' said Bagman; 'take care of it. What is it?'

" 'Why, look here!' the other went on; 'we can give our little pets a new sensation, and swing them up and down, instead of across and across

"With this he began to unfasten the rope which ran through the pulleys and blocks of the iron stanchion or davit, and by which the stem and of the boat could be lowered into the water.

"" But you must hold tight though, by Jove, old fellow, said his friend. "Oh, all right, don't you fear. Now then, ladies, sit fast; down you go, and up again, only a little way; lend us a hand, Bagman." And the two gradually allowed the stern of the boat to drop some two feet out of the borizontal. An accompanying feet out of the borisontal. An accompanying titter and suppressed scream followed the move-ment as the boat was immediately brought back to its proper position. Again it was repeated, and again, and again, amidst the general merriand again, and again, amoust the general merri-ment of the four; the girls enjoying the fun equally with the men.

"Emboldened by the success of their experi-ment, they lowered the boat each time more and more, until at length this very perilous proceed-ing became fraught with the most terrible dan-got. It was, indeed, a case of playing with adord took get. It was, indeed, a case of playing with edged tools.

"Here were two cockney landsmen meddling recklessly with gear which requires the most dextrous handling, the mismanagement of which, in cases of lowering boats at sea, has, perhaps, led to more loss of life than any other single incident at a time of shipwreck. On they went, however, with their game, the two men hashing the roos backward and forward with the hasling the rope backward and forward with the effect described.

"Should it slip from their hands, or the weight of the boat, with its burden, become too much for their strength, nothing in the world could prevent the unfortunate girls from being precipitated into the sea, the boat being left dangling perpendicularly by its hows to the second davit.

second davis.

""See saw, Margery Daw, here we go up, up, up, and here we go down, down, down,' and other similar intellectual quotations, formed an appropriate accompaniment to this diabelically idiotic proceeding. A man coming slowly along the deck in the twilight suddenly increased his the deck in the twilight suddenly increased his speed on seeing what was going on, and, with a deprecatory action, cried:

"" For God's sake, gentlemen, desist, desist!
Do you know what you are doing?"

"" Rather," replied Bagman; "we fister ourselves we generally do know what we are up to.
Don't we, Binks?"

"But Binks's reply was interrupted by the renewed vehemence and protestations of the new-comer, who appeared almost inclined forci-bly to prevent a continuance of the hazardous by to prevent a continuance or the lands, the game.

"If that rope slips from your hands, the young ladies will be drowned," he went on.

"Yes! but, you see, we don't mean to let it slip. Confound it, Sir, mind your own business, and don't interfere with us, was the reply.

"It is my business, and every body's business; and if you don't leave off this instant I'll fetch somebody who shall make you."

"Go to the deuce. I tell you we know what we are about," was the only response to this.

"The interposer turned on his bed, and was walking hastily away, when a fearful shriek rent

"The interposer turned on his beet, and was walking hastily away, when a fearful shrick rent the sir, followed, as he looked back, by a splash in the water; the boat was hanging by a single davit, and the two young men standing horror-stricken and helpless, gazing into space!

"It was now nearly dark, the ship running a good ten knots an hour; but without ment's hesitation the stranger tore off his coat, and in one second had leaped over the side of the vessel, some thirty feet into the sea.

"The piercing cry of 'Man overboard!' ran like wild-fire through the ship, which was speedily brought to and put about; but a long space of time and distance, of course, were lost before the way she had on her could be counteracted. and she could be brought back to any thing like proximity to the spot where the unfortunate girls and their would-be preserver were probably struggling for life.

"A boat was lowered with marvelous dexterity and all the promptitude and skill of the best seamanship; a blue-light was burned; the passengers and crew crowded every available space, and with eager straining eyes watched the boat's preceedings. By the aid of the last glimmer of day and the strong blue-light there was little difficulty in seeing what went on. To the unspeakable joy of all, it was soon evident that those in the bost were pulling lastily to-ward something which they had discovered sooner than we.

"After a while, however, we, too, who were on board ship, could see it, and it became perfectly clear to every body that the brave man was supporting one of the girls as he struck out manfully toward the boat. There was not sufficient sea running greatly to impede his efforts, but ever and anon he would look back over his shoulder, as if looking for something else. Following the direction toward which his head turned, we at last discerned, as did he, at about twelve yards' distance from him, another form, which, of course, we knew to be that of the unhappy sister.

the unhappy sister.

"Instantly relinquishing his intention of swimming to the boat, he deliberately put about and made straight away for the poor girl, who had risen probably for the last time. It was a moment of intense anxiety.

"Would be reach her ere she sank never to rise again?

"He struck out with superhuman efforts. One could almost picture the veins upon his forehead swelling with the tremendous energy he was displaying. He approached within three yards or so; another instant and he would be up with her—when, as it were after the manner of dissolving views, her form seemed fading

"But no! thank Heaven! Another via stroke with his right arm, the only one at liberty, and he held up the drooping head above water! Trammeled as he now was with the two sisters, of course all efforts at motion had to be given up. To keep affoat with his burdens was the utmost he could do.

"His arms were unavailable, and it appeared a great question whether, fine swimmer as be evidently was, he could sustain, by treading water, such an incumbrance, until the boat should reach him.

"It was a question of moments, and the anxiety which we had gone through in witnessing his efforts to reach the second girl was repeated in a tenfold degree as we watched and calculated the chances that the boat might have of coming up with him in time.

"It did, however, and, amidst a deafening cheer from the ship, we saw the three safely dragged over the side of the boat. On regaining dragged over the side of the boat. On regaining the ship it appeared very doubtful, after all, if the great bravery and endurance displayed by our hero might not prove unavailing.

"Perfectly senseless, both sisters were subjected to the usual restoratives, but, unhappily, with a favorable result only in the case of the elder. The younger sister never showed the alightest symptoms of returning animation. Two days after she was consigned to that grave from which so much human endurance and courage had failed to rescue her.
"The wretched fellows who were the cause of this metancholy culamity naturally retired into a very unenviable and miserable obscurity for the rest of the voyage. It had been of course sim-rest of the voyage. It had been of course simply an accident; the rope had suddenly slipped through their hands, and, from the great weight stached to it, once on the run, it was impossible again to check it. It is needless to say the remainder of our voyage was unhappy enough.

"All cliques and coteries were leveled indeed now; but on arriving at Cape Town we lost the hero and heroine of the sad tragedy. It was the destination of Miss Helen Smith; and though Mr. Cuthbert Dolworthy had taken a passage right through to Melbourne, he did not hesitate to stop half-way for the sake of watching the stop half-way for the sake of watching the thorough recovery and restoration to bodily health of the lady who owed her life to his noble

Running my eye down the rest of the column of the Portstower Observer, in which this re-markable story appeared, I found its fit and proper conclusion under another heading.

Ah me! I never thought that poor lad Melbourne would have much of a chance. man, stern of courage, determined in purpose, unswerving in thy physical efforts to do the no-blest deeds, how weak art thou still in thy heart! How easily turned from thy set intentions when the love of a woman is the sole commodity at

"Married, on the 4th of February, 18 St. Barnabas, Bancroft, Cape Town, by the Rev. Sigismund Perkins, Cuthbert Dolworthy, Esq., of Dolbarton, Durham, Great Britain, to Helen, only remaining daughter of the late Josiah Smith, Esq., of Herne Hill."

SERVED OUT.

Is the year 183- there lived at Bordeaux the last-or one of the last-of a long line of scoundrels who had made that part of France infa-mous (to our ideas) by a succession of cold-blooded murders, committed under the sanction of what people were pleased to call the Code of Honor. This was a certain Compe De V Honor. This was a certain Comee De V—, a man of great physical strength, imperturbable sing froid, and relentless cruelty. Not a bad sort of companion, as some said, when the fit—the dueling fit—was not on him; but this came on once in about every six months, and then be must have blood, it mattered little whose. He had killed and maimed boys of sixteen, fathers of families, military officers, journalists, advo-cates, peaceful country gentlemen. The cause of quarrel was of no importance; if one did not or quarret was of no importance; if one did not present itself readily, he made one; always con-triving that, according to the code aforesaid, he should be the insulted party, thus having the choice of weapons; and he was deadly with the small-sword. It is difficult for us to realize a state of society in which such a wild beast could be permitted to go at large; but we know it to be historically true that such creatures were endured in France; just as we are assured that re were at one time wolves in Yorkshire; only the less noisome vermin had a harder time of it as civilization progressed than was dealt out to the human brute.

The latest exploit of the Comte De Vprevious to the story I am about to tell was to goad a poor young student into a challe and when it was represented to him that the boy had never held a sword in his life, to that it would be fairer to use pistols, he replied, that "fools sometimes made mistakes with pistols," and the next morning ran him through the lungs. The evil fit was on him; but the blood thus shed quieted him for another half year, and rather more, for public opinion was unfavorable, and the air of Bordeaux became too warm for

But the scandal blow over after a time, and he came back to his old haunts, one of which was a cafe by the river-side, where many used to spend their Sunday. Into the little garden of this establishment our wolf swaggered one fine summer afternoon, with the heavy dark look and nervous twitching of the hands which those who were acquainted with him knew well meant mischief. The evil fit was on him; consequent-by he found himself the centre of a circle which expanded as he went on. This did not displease him. He liked to be feared. He knew he could make a quarrel when he chose, so he looked mass a quarrel when he chose, so he looked around for a victim.

At a table almost in the middle of the garden sat a man of about thirty years of age, of middle height, and an expression of countenance which at first struck one as mild and good-humored. He was engaged reading a journal which seemed to interest him, and enting strawberries, an oc-cupation which does not call forth any latent strength of character. Above all, he was pro-foundly unconscious of the presence of M. le Comte De V-, and continued enting his strawberries and reading his paper as though no wolf were in that pleasant fold.

As the Count approached this table it became sufficiently well known whom he was about to honor with his insolence; and the circle narrowed again to see the play. It is not bad sport, with some of us, to see a fellow-creature baited especially when we are out of danger ourselves.

The strawberry enter's costume was not such as was ordinarily worn in France at that time, and he had a curious hat, which—the weather being warm—he had placed on the table by his side. "He is a foreigner," whispered some in the dress-circle. "Perhaps he does not know Monsieur le Comte."

Monsieur le Comte seated himself at the ta-he opposite the unconscious stranger, and called loadly, "Garçon!"

"Garçon," he said, when that functionary ap-geared, "take me away that nasty thing!" point-ing to the hat aforesaid.

Now the stranger's elbow, as he read his jour-nal, was on the brim of the "nasty thing," which was a very good hat, but of British form and make. The garçon was embarrassed.

"Do you hear me?" thundered the Count, "Take me that thing away! No one has a right to olare his hat on the table."

"Take me that thing away! No one has a right to place his hat on the table."
"I beg your pardon," said the strawberryeaser, politely, placing the offending article on his head, and drawing his chair a little aside; "I will make room for Monsieur."

The garcon was about to retire well satisfied, when the bully called after him:

"Have I not commanded you to take that thing which annoys me away?

"But, Monsieur le Comte, the gentleman has covered himself." What does that matter to me?"

"But, Monsieur le Comte, it is impossible."

"What is impossible?"
"That I should take the gentleman's hat,"

"By no means," observed the stranger, un-wering again. "Be so good as to carry my covering again. "Be so good as to carry my hat to the ledy at the counter; and ask her, on my behalf, to do me the favor to accept charge my behalf, to do me the layor to accept charge of it for the present."

"You speak French passably well for a for-eigner," said the bully, stretching his arms over the table and looking his neighbor full in the face—a titter of contempt going round the circle.

"I am not a foreigner, Monsieur."

"I am sorry for that."

"So am I."

" May one, without indiscretion, inquire why?" "Certainly. Because, if I were a foreigner, I should be spared the pain of seeing a compatriot behave himself very rudely."

"Meaning me?"

"Meaning me?"

"Meaning, precisely, you."

"Do you know who I am?" asked the Count, half turning his back upon him, and facing the lockers-on, as much as to say, "Now observe how I will crush this poor creature."

"Monsieur," replied the strawberry-eater, with perfect politeness in his tone, "I have the honor not to know you."

not to know you."
"Death of my life! I am the Comte De

The strawberry-eater looked up, and the easy good-natured face was gone. In its place was one with two gray eyes which flashed like fire, and a mouth that set itself very firmly.

"The Comte De V——," he repeated, in a low voice.

low voice.

Yes, Monsieur. And what have you to say against him?"

"17 Oh, nothing."
"That may be well for you."

"That may be wen for you.

"But there are those who say he is a coward."

"That is enough," said the bully, starting to his feet. "Monsieur will find me in two hours at this address," flinging him a card.

"I shall not trouble myself to seek Monsieur le Comte," replied the strawberry-eater, calmly tearing the card in two.

"Then I shall say of Monsieur what he, permitting himself to lie, said just now of me."

44 And that is?" "That he is a coward."

"You may say what you please, Monsieur le omte. Those who know me would not believe you, and those who do not-my faith! what care what they think?"

"And thou-thou art a Frenchman!" No one but a Frenchman could have thrown so much disdain as he did into the "th The strawberry-eater made no reply, but turned his head and called "Garçon!" The poor trembling creature came up again, wondering what new dilemma was prepared for him, and stood quaking some ten yards off. "Garçon, "said the stranger, "is there a room vacant in the hotel?" "Without doubt, Monsieur."

"A large one?"

"A large one?"
"But certainly. They are all large—own apartments."
"Then engage the largest for me for to-day, and another—no matter what—for Monsieur le 44 Monsleur, I give my own orders when neces-

"I thought to spare you thestrouble. Go, if you please" (this to the waiter), "and prepare my rooms."

Then the strayberry-eater returned to Listrawberries. The bully gnawed his lip. could not make head or tail of this phlegmatic opponent. The circle grew a little wider, for a horrid idea got abroad that the Count had not found one who was likely to suit him, and that he would have to seek elsewhere what he wanted.

The murmur that went round roused the bully.
"Monsieur," he hissed, "has presumed to make use of a word which among men of hon-

"I beg your pardon?"
"Which among men of honor—"
"But what can Mossieur le Comte possibly know what is felt among men of honor?" asked the other, with a shrug of incredulity.

"Will you fight yourself with me, or will you not?" roared the Count, goaded to fury.
"If Monsieur le Comte will give himself the trouble to accompany me to the apartment which, no doubt, is now prepared for me," replied the stranger, rising, "I will satisfy him."

"Good," said the other, kicking down his chair; "I am with you. I waive the usual preliminaries. I only beg to observe that I am with-out arms; but if you—"

"Oh! don't trouble yourself on that score," said the stranger, with a grim smile. "If you are not afraid, follow me."

This he said in a voice sufficiently load for the nearest to hear, and the circle parted right and left, like startled sheep, as the two walked toward the house,

Was there no one to call "police?" no one to by and prevent what to all seemed imminent? ul! The dreaded duelis had his evil fit on, and every one breathed freely now that he knew the victim was selected. Moreover, no one supposed it would end there. The Count and his friend (?) were ushered into the apartment prepared for the latter, who, as soon as the garron had left, took off his coat and waistcoat, and proceeded to move the furniture so as to leave the room free for what was to follow-the Count standing with folded arms, glar-ing at him, the while. The decks being cleared for action, the stranger locked the door, placed the key on the mantle-piece behind him, and said:

"I think you might have helped a little; but never mind. Will you give me your attention for five minutes?" Perfectly.

"Thank you. I am, as I have told you, a Frenchman, but I was educated in England at one of her famous public schools. Had I been sent to one of our own Lycées I should, per-haps, have gained more book-knowledge; but as it is, I have learned some things which we do not teach, and one of them is, not to take a mean advantage of any man, but to keep my own head with my own hands. Do you under-stand me, Monsieur le Comte ?'
"I can not flatter myself that I do,"

"Ha! Then I must be more explicit. I learned, then, that one who takes advantage of brute strength against the weak, or w practiced in any art, compels one unpracticed in it to contend with him, is a coward and a knave. Do youfollow me now, Monsienr le Comte?"

I came here, Monsieur-" "Never mind what you came for; be content with what you will get. For example—to follow what I was observing—if a man skilled with the small-sword, for the mere vicious love of quarreling, goads to madness a boy who has never fenced in his life, and kills him, that man is a murderer; and more-a cowardly murderer, and a knavish "I think I eatch your meaning; but if you have pistols here—" foamed the bully.

"I do not come to eat strawberries with pistols in my pocket," replied the other, in the same calm tone he had used throughout. "Allow me to continue. At that school of which I have spoken, and in the society of men who have grown out of it, and others where the same habit of thought prevails, it would be considered that a man who had been guilty of such cowardice and knavery as I have mentioned would be justly punished if, some day, he should be paid in his own coin by meeting some one who would take him at the same disadvantage as he placed that poor boy at."

"Our seconds shall fix your own weapons, Monsieur," said the Count; "let this farce end."
"Presently. Those gentlemen whose opinions I now venture to express, not having that craze for blood which distinguishes some—who have not had a similar enlightened education-would probably think that such a coward and knave as we have been considering would best meet his deserts by receiving a humiliating eastigation be-fitting his knavery and his cowardice."

"Ah! I see; I have a lawyer to deal with," sneered the Count.

"Yes. I have studied a little law, but I regret to say I am about to break one of its pro-

"You will fight me, then?"

"Yes. At the school we had been speaking of I learned, among other things, the use of my hands; and, if I mistake not, I am about to give you as sound a thrashing as any bully ever got. "You would take advantage of your skill in the box?" said the Count, getting a little pale.

"Exactly. Just as you took advantage of your skill in the small-sword with poor young "But it is degrading, brutal!"

"My dear Monsiour, just consider. You are four inches taller, and some thirty to forty kilogrammes heavier than I am. I have seldom seen so fine an outside. If you were to hit me a good swinging blow it would go hard with me. In the same way, if poor young B—— had got over your guard it would have gone hard with you. But, then, I shall only black both your eyes, and perhaps deprive you of a tooth or unhappily in front, whereas you killed him."

"I will not nevert this barburous encounter. "You must; I have done talking. Would you like a little brandy before we begin? No? Place yourself on guard, then, if you please. When I have done with you, and you are fis to appear, then you shall have your revenge—even with the small-sword, if you please. At present, bully—coward—knave, take that, and that, and that!"

And the wiry little Anglo-Frank was as good as his word. In less time than it takes to write it the great braggart was rendered unpresentable for many a long day. That number one caused him to see fifty suns beaming in the firmament with his right eye; that number two produced a similar phenomenon with his left; that number three obliged him to swallow a front tooth, and to observe the coiling more attentively than he had hitherto done. And when one or two other thats had completely cowed him, and he threw open the window and called for help, the strawrry-eater took him by the neck and-well, another and lower part, and flung him out of it on to the flower-bed below.

The strawberry eater remained a mouth at Bordesux to fulfill his promise of giving the Count his revenge. But then again the bully met with more than his match. The strawberryeater had had Angelo for a master as well as Owen Swift, and after a few passes the Count, who was too eager to kill his man, felt an unpleasant sensation in his right shoulder. seconds interposed, and there was an end of the affair. It was his last duel. Some one pro-duced a sketch of him as he appeared being thrown out of the hotel window, and ridicule-so awful to a Frenchman-rid the country of him. The strawberry-eater was alive when the Battle of the Alma was fought, and is the only man to whom the above facts are known who never talks about them.

ANDREW REED, THE YOUNG WATCH-MAKER.

"IT is not surprising that the sons of Dr. As-DREW REED should wish to publish the history of his life of goodness and active benevolence though, in fact, the permanent records of his character and works exist in the many institutions which owe their existence to his activity and derotion." These are the words of the Queen of England in reference to a man who was the honored instrument of doing such a vast amount of good that his name undoubtedly ranks among the first philanthropists of the age.

Fond of books from infancy, his good mother not only trained and taught her little son, but entered with all sympathy into his pursuits—be-came his companion and friend. Nor was his pious father less tender and constant in cultivating the confidence of his son. The boy was sent to a school in Islington, and made great progress in his studies. The parents decided that he should learn his father's trade, but the boy petitioned to be allowed to study Hebrew and Greek. The careful mother, fearing that such studies might interfere with his progress in business, had him apprenticed to a master. But the tempta-tion of books was a very harmless one compared with the temptations of another kind that awaited Andrew in his new situation. His master's son was a wild youth, and the young apprentice entered on his diary the following: "By the wicked behavior of my master's son I was made still worse. I went twice or thrice to the ac-cursed play-houses." On this account he got his indentures canceled and returned to the parental roof. Working the usual hours at watch-making, in his leisure he kept his mother's books, instructed his sister, and taught a little orphan girl, their servant, to read and write—thus early beginning his orphan work.

Books, books, evermore books, were the choice friends of his leisure hours; and though he worked well at his trade, his good mother in her diary might well write down, "These are things diary might well write down, "These are things which, if the lad be for business, show too much taste for study." And she was so far right, that God was leading him through secular to sacred pursuits. And we Reed's Hebrew and Greek studies led him to theology, and his joy knew no bounds when it was decided in the fumily counsels that he should go to college. dismantled his little work-shop, sold his tools, and laid out the money in books.

It is almost needless to say that he was a successful student, and that on his leaving college he had many invitations to settle; but he ultistely became the minister of the New Road, East London, where he remained the useful and honored pastor for no less a period than fifty years. In 1816 he married Елггалити Нолмия, who proved an efficient belpmeet in the work of ministry and in his plans of benevolence. His extraordinary career as a philanthropist is wor-thy of record. He began his work among the sea-faring population of London. He befriend-ed the parents, established schools for the chil-dren, and founded the first penny bank for sav-He founded the London Orphan Asylum, ings. the patronage of which became so extensive that in 1825 a large building was erected at Clapton at a cost of £25,000. Afterward he established at Wanstead an Infant Orphan Asylum, the erec-tion of the building costing £40,000. He founded a third Orphan Asylum at Reedham, and also the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots.

Besides these stupendous works of faith and labors of love, Dr. REED founded a Home for Incurables; and, not forgetting the interests of education, while employed in helping the helpless, he was the friend of the Hackney Grammar School, and always the active promoter of Sabbath and day schools for the children of the industrial classes most. Declining all offers of change, he staid, as we have recorded, with his beloved people as their pastor fifty years. On November 27, 1861, the anniversary of his birth, and of his ordina-tion as their minister, he resigned his charge.

Those who knew Dr. REED best loved him

Amidst all his literary and other labors he did not think of writing his life. One of his sons, perceiving that his venerable father was fast failing, asked him if he had ever arranged any memoir. Dr. REED replied by writing the following note: "To MY SAUCY BOY WHO SAID HE WOULD WRITE MY LIFE, AND ASKED FOR MATERIALS.

A. R. I WAS BORN TESTERDAT : I SHALL DIE TO-MORROW; AND I MUST NOT SPEND TO-DAY IN TELLING WHAT I HAVE DONE, BUT IN DOING WHAT I MAY FOR HIM

Who has done all for me.
I sprang from the people: I have lived FOR THE PROPLE— THE MOST FOR THE MOST UNRAPPT;

AND THE PEOPLE, WHEN THEY KNOW IT, WILL NOT ALLOW ME TO DIE OUT OF LOVING REMEMBRANCE,

What can be added to such a summary? He died, as he had lived, happy in his Mas-ter's service, and conscious to the last of His love, February 25, 1862, aged 74. He had given out of his own limited means £4540 in promoting his various plans of benevolence; and he was the means of raising funds to the amount of £1,043,566 13s, 1d. for the helpless and afflicted!

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

Moon. Virinaer has written to the papers to say that his celebrated Purylan de Rome has not a particle of Hymeinche in the composition.

America appears to think the Cuben harvest is at last it for carrying. If she fall to accomplish the work it will not be for the want of Station!

BAD FOR THE RATE-The coming of the Chinese.

A good Title for a Book-"Will It Take?"

THE PIRST SUMPOY OF CANNIHALIEM-Job, when he

A PAYORITE GAME IN THE ABOTTO REGIONS..." Old sledge" on the loc.

Should old acquaintance be forgotf-Not if they

How Bornon,—At the American celebration of In-dependence-day at Vienna, this year, a speaker, grow-ing eloquest on the future of the republic, repeated a description of its boundaries given by an enthusiastic Yankes, who said, "It was bounded on the east by the Atlantic, on the north by the Aurora Boresiis, on the west by the setting sun, and on the south by the Day of Judgment."

HINTS PROM A POSTMASTER.

When you call at the office for your mall, and the postmaster hands it out, ask him if that is all.

If you ask for mail and he tells you there is none, tell him there ought to be.

Bourt bring the mail to the office until the mail closes, then curse the postmaster for not unlocking the mail-bug and putning your letter in.

When you want a straing on your letter, tell the postmaster to pot it on.

Be sure to ask the postmaster to credit you with stamps, and if he has any accommodation about him at all, he will do it.

If you have a box, stand and drum on it until the postmaster hands you your mail; it makes him feel good, especially if he is waiting on some one else.

"if you had avoided rum," said a rum-seller to his naturest, "you could now ride in your carriage," 'And if you had never sold rum," said the bacchanal, 'you would have been my driver."

One of our young readers in the West sends us the following better and poster:

Dran Exerce, Enclosed find a ryme on the picture in this weeks weekly suffiled A Little Fearsmaker. If you think it is worth anything you will greatly oblige by publishing. I am not quite four-teen yet and find great difficulty in keeping out of Egyms. Whenever I feel so inclined I get a life of Chatterion and cool down my enthusiasm, but I have read so often that there were pieces of arsenic in his threat when they found him, that I am afraid I am getting calous and soon even that dodge may full. I have been at work since I was ten years old and therefore I have not much efficacion. I followed the career of Squipteyed Bob and various other personages whose affections are set forth in dime novels, and after stopping that in diagnet I plunged into science on my own hook. Dipping one day into one thing and the next day into another, and here I am knowing scarcely anything and so I grees I will stop Your traly

THE LITTLE PEACEMAKER

THE LITTLE PEACEMAKER

Mama leaning 'gainst the mantle With her face all in a pout Papa hid behind the paper Shows there's been a falling out 9

Lithy sitting on the carpet
Flazen hair and sky blue eyes
Looks from one unto the other
With a grave surprise

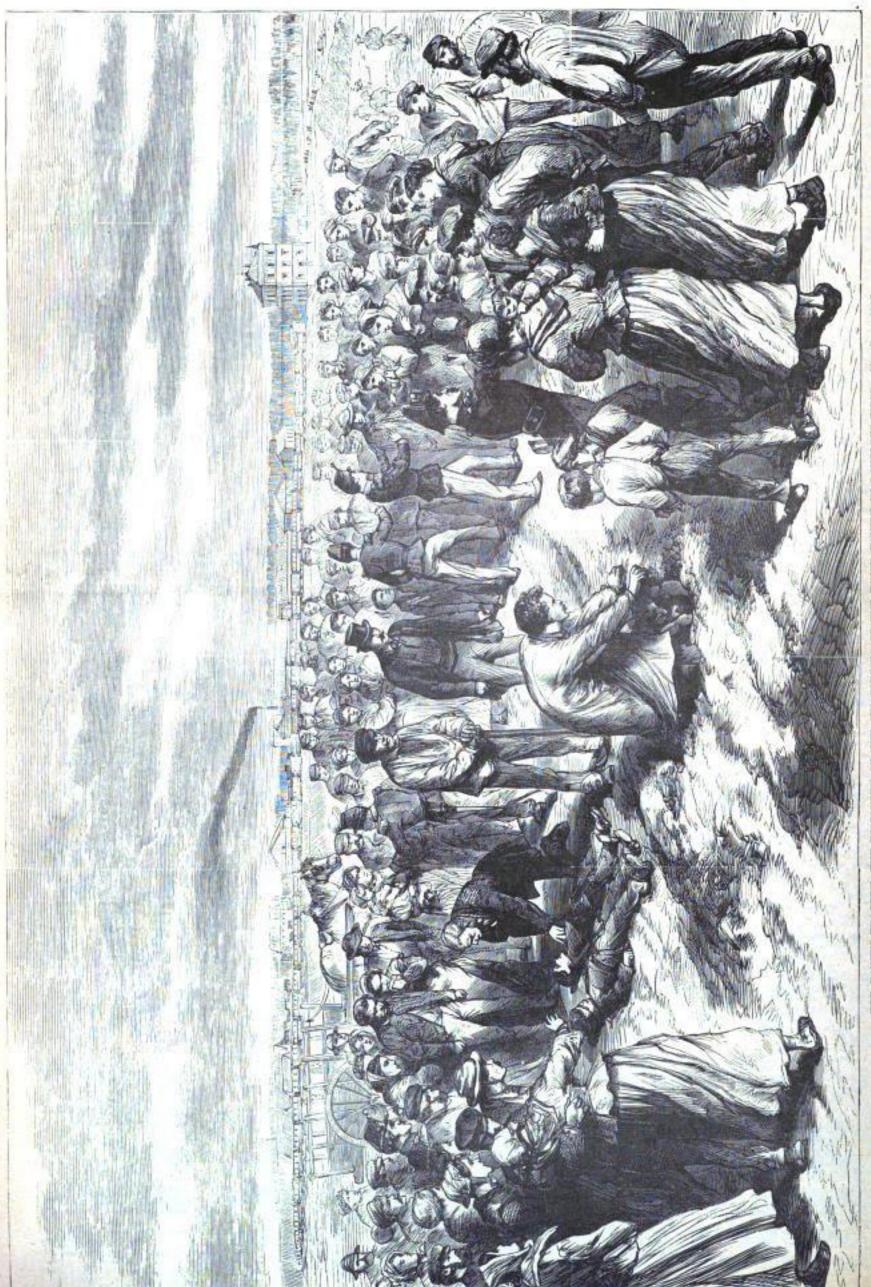

Till at last she deops her Dolly Rises softly from the floor Passes Pa who tries in vain O'er the daily news to pore

4 Catches mama's listless fingers '
Tugs away with all her might
And her baby voice of pleading
Puts all angry thoughts to flight

5 Dispersed angry feelings widely As the wind would scatter chaff Mother stooped and kissed her darling Breaking in a merry laugh

6 Papa dropped his paper joyous Caught sweet Lilly to his breast— Now Pil stop, for more is useless Let the resider guess the rest

"I say, Sam Johnsing," said Pete Gumbo, " wat be dem relations with Gray Briting vite fells falk so much "bout?" "Wall, I doesn't "partly know, Peta," said Sam; "all my relations wot Pknows on is in else Wirginny."

THE PANTIN TRAGEDY-THE DISCOVERY OF THE SIX CORPSES OF THE KINCK FAMILY IN LANGLOI'S FIELD.-[Sen Page 697.]

THE PANTIN TRAGEDY.

No murder for many years has created an excitement so universal as the recent horrid butchery, in France, of Madame Kusek and her six children (besides an infast unborn), to whom must probably be added another victim—namely, Madame Kusek's husband. The bodies of the mother and of five of the children—four sons and one daughter—were, on the 21st of September, accidentally discovered by a peasant in a field in the neighborhood of Pontin, a little village situated a short distance northward from Paris.

On the 22d the police

On the 22d the police had already ascertained that the deceased were the wife and children of Jean Kinck, an engine-maker of Boobaix (a manufacturing town of the north of France), who had just left their mative town in order to join their lushend and father in Paris. As the latter and his eblest son, Gustave Kinck, had both disoppeared, it was at first supposed that they were the murderers. Certain discussions, to which money matters had given rise, in the family confirmed this suspicion; and, asserver, a mysterious young man, who had been stopping for the last ten days as a small inn near the milway station of Pantin, lad given his same as all as a kings.

near the randary station of Pantin, lead given his name as JEAN KINGE.

JEAN KINGE, the facther, was possessed of a property of 80,000 france, equal to $16,000 in gold. He had gone to Gasbuiller, in Alsaes, to establish a branch of his business. He was soon followed by his son Gustavas, a boy of about sixteen years of age, and it was settled that the entire family should shortly remove its residence to Gasbuiller.

Gnebuiller.

In a few days Madame Kiner sent to ber bashand $200 francs by a registered letter. Kiner kild not bimself appear to receive this money, but the letter was called for by a young man representing himself as Jaan Kiner, but whose conduct excited suspicion, in consequence of which the letter was not given up to him. Meanwhile Madame Kiner regularly received letters from her husband, dated in Paris, These letters were not in his hand—but that was explained by an accident. In obedience, as she supposed, to her husband's request, she departed from Roulaix for Pautin, September 19.

THE VICTIMS OF THE PANTIN TRAGEDY.

tember 19.

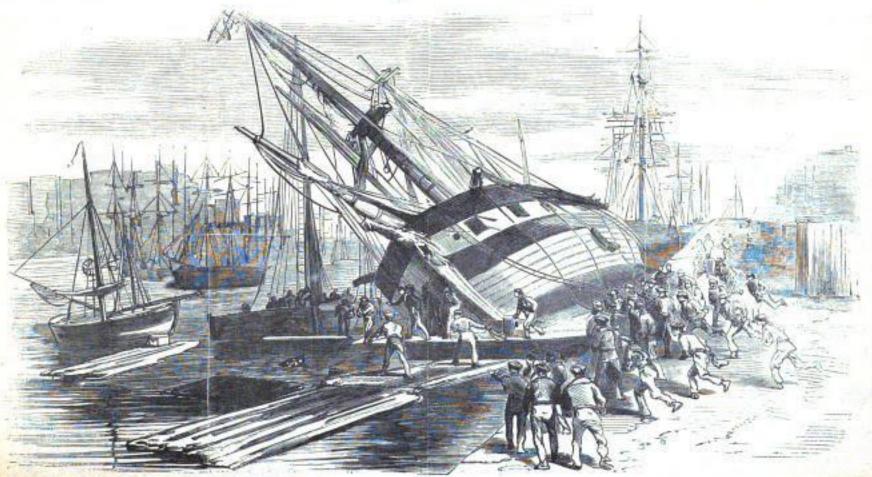

She was ignorant of the fate which awaited her. For, instead of being about to join her husband, she was rushing into the arms of Jean Barrista Theoryways, his probable marderie—the young man who had attempted to obtain the registered letter at Garbwiller! She, with her children, was beguiled to the scene of the terrible tragedy about to be enacted. It was at night, and out in the solitary field the mother and the children were beutally burchesed, being literally burchesed, being literally burchesed, being dearth over their hadles.

The basies first discovers.

The basics first discormed dail not include those of the father and son. This hed to the supposition that they were the morderers.
There had been some alterration between Krack and his wife about the question of altering their residence, and this was brought forward as contenantory of the ins-hand's guilt. A story was founds out of the merest faution:
July Krack was jealous, and had numbered his urife on account of some illicit amourt.

While those conjectures user rife. Thoremann, the real assisting, was discovered. It was at Hayre. Thoremann was taking his beer at a said of a drinking school. No. 57 Rug Royale, when a marine producine named Farmann, which was going his rounds at 10 of check r. st. to drive trady sailors on heard their thairs, and, from the descriptions he had received of the supposed Pandia murderer, suspected him, and took him to the police station. The two went out together and walked along the Rug Royale and the Quai aux Casernes. Presently Farmanner what was his mame.

"Wandergenburque," at least that is the nearest

THE PANTIN TRAGEDY-STRUGGLE BETWEEN THE ASSASSIN TROPPMANN AND THE CALKER IN THE HAVRE BASIN.

spelling that can be made out. FERRAND of served that it was a queer name, and asked him if it was really true that he had no papers. "Yes," he said, "I have some letters in German," showing them. FERRAND was by no means satisfied with the German letters, and said he should have to take him before the cureur Imperial, at the mention of which func-tionary TEOPTHASS turned deadly pale. Contionary Theoremann turned deadly pale. Continuing his insidious but conversational examination, Francasto said: "You say you come for work—what is your trade?" "A mechanic." "Where do you live?" "A! Roubaix." "And where are you last from?" "Paris." The three words, mechanic, Roubaix, Faris, were a revelation to Francann. Instead of keeping his own counsel till be had his man in safe custody, he could not resist the temptation of giving utter. could not resist the temptation of giving utterance to his belief in his own penetration, and he said, "Yes, and it's my belief that you left Paris by way of Pantin." Thereupon Taorranan, in despair—they were on the Pont de Lombardie at the time—took advantage of a can passing along the carriage-road to rush to the left foot-way, while France was on the right, and jumped over the railing of the bridge into the dock basin. "Who will save that man for me?" cried out France, in a stentorian voice. In an instant one of the dock porters, a man named HAUGEL, who had already saved four lives, plunged into the water, and after a violent struggle—for TROPPHANN did his utmost to drown himself and disable HATOKI.—the murderer was brought near enough to a boat to be pulled on board by FERRAND slive.

TROPPMANN being taken to Paris and to the Morgue, was shown the hodies of Madame Kreek and her children, laid out on the marble slabs, and he was asked if he recognized them. "The prisoner," says the account in the Gracks, "walked a few steps along the room, and, with a sews food on one present exhibited with with a save froid no one present exhibited, said without moving a muscle of his face or faltering in his voice, as he pointed with his finger to each of the dead bodies, 'That is Madame Kinck; that is Kelle; that is Herny; that is Alphen; that is Achies; that is little Many.' Thorr-MANN finally admitted that he was an accomonly an instrument in the hands of the Ktreeks, father and son. On the subsequent Sunday about 30,000 persons were streacted by curiosity to the field of blood at l'antin, and in the course of the day the remains of GENTAVE KINCK were discovered. There was every indiration that he had been murdered at about the same time as the others. This discovery disproved the truth of Thorrmann's story. It is supposed that Jean Kinch, the father, had also been murdered by Thorrmann, being the first

This tragedy has occasioned the greatest ex-citement. Figure claims to have had an in-creased circulation of 30,000, on account of its detailed publication of all the incidents of the

VERONICA.

By the Author of " Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En gibe Books .- Book HE.

CHAPTER L.

AUNT AND RIECK

In the first shock of amazement at the calam ity which had overtaken the family at the vicarage, none of those who participated in it had had room in their minds for the entertainment of any minor sensation of surprise.

But it was not very long—not many days, that is to say—before Lady Tullis, or, as her proper title now ran, Lady Tullis Gale, began to wonder how Mr. Levincourt had discovered her shereabouts, and to question Maud on the sub-

The latter had been very ill during the first days of her stay in London. Grief and anxiety alone would not have prostrated the youthfu vigor of her body. But so many harrowing emo-tions preceding a long night-journey, and so overwhelming a shock awaiting at the close of the journey a frame in great need of food and ress, had stricken down the young girl, and hid her on a bed of sickness.

Her aunt forgot her own delicacy of bealth and inert habits to tend Maud. She would scarcely allow a servant to come near the suffering girl, but waited on her day and night with untiring

In spite of the terrible circumstances which had brought Mand to London, in spite of the dreadful discovery that the man who had been guilty of the abduction of Veronica Levincourt was the husband who had wronged, outraged, and finally abandoned herself, it would not be too much to say that Hikka Talkis enjoyed the first moments of happiness she had known during many weary years by the bedside of her sis-ter's child.

It was sweet to feel that there was some one bound by the ties of blood to feel kindly toward her. It was still sweeter to find a being whoat least for a time-depended upon her for love, and care, and tendance.

The poor lonely wife, in the first days of the discovery that her husband had ceased to feel for her even such love as can be inspired by a fair face, had longed with all her heart for a

The conduct of Sir John Tallis, which had gone on deepening through every shade, from gray indifference down to absolutely black brutality, had effectually quenched whatever germ of regard for him poor Hilda might once have cherished. But for some time she clung to the idea that he would be kinder to her if there were any prospect of her bringing him an heir. She was the kind of woman who would probably have loved her children better than her husband, even had that husband been good and affectionate.

She would have enjoyed superintending the government of a nursery, and have craved for no other companionship than that of her prattling babies.

The dependency of sickness made Maud appear almost like a child in her aunt's eyes. Lady Tallis nursed her with more than needful devotion. She was jenlous of any person save herself approaching her niece to render any service. The sound of Maud's voice calling on her for the least tendance was music in her ears. She would even have liked the sick girl to be more exacting in her demands. And had Maud been the most fretful and imperious of invalids, instead of being, as she was, thoroughly patient and self-con-trolled, Lady Tallis would have joyfully indulged her in every whim.

In a few days, however, the illness passed away, and Maud insisted on rising, although Lady Tallis declared that she ought not to leave bed for at least another week to coo

The vicar remained in London until Mand's the vicar remained in London until Stands health was re-established. He lingered about the house in Gower Street fitfully, and would seldom consent to enter Lady Talkis's spart-ments; but he informed himself daily of his ward's condition.

At length, after rather more than a fortnight's sejourn in London, he returned to Shipley.

"It is a horrible trial to go back," said he, in his farewell interview with Maud.

"Must you go, Uncle Charles?" she asked.

her eyes brimming with tears, which she kept from falling by a strong effort of will. "Must I? Yes: I can not give up the vicar-age. I can not exist without it. I can not afford to pay another man to do my duty there, and retain enough to live upon. I might put off the evil day a while longer. But to what purpose? The sight of the place—the very name of the place—is losthsome to me. But what can I do?

"I wish I could help you!"

"You can not help me, Maudie. No one can help me."

Then Maud asked a timid faultering question, holding his hand and turning away her head as she spoke. Had he heard any tidings of—of— the fugitives?

She could not see his face, but his voice was See could not see his face, but his voice was very storn and deep as he answered her. They had gone abroad together, he had learned. Gone to Italy. It mattered nothing to what, place. She was dead to him henceforward. Mand most mention her name no more. He had answered her question; but she must promise never to speak to him of his lost daughter more.

"I can not promise it, dear Uncle Charles."

"I can not promise it, dear Uncle Charles," said Mand, no longer able to restrain her tears. "Mand! Do not you separate yourself from me too!

"No, no! I shall always love you, and be grateful to you. But I—I can not make that promise. Some day you might be glad yourself that I did not make it."

Mr. Levincourt rose. "Good-by, Mand," he said, abruptly. "The time is drawing near for my departure. I have but a couple of hours before leaving London."

He went out and closed the door. She heard his footsteps descending the stairs slowly and heavily. He paused, came back, and re-entering the room where Maud was silently weeping, took her in his arms and kissed her forehead. She clong to him, sobbing. "Oh, thank you," she murmured — "thank you for coming back. You are not angry with me, dear Uncle Charles?"

"No, no; not angry—never angry with thee, my sweet childie. God bless thee, Mand! God forever bless thee!"

"You will write to me, Uncle Charles, will you not?"

you not?

"I—perhaps—well, well, I will write to you."

"And I may come and stay with you again some day? If even it is but for a time, I may come? You will be so lonely!" she added, with a passionate burst of tears.

"Heaven knows, my child! It may be that some day— Good-by, Maud. God Almighty bless and guard you forever!"

Theu he went away. Lady Tallis's intentions in her behavior to her niece were all kindness, but it often happened that she inflicted pain from want of judgment. But on the evening of the day on which the above interview took place Lady Tellis's garrulity was grateful to Mand's feelings. So long as her aunt would talk on indifferent subjects, and let her listen in silence, or at most with the occasional contribution of a monosyllable, the young girl was able to retain a calm ness and quietude that were seething to mind and body.

Lady Tallis's conversation rambled on discursively from topic to topic. She talked of childhood, and of persons who died before Mand was born, as though the latter must naturally be thoroughly sequainted with what she knew so well.

All at once she laid down her work, and exclaimed: "Oh, by-the-by, now! There's some-thing I particularly wanted to say to ye, and I have never said it yet!"

Mand was beginning to understand that her aunt's emphasis was by no means always proportioned to the importance of that which she had to say; at least as far as she (Mand) could judge of the relative amount of importance that could fairly be attributed to Lady Tallis's speech-She was, therefore, less startled than she might have been a fortnight earlier by her aunt's impressive announcement.

"What is it that you wanted to say, Aunt Hilda ?

"Why, my goodness, my darling child, I won-der how in the world I never asked the question before! It has been in my mind headreds of Mand waited patiently, with an attentive face.

"How in the world did you and Mr. Levincourt find out that I was living here? D'ye know, my dear pet, I am perfectly astonished to remember that I was not more astonished at the time! Can ye understand that state of mind? It was all such a whirl, such a sudden, mex-pected kind of thing altogether, that I suppose a little wonder more or less didn't make much dif-

"Our coming straight to the place where you lived was a mere chance, Aunt Hilda. We came here with merely a hope, and not a very strong one, that we might get your address from Mrs. Lockwood. And even then we should not have found you, had not Uncle Charles's card been carried up to Mrs. Lockwood with an inquiry for Lady Tallis written on it. Otherwise, as you are now Lady Galo, we should have missed you, though you were so close to us. But Mrs. Lockwood knew at once that you were the person we were asking for."

"And did ye know Mrs. Lockwood? Why now, just imagine her never mentioning in the Our coming straight to the place where you now, just imagine her never mentioning in the most distant manner that she had the smallest acquaintance with any of the family! I declare it's most extraordinary! And the times I have acquaintance with any of the family! I declare it's most extraordinary! And the times I have spoken to her of my niece! For, my darling, I needn't say that if we have been separated all these years, it has not been from any indiffer-ence on my part!"

Mand quietly explained that she had never seen or known Mrs. Lockwood, but that she had met her son at a country house; and that he had spoken of Lady Tallis, and of the manner in which he and his mother had made her ladyship's acquaintance.

"It's all perfectly true, my dear, every syllable of it!" said Lady Tallis, with as much solemnity of corroboration as though Maud had expressed the gravest doubts of Mr. Hugh Lockwood's verscity.

"Yes, aunt; I did not feel any doubt of

"Yes, aunt; I did not feel any doubt of that," she answered.
"No, ye need not, child. An exceeding amiable and gentleman-like young man he is. And his mother is a delightful person. I called on her according to promise, when I came to London. I was staying in a boarding-house; and that's what I would sener advise any one I cared for to do the longest day they had to live! Oh, upon my honor and word, the dreariness and misery of the boarding-houses I have been in exceed description. I thought I would find something like society, but, oh dear me! the people you have to put up with are something something like society, but, oh dear me! the people you have to put up with are something unspeakable! However, that wasn't what I was going to tell ye. Well, I asked Mrs. Lockwood did she happen to know of any respectable lodging in her neighborhood. For I was resolved to get quit of boarding-houses altogether. And I wished to be within hail of some human being that would say a kind word to me once a month or so; for, indeed, child, I was very lonely."

"Poor Aunt Hilds!" whispered Maud, stroking Lady Tallis's thin hand.

ing Lady Tallis's thin hand.

"Oh, indeed ye may say 'rich Aunt Hilds,' now I have you, Mandie. Here, let me put this foot-stool under your feet. Nonsense, child, about 'troubling myself.' You're not half as strong yet as you fancy yourself. There! Well, so just fancy my delight when she said that she would be very glad to let the first-floor of her own bouse to a person that she knew! My dear, I jumped at it. And here I am, and extremely comfortable it is. And cheap. For you know, my dear child, that he keeps me shamefully short of money. Sometimes I have much ado to get any at all. Well, there, then, we won't say any more on that score just now. But ye'll like Mrs. Lockwood—ch indeed ye will!"

"Is she—I mean is her son at all like her?"

"Not the very least bit in the world," rejoined Lady Tallis, with a sort of almost triumphant emphasis. "Not one atom. I never, in the emphasis. "Not one atom. I never, in see whole course of my days, saw a mother and son more extirely unlike each other."

" Entirely unlike each other. Why, now, the young man—Hugh—is a strapping handsome young fallow as you'd be likely to meet in a long summer's day. Isn't he?"

"Oh yes. "Oh yes! Upon my bonor, you don't seem more than half to agree with me. But I can tell you that if you don't think Hugh Lockwood a remarkably fine young man, you are more fac-tidious than the girls used to be in my time. It may be true that he hasn't quite the grand air. And if you are as much of a Delaney as your poor grandpapa you may object to that. Hugh certainly is tant soit peu bourgeois."

"Oh, I thought, Aunt Hilda—we all thought at Lowerer House-that Mr. Lockwood was thoroughly a gentleman."

"Well, I'm delighted to hear it. I fancied you were tarning up your nose at him a little. How finshed you are, child! Let me feel your forchead. No: there's no appearance of fever. And now the color is fading away again. I shall send you to bed at nine o'clock—not a moment

Very well, Aunt Hilds. But you were saying—that—that Mrs. Lockwood—"

"Oh, to be sure! Yes, let me see. Mrs.
Lockwood— Oh, new I have is! I was saying that she is so unlike her son, wasn't 1?
Well she is. He is, as I said, a strapping, robust-looking creature. I suppose he inherits his burliness from his peasant ancestors. His father's father, you know, was— Aht you do Fnow all about it? Yes—quite rustics. And Hugh is not in the least ashamed of his grand-"Ashamed! Why should he be ashamed?"

"Well, my dear, if you come to that, why should we be proud of our ancestors? Upon my word, I don't know. Still, there is a kind of feeling. However, Hugh is too manly and upright for any mean pretensions, and I quite respect him for it. But as to his mother, she is the timest fairy of a woman you ever saw in all your days. She really is more like one of the 'good people that our old nurse at Delancy used to tell us about then any thing sleen in size I to tell us about than any thing else—in size, I mean—for there is nothing fantastic about her."
"I am sure to like her for her kindness to you, Aunt Hilda."

"Indeed, she is very kind. And so thought-ful! and has such good manners! She came every day while you were in bed, and inquired about you. But she never intrudes. But I thought of asking her to take tea with us quietbrought of assing her to take tea with us quietly some evening, if you don't mind. For now her son is not at home, she is kenely too. And before I had you, Mandie, I was very glad of Mrs. Lockwood's company."

Mand, of course, begged that her aunt would invite Mrs. Lockwood as often as she chose,

But in truth she shrank from the sight of a stranger. There was no hour of the day when Veronica was absent from her thoughts. There had been no preparation for the terrific blow that had fallen. She had bade Veronica farewell that night at Lowster House with no faintest foreshedowing of what was to come. She tormented herself sometimes with the idea that if she (Mand) had returned to the vicarage and remained with Veronica the evil would not have happened. There were moments when she longed, with a painfully intense longing, to set forth to follow the unhappy girl, to find her, and tonged, with a painfully intense longing, to set forth to follow the unhappy girl, to find her, and bring her back, and soothe and cherish her, and shelter her among them again. She could not understand that her guardian should abandon his daughter without an effort. Then the doubt arces whether Veronica herself would consent to return. to return.

"If I could go to her, see her, and persuade her, she would come back; she would leave that dreadful man. She can not care for him—" So ran her thoughts. And then the rememrance would startle her like a sudden bl the man was the husband of her mother's sis-ter; and she would hide her face in her trembling hands, and shudder with a confused sense-

She was spared the speciacle of any scute suf-fering on the part of her aunt.

fering on the part of her aunt.

Lady Tallis made no pretensions to outraged wifely affection. All such sentiment had been killed in her long years ago. But there was a curious phase of feeling—the last faint protest of her trampled self-respect—the one drop of gall in her submissive nature—which made her regard Veronica with something as near reneur as could be entertained by a character so flavor-less, meek, and weak. ss, meek, and weak. Maud shrank with instinctive delicacy from any mention of Veronica to the wife of Sir John Gale. But her aunt had voluntarily spoken of the vicar's daughter on one or two occasions; and had mentioned her in terms that caused Mand the most exquisite pain. The relations of the latter to all concerned in this misery and shame were peculiarly complicated and delicate. And the sorrowing girl strove to hide her grief. Mand's was still the same nature which had caused Mrs. Levincourt to characterise her as "stolid" and "unfeeling," when she had suppressed her childish tears at sight of the strange faces in her new home. Mrs. Levincourt never knew that the pillow in the little crib had been werted that first night with bitter, but silent tears. Mand could bear the pein of her wound, but she could not bear that it should be approached by a course or unsympathizing touch.

For all these reasons, and from the knowledge, speedily acquired, that her sunt was too entirely devoid of dignity to be reticent upon any subject which it entered her head to discuss, Maud looked forward with nervous dread to the introduction of Mrs. Lockwood into Lady Tallis's drawing-room.

CHAPTER IL THE LOCKWOODS.

ZILLAH LOCKWOOD was a very remarkablelooking woman. It was not merely the small-ness of her stature that made her so. She was, as Lady Tallis had said, extremely fragile and fairy-like, with very delicate, well-formed hands and feet, and an upright straight figure. But this small, frail creature conveyed an almost startling impression of power and resolution power of an undemonstrative, steady, suppressed kind.

"How enchantingly pretty Mrs. Lockwood must have been!" was the exclamation of nine people out of ten, after seeing her for the first

Those who remembered Zillah Lockwood in her youth declared that she had been enchant-ingly pretty. But it may be doubted whether she had ever been so, in the strict sense of the word. There could be no doubt, however, that hers must always have been a singularly attractive face. And it was perhaps even mo ive face. And it was perhaps even more generally attractive at fifty years of age than it had been at twenty. She had an abundance of gray hair, soft, fine, and carefully dressed. Her ferehead was low and broad; her eyes were black and sparkling, but their lids were discolored, and there was a faded, weary look about the whole setting and surrounding of her eyes that contrasted with the fresh, delicate paleness of the rest of her comelexion.

her complexion.

"Crying spoils the eyes. Years ago I cried, almost incussantly, for six weeks," she once said, quietly, to one who remarked this peculiarity of her face. "At last they told me that I was riskher face. "At last they told me that I was risk-ing total loss of sight. So then I gos frightened, and left off weeping—with my eyes." Her jaw was slightly what is called under-hung, and when the lips met and closed firmly (as they habitually did when her face was in re-cess) his recollisits cave as expression of give pose) this peculiarity gave an expression of sin-gular resolution to her mouth. It looked as though it were forcibly compressed by a special effort of her will. The upper lip was thin and straight. When she spoke, she showed two per-fect ranges of small sharp teeth.

Her whole person was pervaded by an air of repulous and dainty neatness. She always ore black, and her head was adorned, not covered, by a white muslin cap, whose crisply-frilled horder of delicate lace was a marvel of freshness. The collar at her throat and the cuffs at her wrists were of plain linen in the morning, of lace in the evening, and in either case were guiltless of soil or stain.

"How she does it in this smoky London is more than I can conceive!" would poor Lady more than I can conceive!" would poor Lady Tallis exclaim, easting a pathetic glance on her own dingy and crumpled garments. But her ladyship was one of those unfortunate persons for whose clothes dust and smoke and stains seem to have a mysterious attraction. "Smuts" flew to her collar, and settled there fondly. Dust eddied round her in suffocating clouds whenever she ventured into the streets, or else she found herself wading ankle-deep in mud. Gravy splashed itself over her sleeves at dinner; ink ryaded her attire when she wrote a letter; and pervaded her acture when the stronged on her the grease from lamp or candle dropped on her silk garment with a frequency which almost seemed to argue conscious malice.

The first impression which Mand Desmond derived from Mrs. Lockwood's appearance and manner was a sense of relief.

She had half expected a vulgar, bustling, good natured, noisy woman. Maud had gained suf ficient knowledge of Lady Tallis to be aware that her perceptions were not acute, nor her taste refined. Indeed Mand, in pondering upon her aunt's character, was frequently brought face to face with problems, the pursuit of which would have led her into deeper speculations than she contemplated attempting. Why was this wo-man, gently born and bred, endowed with blunter sensibilities, duller brains, coarser—yes, truly coarser—manners than the poor widow of a humartist, who sprang from mean obscurity and eked out her living as a letter of lodgings? Why, of the two sisters, Hilda and Clara Delaney, had one been a refined, graceful, elegant gentlewo-man, and the other—such a woman as Lady man, and the other—such a woman as Lady Tallis? Mand remembered her mother, and contrasted her bearing and manners with Lady Tallis's. Had Clars Desmond pronounced any woman to be kind, thoughtful, and well-man-nered, those persons who knew the speaker would have expected the object of her penise to be one whose society might be pleasant to the most fac-ticious. But when Hilds Tallis used the same phrases, Mand perfectly understood that they must be accepted with due reservations.

Her first sensation on meeting Mrs. Lockwood was, therefore, as has been stated, a sensation of relief. It was soon evident that there was no fear of Mrs. Lockwood's failing in discrimination or tact.

"You met my son at Loweter House, Miss Desmond?" said Mrs. Lockwood, stitching away with nimble fingers at the hem of a handker-chief. She had been drinking tea with Lady Tallis, and had seen Mand for the first time that evening.

"Yes. Mr. Lockwood was staying there at the same time with myself."

"Captain Sheardown has always been very kind to Hugh. His father, Admiral Shear-down, was my husband's earliest friend and pa-tron. The admiral had a great taste for art.

"So had poor pape!" exclaimed Lady Tallis.

"I remember Clara—your dear mother, my pes —had a very pretty taste for flower-painting. And papa had a master from Dublin to stay in the house nearly the whole of one summer on Clara's account. My brother James and I couldn't enjaye him! Sure he was the snufflest old wreteff ye can imagine. We would plague his life out by hiding his snuff-box." "I expect Hugh home next week," pursued

Mrs. Lockwood, calmly.

"And, indeed, I will be delighted to see him again," said her ladyship. "He is a pearl of young men."

"I don't know about being a pearl," said Mrs. Lockwood; "but Hugh is a good son. I think he is on the whole a good man."
"Of course he is! Why wouldn't he be?

Hugh is an excellent creature."
"It is a bold assertion to make. In all my life I have only met with two good men."

"Well now, on my honor, I do believe there are a great many good men in the world—if one only knew where to find them!" said Lady Tallis. Then she added, "As for you, you ought to go down on your knees, and thank Heaven for such a son as Hugh. Oh, if I had only had a boy like that I'd have doted on him!"

The faintest possible smile flitted over Mrs. Lockwood's face. She kept her eyes fixed on her work, as she answered, "I have a sneaking kindness for Hugh myself. But he has his

"I don't believe he has a fault in the world!"
protested Lady Tallis, energetically.
"I can assure you that he has, though! Among others-obstinacy. Hugh is very ob-stinate. Ask Miss Desmond if she did not get the impression that my son has a strong will of

Mand had been listening silently to the talk of the two elder women, and had been watch-ing Mrs. Lockwood's face with an intentness that would have been ill-mannered had it not been for the fact that the latter kept her eyes east down on her work, and so was unconscious of the young girl's close observation. Mand was a little disconcerted when the heavy dark

A Company of the Comp

lids were suddenly raised, and the bright eyes beneath them were fixed upon her own.

"Oh, I—I don't know," she said. "I suppose a man ought to have a strong will."

"And a woman—?"
"Oh, a woman," interrupted Lady Tallis,
"must just make up her mind to have no will You may fight and struggle, but a man is always the strongest, an best du compte! And as he has all the power, I don't see what use her will can be to a woman!"

"Is that your philosophy, Miss Desmond?"

"Oh, I? I don't think I have any philosophy, "answered Mand, simply."

"At all grants, rightly or wronger my conphy," answered Mand, simply.

At all events, rightly or wrongly, my son is obstinate, and he wishes to take a step that I think ought to be deferred yet a while. He is dying to set up on his own account, as the phrase goes. Digby and West, to whom he was articled, have offered to keep him in their office, on advantageous terms, for a couple of years. I say, hold fast your one bird in the hand! Hugh hankers after the two in the bush. We shall see. I am afraid Captain Sheardown's councils have confirmed Hugh in his desire. My son writes me that several of his father's old friends in the neighborhood of Shipley and Dancester have been encouraging him to make the attempt; been encouraging him to make the attempt; and have been promising him all sorts of things. Hugh is only twenty-four years old; and he believes most of what is said to him."

"I am quite sure," said Mand, with some warmth, "that Captain Sheardown would say nothing that he did not mean."

"Doubtless. But promises impossible of fulfillment are made with the most perfect sincerity every day."

every day.

After a little more desultory chat Mrs. Lock-wood folded up her work, and went away, say-ing that she would leave Miss Desmond to go to rest; and that she would prepare with her own hand a basin of arrow-root for the supper of Lady Tallis, who was not looking strong, she said. "My arrow-root is excellent, I assure you," said Mrs. Lockwood to Maud. "Her ladyship will rive me a certificate. I am a very fair cook, am I not, my lady?"
"Indeed, then

I not, my lady?"
"Indeed, then, I don't know the thing you can sof do, if you try?" said Lady Tallis, enthusiastically. And, when Mrs. Lockwood was gone, she descanted to Mand on their landlady's talents and good qualities in a strain of unmixe are you not enchanted with her?" she asked of her me "I-yes; I like her very much. She is very clever, I think."

"Oh, clever's no word for it. She is an extraordinary little creature; quite extraordinary. You don't know all that's in that head of hers yet, I can assure you."

"I should imagine that she has known much sorrow and trouble," said Mand, musingly. "I wonder what her history is!"

"Oh, as to that," rejoined her ladyship, to whom the suggestion appeared to be a new one,
"I don't suppose she has much of a history at all. How would she? She and her husband were quite humble people."
"But, aunt, she has evidently received a good education, and she has the manners of a lady, moreover. Did you notice, too, in reading the title of that French book that lay on the table, how admirably she pronounced it?"

"My dear child, for that matter, we had a dancing-mistress once who spoke French beantifully! And she was quite an ignorant person. Her father was a Parisian barber, we were told; but she called herself Mademoiselle de Something or other. I forget the name now. Any way,

Mrs. Lockwood is vastly superior to her?

The incoherence of these remarks, and the impossibility of conjecturing what it was they intended to prove, silenced Maud.

Presently Lady Tallis exclaimed, in a sudden, pouncing way, which her delicacy alone prevent-ed from being absolutely violent: "And ye haven't told me yet how you like my little Queen of the Fairies!"

"Yes, aunt, I said that I liked Mrs. Lock-wood very much: only-"

"Only what?"

"Well, it seems rather a pity that she should take such a gloomy view of things, does it not?" "Gloomy! Now upon my word and honor a cheerfuller little creature I never saw or heard of! That is my notion, my dear girl."

"Gloomy is not the right word, either." "Yes; but what I mean is, that—that— It is rather difficult to explain. Mrs. Lockwood is cheerful, but it is not because she finds things to

"Well, then, all the more credit to her for being cheerful."

"I think she would be more likely to be credulous of an evil report than a good report; not because she is ill-natured, but because ere that she must have had some great trouble in her life.

At the beginning of the following week Hugh Lockwood returned home.

He had, of course, already learned from his mother the fact that Lady Tallis and her niece were inmates of the house in Gower Street.

He was able to inform his mother of many particulars of the blow which had fallen on the family at the vicarage. The whole country was ringing with the story. Hugh had heard it discussed in all sorts of tones, by all sorts of people. A great number were inclined to blame Mr. Lovincourt severely for having been culpably negli-gent in regard to his daughter's association with a man like Sir John Gale. On the other hand, many persons (especially matrons of Mrs. Beg-bie's stamp) declared that bolts and bars would not have sufficed to keep Veronica Levincourt in respectable obscurity; that they had always known, always seen, always prophesied, how it would end; that the girl's vanity and coquetry had long made them cautious of permitting her to associate with their daughters; and that it was all very well to blame the man-of course he was a wretch! no doubt of it!-but he have been regularly hunted down, you know, by that artful, abandoned, dreadful, dreadful end of the content the market by the property of the content of th

"There is nothing so cruel as the cruelty of one woman to another!" said Hugh, after re-counting some of these sayings to his mother. "Is there not?" said Mrs. Lockwood, com-posedly. "And Mrs. Sheardown," she pursued, after a moment's panse, " is she too an number of the crue!?"

"No; Mrs. Sheardown could not be cruel!
No, she is not cruel. But she is—even she is a little hard on the girl."
"H'm! Is this Miss Levincourt so very handsome as they say? You have seen her?"

"Yes; I saw her at Lowster. She is strikingly beautiful. I do not know that I ever saw such eyes and such coloring."

d not vain or coquettish, as these 'cruel' women say?" well, yes, I think she is fond of admira-on. But her manner was very charming."

"That is charming, Hugh; that love of ad-Masculine vanity is always tickled by the implied flattery of a pretty woman's airs and Flattery!" "To be sure. Hanghty or espiegle, stately or languid, what a coquette wants is your atten-tion; and that flatters you. How many men, tion; and that flatters you. How many men, do you suppose, would think Venna herself-beautiful it she honeatly did not care two straws whether they looked at her or not?"

"Well, mother, despite my "masculine vani-ty," I can truly say that I never in all my life saw a girl whom I should have been less likely to fall in love with than Veronica Levincourt."

"That was fortunate for you!"

"Good, kind Mrs. Sheardown thought me in some danger, I believe, for she dropped a word or two of warning— That man must be as black a scoundrel as ever existed!" cried Hugh, suddenly breaking off.

"Is the identity or Sir John Gale with Sir

John Tallis known in Shipley?"
"Yes; I had learned it from your letters.
But, except to the Sheardowns, I said no word of the matter. But an old woman who was stayof the matter. But an our woman may Boyce— ing at Dr. Begbie's—a certain Betsy Boyce— wrote up to some gossip-mongering cross in Lon-don for information about Sir John Gale. And in that way the whole story became known."

"Of course you did not see Mr. Levincourt again?"

"No one has seen him except his own serv-ants and little Plew, the surgeon, since his daughter's flight."

"Oh, in church, of course, he has been seen. The Sheardowns purposely staid away from St. Gildas the first Sunday after the vicar's return. But I was told that the rustics, who compose the majority of the congregation, behaved with more delicacy than might have been expected from them. They kept out of the vicar's way on leav-ing church; and those who did see him contentthemselves with silently touching their bats, and passing on. By-the-way, the person who told me all this is horribly out up by this dreadful affair. It is a certain Mr. Flew, a surgeon, and a really good little fellow. The village a sips say that he was a bond-slave of Miss Lev court. I never saw a man look more miserable. He fought her battles tooth and nail until it be-came known that Sir John Gale had a wife already. Then, of course, there was no more to be said of the girl's being married to him. But, although Plew is the mildest-looking little fellow you ever saw, I should not care to be in the shoes of any man who spoke an ill word of Miss Levin-court in his presence. And the Shipley folks understand this so well, that if a group of them are discussing the vicar's daughter, they break off at Plew's approach as though he were her brother. He is a loyal little fellow, and I am sorry for him with all my heart."

"He must be a very uncommon sort of man," observed Mrs. Lockwood, dryly.

"Ah, mother, mother!" exclaimed Hugh, kiss-ing her forehead, and looking at her half fondly, half sadly, "our old quarrel! I can not under-stand how it is that such a good woman as you are should find it so hard to believe in good-ness." of any man who spoke an ill word of Miss Levin

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP. Saxey, an English naval officer, prophesied the great flood would occur between the 5th and 9th of October, and also some time during the mouth of No-vember in the present year. November is yet in prospect, but there have been floods enough in Octoher to place Saxby among the prophets for all time. To be sure the first flood came a little before its time, and some of the others were not quite punctual, but rological calculations can not always be exact. in astronomers, also, calculated that the 5th of October would be the most unlucky Friday New York had known for many years, in consequence of the ex-traordinary attraction of the moon just about that time; that the tide would rush in and reach a mark never before approximated. But although one of city papers, leaved on the 8th, to save the chara of the weather prophets, announced in a wonderful paragraph that all Broadway had been blown down, the new poet-office site leveled with the ground, Central Park completely unroofed; that the high tide had almost depopulated the city, some few hundreds only being saved by clinging to Triulty steeple and the telegraph poles; that the editor himself was writing under some twenty feet of water; and that if the reader did not believe it he must ask the weather prophets — yet New York city, in general, was unconscious of such extreme suffering; Every body was so much rejoiced at the abundant supply of Crowas so much rejoiced at the abundant supply of Cro-ton water that they probably did not observe any special atmospheric changes. But the heavy rains which relieved the city from dearth of water, brought fearful destruction throughout the country. October, 1869, will long be remembered as the date of one of the most extensive and desciating freshets ever exthe most extensive and descisting freshets ever ex-perienced in the Eastern and Middle States.

Incidents of the great food continue to come in from various quarters. Many small towns and vil-lages have been almost cut off from communication with the outer world in consequence of the loss of bridges, the breaking away of highways, and the nec-ecesty suspension of travel. One of the saddest and most singular of the many and descintions caused by the freshet occurred in Phillips, a hitherto flourishing and beautiful town in Maine. Not only were scores of houses submerged, streets rundered i able by black alluvium and drift-wood, not able by black alkevium and drift-wood, mills and bridges floated away, and trees uprovied and broken bridges Bested away, and stees uprocess and records to pieces, but the beautiful cometery was completely related. The waters ewept with destructive force over it, and every stone and monument was moved from its place. Some were washed into adjacent over it, and every stone and monument was moved from its place. Some were washed into adjacent fields; some broken; the Iron fences inclosing lots were twisted into shapeless forms; and, endder still, many of the graves were washed open, and the bodies rest-ing there were footed away. Some were found miles away; others have not been recovered. The body of one man who died last spring was found upon his own farm, at some distance from the cemetery. The whole village presents a scene of desolution and ruin; but this invasion of the resting-place of the dead is most painful of all.

A wedding has taken place in St. John's Church, Sligo, Ireland, which created great ammement; the united ages of the couple being 126 years,

A wide and important field of inquiry is opened to the medical profession by the condicting statements in regard to the utility of vaccination as a preventive of small-pex. Many eminent men in Europe declare that the influence of vaccination upon the system is very deleterious, and that it affects no real protection regions that decaded discuss. against that dreaded disease. It is also affi those who are not vaccinated recover more easily from scute diseases than those who have been vaccinated. On the other hand, many equally eminent physicians give their testimony, based on facts and long experi-ence, in favor of vaccination. "Who shall decide, when doctors disagree?" It would seem that this subject is worthy the most careful consideration and investigation of the most able physicians in the world.

A School for Theft has been discovered near the freight depot of the Union Pacific Hailroad, in Omaha. A saloou-keeper known by the name of "Billy Mack" has been in the habit of enticing boys into his saloon, giving them instructions in petty thieving, and pur-chasing from them the little articles they can "lift." Twelve or fifteen boys have nightly slept at his estab-

 Modern science regards inearity as merely a symptom of cerebral disease, which is quite as susceptible of medical treatment as other forms of bodily allocat. The universal testimony of physicians having charge of institutions for the insure is to the effect that when patients receive early and judicious treatment from eighty to ninety per cent. will recover. In accordance with this modern view, a new hospital for the curs of the insane has been located pear Pourbles the site being exceedingly beautiful, and affording magnificent views of natural scenery. This site, one sisting of two bundred and six acres fronting on the Hudson River, was presented to the State of New York by the citizens of Datchess County. Work was com-menced on the building late in the season of 1887, though little was done that year. In 1868 one section of two hundred and thirty feet in length was completed; and another section over three hundred fact long will be finished this year. These two sections will accommodate about seventy-five patients, and will probably be ready for occupation in the co

Titnsville, Pennsylvania, is-if reports are true-a remarkable place. Within one week, recently, four weddings took place there; the four bridegrooms were all merchants; they did business on the same street, and occupied the same block; they were all widow-ers; and last, but not loset, in the aggregate they have had thirteen wives.

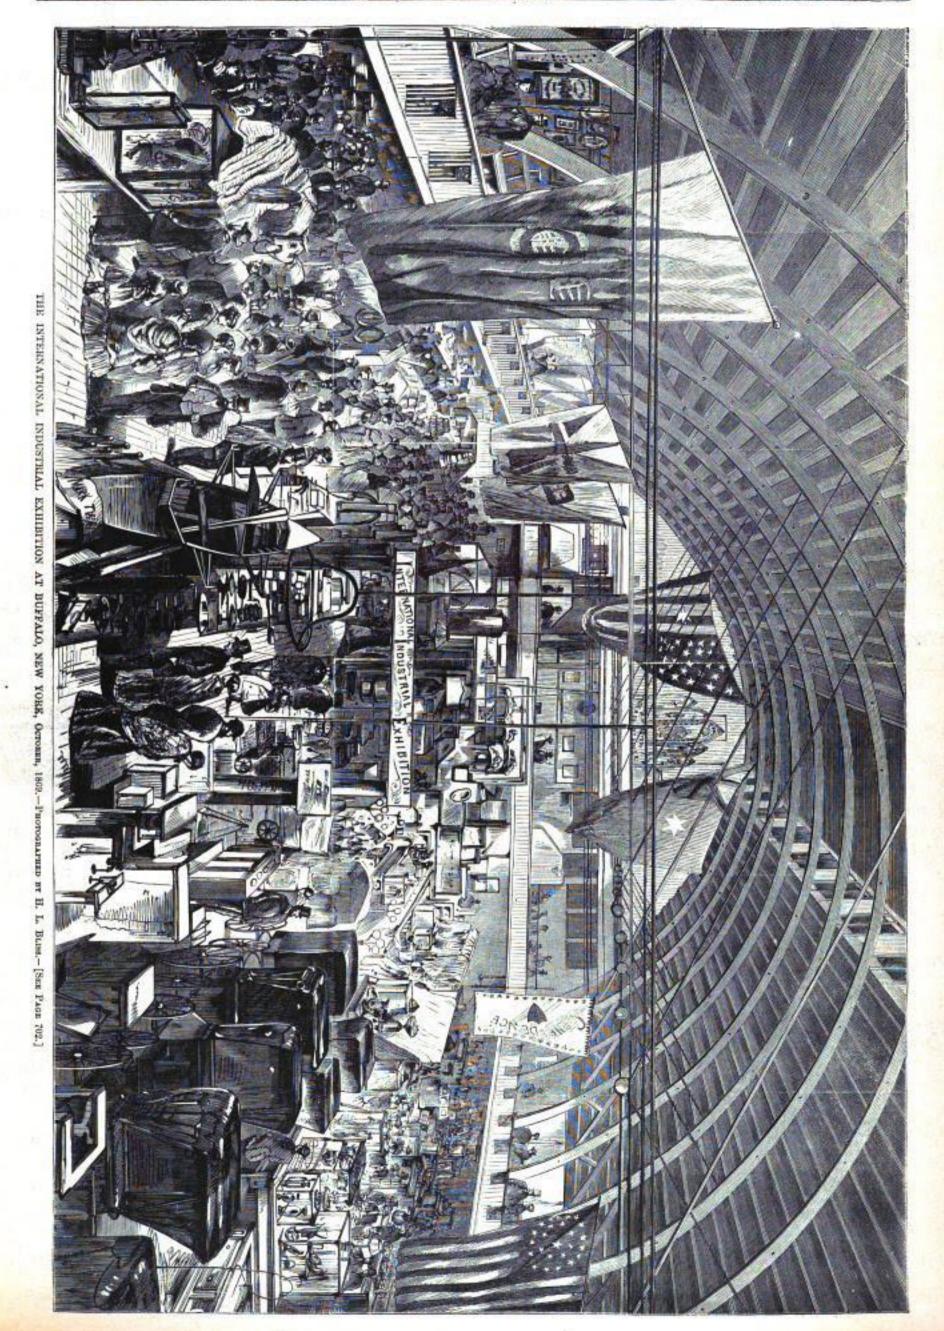

The annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions was this year held at Pittsburg. Three hundred and fifty missionaries are at present connected with the Board. The support of eighteen of the female missionaries has be sumed by the Woman's Board of Missions. In the Armenian missions sixty-five churches have been gathered, and are now moder the care of forty-one native partors, and sustained wholly or in part by their own people. Three hundred new members were added to three churches hat year, making on a were added to these churches hat year, making an aggregate mem-bership of about three thomsand. The average attend-ance on Sabbath worship in the Armenian missions is ance on Sabbath weeship in the Armenau about eleven thousand. More than one hundred young about eleven thousand. More than one hundred young men are in training for the ministry in the theological schools at Marsovan, Marash, and Harpoot. In Syria the event of the year has been the organization of the eershaary for the training of a native ministry; and never has there been a brighter day in the history of the Syrian mission than the present. In Peesia the Gospel is now proclaimed by more than a hundred na-tive helpers, and more than a thousand pupils are India cal laborers. Eleven missionaries have gone to China. within the year, and six more will soon follow. Three new stations will soon be established in China. Hawailan Missionary Board employ a missionary who is a native Chinaman among the Chinese population of the Islands, which numbers over 1800.

Did it ever occur to you when lacing up your book how much brass might be consumed in making those little tips or tags on the lacings, the convenience of which you scarcely realise until, by chance, you find one minus? Fifty thousand pounds of brass are anone mirus? Fifty thousand pounds of brass are an-multy consumed for shoe-string tips in the United States, all of which is manufactured in Waterbury, Connecticut. The brass and German silver parts of all or nearly all the watches manufactured in the United States are also made in Waterbury.

Vast differences of thought between the ancients and the moderns—not to the advantage of the mod-erns—are expressed in this one fact, that the ancients wrought ornament into, or upon, what was twoful, while the moderns take great pains, and apply the choicest materials, to fashion something which, though the total materials, to make one change which, though it have the form of usefulness, is never to be used, and is purely ornamental. This idea is fully exemplified when you see a drinking vessel, or a vase, set up on a bracket, never to be removed, except for the purpose of being shown as on ornament.

A"DEDW REED, THE YOUNG WATCH-MAKER-[See Page 695.]

INTERNATIONAL INDUSTRIAL EX-HIBITION AT BUFFALO.

THE First Annual International Exhibition was opened under the auspices of the Mechanics' Institute at Buffalo, October 6. The Rink, in which the exhibition was held, is 225 feet long by 100 feet wide, and, in addition to the main or, great facilities for the exhibition of articles were afforded on the stage, and in the upper and lower galleries, which extended along the sides and ends of the building. The arrangements made evinced great taste, and the whole affair was an honor to the city of Buffalo.

The main floor was divided into five aisles. At the west end of the Rink a stage was located At the west end of the Rink a singe was located, being one of the most attractive portions of the interior. The exposition included every variety of industry. There were fine specimens of pho-tography, illuminated printing, wood engraving, electrotyping, and hithography. There were sew-ing-machines; household familture; carriages, clocks, and silver-ware; furs, woolen goods, and dress patterns; stationery, crockery, cutlery, and glass-ware; wood and willow-ware; curiosities in hair-work and wax-work; curvings in bone, ivory, and wood; specimens of ladies handiwork every description; varieties of oils and artists' materials; models of new inventions; arti-ficial limbs and dental machinery; agricultural implements; specimens of architectural work; implements; specimens of architectural work; native wines; musical instruments; upholstery; chromos and paintings; articles of vertu; machinery, and, indeed, specimens of every department of human art and industry.

On the evening of October 6 the formal opening took place. The exercises commenced with a prayer by Rev. Dr. Lone, which was followed by an address from the President of the exhibi-tion, Mr. Davin Ball. The great event of the evening, however, was the Hon. Honack Gran-tay's address. The attendance during the exhibition was very large.

THE PICTURESQUE IN LITERA-TURE.

In itself it is probably to the mass of readers a matter of very little interest to know that Dryden was very fond of wearing a black velvet cost, talked very little, but took snuff constantly, ejaculated, "Egnd," and was much given to anxious gesticulations in instructing the players at the rehearsal of his tragedies; and, except in as far as it refers to men distinguished in letters and politics, it can be of no interest at all to any to know that the crooked little thing that taked questions, and translated the Hiad on the backs of old letters or odd scraps of paper, al-ways kept a candle burning at his bedside, in order that if a thought or a phrase struck him in his dreams he might get up at once and make a note of it; that Macaulay, like Gray, had his moods for writing, and threw down his pen and put on his hat fur a walk when he had worked out his vein of thought or criticism; that Buffon was went to share and put on clean lines when he sat down to write; that Johnson did most of his work upon a three-legged clear; that Gibbon wrote three volumes of his history under the shade of a beautiful acaria overlooking the Lake of Geneva, and sent his first rough MSS, to the press without any intermediate copying; that Byron, after rending the Edinburgh Review of his youthful poems, sat down and drank three bottles of claret to his own share after dissuer, took "a deep study of Milton," and then relieved is soul by writing his " English Bards and Scotch Reviewers;" that Petrarch was excessively fond of turnips, and wept as he read over his sonnets to Laura; that Tasso had a peculiar affection for Malmsey, and thought it favorable to poetic inspiration; or that Sheridan finished the ic," locked up in the manager's room of Corent Garden, with a bottle of Madeira and an old stage copy of the Duke of Buckingham's Re-hearsal. Thrown together pell mell, in a vol-ume of ana or a packet of old letters, these notes sound very insignificant—the mere gossip of tea-tables. Yet tritles like these often possess a distinct value of their own; and, after all, it is only by the light of this tittle-tattle of tradition that we can make the dry bones of history live, that we can re-endow the great soldier and the great statesman with flesh and blood, reproduce Na-poleon in our imagination as Sir Niel Campbell has pictured him in his calinet at Fontainable dressed in his old green uniform, with gold ep-nulets, blue pantaloous, and red top-boots, unshaves, uncombed, with particles of smill scattered profusely upon his upper hip and breast, impatiently pacing the length of his apartment, and shrinking in his soul from his fate; or that we can see Lord John Russell sitting down at his desk to draw up his scheme of Parliamentary Reform on a sheet of note-paper: or reproduce in our mind's eye Land Melbourne and his Cabinet discussing the Coru Laws, the easy and witty Premier planting his back against the door, and carelessly putting the question to the vote. "Now, what is it to be, an eight-shilling sliding-scale or free trade? It does not much matter which; but, mind, we must all say alike!" It is only by the light of this goesip, too, that we can see Lord Derby and his colleagues in St. James's Square, settling the points of their Ten-Minutes' bill; or picture a great writer to our-selves in his library, see and know him as his friends saw and know him, look over his MSS., and that with him over the first stand with Gibbon, for example, in the rains of the Unpitol, and plan the History of the Decline and Fall; stroll dong Flort Street with Dr. Johnson to the Mitre Tavern, or to the Kin-cat, to meet Burke, and Beauclerk, and Gibben, and Goldsmith, and Boswell; spend half an hour with Cowper in his "workshop" in the ganlen at Olney, whose he wrote his letters and fahricated has verse, "the grass under the window all bespangled with dew-drops, and the birds singing in the apple-trees among the blossoms;" walk down the High Street of Edinburgh with Professor Wilson to Street of Edinburgh with Professor Wilson to his class-room, "with a book under his arm and a week's beard on his chin," to lecture on Moral Philosophy; or sit at that old desk in the Morasso Chronicle office and look at Dickens as he turns out the "Sketches by Box or "Pickwick;" or look over poor Thackeray's MSS, as they were returned by publisher after publisher, and speculate with him whether it is worth while to my one more house or hum the MSS, congratulate him at last on finding a publisher. congratulate him at last on finding a publisher, laugh with him over the petty vexations of criticism, especially at that sagacious description of himself as a second Oliver Goldsmith, with a dash of Hornee Walpole, and share with him the gratification of seeing his work on every drawing-room table, and in every hand.

The works of these men, of all men of genous, rank among the friends and companions of every man of thought and culture, and through them "friendships profound and generous are formed with men long dead, and with men whom we may never see. The lives of these men have quite a personal interest for us. Their homes become as consecrated shrines. Their little ways and familiar phrases become endeared to us, like the little ways and phrases of our wives and children;" and any trifle that illustrates their character, any note that brings them nearer to us, is treasured up in our memory as we treasure the momentos of friendship and affection, the lock of hair and the packet of faded letters. Brougham wrangling in court all day upon some petty point of law, afterward sitting down in his chambers to write an article on Phlebotomy for the Edinburgh, or to smash Professor Young's theory of light, by denying the accuracy of the theory of light, by denying the accuracy of the experiments of one of the most careful and patient of inquirers, dining at Holland House and talking till eleven o'clock "de omni scibili, French cookery, Italian poetry, and so on;" Gray, writing his Elegy with a crow-quill, and perfecting it line by line; Sheridan telling the watchman who found him under the piazasa of Correct Garden, half seas over that he was Covent Garden, half seas over, that he was "Wilherforce;" Charles Lamb taking up the candle to go and examine the bumps on the cannot to go and examine too bumps on the bend of a man who sententiously remarked that "Mr. Milton was a great poet;" Tom Hood propped up by pillows on a sick-bed to quix his own portrait in the preface to his poetry; Theo-dere Hook laying down his knife and fork at the end of the fourth course at a Lord Mayor's din-per, and offering to take out the rest in each; ner, and offering to take out the rest in cash; Baron finishing off a chapter of the "Advancement of Learning" and taking up his diary to make an entry, "to have in mind and use the Attorney-General's weakness," or "to have ever in readyness matter to minister saulk with of the great counsellors, both to induce familiar-ity and for countenance in publike places;"what can be more characteristic of these men than anecdotes of this description? They are like those perl-and ink sketches of Leech, where the whole character of a man is condensed in a single stroke of the pencil. They are, in a word, biography in hieroglyphics. Even with the help of those traits "how pale, thin, and ineffectual" do many of the great figures of history stand out before us! Without them, where we now at least have men we should have only shadows, or men "like Ossian's ghosts in hazy twilight, with the stars dim twinkling through their

MRS. HENRY WARD BEECHER ON THE SEWING MACHINE.

(From The Mother at Home.)

"Is reply to numerous letters requesting information and advice with regard to the many sewing machines now in use, we gave in the July number of the 'Mother at Home' our own limited experience, and also expressed a wish that others would favor our readers with the results of a larger and more thorough knowledge than our own. This suggestion has brought us letters from all parts of the country, all, without exeeption, enthusiastically advocating 'WILLOW & Grans Machine." We have room for but one out of the multitude of letters before us, but that expresses the general idea of all."

Here we have an exhibition of focts such as we have never before witnessed in favor of any labor-saving invention: Mrs. Bencues, having given her own experience with the different kinds of sewing machines, invites her renders to offer theirs. Her invitation is extended as much to those having one kind as to those having another, and in reply she receives a multitude of letters, ALL of which, she tells us, are ENTHUSIASTICALLY IN PAYOR OF THE WILLOW & GIRBS MACHINE!

FACTS FOR THE LADIES.

I have had a Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine for more than fourteen years, and during that time it has been in almost constant use, without even the most trifling repairs. Many thousand dollars' worth of work has been done with it in furnishing my hotel, and my wife says she would not now exchange it for any other marbine she has one; rees, A. D. FAILING.

COMMUNICAL: THE CATERS AND HOW TO CERR IT.-J. Wiscenstein & Co., 36 John St., New York, have published a hasdsome eight-page Circular on this subject, which they will send free to all desiring it. We advise every one of our readers to send for one. We are confident it will bring Hors, Jov, and Livs to thousands.—(Com.)

PURGE OFF THE MORSED HUMORS OF THE BLOOD by a dose or two of Aven's Pilla, and you will have clearer heads as well as bodies.—[Com.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

To remove MOTH-PATCHES, FRECKLES, and TAN from the face, use PERRY'S MOTH AND PRECKLE LOTION. Prepared only by Dr. B. C. Pear, 49 Bond St., N. Y. Seid by all Druggists.

HITCHCOCK'S

New Monthly Magazine.

Read what Moore's Rural New-Yorker says: HITCHOOCK'S NEW MORTHLY MAGAZINE.-If the excellent tasts which characterizes this first issue of a new missical periodical is but a prelude of what is to come, then its publisher may rest assured of success. Bandsomely Bustrated, beautifully printed, and well edited, these election pages of literature especially in-teresting to lovers of music—such as biographics of Mattenas and Lesonano Da Vince—and vocal and instrumental music, are very attractive and valuable. JUST PUBLISHED:

> FIRST NUMBER OF HITCHCOCK'S

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS: CONTENTS:

MADAME MALIBRAN. Portrait and Biography.
LEONARDO DA VINCI. Fortrait and Biography.
MARRIAGE IN GREAT BRITAIN.
CHEAP PUBLICATIONS. Editorial.
ART NOTES.
BURMATIC NOTES.
MUSICAL NOTES.
POETRY AND CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSIC.
THE STARRY FLAG. For Voice and Piano.
MY BOUL TO GOD, MY HEART TO THEE. Do.
KITS WALITZ. Plano.
KIT FLANAGAN'S FAIRT. Voice and Piano.

Specimen copies mailed free, on receipt of price, 25 cents each. Sold by Booksellers and Newsdealers. Address BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 36 Beekman St., New York.

Agents wanted every where. Write for Torons.

$1.— TAKING THE REINS.

GRANT, BONNER, & DEXTER.

By JOHN W. EHNINGER, N.A.

"It is a striking likeness of the horse, and, I have no besitation in saying, the best representation of a horse in action that I have ever seen.

"ROBERT BONNER."

This splendid photograph, embodying three life-like ortraits, is 12% z 7% inches, exclusive of mount. Sent free of expense on receipt of $1.00.

Larger Edition, 13 x 21, beautifully mounted on in-dia tint, at $3 00; Ten copies for $25 00. Address PILKINGTON JACKSON, Art Publisher, Care of HARPER & BROTHERS, Liberal Terms to Apents.] New York

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

Cook-Silver Hunries Cases, $31; Extra Fine, $38.

Bunting-Case Full-Jeweled Lever Watches, $45, $48; Extra, $50. SOLID GOLD Ladies' Size, $35; Kutra, $40; Enameled, $46.

COIN-SILVER HUNTING CASES, $14; Extra Quality, $14. AMERICAN MOVEMENTS,

Every variety. Lavest, Lowest Paices. And Watches of every description, in fine Gold and Silver Cases, at Importers' Rates. Goods sent by Express, to be paid for only after they have been received, examined, and screpted.

S. H. MOORE & CO., Importers,

Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y. Pull Descriptive Price-Lists seat free.

JUST PUBLISHED: THE American Tune-Book.

A complete collection of all the Church tunes which are widely popular in America, with the most popular Anthems and set pieces; complied from all sources; pecceded by a course of instruction for filinging Schools. Containing about 1000 favorite pieces, selected by 500 Teachers and Choir Leaders, who have been interested in this long-expected work. 444 pages. Price $1.00: $11.50 per dozen. Sent, postage paid, on receipt of price.

OLIVER DIVERS ALLORAGE. OLIVER DITSON & CO., BOSTON;

C. H. DITSON & CO., New York.

FURNITURE. - New designs and new styles TORNITURE.—New designs and new styles;
I low prices for first-class warranted goods. Criginal drawings farnished, with estimates for finishing dwellings with hard wood and furniture adapted to the style of house and rooms. Only easened and steam-dried lumber used; none other will stand furnace heat. G. L. & J. B. RELITY & CO.,
661 Broadway, near Amity St.
N. B.—Cartain and Furniture-Covering Store at No. 447 Broadway.

DERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY: CRANIAL DE-FEUTS in Criminal Classes; Balem Wilcheraft. Are the Women to Blaime? On the Expression of the Byer: A Beautiful Face—How it is Marred; General Washington's Head; General John A. Bawlina, Hos. W. P. Feesenden, Hon. Asa Packer, Mother Ann Lee, Chinese Provents, &c., in Nevember Number of PHILENOLOGICAL JOURNAL, only 50c., or $1 a pear. Nevember have it. Address Newsmon have it. Address S. R. WELLS, 589 Broadway, New York.

$20 A DAY! Environment. Samples and Clerk-$20 lass free. J. C. RAND & Co., Eddeford, Mc.

The New Books of the Season

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

GEORGE ELIOTS NOVELS. Harper's Illustrated Library Edition. 12mo, Morocco Cloth, 75 cents per volume.

ADAM BEDE.

ADAM BEDE.
THE MILL ON THE PLOSS.
PELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.
SCENES OF CLERICAL LIPE and SILAS MARNER, THE WEAVER OF RAVELOR. ROMOLA. (Nearly Ready.)

PRANSISM SQUARE, N. Y., Oct. 76A, 1969. Figure Lawing been made in certain quarters is excite the sympathy and compassion of the public and the press on account of our tension, from our oil pistes, a chapper and better ceitizin of GROKGR RIJOTS NOTELS there the one published by Mestra Fixins, Oscoco, & Co., we think it proper to say, in explanation, and in reply to the valued attacks upon us:

That we were the first to publish these Works in this country, and that for the Early Sheets thereof we have paid from time to time in the approprie the sum of Five Thousand Deliars in Gold.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

HARPER & BROTHERS.

THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King of Naples and of Italy. By Joan S. C. Asmort, Author of "The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," "The French Revolution," &c. 18mo, Cloth, $1 to. Uniform with Abbone fillustrated Histories.

A BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK; or, A Creatly Fam-ily. A Novel. By the Author of "One of the Fam-ily." "Carlyon's Year," "Found Dead," &c. Sec. Paper, 25 cents.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF 1812; or, Illustrations, by Pen and Pencil, of the History, Blography, Scenery, Relics, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Bessos J. Leasure, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 883 Hinstrations, engraved on Wood by Lossing & Barrill, cheefy from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large 8vo. Price, in Cloth, $7.00; Sheep, $1.00; Pull Rean, 39.00; Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, $35.00.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Out-FLAW, Author of "Chronicles of Cartingford," "Perpetual Carate," "Life of Edward Irving," "Brownlows," "Agues," &c. Svo, Paper, 15 cents.

UPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Philosophy: embracing the Three Departments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Trausas C. Ursas, D.D., Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Bowdoin College. In Two Volumes. Vol. I.: Intellect, Language; Vol. II.: Sensibilities, Will. 13mo, Cloth, $1.75 per volume.

IN SILK ATTIRE. A Novel. By William Blanc, Author of "Love or Marriage?" Svo, Paper, 50 cts.

COUNTESS GIRELA, A Novel. By R. MARLITT. Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 35 cents.

A GREEK GRAMMAR POR BEGINNERS. By WILLIAM BESTY WANDELL, Professor of Audient Languages in the University of Georgia. 11mo, Cloth, $1 00.

FOUND DEAD. A Novel. By the Author of "Carly-on" Year," "One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper,

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By JAMES GERRAWOOD, the "Amsteur Casual," Anthor of "The True Elistory of a Little Ragamuffia," "Heuben Davidger," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

PALSE COLORS. A Novel. By ANNE THOMAS. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

SANDS'S PHILOSOPHY OF TRACHING. The Teacher, the Pupil, the School. By Natuanies Sanda. Sto, Cloth, $1.00.

MY DAUGIFTER RIJNOR. A Novel of American Society. New Edition. 8vo, Paper, $1 20.

18.

FIVE ACRES TOO MUCH. A Truthful Elucidation of the Attractions of the Country, and a Careful Consideration of the Question of Froft and Lows as lavelyed in Amsteur Parming, with much Valuable Advice and Instruction to those about Furchesing Large or Small Piaces in the Bural Districts. By Rossaw B. Rossawatz. With Characteristic Binstrations. 15mc, Cloth, $1.56.

META'S PAITH. A Novel. By the Author of St. Olave's," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Illustrations.

VANITY PAIR. 89 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 50 ets. PENDENNIS. 179 Illustrations. 8vo, Paper, 15 ets. THE VIRGINIANS, 180 Hinstrations, 8vo, Pa-THE NEWCOMES. 165 Blustrations. Svo, Paper,

THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Portrait of Author and 64 litustrations. 8vo, Paper, 80 rents. Author and 64 litustrations. 8vo, Paper, 30 rents. HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER. 13 litustrations. 8vo, Paper, 80 cents.

18, RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Frivate Study. By Rev. E. O. Havny, D.D., L.D., President of the Northwestern University. Himo, Cloth, $1.50.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS: HARD CASH. Illustrated. Svo, Paper, 35 cents. GRIPPITH GAUNT; or, Jenkousy. Illustrated. 3vo, Paper, 85 cents.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND. 8vo, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. 800, Pa-

POUL PLAY. 8vo, Paper, $5 cents. WHITE LIES. 8vo, Paper, $5 cents. PEG WOPPINGTON, CHRISTIN JOHNSTONE, and Other Stories. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Orang-Utan and the Bird of Paradise. A Natro-ties of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature, By THE MALAY ARCHITECTOR OF The Land of a Crang-Ulan and the Bird of Paradise. A Native of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. Attent Reseas. Washase, Author of "Travels the Amazon and Rio Negro," "Palm Trees of Amazon," &c. With Ten Maps and Pity-one of gant Hustrations. Course Sto, Conft., 24 50.

S. W. GEERY.

S. W. GALLANDERS, Wheele & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wheele & Cigare, and CHOICE FAMILY GROCERES, No. 119 Broadway, No. 119 Broadway, No. 119 Broadway, No. 119 Broadway, No. 110 Broadway, No. 110

Betablished in 1994. New York.
The selection of Choice Tens and Old Wines has been the special brainess of this house for years.
My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquors in the country.
Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing appertaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every meeting, if desired.
Goods shipped to all parts of the country.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co.,

No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York, The above goods comprise one of the largest va-rieties to be found in the city, and are offered at Low Prices.

sw Sign of Gold Telegraph.

FURNITURE. WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 25 and 17 Spring St., corner Croeby.

Betablished 1850.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDEROOM, PARLOR, DINING, and LI-BRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSER, SPRING PEDS, &c., &c., scitable for city and country resi-

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Aluminium Brones is a metal differing entirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even indiges have been decrived. It has seriously occupied the attention of scientific men, and has not only called forth the enlegious of the press in consequence of its peculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal at the Paris Buposition.

The movements are well fin-

at the Paris Exposition.

The merements are well finished, perfectly regulated, and in all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers.

Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Expense, C. O. D., with charges.

Address JULES B. HUGUENIN VUILLEMIN,

No. 44 Nassan Street, New York.

WATERS

NEW SCALE PIANOS. h Iron France, Overstrong Brass and Agrafe Bri Melodeons and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Were noted for 6 years.

Plamos, Belodeous, and Organs. Prices greatly reduced for Cash. New I-octave Plamos, 2015 and upward. New Cabinet Organs, 245 and upward. Second-hand instruments, 348 and upward. Monthly installments received. Warrooms, 481 Broadway, N. Y.

BORACE WATERS.

BRAINARD'S MUSICAL WORLD.

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE Barh number contains twenty pages of Choice New Masic and Interesting Reading. Only $1.00 per su-asim. Elegant Premiums for Cubs. Send for Speci-men Copies and New Premium Lie, which will be sent, with a large amount of beautiful new music, on receipt of Ten Cents for postage. Address S. BRAINARD & SONS, Publishers, Cieveland, O.

BELLS! BELLS!! BELLS!!! POR CHURCH, ACADEMY, PACTO-HY, FARM, &c. Every fariner wants a fault at from $5 to $12. Large Bells within the reach of the poorest Church or School District. W. L. & J. H. MERRIN, Predericktown, Onio.

CAME FOWLS. - Coper's Fork on Game of Pouls now out. 350 pages, illustrated. Sports-men should have it. Sent by moil, prepaid, for St. Address Dr. J. W. COOPER, West Checker, Pa.

E VERY ONE send stamp for Circular of Tourses E RECEIPTS to R. G. Williams, E. Boston, Mass.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION Gold Watches and Jewelry.

THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE OROIDE.

The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold once costing $150. Those of extra fine fin-h, at $10, are not surpassed by $200 gold watches. For THER, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABILITY, o builtation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

to gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS FROM $2 TO $8.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal.—Pins, Rav-Rings, Sieeve-Buttons, Lockets, Studs, Pinger-Rings, Secolets, Charms, Odd-Pellow and Masonic Pinz, &c., all of the latest and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge, Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money need not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express office. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ no against everyes, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write pisinly the name, tower, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our own overow is No. 335 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up stairs), New York.—C. E. COLLINS & CO.

HENRY WARD

BEECHER'S SERMONS IN PLYMOUTH PULPIT

PLYMOUTH PULPIT

Are being read by people of every sizes and denomination all over this country and Europe. They are foll of vital, beautiful religious thought and feeling. Physosoth Pulpit is published weekly, and contains Mr. Beecher's Sermons and Prayers, in form estable for preservationand briefing. For sale by all Newsdeslers. Price 16c.
Tearly subscriptions received by the publishers, $2, giving two handsoms volumes of over 400 pages each half-yearly, $1 Ta. A new and superb Bied Portrait of Mr. Beecher presented to all yearly subscribers.
Entraordinary Offer | Plymounth Pulpits ($9), and The Church Union ($2.60), an Unsecturing, independent, Christian Journal—16 pages, cat and stitched, clearly printed, ably adited, area to one address for 51 weeks for four deliars. Special inducements to canvassers and those getting up clabs. Specimen copies, postage free, for 50.

J. B. PORD & CO., Pub's, 30 Park Row, N.Y.

L ACE CURTAINS, Styles for 1870.—

I Made after our own designs, and imported by no other house in America. Nothingham Lice Curtains, over one hundred different patterns, many of them now first introduced in this market, Curtain Materials and Furniture Coveriege of Recotelle, Rep. Terry, Damask, &c. Curtains and Lambrequine made to order. Manufacturers of Taisesis, Cords, Gimps, Frünges, and Trimmings. Window Shadoso of all kinds on hand or made to order. Wholesale or retail.

G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO.,
No. 447 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Sts.
N. B.—PURNITURE STORE at No. 60 Broadway. N. B .- PURNITURE STORE at No. 651 Broadway, Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

500 Acree. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

Fruit, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable assortment, very low for each.

Apples—including most unagnificent stock of year-lings; also hardy Northern sorts, such as Duchess, Oldenburg, Histop, Transcendent, and other Crab Apples—1, 2, and 3 year.

Frankas, Pears, Cherries, Planus, Quinces, Grapes, Forest and Everyreen Trees, Nursery Stocks, Ocase Orace Hedge Flanis, Roses, own roots; Tuchya Ilyanicala, Sarreissus, Iris, Spuills, Lilies, Speciessus, Auradom, &c. Also superior colored plates of Frains and Flowers.

Send 10 cents for Catalogues.

F. K. PHOCKIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

F. K. PRCENTX, Bicomington, McLean Co., Ill.

GREAT ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC TEA COMPANY,

NO. 8 CHURCH STREET. P.O. Box 5506. New Yor

An organization of capitalists for the purpose of importing Tess and distributing them to Merchants throughout the country at Importers' prices. Estab-lished 1869. Send for Price-Last.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every man can do his own printing, thus saving much time and expense. Girculars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., mailed free on application. Specimen-books of types, cuts, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents. ADAMS PRESS CO., 52 Marray Street, New York.

SOUND AND GOOD.

TRY IT. IT WILL BE MORET WELL SPERT. NEW YORK OBSERVER.

$3.50 PER ANNUM. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY E. MORSE, JR., & CO., ST PARK How, NEW YORK.

THE CHURCHMAN.

THE BEST and LARGEST Weekly Newspa-per, with the LARGEST decelation in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Sent PRER for one month for examination, and till Jan. 1, 1970, to new subscribers for that year. 32 a year, in advance. M. B. MALLORY & CO., Hartford, Conn.

BOOSEY'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.
A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sent free.
Boosey's "Railed Nager," the new Half-Dime Series of the Best Soups. Sold svery where, or specture number mailed for Pive Cents.—548 Broadway, N. Y.

MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magazine published. It will be sent from now to the end of 1810 for 50 cents. Send in your subscriptions
without delay.

O. A. ROORBACH, 102 Names St., New York.

The Gener Teams increasured Assest, one, Incorporated by the State, self-free Store and Source States Margares at $12 teams, $15,000 Regardings forly (illustrately) and describing all our Wisches, are placed in scalar correlapse, which are thoroughly mirand, and white architect are smalled, post pink, at the following prime and white architecture, $160. It Twelve, and rich premium, $16. It Twelve, and rich premium, $16. It Twelve, and rich premium, $16. It Twelve, and special street Handing Washi as premium, $16. It Twelve, and special street Handing Washi as not provided the street was a first transported or white, for $10. Nothing and he had by the law retinent, as no article in our state? In worth has then the treety scale, while the layer targ obtain a wash worth $100. Orendam from? They no believe ferroring a hosty ophion. Address, $10.00 Team, $

THE AMSKICAN Hatters' Comformerters and Comformers.—Invented and manufactured by Sawers Cause, 50 West 15th St., N. Y. Used for many years by the principal and best hatters in this city and country, and recognized by them as being very greatly experient to any other construction. They are the only article made that can be relied upon to fit a Hat. The price is no consideration compared to their quality. They produce business. Send for a circular.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR

PRIEST and NUN

Apply at once to CRITTENDEN & McKINNEY, 1886 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

VINEGAR - HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drups. For droplars, address F. L BAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cromwell, Coun.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored hair or beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb sort by mail for $1. For sale by Mecchants & Druggists generally. Address Magic Comb Co., Springfeld, Mass.

THE MYSTERIOUS PUZZLE, A Great Sensation. Seat for 10 cents. WALTER HOLT, 108 Nassan St., N.Y. Bur 1838.

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the celebrated Wilsom Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Shitch alide on both eider. First machine on trial. For further perticulars, address
THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Louis, Mo.

WANTED AGENTS.—215 to $200 per month, every where, male and female, to introduce the NEW NOVELTY SEWING MACHINE. A new thing, with the latest improvements. Price for Hand Machine, $15: with Table and Poot power, $15. Sead for Circular, with Cut of Machine and terms to Agents. Address W. S. Ellil, Manchester, N. H.

Agents! Read This!

E WILL PAY AGENTS A SALARY of $30 per week and expenses, or allow a commission, to sell our new and worderful inven-Address M. WAGNER & CO., Marshall, Mich.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the American Knitting Machine. Price $25. The simplest, cheapest, and best Knitting Machine ever invested. Will knit $0,000 stitches per minute. Liberal inducements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNITTING MACHINE CO., Boston, Mass., or St. Louis, Mo.

$100 to $250 per Month guaranteed. Sure yet every where selling our Patent Stockston, White Wickless Lines. Call at, or write for particulars to it Girard Wire Mills, 261 North 24 St., Philladelphia, P

WANTED, live men, who can give security for goods received, to distribute "packages" of "Wonder of the World" among families, and collect the same. Address J. C. Til.TON, Pitusburgh, Pa.

A WATCH FREE gives grants to every live man who A will set as agent in a new, Eght, horsovable business paying $20 a day. No gift enterprise, no humbro, no mency in advance. B. Monroe Kennedy, Pitteburg, Pa.

CALESMEN.—Wanted, a few reliable, energetic salesmen, to sell by sample standard goods.

Address H. RICHARDS & CO.

H. B. Chestout St., Philadelphia, Pa.

EMPLOYMENT—"PLEASANT AND PROF-17ABLE" BOOKS. Seed stamp for particulars to B. H. WELLS, No. 309 Broadway, New York. $25 A DAY. —83 new articles for Agenta.

Samples free. H. B. SHAW, Alfred, Mc.

$1140-How I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample mailed free. A. J. Pollom, N. Y.

$3600 a Year guaranteed to Aprile. Address J.

IMITATION GOLD WATCHES and DIAMOND JEWELRY

Are manufactured on scientific principles, none but experts can detect them, and have all the brilliance, disrability, and exact appearance of the mast entity description of Genesiae Gold Natches and Interest Jeneral, Reprinters, Experiment, the most exacting of our customers, have thereughly demonstrated the Strength, Durability, According, and Unitry of the Fac-Strails Walthers, Market, and pronounce them invaluable as reliable time deepers. Ladder and Continued its Swine Movements, Six Sarb; Gentlemon's Full-Jeweled Patent Levers, Fac-Strails Wolthers, 200; Chrosometer Endone, 200; Extra due finish Chrosometer Endone, 200; Six and 300. All the Hunting Cases for Ladies and $60. Genuine Walthers Patent Levers in Gold Cases, 210, 380, and 200. All in Hunting Cases for Ladies and Gentlemen. Warranted in perfect running order, and to retain the color of 18-carat gold. Latter etyls of Chains from $1 to 310 sexts.

The recently discovered Fac-Strails Brasilian Duraments—carbonized, crystilized quarts—are equal in every respect to the real Dissoord, except intrinsic value. They are mounted with genetics 18-carat gold.

Ladies' and Gentlement Solitains Rings, 26, 210, 215; Salstairs Exe-Drope, with Pendants, 25, 210, 215, 220; Chair Ring, 20, 225; Chair Pine, 200, 235, 250; Cross Sate, 220, 235; Chair Pine, 200, 235, 250; Cross Sate, 220, 235; Chair Pine, 200, 235, 250; Cross Pine and Charma, 26, 310, 310; Chair Pine, 200, 215, 220; Chair Pine, 200, 220; Chair Pine, 200; Chair Pine, 200; Chair Pine, 200; Chair Pine, 200; Chair

79 Nassau St., New York.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS

THE PERIODICALS WHICH THE HARPERS PUBLISH ARR ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED .- The Nation, N. Y.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Hannes's Wagant is an Sinstrated record of and Harrar's Wazary is an illustrated record of, and commentary upon the events of the times. It will treat of every topic, Political, Bistorical, Literary, and Scientide, which is of correct interest. In November will be commenced the new story "MAN AND WIFE," by Wilker Coulties, the Author of "The Forman is White," "No Naves," "Arrandole," and "The Monatone." Behavillers will be furnished with the Wazary from the commencement of the story to the close of 1870 for $4.99.

Published Workly, with profuse Illustrations.

The young lady who bays a single number of Han-yun's Bazan is made a subscriber for life.—N. Y. Noming Post.

Hauren's Banas is a Journal for the Home. It is especially devoted to all subjects pertaining to Bonesette and Social Life. It formists: the lattest Fasions in three and comment; describes in-door and cot-door Amnasments; centurins Stories, Hasays, and Poetes—every thing, in brief, calculated to make an American Home attractive.

Published Workly, with profuse Elisstrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world, - N. F. 66-

The Number for November completes the Thirtyminth Volume of Habrent's Masazura. While no change is contemplated in the general character of the Maganine, the Conductors will not fall to avail themselvest of any suggestions which may add to its present interest or permanent value. Special and increased sttestion will be given to the departments of Popular Science and Industrial Arias, Papers on these subjects will be profusely limetrated. It is proposed that the various Editorial Departments shall give a complete resume of the times. The keep Chair will comment upon topics relating to social life and manners. The Book Table will criticate the important books of the day. The Mencilly Record will note all important petitical wants. The Broaser will present the faccile and anecdotes of the time.

Habres's Manazure contains from fifty to one bundred per cent, more matter than any similar periodical issued to the English language. Thes the surple space at the disposal of the Conductors will enable them to treat fully of all the topics embraced in their plan.

The Publisher feel themselves warranted in asking and anticipating for the future a continuance of the fivor which has been accorded to their enterprises in the past.

Published Monthly, with profuse Illustrations.

Published Monthly, with profuse Flinstrations.

TERMS for HARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, and BAZAR.

Harrie's Barr. One Year. 400
Harrie's Magazine, Harrie's Weinley, and Harrie's Barrie, to one address, for one year, $19.00; or any two for $7.00.

An Extra Copy of either the Magazine, Weinley, or Barrie will be explained greate for every Club of Five Sensonments at $4.00 and, to one remainment; or, Nin Copies for $20.00, without extra copy.

The Postage within the United States is for the Magazine 24 cents a year, payable yearly, send-yearly, or quarterly, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Carada must be accompanied with 54 cents additional for the Magazine, or the cents for the Weinley or Barrie, at the office where received. Subscriptions from the Dominion of Carada must be accompanied with 54 cents additional for the Magazine, or the cents for the Weinley or Barrie, to propay the United States postage.

the washing of Balas, to propey the Dated States postage.

The Volumes of the Magazine commence with the Numbers for Jane and December of each year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When so time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and back Numbers will be sent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Wessiv and Balas commence with the year. When no time is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number rant after the received of his order.

understood that the subscriber wishes to commence with the Number next after the receipt of his order. Subscribers to the Manarez, Wgranz, or Banaz will find on each wrapper the Number with which her subscription expires. Each periodical is stopped when the term of subscription closes. It is not necessary to give notice of discontinuance.

In remitting by mail, a Post-Office Order or Draft payable to the order of Hanizza, & Brootuna's he profershle to Bank Notes, einer, should the Order or Draft be lost or stolen, it can be retered without loss to the sender.

In ordering the Manarez, the Wennix, or the samer.

he seat or some, a the warmen, the Weskir, or the the sender.

In ordering the Manages, the Weskir, or the Banas, the name and address should be clearly writ-ten. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

88" New Subscribers to either of Harper's Periodi-cals furnished from the present time to the close of 1970 for Four Bollars.

TREMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPEN'S PRESCRICALS.

Harper's Magazine.—Whole Page, $100; Half Page, $120; Quarter Page, $700—each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion; or, for a less space, $1 50 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Westly.—Inside Pages, $1 50 per Line; Outside Page, $2 00 per Line.—each insertion.

Harper's Eacor.—$1 00 per Line; Cuts and Display, $1 25 per Line—each insertion.

HARPER & BROTHERS. Address

WHY WALTHAM WATCHES

ARE THE BEST AND CHEAPEST.

Because, being made of the best mu-terials, and every part being finished in the most perfect manner, they will run with great precision, and will not stop or run irregular, as is the case with other Watches.

We desire in increase the sale of these reliable time-pieces, and have induced the prices much lower than formerly.

Silver Hunting Watches, - - - - $18 Gold Hanting Watches (18-carat cases), 2HO

Gold Hunting Wotches (Ladies' size), $70 Energ Watch internated by Special Certificate.

We send single Watches to may place by expens, with the bill to collect on delicity, and we give the purchaser the pervious of opening the pockago and examining the Watch meters paying, and if, after it is taken and paid for, it should not proce satisfactory, we will exchange it or Refund the Money.

We have sent thousands of these Watches by ex-pense, and tourery section of the country, and by our improved method of pocking they will go safets to any distance. Possess licing in the distant States and Territories can save from 10 to 198 per cent, by traying from us.

Do not order a Watch till you have sent for our Descriptive Price - List, It explains the different kinds, gives weight and quality of the cases, with prices of each.

When you write for a price-list please state that you saw this in Harron's Wengar. Address, in full,

HOWARD & CO.,

Jewelers and Silversmiths,

No. 619 Broadway, New York.

ANTED - AGENTS - 875 to 8200 ANTED — Ad ENTS.—875 to 8200 per anosto, every where, male and femile, in introduce the GENUINK IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE PAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will stick, heat, felt, tark, quill, ord, bind, braid, and expender in a most superior manner. Price only $18, Yally warranted for dve years. We will pay $1800 for my merbone that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or know chiefe seam than one. It makes the out, and still the cloth ran not be pulled apart without testing it, We pay Agrets from $15 to $200 per mouth and expenses, or a remaissing from which trice that manner can be used. Address ERXOME & CO., Perresenson, Pa., Roseroo, Mass., or Sr. Lorze, Mo. CALTION.—Do not be imported upon by other passes pulming of worthless card-one anothers, under the same name or effective, ture is the only genuine and really practical cheap machine manufacture.

PATENTS

-INVENTORS who wish to take and Letters Patent are advised to counsel with MINN & CO., Editors of the re-wished duscrious, who have prosecuted claims before the Patent Office for Turnity-three Years. Their American and Enropean Pritest Agency is the most extensible in the world. Changes has then any other and can and European Patent Agency is the most exten-alse in the world. Charges less than any other reliable agency.

A Pampulee, containing full instructions to Investors, in sent graits. Address: MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

E DWARD SEARS' ESTABLISHMENT, 48 BEEKMAN STREET, New York.

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY lies in the use of HAUAN'S MAGNOLIA BARM for the complexion.

Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunburn, Freckles, and Tau disappear where it is applied, and a beautiful complexion of pure, satin-like textare is obtained. The plainest features are made to glow with healthful bloom and youthful beauty.

Remember, Hagan's Magnolia Balm is the thing that produces these effects, and any lady can secure it for 75 cents at any of our stores.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lvox's KATHAIRON.

POUNTAIN PENS One dip writes 4 pages.

21 50 a gross, postpaid.—Penknife and Penkli combined.—Errors and Penkliother combined, and 12
Fornatain Pens, 50 cents, postpaid. Sell at sight.
Austra CITY NOVELTY CO.,
604 Library St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Pianos is fully established as being unsurpassed by any for a rich, full tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tone, and elegance of style and finish.

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Plano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to sult any who may desire to purchase. Circulars and information seat on application to

HAINES BROTHERS, 46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Serre & Nikon, Chicago, Illa.; H. N. Herreral, Milwarkee, Wis.; Louis Thire, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McClers, Nashville, Tenn.; Kuncker Bress, St. Louis, Ma.; C. M. Murch, Ciscinnati, Ghio; J. H. Jackson, Sandusky, Ohio; Brainano & Soss, Cieveland, Ohio; J. E. Gorra, Fhiladelphis, Pa.; Mrs. C. Berne, Phitzburg, Pa.; Clerre & Soss, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Harrison, Rhinebeck, N. Y.; J. H. Harrisoneria, Ithaes, N. Y.; H. S. Maggie, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utley, Buffalo, N. Y.; Whitz, Shitta, & Perry, Bostos, Mass.; Court Bross, Providence, R. L.; C. M. Leonis, New Haven, Court.; Matthews Gray, San Francisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nessurimer, Toronto, C. W.; E. Piere & Bro., St. John, N. B.

Hatter and Furrier. DANIEL D. YOUMANS, 717 BROADWAY,

New York Hotel.

Importer of English Hats for Gentlemen's wear. Ladies' Riding Hate, entirely New. Ladies' Fise Furs in every variety.

AGENTS WANTED for WILLSON'S SCHOOL and FAMILY CHARTS.

To travass every state in the Union. Men of obility, and well recommended, can realize handsome profits. For particulars and terms, address

HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, Franklin Square, New York.

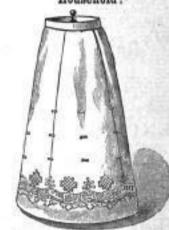

Don't Stop to Condole with the victim of the headache. On to the nearest drug store, procure annay's Erraymosters Salvies Areacase, admin-ter one or two sparking and refreshing doses, and a few hours the pain will cease.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

CATALOGUES SENT FREE. MATHEMATICAL INSTRUMENTS, 112 pages.
OPTICAL INSTRUMENTS, 72 pages.
MAGIC LANTERS and STREMOPTICANS, 100 pg.
PHILOSOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 84 pages. JAMES W. QUEEN & CO., 904 Chestmat St., Philindelphia, Pa.

No Longer "A Skeleton in every Household !"

THE RESILIENT DRAPERY SKIRT

"MONOCRAT," THE ONLY PERFECT SKIRT!

It is a complete Balmoral or Minslin Skirt, with which steel springs are combined in a novel and in-genious manner, rendering it Elegand, Construtella, Durable, and Safe.

The springs may be removed by any one with per-fect case, so that the skirt may be masked at pleasure. For sale by all distinctions Dealers.

THOMSON, LANGDON, & CO., Sole Manufacturees.

"PERFECTION" Coffee-Pot.

(Pateined June 1, 1909.)

Seperior to any yet invented, combining all the ad-anteges of the French passats, with wonderful

SIMPLICITY,

DURABILITY,

and CHEAPNESS.

Lovers of GOOD COFFEE are unanimous in its

FOR SALE BY ALL DEALERS. _#1 SIMPSON, HALL, MILLER, & CO., SOLE MANUFACTURERS,

Wallingford, Conn. Sample and Sales Room, 19 John St., N. Y.

GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS

HARPER'S LIBRARY EDITION.

ILLUSTRATED. 12мо, Мопоссо Скоти,

SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS A VOLUME.

ADAM BEDE. Vot. I.

THE MILL ON THE PLOSS. III. PELIX HOLY.

IV SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE AND SILAS MARNER.

V. ROMOLA. (Nearly Bendy.)

FOT HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above columns by mail, postage free, to any part of the United States, on receipt of 15 cents.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE

FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISES [Trademark x Copyrighted.]

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING, MANUFACTURED BY

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, pr Send for Price-List.) Baltimore, Md.

$10 PER DAY, — Wanted—Action, enterprising presents of either sex to sell an article required by every person. Userva, Arracerva, Quou Saxe. Business accorable and presideds. Address S. J. BESTOR, Managing Agent, Hartford, Conn.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

TERMS FOR 1870.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year . . . $4 00 HARPER'S WEERLY, One Year . . . 4 00 HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year . . . 4 00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, to one address, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00.

An Extra Copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be supplied gratic for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, Six Cepies for $20 00, without

[For Prospectuses and particulars for Remitting Moneys, Postage, &c., see the fourth column of page 701.]

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New YORK.

68" HARPER'S MAGAZINE contains nearly DOUBLE THE AMOUNT OF MATTER furnished in The Galaxy, The Atlantic, Putnam, or Lippincott. It exceeds in about the same ratio any English Magazine of the same general class, such as Blackwood, Fraser, Macmillan, Temple Bar, Belgravia, or The Cornhill.

G A New Story, splendidly Illustrated, by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Moonstone"), will be commenced in Harper's Weekly in November, 1869.

Persons desiring to renew their Subscriptions to HARPER'S PERIODICALS will much oblige the Publishers by sending in their Names as early as convenient before the Expiration of their present Subscriptions. This will obviate the delay attendant upon re-entering names and mailing back Numbers.

New Subscribers will be supplied with either of the above Periodicals from the present time to the end of the year 1870 for Four Dollars.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15, 1869.

THE REISSUE OF JOURNAL OF CIVI

Vol. XIII.—No. 671.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1869.

Extered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1900, by Harper & Brothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York

GOV. J. W. GEARY, OF PENNSYLVANIA .- (Phot. by P. Getekenst, Paul.)

OHIO AND PENNSYLVANIA.

THE recent elections indicate that the balance This recent elections indirate that the balance between the two parties which divide the country has not been essentially disturbed by the events of the post year. The Republican party, indeed, may be said to rest upon a firmer basis, since many who voted for General Grant last antumn, and who then felt uncertain as to the wisdom of the choice made by their party, are now the strongest adherents of the administration. In both Oilo and Pennsylvania the election. In both Ohio and Pennsylvania the elec-tions this fall have been very close, owing to the reloctance on the part of a large class of Republicans to vote except upon important national questions.

elected - Journ W. GEARY, of Pennsylvania, and RUTHERS-FORD B. HAYES, of thin. Both of these gentlemen were dis-ringuished in the late war; both of them acced the service at the commencement of the struggle; and, though neither of them had a West Point education, both succeeded, by energy and fidelity, in obtaining a very high rank. Gov-ernor GEARY, during his first administra-tion of the affairs of tion of the affairs of his State, provoked great indignation among the Demo-erats; but, notwith-standing that fact, and although his rival in the recent canvass, Lades Pacture, was Judge PACKER, was well known throughout the State as a man of strict integrity, of immense wealth, and was every where re-spected, yet GEARY has been re-elected by a majority of from four to five thousand.

The majority for Governor HAYES is still larger in Ohio. The Democratic candidate, GEORGE H.

av P. Gerskesser, Panal advocate of repudia-sion, and his defeat was on that account the more certain. We have laid so much stress upon the result of the late elections in Ohio and Pennsylvania, because the elections in these two States have so long been regarded as important indications of the political sentiment of the whole country.

ST. ANN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, ever, since 1787, un-der the name of 1 The Episcopal Church of Brooklyn."

The new church, on the corner of Clinton and Livingston streets. is a master-piece of art. Messrs, Res-wick & Sands, of New York, are the architects. Its stylo is what is termed the Second Pointed, which is a commingling, we believe, of the old Gothic and the Nor-man. The cornerstone was laid by Bish-op Portes: and the Rector, Dr. Scheneck, in May, 1867. Its di-mensions are 75 feet by 126, the height from floor to roof be-ing 90 feet. It is built of Belleville and Cleveland stone. This is the first successful attempt to interweave the Cleveland white with the Belleville brown sandstone in this style of architect-ure. The interior decoration is by COHN, the first polychrome painter in this coun-try. The organ was built by Hanny En-nes. An important feature connected with the church is its beau-

GOV. R. B. HAYES, OF OHIO .- (PHOT. BY LEUX VAN LOS.) tiful claims of eight bells. Rev. Dr. N. H. Schenck, the present Rector of St. Ann's, is one of the forem Episcopal ministry. He prenches extemporane-ously. He is a brother-in-law of the Hon.

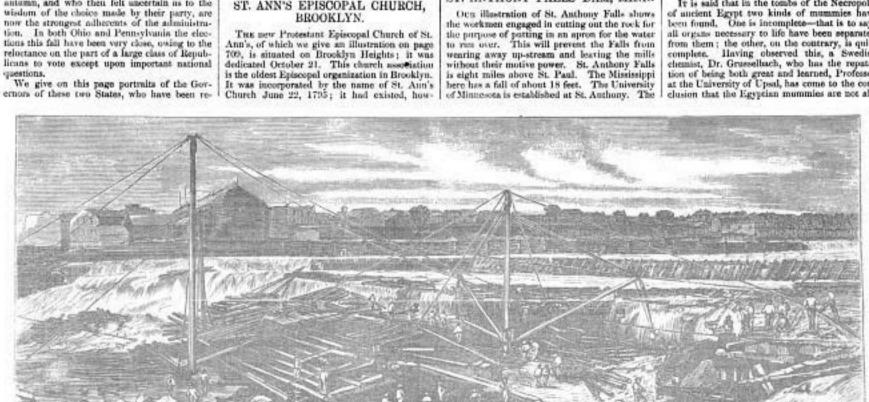

GROUGE H. PENDLETON, of Ohio.

town contains five or six churches, about twenty stores, and numerous saw-mills, besides other mills and manufactories. The population in 1860 was $2.78.

It is said that in the tombs of the Necropolis of ancient Egypt two kinds of mummies have been found. One is incomplete—that is to say, all organs necessary to life have been separated from them; the other, on the contrary, is quite complete. Having observed this, a Swedish chemist, Dr. Grusselbach, who has the reputation of being both great and learned, Professor at the University of Upsal, has come to the conclusion that the Egyptian mummies are not all, as has been said and believed for some thousands of years, bodies embalmed by any process of preservation whatever; but that they are really the bodies of individuals whose life has been momentarily suspended, with the intention of restoring them at some future time, only the secret of preservation has been lost. Professor Grusselbach adduces many proofs in support of his idea; among others, his experiments during the last ten years, which, he says, have always proved successful. He took a snake and treated it so as to benumb it as though it had been curved in marble, and it was so brittle that, had he allowed it to fall, it would have broken into fragments. In this state he kept it for one or several years, and then restored it to life by sprinkling it with a simulating fluid, the composition of which is his secret. For fifteen years the snake has been undergoing an existence composed of successive deaths and resurrections, apparently without sustaining any harm. The Professor is reported to have sent a pention to his Government, requesting that a criminal who has been condemned to death may be given to him to treat in the same manner as the snake, promising to restore him to life in two years. It is understood that the man who undergoes this experiment is to be pardoned. Whether the Swedish Government has accepted or rejected the learned chemist's proposal is not known.

ST. ANTHONY FALLS DAM, MINNESOTA-[PHOTOGRAPHED BY WHITNEY AND ZIMMERHANN, St. PAUL, MINNESOTA.]

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1869.

EM" In N. member will be commenced "MAN AND WIFE," a mere Serial Story, splendidly Illustrated, by WILKIE COLLINS (Author of "The Woman in White," "No Name," "Armadale," and "The Moonstone"). New Subscribes will be supplied with HARPEE's WEEKLY from the commencement of the Story to the end of 1870 for $4.00.

THE PRESIDENT'S WORD.

WHEN the President's letter to Mr. Bossen was published, the general feeling undoubtedly was that it was unnecessary. But, after all, it is very well that there was a quiet denial of the story so eagerly told and so skillfully insignated of the President's complicity with the late conspiracy in Wall Street. The charge has since been openly made that he was virtually a partner in the shameful transactions of the gold clique; and it has become a question of variety between the President and certain persons of whom it may be said that their characters are not abose suspicion, nor their word as generally acceptable as Mr. Strawart's

Indeed, this is one of the cases which test the value of character. There are riccumstances which may require an honest man to do more than admit or deny, and which may nuthorize him to enter into cluborate explanations. But they do not exist here. Party vio-lence and individual unscrupabusness may assert and hint and wonder and deplore, but if General GRANT's simple word is not enough to dispose of this matter in the minds of honest men, no evidence would avail. General Grant has been in full view of his countrymen for the last seven years. His character is certainly as simple as his services are great. Incoseantly and malignantly slandered, as every candidate for the Presidency and every President must be, deliberate falsehood has not been charged upon him, although it was implied by Assurew Joursons, whom the country thoroughly under-stands. Unsuspicious, and therefore careloss of appearances, General GRANT is the very man not to consider the interpretation that hostility and malice may place upon the most innocent actions. Mr. Vas Buucs, the most accomplished of politicians, would certainly not have made a summer tour like President GRAST'S; and no other President would, under the circumstances, have written a letter to Mr. Boxxen. But we have no doubt whatever that the popular confidence in the President is not in the least disturbed. On the contrary, General GRANT is stronger in the popular heart to-day than at any time since his election.

A ring of gold gamblers now virtually call Such an allegation from such persons affects the President's good name as much as an insult offered to a lady in Broadway by a group of rowdles at a corner, and no more. The Ring may multiply apparent corroborations, they may vary their cry, the newspapers may deprecate and declaim, and announce that "this is a most damaging array of facts, if the allegations are to be accepted as true;" they may call for "a better defense" than the President's word. Defense against what? Against a charge made by persons whose word has no weight whatever with the great mass of intelligent and reputable citizens, that, being President of the United States, General GRANT used his knowledge and employed his official authority to make money in a conspiracy. What success could be so sweet to the conspirature as that the President should attempt a better defense" than his word in reply to such nn assertion? Washington was accused of debauching the public conscience. His country believed it just as much as it believes that GRANT was an accomplice in the late gold conspiracy, whose designs he is known to have frustrated.

THE NEW YORK ELECTION AT HAND.

GENERAL Stokt made a speech at Albany last week amidst great enthusiasm. In direct and decisive sentences he declared for the fair play which it is the great object of the Republican party to secure. "If a man may be denied the right of voting because he is black, I may be deprived of the same right because I am a German." "The laws must be made without distinction of color, race, or religion. "The true American citizen will not bear the character of a Yankee or a Frenchman, of an Irishman or a German; but will unite the power of the American, the energy of the French, the activity of the Celt, the steadiness of the Teuton. The party that adopts these ideas, whether Republican or Democratic, is my par-As for the financial question, the Generty." As for the financial question, the Gener-al declared that honesty is the best policy. The new Constitution of the State should be adopted, if for no other reason than that it equalizes the suffrage, and removes the property qualification. The hero of Pea Ridge is not accustomed to dodge, and he spoke plainly of the Temperance question. "I do not consider in-temperance a proper subject for legislation: it had better be reached by reformatory means."

The election is now close at hand. As in all the canvasses of the year following the national campaign, there has not been much out-ward excitement. The Republicans have nominated representative men. Besides Signt, and GREELEY for Secretary of State and Comptroller, MARTIS I. TOWNSEND, of Troy, the candidate for Attorney-General, is known through the State and beyond it as one of the most indomitable of Republicans; a lawyer of great ability, experience, and success; an orator of inspiring vigor and humor; a man of unquailing spirit, of untiring energy, and of spotless character. Undoubtedly the character of the candidates, with the emphatic success of the party in Ohio and Pennsylvania and ever-faithful Iowa, have had the most stimulating effect upon our friends in the State; and although a party which was defeated last year must not be too sanguine, it would surprise to one if the Republicans of New York should resume control of the State, in which beyond question they are a unifority of the lawful voters.

The unchanged and unchangeable character of the Democratic party is shown in the renomination of all the candidates of the ring. The ring in this city has set aside Judge CLERKS, one of the ablest and most opright of Democratic judges, and has re-nominated Judge M'CUNN, whom to name is to describe. Is not this nomination alone sufficient to satisfy any besitating citizen of the spirit and policy that he sustains by voting for Democratic ascendency? Of course in the city such candidates will be elected. But the power that controls the city nominated Mr. Hoppman, and to serve the purposes of that power, Mr. HOTFMAN, as Mayor, issued the proclamation protecting frauds last year, and, as Governor, signed the Eric bill. Is it the Tammany ring that is expected to oppose corruption, and promote economy, and insist upon honesty in administration? Let those who think so vote with the ring on Tuesday.

A NECESSARY REFORM.

Tun Secretary of the Treasury has thought t to be his duty to remove all his subordinates in Texas who are opposed to the election of the Republican candidate. Our sympathics and toges in the election are certainly those of the Secretary. We have no doubt that the success of General Hamilton would be a very grave misfortune. But no misfortune is more serious to the country than the system of the civil service which make it a mere party machine, Safe and economical government is utterly impossible if our present practice is to continue. The service of the country is prostituted by it to the supposed interests of a party, and the most absolute demoralization is inevitable. The Secretary, of course, may plead the traditions of a generation. He may ask whether, if the party in power can supply honest and capable officers, it is not fair to put them in the places of those who already fill the offices, and so maintain a unity of sentiment and an harmonious support of the policy which the people have approved.

The reply to this ancient and usual remark is, that such a system necessarily tends to a disregard of bonesty and capacity, and invites the officers to a kind of interest in elections which they ought not to have. Why is it desirable to change the subordinate officers of the civil service? Because they are desperate partisans. But why are they desperate partisans? Because they know that their bread and butter and the comfort of their families depend upon the success of those who will keep them in place. The Secretary of the Treasury would not find it necessary for a party purpose to remove those officers is provious secretaries had not done the same thing. If the clerks in the service were not made partisans by the system they would attend quietly to the duties for which they are paid, and they and the country would be tranquil and satisfied. Is not party spirit furious enough already, that we must diligently study to exasperate it still further?

The President has not been trained as a political partisan, and he can see this subject without the prejudices unavoidable by those who have been. He can see that, although ours is a government of party, there are considerations which party must respect or the common welfare be constantly imperiled. And the subject is one of such vital importance that we hope it may be recommended by him to the most serious consideration of Congress, That would commend it also to the most attentive reflection of the country. As the Nation truly says, the present difficulty is the public apathy upon the subject arising from the consciousness that a law on paper is of no use, and that as it would be administered by the same old politicians there would be really nothing gained. But by removing one of the great sources of corruption, a movement is made toward general political partification.

Nothing can be worse than the present system, and if nobody will do any thing, it is plain that nothing will be done. But as the late memorial of Philadelphia citizens to their repre-sentatives declares: "If Democratic Republicanism be not a mistake the people must show themselves as competent to enforce the performance of the routine functions of gov-ernment as a despotiam can be." It is not enough that a government be powerful; the worst governments have been so. It must be thrifty and sagacious; and as economy and good sense are indispensable to private success, so they must be felt to be essential to public prosperity. Undoubtedly the Secretary of the Treasury found himself perplexed by the situation in Texas. But his action, against which the Tribuse warmly protests, however necessary it may have seemed to him, must certainly show him, with all other good citizens, the imperative necessity of the reform of the Civil Service.

CUBAN BELLIGERENCY.

As we write, the Spanish gun-boats are still detained, and there has been no addition to the actual public knowledge of the intentions of the Administration. An article in the Trib-see suggests that a "high public functionary" has proposed that the gun-boats be released at the demand of the Spanish Minister, and that simultaneously the Government declare that it can not render this aid to Spain without giving Cuba comfort by recognition of the belligerent rights of the revolutionists. The Tribuse asks whether Spain could take exception to this policy. But what ought the United States to say upon the subject? This proposition suggests a new kind of neutrality, which consists in helping both sides. But, as we have before said, however unfortunate for the Cuban cause our neighborhood to the island, and consequent convenience to Spain, may be, the recognition of belligerent rights proceeds upon very differ-

While the United States are at peace with Spain, the citizens or the government of that country may undoubtedly order a fleet of gunboats to be built in New York. Nor can we properly prevent their departure, unless we have proof that they are to be employed in hostilities agninst a nation with which we are at peace, or in a war in which we have declared our neutrality. If, therefore, the gun-boats were to serve against Peru, we could rightfully detain them. But if they were to be used in the port of Barcelona to repress an insurrection, we could not rightfully stop them until we had declared the belligerent rights of the insurgents. To allow their departure, and to accompany it with such a declaration, would very justly be construed by the insurgents as a mockery, and by other nations as a folly. For to recognize belligerency at the moment when we know that the assailed government has acquired fresh means of subdaing the revolt is to disregard the vital facts upon which the whole system of neutrality rests.

To apply these principles to the Cuban situation, it is very plain that the deration and character of the revolution, the extent and force of the revolutionary sentiment, and the evident power of the revolutionary government are such as to justify the recognition of belligerent rights to-day, or they are not. If they are not, how can the conditions and prospects of the revolution be so improved by the increase of the Spanish navy as to authorize such recognition? But if they are, why not declare our neutrality to-day, and forbid the departure of the flees, was detained, as is alleged, under suspicion of another destination? If the reason of our recognition of belligerent rights is symjustly with a people fighting for independence, we have had the reason ever since the outbreak of the Cuban revolution, and it is a reason which should be the more persuasive in the degree of the feebleness of the effort. Upon this ground, indeed, if the weakness of the Cubans were such that they could only sigh and not strike for liberty, the United States ought to have delivered them. But this is to authorise the United States to interfere wherever they choose in the affairs of other nations, and to invite other nations to interfere aTplessure in ours: a policy which would destroy peace and liberty and progress every where.

It seems to be assumed by the Cubans who remain at some distance from the front of the revolutionary line that the United States will be responsible if the revolution fails. The honest and rigorous enforcement of our neutrality laws they regard as a measure of malignant hostility to Cuban liberty; and there have been the bitterest denunciations of our cold, commercial, selfish spirit; of our recreancy to our own principles and forgetfulness of our own history. But a proper enforcement of laws designed for the general welfare of civilization does not show a peculiarly selfish spirit, while the American principle has always been that they who would be free must themselves strike the blow. Nor will any intelligent friend of Cuba allege that the American revolutionary colonies were aided by France from any feeling of affection, or from any desire upon the part of a monarchy to encourage rebellion among subjects. If it be true that the colonies would not have gained their independence without the aid of France, it is none the less true that France aided the revolution without the slightest sympathy with its principles or its purpose.

seed, the position of the United States toward Cuba is not one of which any citizen can be ashamed. With a natural sympathy for those who protest against long misrule, and who strive for independence, there is mingled the consciousness that neither Cubans nor Frenchmen nor Englishmen should expect another people to liberate them from the oppressions of their own governments; and a perfect readiness, when the character and progress of the struggle justify the measure, to assume the risk of trouble by declaring neutrality. Meanwhile, before this appears, the United States have refused to play false with their own laws and with Spain, their ally; but have made earnest representations to Spain, looking to the end of the war and the independ nee of Cuba. That Spain declines to yield is not surprising. No one who has ob-served the Spanish character, or who is familiar with the modern method of settling such questions, could suppose that Spain would concede of its own will that Cuba was victorious in the field. It was to be presumed that Spain would demand an armistice, which leaves the question of force unsettled, and require a vote, while Cuba would naturally doubt the practicability of an honest vote, and would always feel, if there were a general disarmament and an election manipulated by Spanish residents, that the United States had bound her hands and betrayed her. The result of the "tender of good offices" would, therefore, be favorable to Cuba. For it would leave upon the Spanish mind the impression that, while the United States would honestly respect their own laws and treaties, and would not recognize Cuban belligerency until they were justified in recognizion by the law and practice of nations, yet that the sympathies of the country were with Cuba. That this has been the result is unquestionable. Apparently the struggle will continue, and the United States will recognize Cuban belligerency when the facts of the situation, and not American sympathies, authorize the recognition.

TRADE—HOW IT HAS BEEN DISTURBED.

DOMESTICS and fancy dress goods have been marked down out of concession to buyers, who hesitate in their purchases, not understanding the precise effect of the late affair in Wall Street. The break in the canals, which prevented the usual transfer of grain to the seaboard, operated injuriously, as the West relies upon the active movement of grain to free itself of obligations, and make its purchase of necessaries. The stoppage of traffic on the canals tightened the money market in the West, as the money borrowed to more Western produce became due during the detention of canal-boats. Owing to the two causes trade has been much shortened, as purchases are made to supply only immediate wants. When the tendency of prices is downward, country dealers prefer to wait until the full decline is reached. There s no doubt that heavy sales must yet be made, as stocks re-main very light in the hands of distributors.

The policy of marking down goods at so early a period in the fall trade is very ques-It makes a great difference whether this is done when fifty per cent, of stocks remain unsold, or it is delayed to clean out the residue after the season is nearly over. A leading manufacturer led the way, and others followed. Sales have not been enhanced by it; on the contrary, it has been regarded as a confession of weakness, and it is taken advantage of by many purchasers. So far as concerns some descriptions of domestics, it was scarcely possible to prevent a reduction in sympathy with cotton, although the price of the raw meterial is still too high to afford a reasonable profit to the manufacturers of

EL COMPLEMENTANTE, L'ALTERNA DE L'ANTENNA MONTANTANT MANTENNANTANT DE LA COMPLEMENTANT DE LA COMPLEMENTANT DE

The failure of an important house, supposed to have arisen from a demand for margins made when gold had reached a high point in the late speculations, has tended somewhat to unsettle prices, as it is not known how far into the mercantile ranks these losses, occurring in the ordinary course of business, may have reached. Importers, who buy for gold and sell for currency, find that their business partakes more or less of speculation, except they buy gold as fast as sales are made. The house in question borrowed gold expecting that it would fall, and had to meet the market at an excessive rate. The complications arising from the late speculations affect almost all business in a greater or less degree. A case which has come to our knowledge illustrates this difficulty.

A commission merchant in New York, in executing a foreign order for the purchase of cotton or breadstuffs at a given limit in price, must at the time of the purchase adjust several

1. The price of the merchandise in currency, 2. The rate of freight to be paid in the foreign market in their currency,

8. The rate at which his draft or bill of exchange on the foreign merchant can be sold, payable in gold.

4. The rate at which he can turn the gold into currency, so as to be able to pay for the cotton or breadstuffs.

Dealers in this trade, having arranged for buying wheat or cotton on foreign account, sometimes, owing to the condition of the market, sell the gold which they expect to receive for exchange. For this purpose they ordina-rily borrow it from a broker, putting up, for the time being, the currency price. Through the New York Gold Exchange Bank these op-erations were easily managed. If no change occurred in the market rate there would be no difference to adjust between the borrower and lender; and if not closed, which was at the option of either party, the transaction was re-

On the day preceding the late panic's mer-chant who had bought a cargo of wheat, desir-ing to avail himself of the then high quotation for gold, sold through his broker, A, to another broker, B, $25,000 gold at 143}. The following day (Friday) this broker, A, in order to com-plete the transaction, borrowed this amount of gold from a firm, C, ledging with them the curmcy proceeds at 143.

Owing to the great decline in gold which occurred on Friday—after its rapid advance to 160, 162;—the firm, C, with whom the currency was lodged, became embarrassed.

At this time the merchant, finding that the wheat was not equal to sample, canceled the purchase of wheat, and at the same time, to enable him in part to deliver the $25,000 gold, purchased $15,000 at 135. Before the residue was purchased it was found that B, to whom it was to be delivered, could not pay for it, and the sale was canceled by B paying the mer-chant 22 per cent, in gold.

In this stage of the business the firm, C, unable to deliver over the currency, obliged the merchant to take $25,000 gold at 135, while the market price was then only 130-the firm, C, paying the merchant the discrence in currency between 135 and 143-and the borrowing transaction was canceled. Thus the latter betransaction was canceled. Thus the latter becomes the unwilling purchaser of $25,000 gold at 135, which, added to his previous purchase of $15,000 at 135, makes in all $40,000 in gold at 135, less the amount received in compromise from broker, B, which, on $25,000, reduces the cost to about 183‡.

This is by no means an isolated case. Many of the firms engaged in exporting produce have made such losses; and yet they were conduct-ing business not supposing that they were speculating in gold, or that it was liable to any extreme fluctuations. The authors of this mischief, which has affected the trade of the country in a most serious manner, ought to be condemned in all quarters. But yet some of them appear to be rewarded with new

The power conferred last winter by the Legislature to classify the Directors of the Eric Railroad, so that only five shall go out in any one year, was not used until after the electifor Directors, which occurred about the middle of October. If there had been any prospect of a doubtful contest there is no question but that the classification would have been made in advance of the election. It is probable that the right to make it then applicable was used to bring the stockholders into harmony with those who could not be divested of full control; and this accomplished, the process of excluding five was postponed for a year. A few, unable to stand any longer the public censure, resigned; and it appears that the Board is now largely filled with the clique which is understood to have made the raid upon Wall Street, and probably with employes in the offices of the Company. On looking at the classification it would appear to have been made in the inverse order in which public confidence is felt, and with the certainty that the grasp upon the road will never be loosened until the judiciary of the State shall send what remains, after its juices have been extracted, to a Receiver. Its life can be postponed only by issuing bonds convertible into stock, and selling the latter in some secret and illegal manner to the gam-blers of Wall Street, who will hope to put it upon the public, and thus augment the great andal upon the American name which the full history of this road will inevitably inflict.

A CONTRACTOR OF THE PARTY OF TH

The effect of the raid upon Wall Street, though seriously damaging, can not have the general results upon the finances of the country which many suppose. We have often shown that, as the credit circulation of the United States is a fixed quantity—being about seven hundred millions in greenbacks, National Bank notes, and fractional notes—no panic can arise of magnitude until this circulation becomes generally discredited. No one sup-poses that such a dilemma is at hand; on the contrary, very few show any want of confidence in the present system. Business will always be disturbed by the variation in demand, which calls for money in one portion to move cotton, and in another to move wheat, and then to be at the sea-board to aid in making shipments; and it must be borne in mind that the South must retain more money than usual to enable it to conduct its enlarged industries, and that California is likely to become debauched with paper-money, now that the Pacific Railroad makes the East and the West one people.

But, notwithstanding that this augmented demand for money in new quarters drains it from accustomed depositories at New York and elsewhere, it must return whenever the demand is more argent here than in other localities. In 1837 and in 1857 there was a large diminution of the quantity of money, arising from the ex-port of gold and silver to foreign countries. Now, we repeat, the quantity is fixed, its cir-culation is limited to the United States, and instead of having to draw our means of paying debts from abroad, as we were obliged to do in 1887 and 1857, we have only to bid enough for it by telegraph, and our express companies deliver it before any time transaction can mature.

If these circumstances had received their due consideration, a serious fall in the price of goods would not have occurred; and as there is a farger demand abroad for cotton and grain than this country can supply, there must necessarily be a corresponding activity in the distribution over the country of goods of every description accumulated at the sea-board and at our manufacturing establishments.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION OF NEW YORK.

In every point in which the proposed Consti-tution of the State of New York can be compared with the present one it is an improvement. The chief blot of the existing Constitution—the electoral disqualification on account of color—is wholly removed by the new one. The fatal defect of an elective judiciary is not indeed entirely removed, but provision is made for a submission of the question to the people. The improvement of the Legislature is sought by lengthening Scnatorial terms and extending Assembly districts. To guard the purity of the ballot-box, the registry is to be more strin-gent. And there is an admirable article to repress bribery and corruption. So important an improvement do the leading lawyers of all parties in the State consider the new Judiciary article that they have united in a recommenda tion to the people to adopt it. The most dis-tinguished Democratic lawyers in the Convention heartily supported the article in debate, and they are not to be diverted from the advocacy of a real reform in the administration of justice by the hostility of the Democratic Convention.

The new Constitution has been generally published, but we suppose very little read or considered. The long session of the Conven-tion, and the sharp censure which it received for delay from the chief organ in the State of the party under whose auspices it assembled, alienated the public sympathy, and its work was prejudged. Yet the duration of the Con-vention was inseparable from its nature and from the work it was to do. A popular assembly, to revise the fundamental law of a State like New York, can not do its duty in a week or month; for to the majority of its members very many of the topics presented are noces-Certainly it w s a body in which each party in the State had many of its able men, and in no political assembly composed of different parties has there ever been greater mutual courtesy and good feeling. Its labors resulted in a very great improvement of the present Constitution by changes and additions, and the people of New York ought to accept the work.

NOTES.

Tun defeat of Andrew Journou as Senator from Tennessee is a subject of general congratu-lation. It is not conceivable that he would have said or done a single wise thing in that position; and if the Opposition must elect a Senstor it is desirable that he should be at least intelligent and courteous, qualities which the warmest friends of Mr. JOHERSON will hardly claim for him. If it were not for the condition of Sena-tor Browscow's health this defeat would undoubtedly be the political demise of the ex-President. But whether he reappears in public life or not, his name and career will always be a warning to the Republicans. There is something politically wiser than superficial ex-pediency. The nature, character, habits, and training of a man are more powerful than any training of a man are more powerful than any apparent change of opinion. They will control him in the long-run, and the party which would intrust him with place and power must not be surprised if he utterly decrives it. If the Republican party had selected a candidate for the Presidency in 1864 for the same reasons that persuaded them to nominate Axonau Joseph for the ed them to nominate ANDREW JOHNSON for the Vice-Presidency, where should we be to-day? Character is as much more valuable than pro-fession in politics as it is in every other sphere; and if ANDREW JOHNSON serves to impress that great truth upon party managers he will have been of real service to the country.

THE Evening Mail makes a statement in regard to the original publication by Mesers. Harrier & Brothers of Mr. R. H. Dana, Jun.'s, "Two Years Before the Mast," and prefaces it by the remark that, "The following is said to be Mr. Dana's own account." It is simply impossible that it should be Mr. Dana's account, for every important assertion in the statement is un-true. Nothing is easier than the invention of stories concerning the relations between authors and publishers; and nothing is more difficult than to ascertain the exact facts, which are sole-ly the business of the parties.

THE New York Times, in a recent article re-joicing that the State Senate had "been purified by the rejection of three of its most notorious members, MATTOON, WILLIAMS, and VAN PET-TEN," proceeded to remark that the reflections of these persons might be shared by others, and mentioned among them ex-Senator Halls, of Essex. If the Twee had said ex-Senator Campment, of Oueida, its remark would not have been more astounding; and it hastened the next day to correct itself by stating the simple truth, that Mr. Hall was not renominated in Essex because he has left the county to reside in Albany. The Times added: "The objections to his course grew out of the contest for the United States Senatorship, and in no manner affected the un-Senatorship, and in no manner affected the up-rightness of his character or the purity of his conduct. As the author of the stringent Bribery bill of last session, he excited himself to check in the only effectual way the corruption which has disgraced both branches of the Legislature." Until this unfortunate slip of the pen of the Times, which has always borne willing testimony to the ability and devotion of ex-Senator HALE to the public service, no word was ever breathed upon his good name; and the honorable slacrity with which the Times corrected the error shows its regret at its mistake. But no correction ever quite repairs such a mischief, and we allude to the matter now that those who may have seen the charge only may also know that it was in-stantly withdrawn. There has been no man in public life in the State of a more stainless honor an MATTHEW HALE.

DESCREAM and Republican lawyers unite to recommend the Judiciary article in the new Con-stitution. In the Convention the best men of all parties supported it. No discussion was abler or more prolonged than that upon this article, and the people of the State may be sure that it is a reform agreeable to the interests of justice and the public, if not of the ring.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL CRESWELL, a most vigorous and efficient officer, is engaged in a ne-gotiation which will be of signal public service, and secure for his administration of the Department an honorable remembrance. On the 1st of January, 1868, the single rate of postage between the United States and Great Britain was reduced from twenty-four cents to twelve. Mr. CRESWELL now proposes, if he can persuade the British Government, to make us a New Year's gift, on the 1st of January, 1870, of a further reduction from twelve to six cents. This would be practically an ocean penny postage; and it is a change that would be halled with the greatest tion in both countries.

PROFESSOR PLYMPTON, the new Professor of Natural Philosophy and Mechanics in the Cooper Union, which may truly be called the College of the People, will deliver his inaugural address in the large hall on the 50th of October, at 8 p.m. His lectures will be given in the mechanical lec-ture-room every evening in the week, except Saturday and Sunday, at 7$ p.m., and will be free to all who may choose to attend.

The Church Union, a religious weekly; in this city, has assumed a new name. in this city, has assumed a new name. It is now The Christian Union. The aim of this new journal—namely, "the presentation of essential Christian truth, advocating, in the spirit of Christian love and liberty, the fellowship and co-operation of Christians of every name"—is indeed commendable. This journal contains eixteen pages, cut and stitched, and is easily handled. Besides the editorials, lecture-room talks, and contributed articles of Heavy Waxn Bregwer. contributed articles of HENRY WARD BEECHER, it contains also contributions from well-known and eminent writers, household stories, general correspondence, and a careful summary of do-mestic and foreign religious intelligence. Its circulation has more than doubled during the past month, since Mr. Buncuan's identification

The great national exposition of the progress of the industrial arts, which has been held in this city for several weeks under the auspices of the American Institute, closes Saturday, October 30. We are pleased to learn that it has been very suc-

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Pavern Hyanswers on Senday, the Sith, sinefed the French Catholic Church early in the morning, after which he went to Plymouth Church and heard Henry Ward Beecher, by whom he was cordially welcomed at the close of the service. Pere Hyaninthe has been disposessed of all his monastic charges.

The Virginia Legislature, October 18, elected Lieutemant-Governor Lewis and Judge Johnston United States Benatore.

The Tennessee Legislature, on October 28, elected Henry Cooper to be United States Senatore in place of Fowier, whose term expires in March, 1871. Ex-President Johnson was defeated, Cooper receiving 55 votes and Johnson was defeated, Cooper receiving 55 votes

ident Johnson was defeated, Cooper receiving 25 votes and Johnson 61.

The efficial majority of Governor Geary, in Pennsylvania, is 4006. Judge Williams's majority is 5308.

Hapte's majority for Governor, in Othe, is 5008. The Republicans have secured a majority of one in the Renate and three in the House.

The annual reunion of the Army of the Tennessee is to take place at Louisville, Kentincky, November 17 and 18.

and 18.

The Western Members of Congress, it is stated, are generally favorable to the removal of the capital out West. A test vote is expected to take place on a proposition for an appropriation to erect new buildings for the State and War Departments.

The privateer Caba, at Wilmington, was libeled on Cotober 19 by the United States courts, and surrendered to the gun-boat Profit. Capitain Higgins was held as a prisoner of war, and the crew were put ashere.

deved to the gun-boat Profic. Captain Higgins was held as a prisoner of war, and the crew were pot ashore.

Alexander H. Stephens has been confined to his house since last February by Illnoss. He has little hope of ever leaving home again.

Chicago has just capanized a Stock Exchange.

The New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects gave their annual anhibition and reception on the night of the 18th dit, at their new rooms, sit Broadway. The Seature of the evening was the inauguration of the Architectural Library of the City of New York, under the anaptices of the Chapter. In Southwest Colorado a party of mountaineers recently discovered the bones of six men and farity-six horses, which are supposed to be the remains of a pertion of one of General Fermani's exploring partice, lest twenty years ago.

A status of Abrisham Lincoln was unveiled in Propect Park, Brooklys, October 31, with imposing ceremonics. He A. A. Low presided, and Rev. Dr. Storm delivered the cration.

Two distinct shocks of earthquake were felt in New Regisand on the morning of October 33, Boston, Worcester, and several other towns in other portions of the Eastern States being shaken to snot an extent that the people were greatly frightened, although not hurt.

The new postage stamps have been designed by the cesser, and several other towns in other portions of the Kastern Starce being shaken to such an extent that the people were greatly frightened, although not hart.

The new postage stamps have been designed by the Bureau of Engraving, and are said to be a great improvement on the old ones and on those now in use.
Fresident Grant's head is to be on them.

Thomas Ewing, Sen., was taken suddenly ill in the Supreme Court Chamber at Washington on the trid alt, while somewhat excitedly arguing a case in which to had been comed for tweety-dwe years.

John Swanson, proprieter of an extensive cotton factor, near Stockholm, Sweden, has just purchased 19,000 acres of land in Dunklin and Stockard counties, Mascorn, where he will establish colonies, build factories, mills, etc., and carry on the cultivation and manufacture of cotton. The enterprise will give employment to 1800 families, part of whom are on the way from Sweden, and the rest will soon follow.

Masters if and 13 of the Foll of Henor, just issued by the War Department, show that nearly 14,000 Union soldiers are interred in the national consistery near Memphis, Tousessee, of whom 4000 are colored: stool are interred at Chalmatic, Louisiana: 16,675 at Marietta, Georgia, Fort Doueleon, Chaltanonga, Murthreeborough, Stone Eliver, and Knouville. Tempessee.

At the recent election in California for Judges of the Supreme Court the Democratic candidates were succasaful by a large majority.

The Congressional Select Committee on American havingation Interests, which has just held seasions in this city, Boston, and Portland, Mains, visited Fall Hiver, Massachusetts, on Friday, and there adjoursed, to meet in Philadelphia on the first Tousday in December. We learn that the questions before the Committies were finally narrowed down to there distinct proostitous, one or all of which will probably be recommended to Congress. These are: Remission of all driles on materials entering into the construction of ships; the permitting of Streign ships to be perc

cios.

Governor Holden, of North Carolins, has been compelled to issue a proclamation threstening the enforcement of mardal haw in Lenoir, Jones, Orange, and Chatham counties, unless the disturbances which have for some time prevailed therein shall cause. Thefix and murders have been committed; jails broken open; officers of the law assassinated; and coloced men hanged. Indeed, civil law has been put at definere, and there is no security for life and property. The far-famed Colliseum of Boston was drawn at a lottery October 23.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Upon the capture of Valentia by the Government troops the Spanish Republicans appear to have given in. As soon as their defeat was certain General Prim declared himself a Monarchist. The Duke of Montpender now appears to have the fairest charce of monceeding to the Spanish throne. General Prim has declared in the Cortest that should any decrees of the Papal Church prove hostile to the Spanish Constitution they will be declared null and vold. Three thousand more troops have been ordered to Osha to assist in quelling the insurrection.

Mail advices from Nassau state that the steamer Lillian, which rathed with an expectitionary force from Florida for Cuba, has been captured by the British gan-boat Lepseisy and taken into Nassau, where she was released by the suthoutless under the rather of the Attorney-General that she could not legally be beld.

the Attorney-General that she could not legally be beld.

The Papal Army at Rome was reinforced by the arrival of M recruits from Canada, October 20.

Hos. William H. Seward arrived at Mannanilla October 7. He was there not by the Governor of Collina, who, in the name of Preddest Juares, gave him a cordial welcome as the great of Maxico.

In the Republic of Maxico there are now 2000 miles of telegraph in operation. Bit railroads are in progress, and 340 miles of railroad are in active operation.

The greatest Catholic procession ever witnessed in Montreal took place October 11—over 20,000 people participating in the demonstration. This was on the occasion of the removal of the relice of St. Sano from Bondecours church to the Richop's palace.

It now seems to be cartain that the Sace Canal will have to be decoured before it can be of much service to commerce.

The Glissions Coblinat mines an amount to the Theory of the commerce o have to be despened before it can be of much service to commerce.

The Gladstone Cabinet refuses an amnesty to the revolutionary political prisoners in Ireland.

The Barl of Berby died on the morning of October 28, in his Tast year.

The cholera has made fearful ravages in India during the past summer. Since 1600 there has been no hot season so fatal to European residents.

A temple has been recenfly erected in Calcutta by the Brahmo Somaj—a religious organization founded thirty years ago by an educated Bengales, who despised the faith of his native country and was opposed to idolstry, but who at the name time doubted the claims of Christianity, The service of this new temple countries merely of hymna, prayers, meditations, tourserscious, and readings.

HON. JOHN R. BRADY.

Hos. JOHN R. BRADY.

THE manimous nomination of the Hon. JOHN R. BRADT for Justice of the Supreme Court, by the Convention of the Democratic party of this city, is a well-deserved tribute to the capacity and integrity of one of the ablest and most highly esteemed gentlemen on the Bench. Judge Bigare was first elected to the Common Pleas in 1856. In 1862 he was re-elected, having received first the unusual compliment of the Republican non-ination, and subsequently of every political or-guaization in the city. He was consequently unanimously elected. In 1867 he was re-electwas not an aspirant for the normal state of the was re-elect-was not an aspirant for the nomination that has just been tendered him, being satisfied with his present position in the Common Pleas. The nomination sought him, not be the nomination.

Indeed, he positively declined to be a candidate against Judge CLERKE, and only when it had been determined by the Tammany leaders not to been determined by the Tammany leaders not to renominate that gentleman did he yield to the urgost solicitations of friends of all parties, and accept. During the war Judge Baxer was among the first to proclaim his unswerving de-vious to the Union. During his service of four-teen years on the Bench he has enjoyed the re-spect of the lear and the community, alike for the putity of his personal character and his obili-ty and integrity as a Judge.

THE NEW FISH MARKET.

This new building erected at Fulton Ferry for a Fish Market is now nearly pleted; it was opened for business on Octo-ber 25. The old fish market, on the same site, was a nuisance; but the new structure is an ornament to that portion of the city. The building is of wood; it is 193 feet long by 68 feet wide, and is two stories high. The roof is surmount-ed by three cupolas, each supporting a flag-staff, as shown in our sketch; and the front has three gables. There are eighteen entrances, each having a solid door with a large win-dow above it. The interior is admirably arranged for the purposes of a market. The walls are painted a drab color, and the ceiling light blue. The cost of the building is $120,000.

This market is erected by the Fulton Market Fishmongers' As-sociation, incorporated during the present year, and is devoted exclusively to wholesale business, supplying all the retail dealers of New York and adjacent cities, and furnishing large quantities of fish to distant cities. Two hundred and fifty vessels are employed in the fisheries of this marreseas are employed in the fisheries of this mar-ket; and there are frequently discharging at the same time from fifteen to twenty vessels, each having from 15,000 to 25,000 pounds of fish on board. The fishing-grounds extend from Cape May to Cape Sable. Lobsters are caught from Cape Cod to the northern coast of Maine. The green turtles displayed for sale in the market are not taken by vessels specially fitted out for the business, but are brought to New York on fruit vessels from the West India Islands and Florida. The Fishmongers' Association lessed the da. The Fishmongers' Association issues the land along East River on which their market is built for $5000 per year, with the right of using one half of the basin at the rear of the building, the Association agreeing to keep the pier in re-

An elegant entertainment was given on the evening of October 18 in the market, by the Association, as a formal opening of the institution. Among the prominent gentlemen present were Rev. H. W. Brechen, Rev. Hyatt Setts, Rev. Mr. HAMMOND, Rev. Mr. GALLAGHER, General Stoums, Colonel Thumas Divors, and many of-ficials of the city government. A magnificent supper was provided, and dancing was kept up until a late hour.

PRES. ELIOT. OF HARVARD.

CHARLES WILLIAM Essor, who on the 19th of October was augurated President of Harvard College, is a young man, a grad-uate of the class of 1853, and for several years adjunct Profess-or of Mathematics and Chemistry on the col-lege staff. President ELIOT is a native of Boston; he belongs to the ELIOT family so long identified with the history of that city. His father, the Hon. S. A. Ellor, was formerly a Representative in Congress, and at another time the Mayor of Boston. In 1863 CHARLES W. Extor resigned his professorship, and became connected with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston, as a professor. He was abroad year before last in company with Presi-dent ROGERS, of the Institute, when the latter was on his mission from Massachu-setts to the Paris Ex-position. Mr. ELIOT, while in college, was an oursman, and is said to have been the stroke our of the first Harvard Bost Club.

Hon. JOHN H. CLIPPORD, who inducted him into office, thus closed his address to him on that " Endowed with intellectual tastes and moral characteristics, and accustomed to the prosecu-tion of studies, all eminently fitted to prepare you for your great work; familiar with all the de-partments, both of pupilage and instruction, in the institution, within whose walls you have been nurtured and almost domesticated, as in a second home; your judgment enlarged and strength-ened by the ripened fruits of foreign travel, and the observation and study of the best processes of education at home and abroad; receiving a generous and cordial welcome from your learned and accomplished associates to their compani ship and chieftainship; and added to all these personal and social qualifications an hereditary loyalty to the institution which can not fail to in spire the heart of a son whose honored father, so many of us remember, was one of its most devoted, efficient, and valued friends—there seems nothing wanting to our heart-felt congrutula-tions on this day, both to the university and

President Euror's inaugural address was an admirable lecture upon college education.

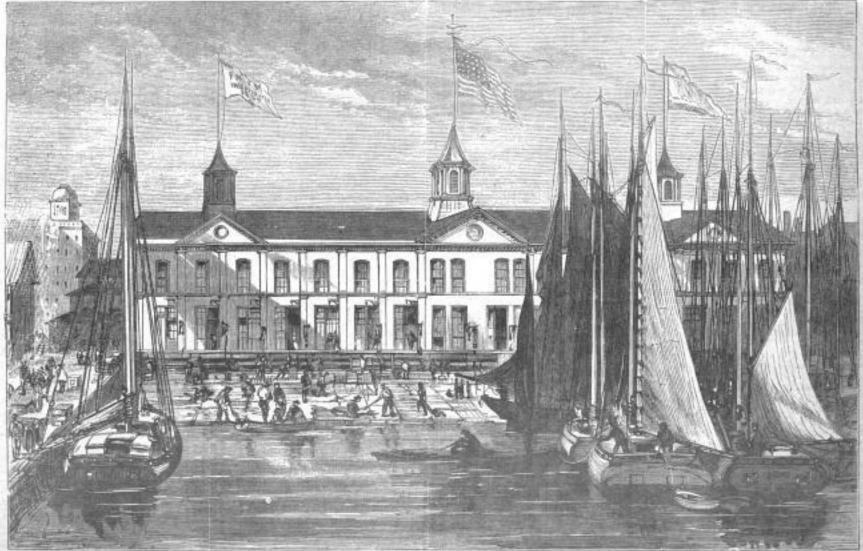

CHARLES W. ELJOT, PRESIDENT OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY. (PROTOGRAPHED BY JOBN A. WEIPPLE.)

THE DRAGON OF LYME REGIS.

The British Museum has lately received the fossil remains of a flying dragon, measuring upward of four feet from tip to tip of the expanded wings. The bones of the head, wings, legs, tail, and great part of the trunk, with the ribe, bladebones, and collar-bones, are imbedded in dark lina shale from Lyme Regis, on the Dorsetshire coast. The head is large in proportion to the trunk, and the tail is as long as the rest of the body: it is extended in a straight, stiff line, the vertebral bones being surrounded and bound together by bandles of fine, long, needle-shaped bones: it is supposed to have served to keep outstratched, or to sustain, a large expanse of the flying membrane or parachute, which extended from the tips of the wings to the feet, and spread abong the space between the hind-limbs and tail, after the fashion of certain bats.

The first indication of this measure was described by Buckland in the "Transactions of the Geological Society," and is referred to in his "Bridgewater Treatise," under the name of Preredectyles measuremy. The subsequently acquired head and tail give characters of the teeth and other parts, which establish a distinct generic form in the family of Flying Reptiles. The animal will be described in the next volume of the Monographs of the Palacontegraphical Society. Two British Museum has lately received the Monographs of the Palaeontographical Society.

NEW FISH MARKET, NEW YORK CITY .- [SKERGRED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

THE MOTHER OF OSOPO.

Upon the west bank of the Tagliamento, a river flowing through the Venetian territory, there stand the ruins of Osopo, which in 1859 was a flourishing village, with about 900 inhab-

But during the Italian war with Austria the German troops surrounded it. They forbade any one to pass in or out, so that the villagers could procure no food. Their reason for starying the village was this: It was situated at the foot of a rocky cliff, on whose summit stood a fortress, which the Austrians could not succeed in taking, on account of the only road up the cliff being so narrow and dangerous that the soldiers could only go up it one by one. The Italian garrison, of course, kept a sharp look-out on the path. The only resource of the Austrians, therefore, was to starve the village, in the house that companion for the helpless in the hope that compassion for the helpless women and children, dying of hunger, would induce the fortress to surrender. All the men who could do any thing had fled to join the Italian army.

One evening in September, when every thing looked hot, dried up, and dusty, two women were sitting together on the door-step of one of the best-looking houses in Osopo. The house-door opened into a large room furnished with long wooden tables and benches, and surround-ed with shelves, on which stood a quantity of glasses and red terra-cotta jugs. Over the door hung a bunch of grapes, and the words, "Osteria, Buon Vino," were painted in bright

This had been the inn of Osopo, but it was deserted now. The rooms were drearily clean and empty; the glasses dusty and untouched. One of the two women was the mistress of the inn, and she held by the hand her two boyspale, thin, half-starved little fellows of about three and four years old. The other woman, whose name was Maddalena, looked younger and rather less starved than the other. They were dressed nearly alike, in skirts of derk "bordsta," a kind of strong cotton, with white bodiess, and bright-colored handkerchiefs crossand the state of t through them.

Maddalena had shoes on, but Rosina's foot were lore.

"Look, Rosa," said the former, giving her friend a basket which contained some bunches of grapes and a little Indian corn flour.

"No, Maddalena," said Rosina, and she pash-ed it away; "a thousand thanks, but I can not rob you of your food."

"Nessense; you know I am alone, and I

"Nessense: you knew I am alone, and I deprive no one else of it. It is mine, and I really can not bear to see those two children, who but a short month ago were the finest in Osopo, dwindling awny. Besides, I no longer I have kept a handful of flour to make my 'polenta' for supper, and this evening I go to Udine. Come behind the house, Rosina, and you will see how the black clouds are hanging over the fortress and the hills all round. Tonight there will be a 'temporale,' one of those great autumn thunder-storms, and when the light-ning is flashing, and the thunder and ratu have driven even the Austrian sentinel- under shelter, I will pass through like a flash of the lightning itself. They will not dream of any one's being out on such a night. To-morrow I shall be at Udine; the o I have friends, and shall feed work directly. I'erhaps, too, I may see your husband there, and when he hears about you he will swim the river, as some of our soldiers from the fortress once did, and come to help you."

"I CAN NOT DRAG THEM ALONG WITH ME, AND I AM THEIR MOTHER."

Rosina's eyes firshol, and she shook her head.

Rosina's eyes flashed, and she shook her head,
"That is what you and all the village think,"
she said; "that my husband has forgotten me, and cares not what comes of me and his little ones. But I know! I know that he lies cold and dend on one of the battle fields, or he would be here at my side. Ah! I would go with you, cara, if it were not for those poor little creatures;
I can not draw those above with we word I am I can not drag then along with me, and I am their mother. Santa Maria Vergine! I love them more than life, Maddalona; but in this way we shall all three die together. What shall I do when that which you brought is exhausted? But you must go. You were right, for it rains already. A happy journey? I will pray for you "And so will I, dear Rosa; I will do my best to help you. A rivedered, then. In heaven, per-

Et.

Tu sy night Rusina put her children to sleep after their scrap of supper, and then sat listening with pleasure to the rain and thunder that were aiding her friend's escape, and thinking, "To-morrow she will be at Udine. Perhaps help will soon come.

But each day she rose with the same hope, and each day was disappointed. On the eighth evening after Maddalena's departure Rosina gave the children the last hit of the food she had brought, made them say their prayers, together with one for the safe return of the "Babbo," which they had said night and morning for a month past, and put them to bed. Then she bent over the elder and said, as calmly as she could,

"Nino must be good to-morrow, and take care Name must be goes to morrow, and make care of Cicio. Mammina is going to get bread. Old Natalia, who lives opposite, will come and dress you, and give you some breakfast, and stay till mamma comes back in the evening. Addio, Addio, mamma," said the sleepy child. The mother kissed those during faces again and again; then she looked out. It was a dark, cloudy night. She put on a black shawl, and went to the house opposite. Taking up a pebble she threw it at a window, which presently opened, and some one looked out. and some one looked out.

"Natalia," said Rosina, "to-night I shall pass the Austrian ranks, and go to Udine to fetch bread for the little ones. For the love of God go to them in the morning, dress them, feed them, and take care of them till I return. At this time to-morrow I shall be here again."

"Mad girl!" grambled the old crone, "do you want to get shot? There's that Maddalena, who went away a week ago, and has not been heard of sizes." heard of since

"Is it likely she should?" half laughed Rosina to herself.

"As for the brate, I'll go to them; but as to feeding them, why, I've tasted nothing myself for two days."

Rosina threw something tied in a handkerchief in at the window, which came thump on the room-floor, saying, as she did so,

"In that are four apples I have saved. They'll keep up life in them for to-morrow till I come; and then I'll give you some bread. Natalia. For God's sake, remember." And she walked "Fool," muttered the old woman. "Fool," mattered the our minute.

did she say? The brats can do without. I dare say they've eaten to-day, and well too. Oh, this le's a welf that gains, gnaws!" She hunger! It's a wolf that grows, grows!" She felt for the bundle, and almost involuntarily bit a piece of one apple.

Rosaxa did not know that almost before she left the village her children's food had already been consmocil,

She wilked so and on. There was the out-line of the enum: she could distinctly hear the sentinel's step. Forward! forward! she was al-most past. Also! the moon, till now hidder be-bind dense clouds, came and. She went d. wn on-her hands and knows behind a hedge; a dried twig sumpped under her weight. The sentinel turned: "Who goes there?" She tried to run; it was too late. The soldier was coming on, his musket raised.

"Mater, one pro nobis." She turned and dromed on her knows. "Miscriccordia! I want She unlked on and on. There was the out-

"Mater, one pro nobis." She turned and drupped on her knees. "Misericordia! I want to harm no one, only to get head for my inno-cent behass. Brend! for merey's sake!" "Firead!" The Croat Isaghed mackingly, and held out half a black load. Her eyes gleom-ing with mingled fear and hope, she stretched out her hand, and advanced a few steps to take to the hand. Only a few. There was a shot, a long, fearful shrick, and a ball from the Creat's musket struck the mother's forehead. Did the sentinel laugh as he returned to his post?

67. ANN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN, N.Y.-Serrourd by T. R. Davis.-[See Ferst Page.]

"A LITTLE HAND I COULD NOT SEE, SWEPT O'ER THE TREMBLING KEYS."-[SEE PAGE TIG.]

IV.

THE next evening two little children were wan dering along the road from Osopo. The small, transparent forms of skin and bone had no cov-ering but a torn shirt. They wandered at last, as if by instinct, to where a figure lay, stiff and as if by instinct, to where a figure lay, stiff and rigid, on the ground. They clung round it, crying, "Mamma, mammina, Natalia never came to dress us, nobody gave us any thing to est. Up—come, mamma. How cold you are! Why do you sleep so long?"
The fort was taken at last, and both it and the village were demolished. If the husband and father ever lived to return to his native place he would have found nothing but charred rains, and in the little cemetery a small wooden cross to mark the resting-place of all that he loved on

A BLIND MAN'S LOVE. BY BOBERT BUCHANAN. See Illustration on Page 708.

I swam the humming of the streets forever, As in a sleep—the people came and went Around my sest unseen, like shapes that pass Unseen, but heard, in hannied lands; and oft Light lengther and a motion close around me, And gentle speech, disturb'd me. What to me Was beauteous interchange of day and night— The coming and the going of the sun, Gathering grayness, and the rising moon— Gathering grayness, and the rising moon... And what to me was light of our or stars, Since light and darkness came and went around, Unmark'd by weary eyes that could not see, That had not seen the day for seven years! Only, when sunlight daily went away, My world grow stiller, colder—that we

And I was hard and dall at twenty-three Dull with my grief, hard to the core from dwelling, Steeping or waking, in the dark so long; One, and one pleasure only had the power And trouble all my soul, until it set A sunshine of its own. A light footfall, A tender greeting, futlering of a dress, A touch as soft as is a rose's leaf, That fittlers to the grass and makes no sound. These were the intimations of a world Beyond my sorrow, the admonishings Which sweeten'd that dall gloom wherein I dwelt. Which awasten'd that dail gloom wherein I dwell. Oh, sweeter far than any beanteous thing The eye could look upon, one little name, One little soft sweet name, I murman'd o'er, Sochly, to keep my heart still: ah i the name, The . "the living name I murman'd o'er, And saw in golden letters in the dark! May! May! May! May!—it brought me back the time When I could see the roses and the leaves. The silver splesh of water, the blue hills Settled in sunny weather! May! May! May! I marman'd it forever to my heart, For joy, for joy of it!.... Sweeter than all To sit within my shadowland, and hear That one voice singing, while a little hand I could not see, swept o'er the trembiling keys, I could not see, swept o'er the trembling keys, And all the air around me seemed to melt. Into a vapor, in whose midst there sat One sweet girl-shape before an instrument Her bright ourls shining, and her eyes of bine Looking on see! Then the sweet sound would can The vision made of music died away,

At seventeen, a fever struck me down, And I arces, and found the world was gone, And nothing but a shadow world remain'd. Six weary years we dwelt in London town, My mother seeking for her stricken a Such help and skill as only could be Such seep and actilities only down to found.

In that great cloud of sound; for each it was,
And nothing more, to me. But neight avail'd!

All skill fell powerless. will those weary eyes
Bebeld not.—still I wearled and grew hard.—

Still meen'd and pray'd to God that I might die,
'I'll that new friend, a neighbor's child, came near,
Made light of more, neve my acel without Made light of music, gave my soul within Ryes to perceive and passion to create, And haunded me with trach, and scent, and sound, Such as made darkness more divine at times Than seeing and the sunshine.

Strange as a trumpet wakening the dead To wonder and white robes, came blessed light To wonder and white robes, came ble Light, light—a revelation; and I saw. Tet, for a time, the motion of the world Look'd dim and ghostly—shapes like phantoms on Strange as those wondrons dashes on the ball of darkness, and my spirit was oppress'd With the maccustom'd burden of the sense. Blow, as a lily opens, leaf by leaf, Light deepen's—brightening, brightening— Fall-orb'd, great, golden as a lily's beart, Unclosed God's perfect day.

Then, as I sat, Breathless with the new bliss of the bright world, Breathless will the new biles of the bright world, Soft motion and the flutter of a dress Disturb'd me. Turning, redisnt as a rose, I saw a face I knew not: strange and meck, Not because-were not luminous, looks not light, Like those which I had pictured in my dream; Yet the face smiled upon me eagerly, And lighten'd as it smiled—while, darkening, And nighter's as it emission-while, derkening I flash'd and number'd learticalete works, And, trembling like a leaf, she cried alond In the same voice that I had loved so long In darkness—in the same beloved voice That I had fundled in my shadow-land: "Do you not know me? I am May!" I shiver'd and felt cold.

For all the world Seem'd bitter and a cheet. The face I dream'd, The light young delicate face with eyes of blue, Had faded in the golden light of day; And in its place a pensive twilight check, A common creature of the cisy, with eyes Not imminous like the eyes I made in dream, Linger'd and smiled. The world seem'd suddenly Stale and unprofitable-all the blise of light Was bitter—all the fragrant sense of love Seem'd like a wither'd feast-day poey found At daybreak, when the revelers are gone,

In the stale-smalling ball-coom of the feast.
Then I beheld her, like a frighten'd hind,
With widening cychalic shrink; and feeling shamed
To look so coldly on my little friend,
I equeend a feeble smile into my cheeks,
And took her hand; she, futtering from my touch,
Stood marker, and I wan he as she litted. And took her hand: she, ficthering from my to Stood musing; and I saw her as she lived— A pensive woman, delicate-limb'd, and small, With brown hair braided o'er Madonna brown, And dark eyes suffering from the gentle light They shed on others: on her brow the light Falling subdued and spettle. This my May! This golden-hair, we spirit of my dream! Nay, then, the world was bitter and a cheet!

Ah, love, my love! come nearer. Let me kins
The broad, pure brow: and, kinsing, may I kins Away all sorrow. Sweeter this ach hair,
Silver'd with the miraculous snows of time,
Than all the luminous locks that e'er beguiled
Rash sallors to the shallows! Tet, at first,
This perfect face repell'd me—it arose
Coldry, like something strange, to which the voice
I knew so well seem'd allen; and I loathed
The light for changing thee! The light for changing thee!

Then, for long days

The face withdraw, and left me to my thoughts.

And the streets murmar'd, and the world look'd bright,

And shadow-land had died into a drawn. Ne'er had I felt so utterly alone! Yes, darkness had been blest society: But now the light was solltude ind

Now shall I tell by what slow witchery, Dear love, I grew to years for those soft eyes And that pole, asking face. How, in the light That was as darkness, unaware, again I bearben'd for thy foot; and how I wept, I bearben'd for thy foot; and how I wept, When from a distant chamber came to mine The trouble of thy singing. Then I cried Thy name out loudly, like a fever'd man, And gently up before me rose again The twilight of thy face; and all at once I felt I loved it—not as young men love—Rot with the fever'd humor of the flesh—Not as I hand the avendment for lo deser-Not as I loved that wondrous face in drear But strangely, clingingly, and belplessly, As weary men ask rest, as fever'd lips Crave coolness, as in the parch'd Syrian sands, Under the sun's insuferable blase, Men seek the shadow of the locust-tree.

Yes, how I love thee! Descert, draw the blind, And do not light the lamp, but let me sit in darkness as of old; and play to me The time I loved so in my shadow-land, When I conceived thee other than thou wert, Yet never purer, dearer 1....80, O Soul, What pictures come and fade before thy sight! All life is hush'd—the world, the daylight fades To twilight and a silvery star of sound !

PERHAPS IT WAS BETTER SO. AN OLD WOMAN'S SKETCH.

BARROUTE is a pretty little watering-place in the South. I have lived there a good many years, and have seen many changes in what was formerly a little fishing-village, and now strives to be designated as a town. There is scarcely a to be designated as a town. There is scarcely a chine along the coast that I do not know, and can not connect with some expedition; scarcely a path in the quiet dim pine-woods that I have not trodden in fine weather and wet, in early norming or moonlit night. It is a quiet place; young people are apt to call it "slow." There is no promenade. The pier is an unpretentious rude structure. Very few theatrical or musical people penetrate so far beyond the pale of civilization, and the few balls are given by the countries families likely account. ty families living around; still, we can boast of a post with long hair, and his particular friend an emiment art-critic—a little man with a hald head and a long beard. Itinerant musi-cians bring down the last airs from the last opera with their organs and German bands, and set one wondering how music has degenerated with-in the present generation. The circulating li-heavy is a constant source of interest, and one of the most exciting incidents is the arrival of a batch of new novels from town. I am very fond of reading; an old maid, with but few friends, I do not know how I should pass the long nights without my books; and though sometimes the troubles of the young people keep me awake at night, still I feel certain that when I get the third volume they will all be made happy, and that I shall be happy too.

One wet aftern n I put on my big cloak, and One wet afternoon I put on my big cloak, and hidding my maid get my tea by the time I re-turned, I set out for the library. Luckily a new parcel had just arrived, and after a perplexing selection, and having quite a heap in my arms, I was ascending the cliff to my house when I met Joliffe, the postman. There was a letter for me —a rare cocurrence—and so, doubly freighted, I reached home, where I found every thing warm and comfortable after the rain and wind outside. The letter was from Ethel Berry.

"My roas Muss Brown?"—it said.—"Mamma and I are coming to Barmonth in a few days. We do so long to see you and the deer old place again. It is quite saiding here; and I am so thred of the people and ranket of town. I suppose every thing and every body are exactly as they were; nothing changes with "A glimpse of the sea, a blow on the cliff, and the sight of your dear face will do me a world of good. Somebody's coming too!

"Your loving Ernen."

This was just like Ethel, so fond of quiet, and This was just like Ethel, so fond of quiet, and loving Barmouth so truly. I was so glad to hear she was coming down again, for I looked upon her as a dear child of my own. I wondered who "Somebody" was. Not a ladyfriend, or she would have said who. I could scarcely think of Ethel having a lover. I knew I should be jealous, and wonder why they could not leave her with me instead of wishing to take her away, when there were so many girls in the world. But I thought Ethel must be nicer than any of them, and could hardly wonder at any word. But I mought hardly wonder at any man thinking so too; and then she wrote as though she was so happy. I felt quite delight-ed to know that, though full of curiosity, and told my maid that I expected visitors in a few days, and we began planning means to receive them. My book seemed quite uninteresting aft-er this, although there was a wicked father and er this, although there was a wicked father and a patient suffering daughter in it, who would have made me cry at other times. Well, one morning when the sun was shining brightly upon the blue sea and chalk cliffs, and the wind was blowing freshly upon me as I was trimming my rose-trees in the garden, I saw a figure that I knew so well coming lightly toward me, and presently I had my dear in my arms. She was just the same. Tall and pale, her dark blue eyes with that tender pathetic look in them that is quite indescribable, and her golden-brown hair falling about her shoulders.

falling about her shoulders.

"And how are you and the roses? You look quite beautiful, though I do believe you're crying. Oh, how brilliant every thing is here, how fresh and bright! Sit down, and tell me about every body and every thing."

And I had to tell of all that had occurred for the last six months, from how poor Lord Kelley bore the loss of his wife, to Joliffe the poetman, and the last litter of puppies.

"And now, in return for all this valuable information," I said, "sell me, Ethel, who 'Some-body' is?"

e blushed, and then with a little laugh "Ob, I must not tell you now; I will show him perhaps, presently; and he doesn't bite." And she began admiring the roses and my last poor little water-color sketches, so that I did not press her to tell me more.

"And now," she said, presently, "I must take you to memma, who would have so liked to come to you if she could."

So I donned my hat and cloak, and we set off for Thirley House, where they lived when in Barmouth. It was surely one of the most beautiful mornings I ever remember; even in the dense woods that led to the Hall the sun lit up the vistas and usually dark nooks, and threw vivid shadows across the path in a manner that delighted Ethel, who sniffed the sweet air as she danced along, as I have seen many people do who have been living in a big smoky town. As we were walking we heard some one whistling

"Faites-hi wer event" from "Faust."
"Somebody's coming," said Ethel, regulshly, and presently the whistler same in sight, and I was introduced to Mr. Arthur Dawlish. He was was introduced to Mr. Arthur Pawhsh. He was a large-limbed young man, with dark brown hair and wavy brown beard; decidedly handsome, and knowing it. There was a languid grace in his bow to me, and indeed a general air of sleepy complacency that was rather irritating.

"So glad to know you," he said, amiling; "I have heard so much about you from Ethel, and

'pon my bonor it's quite remantic meeting in a wood in this way. I hear you paint, and all that sort of thing; rather nice bits about here, I should think. Mrs. Berry and Miss Crawford are waiting for you, so perhaps we'd better go to them;" and then we went on to the Hall. Upon the terrace we found Mrs. Berry, a no-Upon the terrace we found Mrs. Berry, a no-ble-looking woman, with the same dark blue va-thetic eyes as Ethel's, walking about with her crutch, and Georgiana Crawford, daughter of General Crawford, beside her-a medium-sized General Crawford, beside ner—a meaning and girl of four-and-twenty, with very black hair, dark brown eyes, and very vivacious. Old men and women become spectators to the little tragedies and comedies enacted by the young, and, little noticed themselves, they see much that exlittle noticed themselves, they see much that ec-capes the more active members; and I, gossip-ing with Mrs. Berry, noticed how completely Miss Crawford monopolised Arthur Dawlish, and how animated he became when speaking to her, and then half unconsciously I compared her to Ethel, and though she talked well, I thought to Ethes, and though the talked well, I thought her somewhat Frenchified animation and loud laugh contrasted unfavorably with Ethel's quiet smile and air of repose. I took Ethel home with me that night, and when we had parted from our escort, Mr. Dawlish, she said:

"Isn't he nice? And oh, if you knew how good and patient he is, and how much he loves me, and I love him? We were engaged in London, and are to be married in June, and—isn't he handsome?"

he handsome?

"He is very handsome," I said, cheerily.
"Every body thinks so, but I was afraid you might not; and mamma likes him so much; so does Georgians, I think, though he says he does not like that sort of girl. Very rude, as I told him." And so she ran on, and I listened, glad to think my dear friend was so happy.

And so day after day passed, and I was constantly going to the Hall, or Ethel and Miss Crawford and Dawlish came as a deputation to ask me if I omitted doing so. The more I saw of Miss Crawford the less I liked her; I did not indifferent think with Ethel that Dawlish was so indifferent to her-indeed, he seemed only too much inter-ested—and observing him look after her when she moved about, and an eagerness in his speech to her that he never showed with Ethel, a daily-growing dread took possession of me that I in vain tried to shake off, which God knows was vain tried to shake off, which God knows was only too soon confirmed. One morning I was painting in my Herie sitting-room; the morning was oppressively warm, and every thing was so still that I could hear the plash of the waves still that I could hear the plash of the waves upon the shore beneath the cliffs. Mr. Dawlish was in the garden, smoking one of my rose-trees which was suffering from blights, Ethel and Georgiana superintending, the latter trying to smoke a cigarette that he had made for her. It was so hot that I leaned back in my arm-chair, musingly contemplating my sketch of a piece of broken worn cliff against a stormy gray sky, when I heard him talking earnestly, and, uncon-sciously listening, I heard him say:

"I can't stand this much longer; you know how much I love you, and I can't act this indif-ference toward you."

I was all attention now. He was not speak-

"But, Mr. Dawlish," Georgiana answered, "bow dare you speak to me thus, Sir? Are you not engaged to Ethel?"

"Of course I am; but it can be broken off—it shall! You know how I love you; why, you have made me—you have won me over. I thought I loved her until I met you; but I have only just learned what love is." learned what love is.

"You have no right to say this to me. I shall go in to Miss Browne."
"I think not. Come, we understand one another; and why act this farce when no one is by? Poor Ethel! Oh, why didn't you leave me in peace? I loved her in my contented, easy sort of way until you came, and now I only pity her."

"I am sorry to hear this," she answered. "I never dreamed you cared for me; I thought you liked me as a friend, and now you wish me to liked me as a friend, and now you wish me to be an enemy."

"Georgia, don't you like me?"

"I will tell you. I like you.—I love you, though it is wicked to say so, but I thought you were playing with me. I never dreamed you were in earnest, and I tried to go away and leave you with Ethel; but I could not—my passion was too strong. I fought, oh so hard! but I succumbed. Have pity upon me for my weakness. I ought never to have told you so much."

"If I had but met you before I was bound in homor," he said, regretfully, "we should have been spared this wretchedness."

"No, you would not have cared for me if you

So, you would not have cared for me if you had been free.

"How bitter you are! Do you want me to swear I love you more than I ever thought I could love any thing? You can not trust me,

"Trusts you implicitly, and is deceived. Ar-thur, I speak bitterly because I love so fondly. A woman ever abuses the man she loves as passionately as I love you; but I could not bear to bear you maligned by others, and if they did speak against you I would console and defend you—I would bear any thing, brave any thing, for your sake. You know it!" she said, in a pas-

"Hush, dear; we shall be overheard!" he said, hurriedly. "Scenes are so absurd, you know; I love you so much; but what will they say, pledged as I am?"

"Oh, courageous man!" she interrupted, bitterly, "what will they think of me?"

"Well, people always say horrible things and tell any amount of lies; but of course I am perfectly indifferent to any thing they may say.
Only yesterday Ethel was talking about our marriage-day, little thinking, poor child, how distant that may be. She is going to be so deceived—to suffer."

"How cold you have grown! Do I not suffer too?"

I could not bear to stay and hear more; trem-I could not bear to stay and hear more; trem-bing with indignation and diray with the shock, I went through the French window into the gar-den. Dawlish was still scated upon the grass puffing at his pipe, and Miss Crawford was stand-ing beside him swinging her straw hat in one hand, the other resting lightly upon his shoul-der. He colored slightly as I looked at him; but the strawder was decree with her would selfbut she returned my giance with her usual self-possession, as she said with one of her trilling

Come out to look for Ethal, Miss Browne? She is at the foot of the cliff gazing at the sea, as though she were Hero expecting Leander to emerge from the waves. A most charming with a ned I passed quickly down to the shore. She was seated upon a little hillock of sand beside the pier, and thinking so intently that I stood by unnoticed for some time. She was looking seaward with that far-off gaze that some eyes have when people are very happy or in great trouble. Presently she turned her head and saw me.

"Why, you have come out without your hat, and you look so pale and tired! Have you left that lasy Arthur puffing away at his pipe, and Georgie encouraging the "alaughter of the innocents?" It is so hot; and I was so happy thinking what a prize I had got among men, and how capitally we shall get on together—Arthur and I, I mean—that I could have gone on dreaming all day."

I sat down beside her.

"I are rather sized dear." and that was all I

I am rather sired, dear;" and that was all I bies.

It all seemed like a bad dream. How could I break it to her? she trusted him so entirely; to her he was so good and true. he really cared much for Miss Crawford—it was merely a passing whim with him; he seemed so weak, unstable, and so little worthy of trust that I shuddered to think of my darling being married to such a man; but if I remained silent aft-er what I had heard; if I did as so many people do, allow things to come right, would ther come right? If they went wrong, the sin would rest with me; and I knew Ethel's beautiful confidence, once rudely abused, could never be restored.

"Oh, what can I do!" I thought, with her cmall hand in mine; "she looks upon me as a guide, an advisor, and I am so unfit for a great ordeal that the sight of her happiness, and the knowledge that I can blight it forever, makes a

I could not do it; I sat silent and wretched, wondering how it would all end. to the house, and Ethel joined them on the lawn; while I, pleading a headache, went to my room to think over my trouble. Dinner came, and I tried to be cheerful, and join in the running talk of the young people; then Dawlish proposed a stroll upon the pier as the only place where we should get a breath of air, which might do my

It was a beautiful evening. The sun was sink-ing in a blaze of crimson and gold, pointing the sea, with the faimest ripple on its face, the old black pier, and the bests gently rising and full-ing, with rese-color. The hills over at White-cliff were lines of blue and mauve. People were cliff were lines of blue and mauve. People were in groups upon the pier and beach, love-making, flirting, and gossiping. The long-haired poet and his inseparable companion were the centres of admiring circles; fathers were spelling out their rewspapers in the fading light, while children proffered to them trophies in the shape of tiny fish that they capeured from the sen. The wet shingle sparkled like a mass of rude jewels, and the distant pine-woods looked vividly green and cool beyond the ruddy cliffs. and cool beyond the ruddy cliffs.

Digitized by Google

Every thing was so calm and peaceful that we scarcely cared to talk, and the loud laughter of the fishermen about the beach jarred upon the senses. We sat down upon a seat above the wooden steps leading to the water, Dawlish moodily smoking, and Ethel looking at him from time to time wonderingly. He was usu-ally in such equable spirits that she was puzzling over his air of preoccupation. Miss Crawford sat upon the steps with a book upon her knees, but she was not reading. The sun sank beneath ridges of angry-looking red, the hills grew pale and indistinct. Impatiently knocking the ashes from his pipe, and shaking himself like a big Newfoundland dog, Dawlish rose. "I shall go out for a sail," he said; "there's just wind enough to manage to crawl along. I feel hipped, and want a change of some sort. Miss Browne, will you and Ethel and Miss Craw-ford come? Though you are not a good sailor, the sea's like a big duck-pond, and the boat won't pitch a bit. Jack," he called to a fisherman ioliing in his boat, " get the sails up, I'm going out

I declined to go, dreading the mist that was gathering; and Ethel would not leave me, she said, with my head so bad; so be nodded, and seeing Jack had unfurled the sails and was wait-ing for him, he sauntered down the steps and got the boat.

"Jump out, Jack," he said; "I sha'n't want you. I'm an old hand at it, and can sail her my-self well enough."

I wouldn't go out beyond the bar if I was Sir," the man said. "We shall have a you, Sir," the man said. "We shall have a dirty night, and the wind blowing off the shore you will have to make a long tack coming in, Sir;" and he pointed anxiously at the leng black clouds fast rising in the west.

"All right, I shall be back in an hour; let

"All right, I shall be back in an hour; let go." and waving his broad straw hat to us, and budding us good-night, he settled himself com-fortably in the stern, and the boat glided slowly out to sea. We remained watching it until it be-came a mere blot upon the waves, and then, the wind growing colder, I proposed that we should return home. Some people took possession of Miss Crawford, and Ethel and I walked slowly up the cliff together, turning now and then to look at the boat as it grew smaller and smaller. When we got indoors, feeling no inclination to talk, I took up one of my novels, while Ethel sat upon the hearth-rag gazing dreamily into the fire. "Hark!" she said, suddenly; "what is that?" There was a sweeping rush and a mosning There was a sweeping rush and a meaning noise, as though the trees were bending to the wind. We went to the window. The moon shone brightly, though obscured occasionally by flying masses of thick cloud,

"Arthur will surely have come back by this time," she said, anxiously. "Shall we go down to the pier and see if any of the beatmen are still there?"

We hastily put on our cleaks and hats. The wind blew so strongly that we could scarce fight our way down to the beach against it. All was changed. The little waves had become big crest-ed breakers, and the foam was flying along the sands in great white patches. Lolling against the little wooden pier-house for shelter we found

Has Mr. Dawlish come in?" I asked. "No, Miss; and I don't think he will to-night, the wind blowing off the land. But," he added, quickly, "like enough he run into Whitseliff be-fore this wind came on. He's too good a sailor to bent against it in such a craft as an open boat.

to beat against it in such a craft as an open boat, So it's no good my waiting here any longer, is it? He'll be snagly housed by this time t'other side of the water. Good-night, Miss."

Wishing him good-night, I persuaded Ethel that he must be right, and that we had better go too. So once more we fought our way up the cliff. It was twelve o'clock when we got back. She looked pale and anxious, so I insisted upon her having a little wine. She just touched it with her lins.

with her lips.
"Do you think Arthur would be sure to get safely to Whitecliff? Oh, if any thing happened to him!" she said.

to him?" she said.
"But, my dear," I answered, as bravely as I could, though I felt terribly ill at case myself, "a sailor must surely know best. I dare say he is asleep in bed now, dreaming about you; and unless you go to bed at once, what a sorry white little face will great him when be comes back to-morrow! He will not easily forgive him-very chediently she did as I wished, and I went to my room, but I felt it useless to try and sleep through the storm. A tertible dread had taken possession of me, and I could not shake it off. I drew my easy-chair to the fire and listen-ed to the storm. I could not rend, I felt so strangely nervous and excited. I could in the stillness of the house hear every sound outside with painful distinctness—the creaking of the trees, the ratile of the essement, and the con-fused roar of the wind and waves. I cangit sight of my face in the mirror over the manule-piece, and quite started, it looked so haggard and spectral. The fire barned low, and I put on some logs of wood. At length, thoroughly worn out with the day's emotions, I had fallen into a troubled dose, when I was awakened by a low voice speaking regions. I turned, and saw Ethel in her white night-dress, peeping through the window into the night. "Oh, Arthur," she sobbed, "come back! Why did you leave me? why did I not go with you? Cruel sea, spare him, he is so dear to me; we love one another when the state of the company of the co other so dearly, you can not harm him. Why am I here safe and sheltered while you may be fighting with the waves for your dear life? If any thing happened to you I should die, I should not care to live without you. Oh, if we could but die together! How could I let you go! The treacherous sea looked so peaceful, so the treacherous sea looked so peaceful, so kind; but I ought to have felt what was coming; and I let you go, and perhaps may never see you again. My love, my love, I love you better than life, and you may die! How the strong, bitter wind blows! will it never grow still! If I could but tell you how I love you! You may often have thought se cold and thoughtless; you may never hav known low I hung upon your every look and std—"

1350 to ...

"Ethel!" Ethel!

"I coul- not sleep," she said, piteously, turning to me. "Do /ou thin; he is safe? I see you are fearful. hat can we do?" "Child," I said, "he is in the hands of God.

We weak women can not us any thing; but He can do all things. Pray to Ham; put your whole trust in Him; be sure He was hear you."

"I have prayed, but it is so hard to have to wait and do nothing. Listen to the wind; and to think he may be in it at this very moment! You do not love him as I do; you can not feel what I feel." She sank upon the floor - my feet, looking up at me pitifully. "Forgive me, but I hardly know what I am saying; and I but I hardly know what I am saying; and I wouldn't hurt you for the world."

I wrapped a thick shawl round her, and all through the weary night we remained waiting for the morning. It came at last, gray at first; then the east brightened, and the sun rose. The wind had fallen, but the sea was still angry, and the spray flew in showers over the head of the pier. The sight of the brightness and sunshine pier. The sight of the brightness and supshine was very cheering, and we felt half ashamed of our fears of the night.

"You must lie down and get some sleep, or Dawlish will be quite shocked at the sight of this little wobegons maiden when he comes over this morning," I said; and then, calling my maid, I also went to bed, and fell into a heavy, dreamless sleep. Presently Martha came up with a cup of tea.

with a cup of tea. "Parson Dale wishes to see you, ma'am; but he says he isn't in any hurry, and will wait," she said.

Dressing as quickly as possible, I hurried down stairs, where I found him walking quickly to and fro. After the usual greeting, seeing he paused and seemed at a less how to go on, I said, "You wished to see me, I think." "Mine is a terribly painful daty;" and then he stopped, and I saw how grave he was.

"A message from Mr. Dawlish?" I gasped

He had a letter in his hand, and pointed to it significantly.

"I had wished to prepare you for this sad news: this is a message about all that remains of Arthur Dawlish."

" Read."

"Head."

He gave me the open letter, written in an uncouth hand. I can hardly tell how I gathered the sease, the words so ewam before my eyes. The body of a gentleman had been washed ashore at Whitechiff—supposed to have sailed from Harmouth; then a description of Arthur followed. I wrung my hands, while he tried to console me with trite commonplaces.

"Go away, please," I said, "lest she should bear you;" and I tried to think what I should do, when I beard a low mean, and, turning, saw her standing at the doorway. She had heard all; she had the letter in her hand. I ran up to her, but she seemed unconscious that I was there. She tried to spell out the words, but no

She tried to spell out the words, but no sound came from her white lips. I took her hand to lead her away, when a tall figure entered the room; a voice stern with grief said, "Let me come to my child;" and her mother caught her in her arms. I groped my way out, a thick mist before my eyes, and left them.

Ethel had a long serious illness. The doc-tors met in my little room and held daily con-sultations; but at length the crisis was passed, and very slowly she recovered. She was very thin, and pale, and silent. Her greatest pleasure was to be drawn in an invalid-chair down to shore, where she would sit watchin for hours, and I standing beside her; and know ing that she was thinking of him whom she had lost, believing him to have been so good, tender, and true, the thought has often come to me that perhaps it was better so."

FRENCH AGRICULTURE.

THAT agriculture has prospered in France in the last thirty years is written on the face of the country to the eyes of travelers whose journeys date back so far. But, excepting in the north-western departments, French agriculture has searcely kept up with the general advance of agriculture in Western Europe. In fact, M. De Lavergne goes so far as to say that in Spain alone of the countries of Western Europe has there been so little advance in agricultural wenith and population as in five out of the six divisions into which be portions out the territory of France. This tardiness of the development of French agriculture he ascribes, in the first place, to the Revolution of 1792, and its disastrous effects in shaking the security of property, followed, as it was, by the exhausting wars of Napoleon; and, in the second place, to the extreme severity with which the system of French taxation presses on the poorer parts of the country, so much being taken from them for the purposes of the central power, and so little being spent in them. The urban population of France has more than dou-bled since the Revolution of 1789, but the rural population has remained nearly stationary. And the increase of comfort and ease has fallen almost entirely to the lot of the urban population. At Paris the average consumption of meat per head is said to be ten times as great as that in the de-partments of Crouse and Corrère, and M. De Lavergue asserts that at Paris the consumption of agricultured produce is ten times as great per beed as it is in the poorest parts of Brittany; although we confess we have some hesitation in accepting a statement which would, we should have thought, prove conclusively that these un-lucky Bretons must all die of starvation. Still agriculture has, of course, made great advances in France; and it is only when we compare the backward five-sixths of France with the improving northwestern district, or with Prussia, Belgium, or England, that we can speak of agricul-tural backwardness in France. The gross prod---- o' France is now double what it has eightly pears ago, but whereas, in the centre of the country, the yearly yield per hectare has advanced only in the proportion of 40 to 60 france, it has advanced in the northwest in the proportion of from 80 to 180 francs. A foreigner, in talking of France, scarcely realizes how very much one part of the country varies from another, and a visitor to Paris can scarcely be aware how un-sparingly that superb capital has speked the for-gotten, unvisited departments dry in order to make its magnificence possible. Why the north-west is so far ahead of the other districts of France is not easy to see. A great part of the soil is bad, and the climate is humid and comparatively cold. It has thriven because man has there waged an incessant and successful war against nature. The wealth of the northwest is the fruit of frugality, prudence, and industry.

THE PAPAL COUNCIL.

Parsons are placing their palaces at the dis-posal of the Pope for the use of the bishops dur-ing the session of the Council, and the Pope, who has recently been very dejected, has recov-ered his cheerfulness. He has been much dis-turbed by Father Hyacinthe's letter, which has produced a most painful impression at the Vat-ican. Nothing else is talked of among the re-ligious bodies, and it has fallen like a bomb on the Jesuits and reactionists. To the great wrath of the Jesuits, it has been commended in some of the preparatory congregations, where several illustrious scrows, noted for their attachment to illustrious seneas, noted for their attachment to the Church, have expressed concurrence in its views. The declaration of the German hishops also continues to be a source of vexation at the Vatican, and foreign hishops have already ar-rived who show the same hostile spirit. The Jesuits have decided rather to create a schism in the Church than submit to the Liberal tenden-cies of the age; the Liberals on their part are availed determined.

equally determined.

Meanwhile it is believed—the German bishops, Father Hyacinthe, and M. De Montalembert notwithstanding—that the ambition of the aged Pope will be realized, and that he will be pronounced infallible by the assembled hierarchy. It must be borne in mind that upward of six hundred be borne in mind that upward of six hundred bishops have already committed themselves to the proposed dogma; and all has been so well arranged in Rome that every bishop attending the Council will, by his presence alone, signify his adherence to the programme laid down by the Jesuits. "It is a strange proceeding," said the Bishop of Argyle and the Isles to his clergy a few days ago—"strange if we consider that those greated in it are navigating what they a few days ago—"strange if we consider that those engaged in it are navigating what they call the Church. The night is dark. There is no open vision. The track is unknown. The rs meet and declare that the captain is infallible, and retire, it may be, if they please, to sleep. Does this seem a grotesque description? Alas! is it not a true one? This project is surely the revelation of a great need-a proof of weakness, not, as it has been called, of strength -of the failing strength of that Church which requires such extraneous help to bolster up her once so great authority. Alas! darkness lit by such a torch can do little to illumine the profound around it. The construction of an artifi-cial means can only produce children in its own likeness. It is Saul seeking enchantments; a meeting of wizards to create a brazen head like s, or a calculating head like Habbage's But the subject of the forthcoming assemblage in Rome, when we think of the objects which it has in view, and the interests which are at stake, is more pathetic than grotesque. The axe is recognized to be blunt, and more strength is to be put upon it, all blunt as it is—that is the proed remedy. We do not say this in irony-from it. Were this a meeting of humble ristians, or the heads of Christ's Church (if far from it. it has heads), seeking after truth, our deepest sympathy and our highest reverence would go with them. But this it is not. It is the pathetic spectacle of men socking to make certain their own preconceived opinions by a decree of their own, and to change God's way into their ways, to turn the flood into a particular channel, and to rule God's acts into unison with their

The London Times returns to the so-talled miracle of St. Januarius, remarking that the question is less as to what belief the miracle deserves than as to who it is that any longer be-lieves in it. Where is there an Italian who can at all read and write who thinks of San Gennaro and his miracle with any other feelings than those of scorn and indignation, with feelings of bitter resentment against that evil combination of civil and ecclesiastical misrule by which the mass of his brutified countrymen have been plunged into a depth of superstition and fetichism from which it is doubtful whether all the efforts of the present educational system will ever have power to rescue them? The miracle has never been disdence, never wholly believed, never freely impugned. Those have seen and those have believed who were determined to see and believe. It is the same with winking Madonnas and bloodsweating crucifixes, table-turning and spirit-rap-ping. It is faith that does it all. Pope Pius IX. pang. It is man that does it all. Pope Pins IA., may, at the next (Ecumenical Council, make St., Januarius's miracle a dogma. It will not, for all that, be believed any more or any less than it is now; but there will always be men to go and see it, whether they believe it or not.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

By Ove Sage.-Life is a disease of which one dies

Pleasant—To open your wife's jewel-box, and dis-cover a strange gentleman's hair done up as a keep-sake.

Sharr Woman Thant — A gentleman, taking an apartment, said to the landlady, "I assure you, Madam, I never left a lodging but my landlady shed team." She answered, "I hope it was not, Sir, became you went away without paying."

Too Parricuan,—"I went in to bathe," said a Yankee: "but before I was long in the water I saw a huge double-jawed shark making rapidly toward me. What was to be done? When he was within a yard of me I faced round, dived under the shark, and, taking a knife from my pocket, ripped the mouster up." "But did you bethe with your clothes on?" saked an astonished listener. "Well," answered the story-teller, representably—"well, I do think you needn't be so taraction particular."

After all there is not much difference between the diowers and the opponents of Dr. Jenner. The one re escetasions, and the other are receive-haters.

RAFIR COMPOSITIONS.—The following are literal translations from essays composed by Rafir boys at the mission station, Reiskamma Hork, South Africa: "The Rhimozros.—The story of the ridinocerus. The ridinocerus. The ridinocerus. The story of the ridinocerus. The ridinocerus is a very angry beast. The horn of that beast is one. It is said that when it sees a man it pursues him still be climbs into a tree, that he may escape from that beast. And if he does not run he is torn to pieces by it; but if he ran and climbed into a tree he will escape, became that the ridinocerus does not know how to climb. But it is said that then it sits undernessit his tree where the man has come down, or whether that ridinocerus is sliding there still. "The Hymn.—The Hyera is a very greetly beast, It is said that when thou seest its den there are old parennie of people, and people's heads and bouss. It is said that it does not chow, but when it failables and wholes to run the stones rattle in its stomach, and it stands listealing till the morning, and the people come sed kill it."

The secret of the success of Chicago newspapers said to lie in the fact that every man and woman the town takes every paper, for fear a divorce noti in which they are interested may be published as they not find it out.

"Why, dear me, Mr. Lengewallow," said a good old lady, "how can you drink a whole quart of that hard clder at a single dreaght?" As soon as the man crelid heasthe again he replied: "I beg pardor, Madam, but upon my soul it was so bard I couldn't bite it off."

"OUR COUNTRY."

"OUR COUNTRY."

Greatest country! beyond people!
Finest churches Lallest steeples;
Pastest borses—fairest women;
Biggest lakes that fabre swim in.
Most of relivous; longest stress—
Beats creation "all to shivers;"
Beens creation "all to shivers;"
Beens of one thing—mostly pumpkin;
Jumps the highest—squats the lowest;
More disasters—more delusions;
More confessions—more confusions—
Who can best us? who outdo us?
Who can beld a candle to us?
Higgest country—bigger to be— Biggest country—bigger to be— Now they talk of adding Cubs.

A New Soccury.—The last society spoken of in Cal-ifornia is the "Pay-Nothing." It is said to be alarm-ingly prespectus. The pass word is "Lend us a doi-lar;" the response, "Broks!"

Many of the police seem to regard the public as so many bottles of medicine, "To be well shaken before taken."

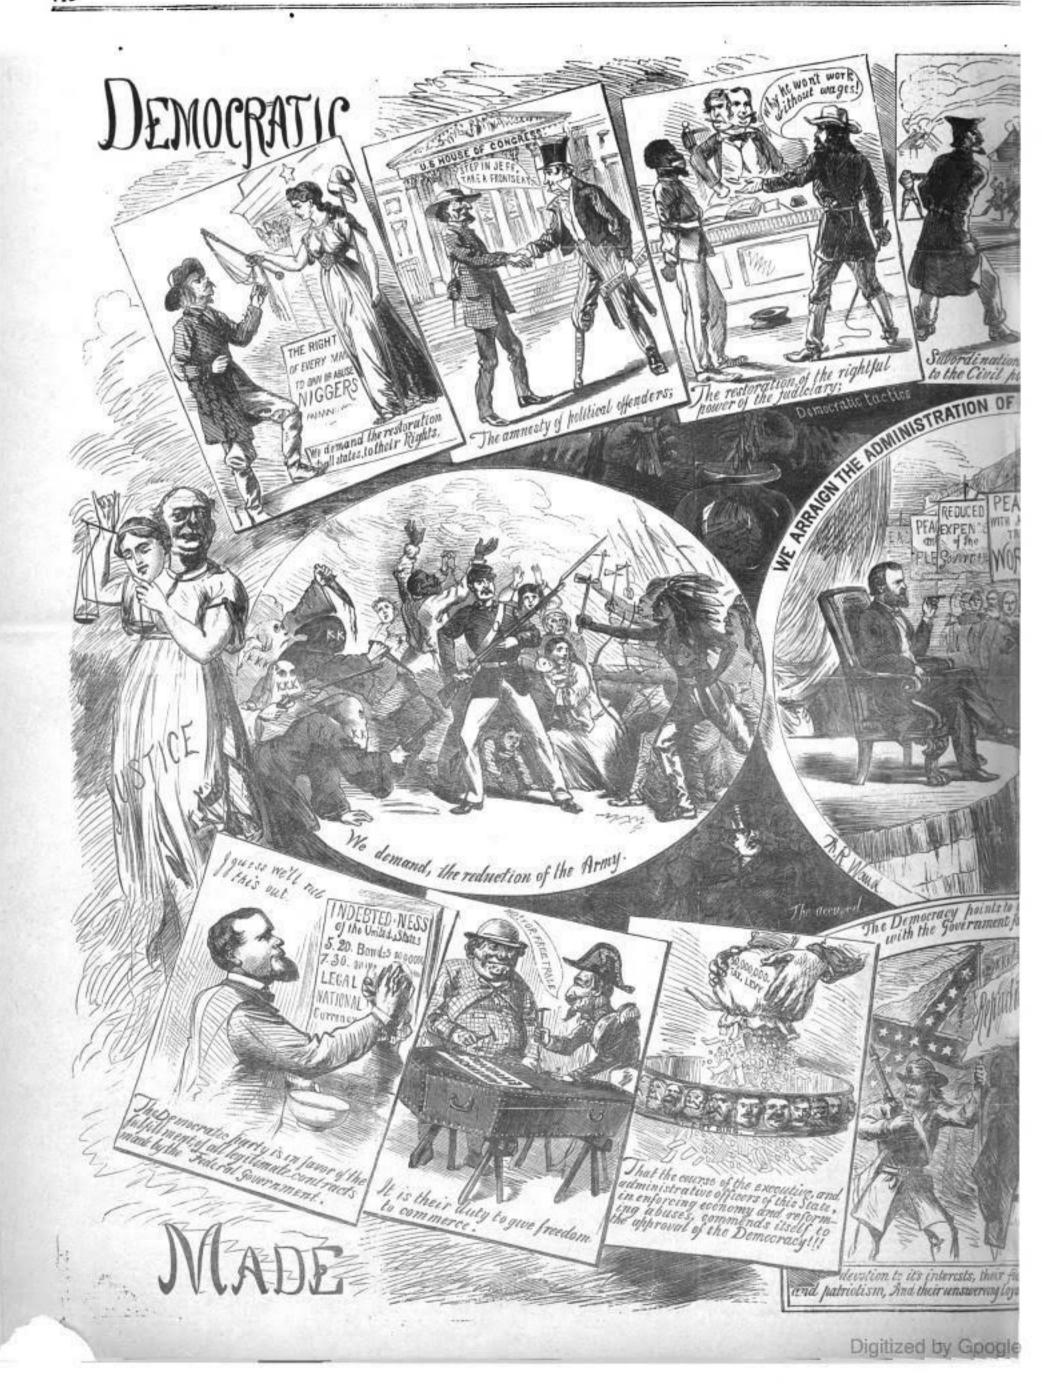

A billet-donz did William send, To tell the love that bursed him flat it was more like fitty, don't! The answer she returned him.

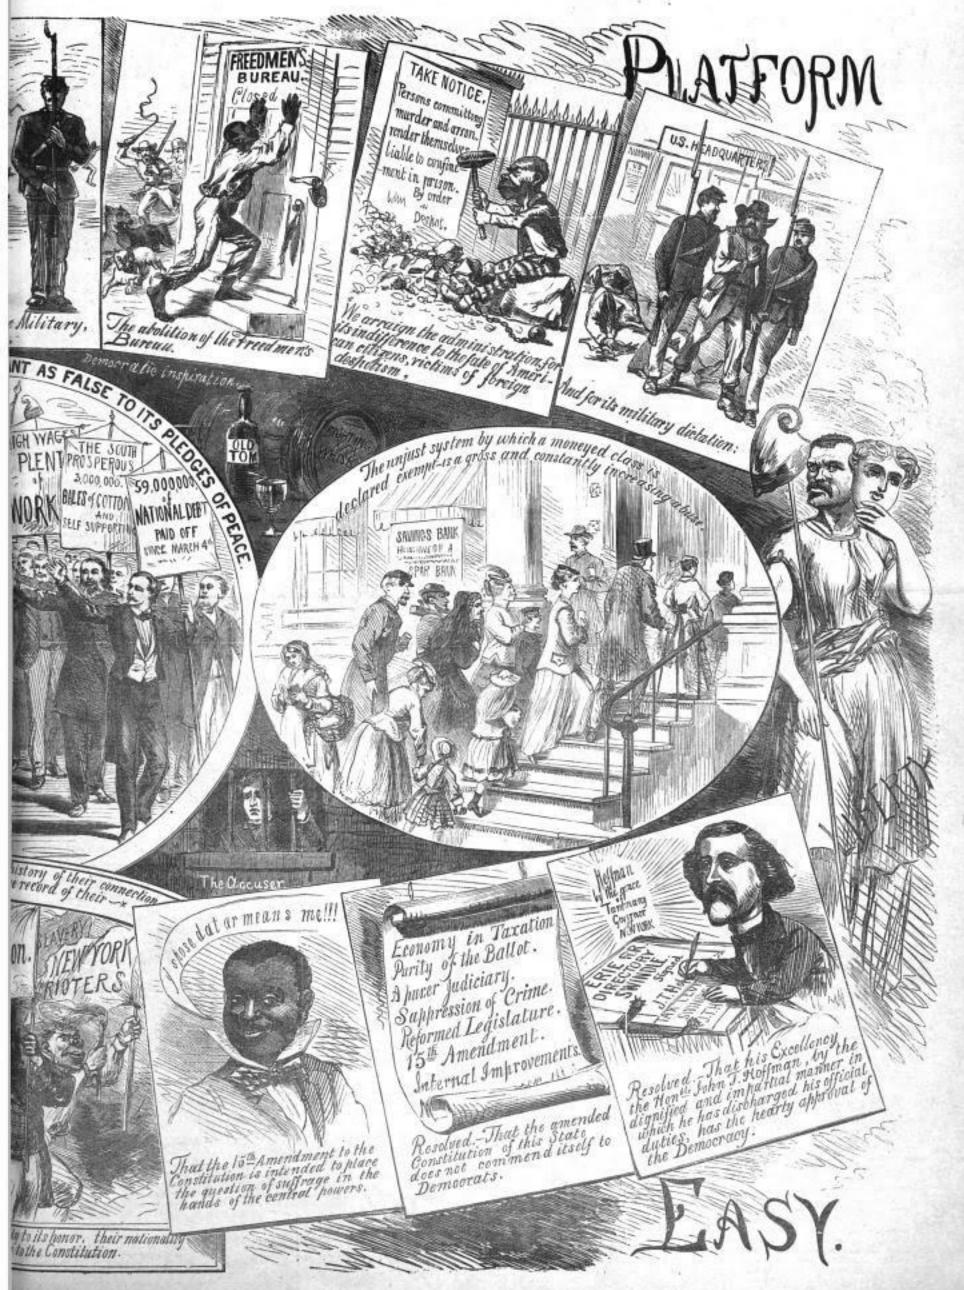

The Siamese Twins always go to bed at the same time: but Chang usually gets up about an hour before his brother. By an understanding between theraselves Chang does all the indoor work and Eng runs all the errands. This is because Eng likes to go out: Chang's habits are sedentary. However, Chang always goes along. Eng is a Bapties, but Chang is a Reman Catholic: still, to please his brother, Chang consented to be baptimed at the same time that Eng was, on condition that it should not "count." During the war they were strong partisans, and both fought gallantly all through the great struggles. Eng on the Union side, and Chang on the Corleberate. They took each other prisoners at Seven Cake, but the proofs of captars were so evenly balanced in favor of each that a general array court had to be assembled to determine which one was properly the captor, and which the captor. The jury was trable to agree for a long time: but the vened question was finally decided by agreeing to consider them both prisoners, and then carchanging them.

"Shel your eyes and listen mit me," said Unclo

"Shut your eyes and listen mit me," said Uncle Van Heyde. "Vell, the first night I opens store I count de moneys, and flock him nix right. I counts him, and dere be tree dollar gone, and ret does yet task I does then?" "I can not say." "Vy, I did not count him ony more, and he come out shust right ever since."

While tradging along one day alone a soldier met a Methodist circuit-rider, whom he at once recognised as such, but affected ignorance of it. "What command do you belong to?' inquired the preacher. "Texas regiment in Van Deen's army. And yourself?" "I belong," solemnly replied the preacher, "to the army of the Lord." "Then, my friend," said the soldier, "you've got a very long way from head-quarters,"

BELOW THE HEIGHTS.

I say at Berne, and watched the chain Of icy peaks and passes, That towered like gods above the plain. In stem majestic masses.

I vaised till the evening light I pon their heads descended; They caught it on their glittering height, and held it there suspended:

I aw the red spread o'er the white, just like a maiden's blushing, Till all were buthed in rosy light that seemed from heaven rushing:

The dead white snow was full of life, As if some huge l'ygmalion Had sought to find himself a wife In stones that saw Deucsion.

Too soon the light began to wane, Though linguring soft and tender, And the snow-giants sank again Into their culm, dead splender.

And, as I watched the last faint glow, I turned as pale as they did, And ighed to think that on the snow The rose so quickly faded.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En fibe Books .- Book EE.

CHAPTER III.

IN MR. PROST'S SANCTUM.

MESSES. FROST AND LOVEGROVE, solicitors, had their offices in a large old house in Bodford Square. The whole of the ground-floor was used Square. The whole of the ground-floor was used for offices. In the upper part of the house lived the family of the junior partner.

The chief reason for selecting the locality of the offices—which did not sound, Mr. Lovegrore said, an altogether "professional" address—was that he might enjoy the advantage of residing at his place of business; of being, as he was fond of mentioning, "on the spot."

"That is exactly what I don't want," said Mr. Eross. And accordingly he inhabited a house

Frost. And accordingly he inhabited a house at Bayswater.

But the Lovegroves, especially the female Lovegroves, declared in family conclave that Mr. Frest lived at Bayswater rather than at Bedford Square because Mrs. Frost doesned Bedford Square vulgar. She was reported to have asked where it was, with a vague air of wonder, as of an in-quirer into the geography of Central Africa. And Augustus Lovegrove, Junior, the only son of the family, gave an imitation of Mrs. Frost setting out to visit her husband's office, furnished with a sandwich-case and a flask of sherry, as though for a long journey; and mimicked the tone of fashionable borodom in which she asked the coachman where one changed horses to go to Bedford Square. But that, said his sisters,

In fact, there was a suppressed, but not the less deadly, fend between the houses of Frost and Lovegrove on all social points. In their business relations the two partners seldom jarred.

Mr. Freet was a much cleverer man than Mr. Lovegrove. He was also the better educated of Tavegrove. The was also the tester enceted of the two, and nature had gifted him with a commanding person and an impressive address.

Mr. Lovegrove was a commonplace individual. He said of himself that he had a great power of sticking to husiness; and he said truly. Mr. Prost entirely appreciated his partner's solid and unobtrusive merits. He declared Lovegrove to be "a thoroughly safe, dependable follow." And the flavor of patronage in his approbation was in no degree distasteful to Mr. Lovegrove. In the office their respective qualities and acquirements were the complement of each other; and they agreed admirably. Out of the office their views were so dissimilar as to be antage

Mr. Lovegrove was a very devout High-Churchman, and shook his head gravely over Mr. Frost's want of orthodoxy. Indeed, to describe Mr. Frost's coinions as unorthodox was to characterize them with undue mildness. Mr. Frost was a confirmed skeptic, and his skepticism was nearly allied to cynicism.

There is a homely illustration, immortalized by the pen of a great modern writer, which may, erhaps, convey an idea of the state of Mr. Frost's

In one of that great writer's well-known pages political reformers are warned, when they empty the dirty water out of the tub, not to send buby whose ablutious have been made in it floating down the kennel likewise. Get rid of the dirty water, by all means; but—save the boby! Now Mr. Frost, it was to be feared, had not saved the baby.

Then the women of the two families did not stand in amicable relations toward each other. Mrs. Levegrove was envious of Mrs. Frost, and

Mrs. Frost was disdainful of Mrs. Lovegrove. The two husbands would occasionally remonstrate, each with the wife of his bosom, respecting this inconvenient, not to say reprehensible, state of things; and would openly, in marital fashion, wonder why the dence the women were so spiteful and so silly!

"I wish, Georgy," Mr. Frost would say, "that you would behave with decent civility to Lovegrove's wife when you meet her. She does not come in your way often. I think it very selfish that you will not make the least effort to oblige when I have told you so often how serious an inconvenience it would be to me to have any coolness with Lovegrove."

"Why can't you get on with Mrs. Frost, Sa-

"Why can't you get on with Mrs. Frost, Sa-rah?" Mr. Lovegrove would ask, gravely. "I and Frost never have a word together; and two more different men you would scarcely find." But none the less did a feeling of animosity smoulder in the breasts of the two ladles. And perhaps the chief circumstance that prevented the feeling from breaking out into a blaze was the wide distance which separates Bayswater from Bailford Sensor.

from Bedford Square.
At the latter place Mr. Frost had a little private room, the last and smallest of a suite of three, opening one within the other, which looked on to a smoke-blackened yard some five feet square. Mr. Frost had shut out the view of the opposite wall by the expedient of having his winw-frame filled with panes of colored glass. This diminished the already scanty quantity of daylight that was admitted into the room. But Mr. Frost neither came to his office very early nor remained there very late; so that his work there was done during those hours of the day in which, when the sun shone at all, he sent his beams in through the red and purple panes of

It was understood in the office that when Mr. Frost closed the outer one of the green-baize double doors which shut in his private room, he was not to be disturbed save on the most pressing and important business. So long as only the inner door remained closed, Mr. Frost was accessible to six-and-eightpence-yielding mor-tals. But when once the weight which usually kept the outer door open was removed, and the dark green portal had swung to, with a swift noiseless passage of the cords over their pulleys, then no clerk in the employ of the firm, scarcely even Mr. Lovegrove himself, willingly undertook the task of disturbing the privacy of the senior

And yet one morning, soon after Hagh Lockwood's return to London, Mrs. Lockwood walked into the offices at Bedford Square, and required that Mr. Frost should be informed of her presence; despite the fact, carefully pointed out to her notice, that Mr. Frost's room was shut by the outer door; and that, consequently, Mr. Frost was understood to be particularly engaged.

"I feel sure that Mr. Frost would see me if you would be good enough to take in my name," said the little woman, looking into the face of the clerk who had spoken to her.

There was something almost irresistible in the composed certainty of her manner. Neither were the lady-like neatness of her dress, and the soft, sweet, refined tone of her voice, without their influence on the young man.
"Have you an appointment?" he asked, hesitating.

"Not precisely an appointment for this special morning. But I have frequently been ad-mitted at this hour by Mr. Frost. If you will kindly take in my name to him, I am quite will-ing to assume the responsibility of disturbing him."

"Well, you see, ma'am, that's just what you con't do. The responsibility must be on my shoulders, whether it turns out that I am doing right or wrong. However, since you say that Mr. Frost has seen you at this time before— Perhaps you can give me a card to take in to

Mrs. Lockwood took a little note-book out of her pocket, tore off a blank page, and wrote on it with the nontest of tiny pencils, the initials

Z. L.

"I have no card," she said, smiling; "but if you will show Mr. Frost that paper 1 think you will find that he will admit me."

The clerk disappeared, and returned in a few moments, begging the lady to step that way. The lady did step that way, and the green-brize door closed silently behind her short, trim, inck figure.

Mr. Frost was sented at a table covered with papers. On one side, and within reach of his hand, stood a small cabbeet full of drawers. It was a handsome antique piece of familiare of inhald wood, and would have seemed more sulted to a lady's bondoir than to a lawver's office, But there was in truth very little of what Mr. Lovegrove called "the shop" about the furniture or fittings of this tiny sanctom. The pur-ple carpet was soft and rich, the walls were stained of a warm stone-color, and the two easy-chairs—the only seats which the small size of the room gave space for-were covered with morocco leather of the same has as the carpet.

Over the chimney-piece hung a landscape; one of the blackest and chimiest that Wardour Street could turn out. Mr. Frost called it (and thought it) a Salvator Rosa.

The only technical belongings visible in the room were a few carefully-selected law books on a snore shelf near the window.

"Lovegrore does all the pounce and pareh-ment business," Mr. Frost was wont to say, jocosely. "He likes it."

But no client who had ever sat in the purple morocco easy-chair opposite to Mr. Frost failed to discover that, however much that gentleman might profess to despise those outward and visible symbols of his profession which he characterized generically as pounce and parchment, yet he was none the less a keen, acute, practical, hard-bended lawyer. Mr. Frost looked up from his papers as Mrs.

Lockwood quietly entered the room. His face wore a look of care, and almost of promature age; for his portly apright figure, per-fectly dark hair, and vigor of movement betokened a man still in the prime of his strength, But his face was livid and haggard, and his eyebrows were surmounted by a complex series of wrinkles, which drew together in a knot, that gave him the expression of one continually and painfully at work in the solution of some weighty problem.

He rose and shook hands with Mrs. Lockwood, and then waved her to the chair opposite !

"Tell me at once," he said, folding his hands "Tell me at once," he said, folding his hands before him on the table, and slightly bending forward as he addressed the widow, "if your business is really pressing. I scarcely think there is another person in London whom I would have admitted at this moment."

"My business is pressing, and I am much obliged to you," replied Mrs. Lockwood, looking at him strendly.

at him stendily.
"You think, with your usual incredulity, that "You think, with your usual increasing, that he real occupation when your visit interrupted me. Sometimes, I grant you, I shut myself in here for a little— Hah! I was going to say peace! for a little quiet, for feisure to think for myself, instead of hiring out my thinking faculties to other people. But to-day it was not so. Look here!" Look here!

He pointed to the mass of papers under his hand (on the announcement of Mrs. Lockwood's approach he had thrown a large sheet of blotting-paper over them), and fluttered them rapid-ly with his fingers. "I have been going through ly with his fingers. "I have been going throu these, and was only hasf-way when you came. "Bills?" said Mrs. Lockwood.

"Some bills, and some— Yes; chiefly bills. But they all need looking at." As he spoke he thrust them aside with a care-

As he spoke he thrust them aside with a care-less gesture, which half hid them once more un-der the blotting-paper.

Mrs. Lockwood's observant eyes had per-ceived that one of them bore the heading of a fashionable milliner's establishment.

"I am sorry," she said, "to interrupt the cal-culation of your wife's bonnet bills; but I really must intrude my presaic business on your no-tice."

"What a bitter little weed you are, Zillah!" rejoined Mr. Frost, leaning back in his chair and regarding her thoughtfully,

You have no right to say so, "The best right; for I know you. I don't

"Oh! you don't complain!" she echoed, with a short, soft laugh.

"No," he proceeded; "I do not complain

"No, he proceeded; "I do not companin that your tougue is steeped in wormwood sometimes; for I know that you have not found life full of honey. Neither have I, Zillah. If you knew my anxieties, my sleepless nights, my—But you would not believe me, even if I had time and inclination to talk about myself. What is it that you want with me this morning?"

"I want one more."

"I want my money."

"Have you come here to say that?"

"That's the gist of what I have come to say.
I put it crudely, because shortly. But you and I know very well that that is always the burden of the sele."

"Do you expect me to take out a pocket-book full of bank-notes and hand them to you across the table like a man in a play? But," he added, after a momentary struggle with his own temper, "it is worse than useless for us to jan-gle. You are too sensible a woman to have come here merely for the pleasure of dunning me. Tell me what has induced you to take

"I desired to speak with you. To the first note I sent you, asking you to call in Gower Street, I got not answer—"
"I was engaged day and night at the time. I meant to come to you as soon as I had an hour's

"To the second note you replied that you were going out of town for three days."
"It was quite true. I only got back last night. And therefore I came here this morning,"

"And therefore I came here this morning,"
"Has any thing new happened?"
"Something new is always happening. Hugh is bent on setting up for himself. His father's friends in the country have urged him to do so,"
"It would be folly on his part to leave Digby and West for the next year or so. I give this opinion just as I should if I were asked for advice by a perfect stranger. You doubtless think that I am actuated by some underhand motive."

I am actuated by some underhand motive."
'No; I do not think so. And, moreover, I should agree with you in your opinion, if I did not know that Hugh is entitled to a sum of money which would suffice to make the experi-ment he contemplates a judicious instead of a rash one. I do not see that." "Hugh, at all events, has the right to judge

And you have the right to influence his judgment Sometimes I am tempted-nay, often, very often, I am tempted-to tell Hugh every thin and let him fight his own fight. I am so tired of it!"

"Tell him, then!" ejaculated Mr. Frost, impatiently. "I, too, am weary, God knows!"
"You have the power to put an end to your weariness and to my importunities. Do me justice. After all, I am but claiming what is my own."

"It is your own. I know it. I have never sought to deny it. You can not say that I

He rose with a quick, irritable movement from his chair, and stood leaning against the mantle-piece, with his back to the empty grate.

"Then why not restore it at once, and end this weary business?" "Surely you must understand that such a sum is not to be had at a moment's notice!"

"A moment's notice! How many years is it since you promised me that it should be as soon as Hugh came of age?"

"I know, I know. But during this last year or two there have been embarrassments, andand-difficulties. Mrs. Lockwood leaned her head on her hand and looked up at him. "Do you know," she said, slowly, "what I begin to be afraid of?

That you have been telling me the truth lately, and that you really are in pecuniary difficulties!"

The blood rushed darkly over the lawyer's face, but he met her look with a smile and face, but he met her look with a smile and an ironical raising of the eyebrows.

"Upon my word," he said, "you are civil—and ingenious! You begin to be 'afraid that I have been telling you the truth!" I presume you have hitherto supposed that I kept your cash in hard, round, yellow sovereigns, locked up in a box, and that I had nothing to do but to take them out whenever I chose and hand them over to you! I am every that I can not them over to you! I am sorry that I can not altogether dissipate your apprehensions. I have been telling you the truth, but, nevertheless, your money is safe!"

The air of superiority in the man, his voice and bearing, were not without their effect on Mrs. Lockwood. She faltered a moment. Then she said, "You can at least name some time for a sestlement, can you not? Give me some fixed date to look forward to. I have been very patient."

"Look here, Zillah, I have a very advantageous thing in view. It will be highly lucrative, if it comes off as I anticipate. It has been proposed to me to go abroad in the character of legal adviser to a very wealthy and powerful English commany, and—"

English company, and-"To go abroad!"

"Temporarily. For a few months merely.

It is a question of obtaining a concession for some important works from the Italian government. If the affair succeeds, I shall be in a po-sition not only to pay you back your own—that," he added, watching her face, "is a matter of course in any case—but to advance Hugh's pros-pects very materially. Will you have a little more patience and a little more faith, and wait until the winter?"

"Six months?" said Mrs. Lockwood, weariby.

"Yes; six months. Say six months! And meanwhile— As for Hugh, since he knows nething, he will be suffering no suspense."

"Hugh? No, thank God! If it had been a question of subjecting my son instead of myself to the grinding of hope deferred, the matter should have been settled in one way or the other years ago!"

Mr. Frost looked at the small, frail figure be-Mr. Frost locked at the small, frail figure be-fore him; at the pale, delicate-featured face, framed in its soft gray curls; and be wondered at the strength of resolution to endure that was expressed in every curve of her mouth, in the firmness of her attitude as she stood with her little nervous hands clasped in front of her, in the steadiness of the dark eyes whose setting was so worn and tear-stained.

"Good-by, Zillah," he said, taking her hand; "I will come to Govern Street soon."

"I will come to Gower Street soon."
"Yes; you had better come. Hugh misses you. He wants to talk to you about his plans, he says."

"I shall give him the advice I told you—to

"I shall give him the advice I told you—to stay with Digby and West for at least another year on the terms they offer. Bless my life, it is no such hardship! What hurry is there for him to undertake the responsibilities and cares of a professional man who has, or thinks he has," added Mr. Frost, hastily correcting himself, "no-thing in the world to depend upon but his own

Mrs. Lockwood made as though she were about to speak, and then checked herself with a little, quick sigh.

"Zillah!" said Mr. Frost, taking again the hand he had relinquished, and bending down to look into her face, "there is something new! You have not told me all that is in your mind."

"Because what is in my mind on this subject is all vague and uncertain. But I fancy—I think—that Hugh has fallen in love." "Ah, you are like the rest of the women, and put your real meaning into the postscript. I knew there was something you had to say."

"I did not mean to say it at all. It is only a

"I have considerable faith in the accuracy of your surmises; and it furnishes a likely enough motive for Hugh's hot haste to make himself a place in the world. Can you guess at the woman?"

"I know her. She is a girl of barely eighteen. She lives in my house."
"What! that Lady—Lady—"
"Lady Tallis Gale's niece, Miss Desmond."

"Stay! Where did I hear of her? Oh, I have it! Lovegrove is trustee under her mother's will. She has a mere pictance secured to her out of the wreck of her father's fortune. Besides, those kind of people, though they may be almost beggars, would, ten to one, look down on your son from the height of their family grandeur. This girl's father was one of the Power-Desmonds, a beggarly, scatter-brained, spendthrift, Irish-gentleman! I dare say the young lady has been taught to be proud (probably hypothetical) descent from a savage inferior to a Zulu Kaffir."

"Very likely. But your elequence is wasted on me. You should talk to Hugh. I'm afraid he has set his heart on this. "Set his heart! Hugh is-bow old? Three-and-twenty?" Hugh will be twenty-five in August."

"Hugh will be twenty-live in August.

"Ah! Think of a woman of your experience talking of a young fellow of that age having "set his heart" on any thing! No doubt he has "set his heart." And how many times will it be set and unset again before he is thirty?"

"God forbid that Hugh should be such a man as some whom my experience has taught me to "Humph! Just now this love on which Hugh has 'set his heart' was a mere surmise on your part. Now you declare it to be a serious and established fact, and 'God forbid' it should not be!"

"When will you come?" asked Mrs. Lockwood, disregarding the sener.
"I will come to-morrow evening if I can.

"I will come to-morrow evening if I can.
You know that my time is not mine to dispose of."

of."
True. But it is sometimes easier to dispose of that which belongs to other people than of one's own rightful property, is it not?"
With this Parthian dart Mrs. Lockwood dis-

With this Parthian dart Mrs. Lockwood disappeared, gliding noiselessly out of the small room through the next chamber, and acknowledging by a modest, quiet little bend of the head the respectful alacrity of the clerk who had first admitted her, in rising to open the door for her exit.

WILD-FOWL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Our illustration on page 716 represents a scene which Mr. Thomas Baines (a gentleman who has spent several years in traveling through the region of the Zambesi River) saw in November, 1864—a multitude of fiamingoes, pelicans, and dufkers on the sand-spit dividing Sandwich Harbor from the sea. It should be observed that many of the harbors on the shores of Southwest Africa are formed by the prevalent southeast wind drifting from any projecting point a constant cloud of sand, and depositing it so as to form a shoal, between which and the shore is a sheltered bay, where ressels of moderate burden may lie in perfect quiet while the surf breaks furiously outside this apparently frail barrier. Walvisch (or Whalefish) Bey and Sandwich Harbor are of this class, and the lagoons and shallows of each are frequented by duikers, or cornecrants, pelicans, and flamingoes. The dufkers are so numerous that a flock of these birds wheeling in many evolutions over the bay or settling on the beach durkens a space of ground half a mile or more in extent. The flamingoes, wading to a uniform depth, form regular lines along the curve of the beach, like regiments of soldiers; or, when disturbed, rise in the air like a flickering resente cloud, dazzling with intense brilliancy under the unclouded sun. Some of the smaller species of flamingoes which are found more inland are entirely of a deep and beautiful crimson. The kind usually found along the shore has crimson wings, white neck with a delicate flush of pink, and pink or light crimson beak and legs. The bird shown in the foreground of our engraving has not yet attained its perfect plumage. Its wings are marked with rown, just beginning to give place to the crimson; its beak is pale blue, and its legs are slate-color. A thorn-backed shark, some parts of the skeleton of a whale, and a few shells are seen lying on the beach.

"HESITATION."

Swear seventeen! Poets have sung about it—painters have painted it, or tried to paint it; musicians have thrummed peans of praise to it on their harps, sackbuts, pealteries, banjos, and all kinds of instruments; cowards have fied its too-palpitating infinences; warriors have trembled before its exacting charms. What wonder, then, that one poor simple youth—like the one depicted in our illustration on page 717—should feel his honest heart sink when the moment arrives in which he is to learn his fate?—too bashful to look in the glass, and see reflected there the half-coy, half-impudent face that bids him come if he dare, and yet entreats him to dare to come, filled with strange wonderment that the old father should cheer him on and hid him not be such a fool, as though be had forgotten his own fool's days, when the plump old lady beside him was much such another skittish maiden. She has not forgotten it; for in her encouragement of the bashful lover there is a touch of proud remembrance of the time when she, too, hesitated; and, knowing that hesitation was torture, yet and, knowing that hesitation was torture, yet prolonged the pain for the sake of the triumph. It will be all over presently, for there is a courage on that youthful brow which, when he is within arm's-length, will carry him on till there shall be the reflections of two faces in that one small looking-glass, and then besitation will be over, and by one word the life-history of both will be fixed.

A LEOPARD HUNT WITH FOX-HOUNDS.

Cotacamum, the principal assistation of Southern India, has a great advantage over the Himalayan stations, being situated in the midst of an extensive platean, instead of being perched amidst precipices like Simla. To the west of Cotacamund, which occupies nearly the centre of a platean of thirty square miles, stretch the vast undulating downs, covered with a turf so strong and coarse, and affording such unfailing footbold, that, even in the westest weather, a horse may safely be ridden at speed along the steepest hill-sides, which are unbroken even by a mole-hill. A few small thick woods, dotted over these slopes, harbor innumerable jackals, regular mountaineers, strong-limbed and longwinded. The Madras fox-hounds, which are necessarily sent away from the plains during the hot season, from March till October, have been this year engaged for that time by the Cotacamundians, and have been meeting twice a week. They have given good sport and equitted themselves very creditably, in spite of the difficulties involved in the fact that to view eight or ten jackals in an hour is by no means an uncommon occurrence. A fair number of victims have, nevertheless, been pulled down in full career, or ignominiously dragged from earths; and "Jack," though not possessing, perhaps, the placek of an English fox, will often give a smart run of twenty to forty minates, very different from his namesake on the plains. But

n Mary College

oer filestration is from a sketch furnished by a local correspondent, who took a part, on June 22, in a most extraordinary run, which has excited the wonder of all the Angio-Indian sportsmen. The hounds had run down a jackal and killed him in the Nungenad Valley, and the only persons with them were Mr. Schmidt, Mr. Arkirs, and the huntsman, when a fine full-grown leopard saddenly darted from the thicket, and away went every dog full cry after this strange object of chase. They soon came up with the animal, seized him, and rolled him over; but he punished some of them with his teeth and claws. He broke from them, and get into a copse, with a brook at the bottom, where the hounds again caught him, and he then turned at bay. Thirteen couple of them, having got deep into the thicket, were quite out of sight, while the barking, yelping, and howling of the dogs, and the furious growling of the leopard, told of the conflict going on. The huntsman, and several gentlemen who had by this time come up, endeavored in vain to call off the pack, which is of the Pytchley breed, and is too valuable to be exposed to the risks of such an encounter. After the efforts of half an hour the hounds were got out. None of them were killed, but several were hadly bittes. Guns were meantime sent for, and Mr. Avxirs made two good shots at the leopard, crippling him with the first and killing him with the second.

CHARLES READE'S IDEAL WOMAN. THERE is, perhaps, no writer of equal emi-

These is, perhaps, no writer of equal eminence who has so clearly shown the character and principles of his genius from the very beginning of his career. "Peg Woffington," his earliest work, is at once an epitome and adumbration of all he has done. Mr. Reade's repertoire is limited. He has one brilliant, splendid woman, full of noble instincts, of passion and generosity, and pride and humbleness, who is his deptate, and whom he can not too often reproduce: light, and whom he can not too often reproduce; and he has another simple, tender, wise, femi-nine creature who is the rival, the conqueror, the defender, the only being who fully comprehends the first; and between these two he has a fancy for placing a very weak, sometimes contemptible, man. This is but a small circle, yet it is wide man. It is not a since circle, yet it work enough to give occasion for many exquisite con-trasts and telling scenes. Such a limitation is no doubt a weakness in point of art; but we doubt much whether it is not an additional charm doubt much whether it is not an additional charm to the ordinary reader, who arrives but slowly at a perception of character, and requires to have it impressed upon him by many repetitions. The favorite conceptions of our novelist—his Mrs. Woffington, his Christie Johnstone, his Kate, Woffington, his Christie Johnstone, his Kate, are all more or less repetitions, with changes of costume and accessories, of one idea. It is the very ideal of womankind, according to what Mr. Mill would call the imperfect and deprayed conditions which are all that has been permitted it since the beginning of the world; a being full of power, and brilliancy, and daring, and intuitive perception—full, indeed, of what we can describe only as genius, in distinction from the more man-ageable and practical talents of ordinary life ready to jump at the truth, however concealed; but, at the same time, not above the deceptions of society, or those benevolent tricks which a fer tile imagination suggests for the management and well-being of others; a creature equal to any emergency, rising with high, nervous valur to any danger; able to brace herself for every to any tianger; able to brace herself for every necessary exertion, and to do whateoever may be demanded with sufficient energy from her hands. Something of Rosalind, semething of Imogen, is in this fine conception—yet it is original, and has never been set forth in the same fullness by any other. That Mr. Dickens never dreamed of such a being, nor even the broader intelligence of Thackersy, nor the more courtly and more di-versified genius of Lord Lytton, it is unnecessarof Inexersy, nor me more county and more county and more un-versified genius of Lord Lytton, it is unnecessa-ry to say. Mr. Reade has made this woman; he has clothed her, not in weakness, as has been the wont of romancists, but in beautiful power and strength, the fullness of health and vigor, bodily and mental. He has set her forth not as a passive, but an active being, able to do almost any thing she puts her hand to, and encumbered by no miserable timidity or self-consciousness, though white and splendid with natural modesmgh white and spendin who a certain grace;
Whatever she touches takes a certain grace; her comings and her goings impress on all minds; she is the centre of the picture wherever she appears. And then how fine is the can do and what she can not! She can labor with a man's energy and boldness; she can take fortune at the tide; she can save lives and win hearts. But she can not sway some one weak, selfish soul about her, can not make it noble like herself, nor take away from it the faithful affections of which it is unworthy. Every thing else she can do, but this she can not. Her faithfulness is proof against her own clear sight and discrimination. Such is Peg Woffington, the actress; such is Christie Johnstone, the fishwoman; and such is Kate Gaunt. Each is perfectly true to her surroundings and to her age. There is, so to speak, no resemblance between them; their costume is varied with all the skill of consum mate art; they think as becomes their different stations and periods, without the slightest confusion of identity; and yet they are one. Per-haps—such a thing is possible—had the author concentrated his powers on one production of his favorite character, something more effective still might have been the result. But we should be very reluctant to be put to it which of the tric Not Christie, the pride of we would part with. Newhaven; and not the brave, sweet, gay, infi-nitely gifted actress. If one were to be sacri-ficed, Kate, we think, would have the least hold on our bearts. And yet how noble is Kate in her virtues and her errors, her ! . Adness, her fears, her miserable mistakes, and suffering! The woman walks through the book, with her grand stature and stately grace, winning us, enchanting us, offending us, like a real creature. The reader feels disposed to pause, and warn, and remonstrate, and bid her look well what she is about. Harm will come of it! we call out to her unconsciously; and she knows it—half hears us—yet is swept on. What a woman! If there were many like her, how poor would all Mr. Mill's pleas for equality sound (as, Heaven knows, without that they sound poor enough)! Equal! to the good-natured lout by her side, whom she condescends to love! One might as well speak of equality between the lion and the ass, or between the pole-star and a smoky lantern. This is the thing of all others which Mr. Heade has done heat; and we know not one of his contempovaries, and few of his predecessors, who have given such an idea to the world.

HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Farmers Hyacusymus arrived in this port on the 18th of October on the steamer Persite. He sailed October 2. The passage was made in eight days and stateen hours—the shortest transsilentic trip on record. In our editorial columns last weak we gave a history of the conflict between Father Hyacustic and his Superior. This conflict seems to have been continued for several years. Even in 1882 he was restricted by instructions from his superiors, against which, however, he sometimes robelled. During that year, in a discourse delivered by him in the Church of St. Miniv., at Lyons, there was a notable instance of this.—I his sermon Father Hyacinthe confined himself at fir.—entirely within the hand.—I the instructions given him by his superiors. The commencement of his discourse was cold and unimpassioned, and falled to sardes any enthusiasm in his andience. Suddenly, however, he followed his own inspiration, and intered an eloquent apostrophe on the want of brotherly love in the present assembly and in the Church, and on the universal solidalness which prevailed in its place. This latter portion of his discourse caused no little surprise, and was the subject of much comment. In a second sermon he announced quite plainty a perfectuce for monity over dogma. "Thave wandered over the world," he said, "and have every where found only germs of intelligence, and atoms of understanding. I have entered the cioister, and have there only met with abortive saints." The Archbishop of Lyons, Cardinal Bonald, heard this sermon perached, and was highly of fended at it. In the first burst of his indignation he sent for Father Hyacinthe, and forbade him to preach in any church of his diocese. The urgent representations of the highest society in Lyons induced him to withdraw this prohibition. He again sent for Father Hyacinthe, and in a neith and uncommonly forbearing manner put before him the heart he would do to the Church if he went on with his violent attacks upon it. Pather Hyacinthe could not resist this friendly address, and promi to keep this promise any longer.

Before his departure for this country Father Hyacinthe gave stitings to Miss Vinnie Ream for a medallion.

Who has a desire to understand what first-class Chinese music is like? The editor of a San Francisco paper has attended a Chinese iteratre for the purpose of ascertaining, and thus enlightens the public: "Imagine yourself in a botter manufactory when four bundred men are putting in rivets, a maximum four bundred men are putting in rivets, a maximum thin-shop next door on one eide, and a forty-etamp quarts mill upon the other, with a drunken charivast party with six hundred instruments in front, four thousand earinged cats on the roof, and a faint idea will be conveyed of the performance of a first-class Chinese band of music."

In Cambridge, Massachusetts, fifty families propose to try co-operative housekeeping, on a capital of ten thousand dollars. Calinary, laundry, and sewing departments will be organized, and the achieve gives fair promise of being successful. It is said Professor Blot will have general charge of the kitchen.

will have general charge of the kitchen.

In Hartford, Connection, another plan is suggested to make housekeeping cares lighter. It is proposed to erect a building about 100 feet long by 50 deep, having a basement, four full stories, and an attle. On each story there would be six complete suits of rooms, with apartments conveniently and instefully planned. In the basement would be a kitchen and restaurant; and the apartments being rented to families, they can take their meals in the restaurant or have them sent to their rooms. The owner of the building should have general supervision of every thing, and provide all things at reasonable cost. Thus every family would have its home, and yet escape many of the caree of the next quarter of a century various systems will be devised, by which many of the annoyances now incident to housekeeping will be removed, and yet the keese be preserved.

Vishnu, a god of the Hindoos, has very much startled his worshipers of late, by whirling past them at night on a calestial wheel, with as a fash of lightning. Those who are so irreverent as not to believe in Vishnu, however, declare that this celestial wheel is the property of an English gentleman who is ambitious to be the first velocipede rider under an Asiatic sun; but finding the heat oppressive by day, exercises upon his bloycle at night, illuminating his path by a lanters.

We are interested in the fate of the poor wretch who fell a victim to the belle who went this last summer to the White Sulphur Springs under a vow to accept the man who made her the hundredth offer of marriage. She kept her resolution, so the story goes. But who was the man? What was his name? And hasn't be wished before this time that he was one of the ninety-and-nine?

Presence of mind prevented a Searful accident on the Fort Wayne Ballroad, near Jeckson, Michigan, a short time age. On Sunday a train was sent out from the dipit for some special porpose, and it rushed fall speed round a curve to a bridge six hundred feet long. Instantly the engineer reversed the engine, for he saw a man with his with and two children on the narrow portion of the bridge, where it is just wide enough for a train to pass, about makeup of its beneft. Catching up the children is his arms, the man told his wife to run toward the end of the bridge, until the train should reach her, and then jump into the water. She did as directed, and when she felt the hot betuch of the from monster she jumped from the bridge, fortunately alighting in not more than two fact of water, and the train peased her in safety. The father could not run with the little ones, but he coolly and stendily, in the face of the approaching train, lowered himself with them to a brace beneath the bed timbers, and there held them that within a few feet of the water, while the train came thundering over them. Near the centre of the bridge the exertions of the engineer and brakeman effected the stoppage of the train, and their assistance was rendered to extricate the frightened family from their yet very perileus position.

The Hippodrome in Paria, which was recently destroyed by fire, was an immense building of pine wood, which contained seats for spectators, but the ring had no covering but the sky. The conflagration was terrific, and illumined all Paria, literally turning night into day. The Hippodrome itself was not an expensive structure, but many other buildings in the vicinity were consumed.

Our readers may not be sware that in Jamaica Nature hereoif supplies us with marking-ink. The large round seeds of the avocade, or slitgstor pear (Person Ovstissiva)—whence its name I have never been able to discover—contain a great quantity of tamain, and cloth stretched over one, and picked through with a pin, becomes marked as effectually as with marking-ink. The pear itself is one of the greatest felicacies of the West Indies, and is eaten cliber as a wegetable or a fruit; in the former case with pepper and salt, and in the latter with sherry and sugar. In its character of a vegetable it is an admirable substitute for fresh butter.

The London Atheneus says: "Lord Byren's complete works for M. are selling at book-stalls like herrings in a plentiful season. Another consequence of the scandal which has introduced the subject of incest to the attention of young persons is a forthcoming cheap edition of the Countase Guiccioli's "Recollections of the Poet." It will be a six-shilling volume. The lady's recollections of her late eccentric hashend, M. de Boissy, would not be a bad book. He was a frank man, and used to introduce his wife as 'La Marquise De Boissy ma femme, accleme maltresse de Byron."

Archbishop Manning, of England, recently delivered a discourse at Keneington, is which he said that modern civilization was a state of society "founded upon divorce, secular education, infinite divisions and contradictions in matters of religion, and the absolute reamchation of the superme authority of the Christian Church." He thus interprets the Pope's attilande, as refusing to reconcile himself to Liberalism, progress, and modern civilization: "No. I will not, and I can not. Your progress means divorce: I maintain Christian marriage. Your progress means secular education: I maintain that education is intrinsically and necessarily Christian. You maintain that it is a good thing that men should think as they like, talk as they like, preach as they like, and propagate what errors they please. I say that it is sowing error broadcast over the world. You say I have no authority over the Christian world, that I am not the vicur of the Good Shepherd, that I am not the supresse interpreter of the Christian Faith. I am all these. You sak me to abdicate, to renounce my supresse authority. You tell me I ought to embonit to the civil power, that I am the subject of the King of Italy, and from him I am to receive instructions as to the way I should exercise the civil power. I say I am liberated from all civil subjection, that my Lord made me the subject of so one on earth, king or otherwise; that he lills right I am sovereign. I acknowledge no civil superior, I am the sole and in the supreme of the peasant that tills the field and the prices that sits on the throne—of the household that lives in the shade of privacy and the legislature that makes laws for hingdoms—I am the sole last 8a-poems Jodge of what he right and wrong." Would it not be as fair to say that Romanism is founded upon divorce."

Mr. Gladetone, the British Premier, has shown great boldness and liberality in his educational and ecclesisational appointments. He has recently premoted the Rev. Frederick Temple, D.D., to the bishoptic of Exciter. Dr. Temple has been head-master of Rugby for ten years, and was one of the written of the "Banys and Reviews." He not long since appointed Mr. Seeley, the author of "Ecce Home," to the chair of Modern History at Cambridge. Both these appointments have provoked censure. Lord Shaftesbury styles "Ecce Home" "the most mischlevous book that was ever ventiled from the Jaws of bell." Professor Seeley is distinguished by high character and great ability. He is an emiscent classic, a man of wide culture, a thinker of considerable power, a student of history in the loftiest sense of the word, and a writer who can express his meaning with force and vividness.

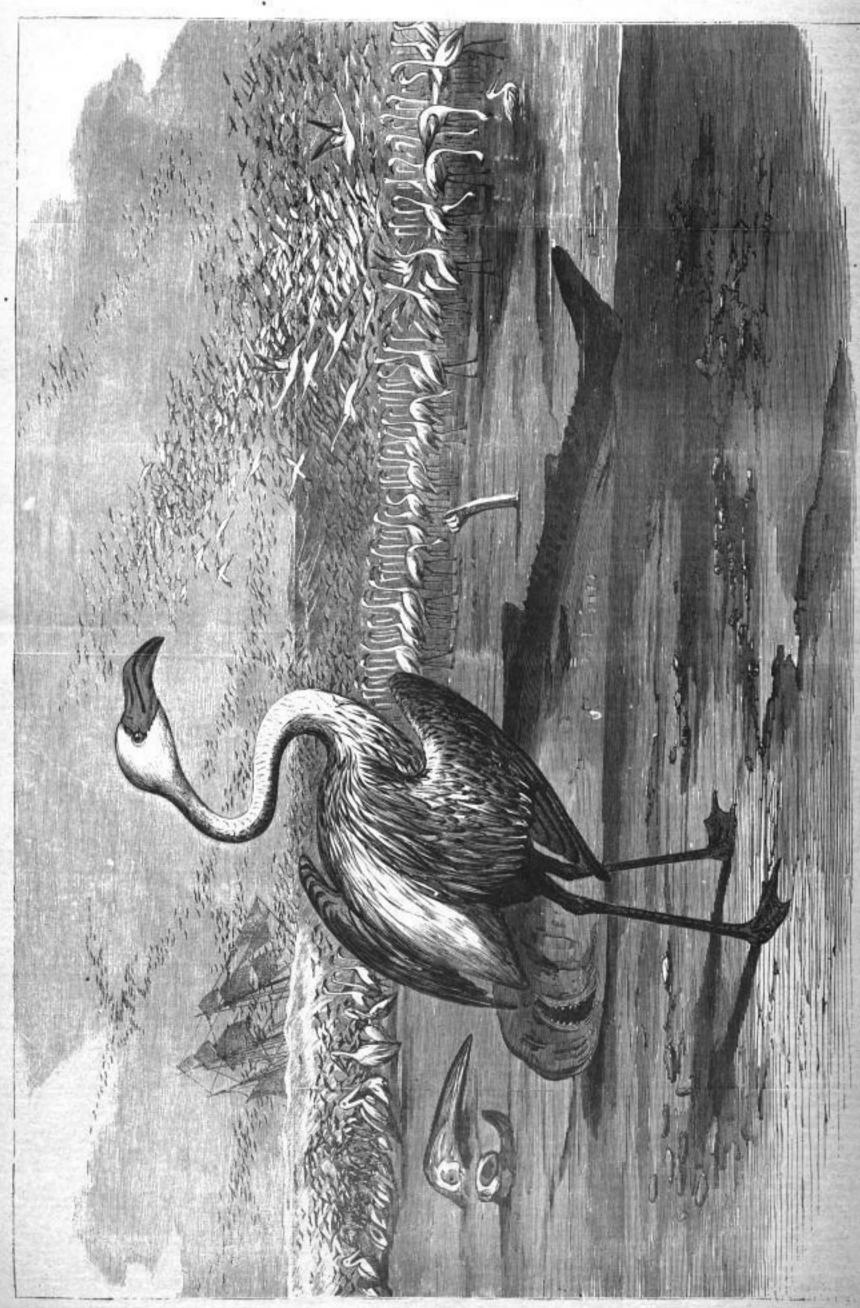

Captain C. F. Hall's lecture at Steinway Hall, in this city, on the evening of October 13, was a success. The ball was filled nearly to its utmost capacity. These accents of Arctic discoveries appear to be of very great interest to the public.

There are three "Homes for Disabled Veterans" which have been established in different parts of the country since the close of the civil war. One is located at Angusts, Maine: one at Dayton, Ohio; and one, which has very recently been dedicated, at Milwankee, Wisconsin. The find of these institutions consists of military fines and forfeitures of deserters, unclaimed pay and pensions; and it now amounts to nearly ten million dollars. These asylums are not beepitals, nor alms-houses, but Acress, where disabled soldiers may receive subsistence, care, and suitable instruction; where employment is provided, for which proper compensation is given; and where every thing possible will be done for the comfort of these who have heavely defended our country's rights.

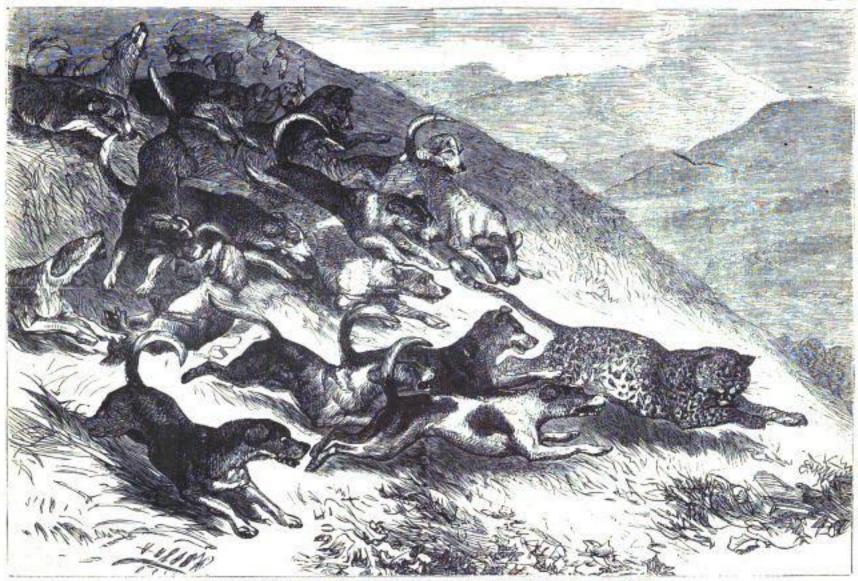

bravely defended our country's rights.

The Milwaukee Home is situated about three miles west of the city. The park includes 4th acres, a part of which has been appropriated to farming purposes, and the remainder is being finely ir , out under the supervision of a competent landar, gardener. The building is neat and tasteful, contains every needed convenience, and can comforts 'y accommodate five hundred inmattes. It is heated by steem, and a gashouse will soon be built. The kitchen is fitted up with modern improvements, and the washing and froning are to be chiefly done by steam machinery. The "Home" is in the form of a cross, and the first-fisor of the central building is mostly occupied by public rooms; the dormitories are in the second, third, and fourth stretes. There is a central tower, a bundred and fifty feet high, which affords a fine view of the surrounding country.

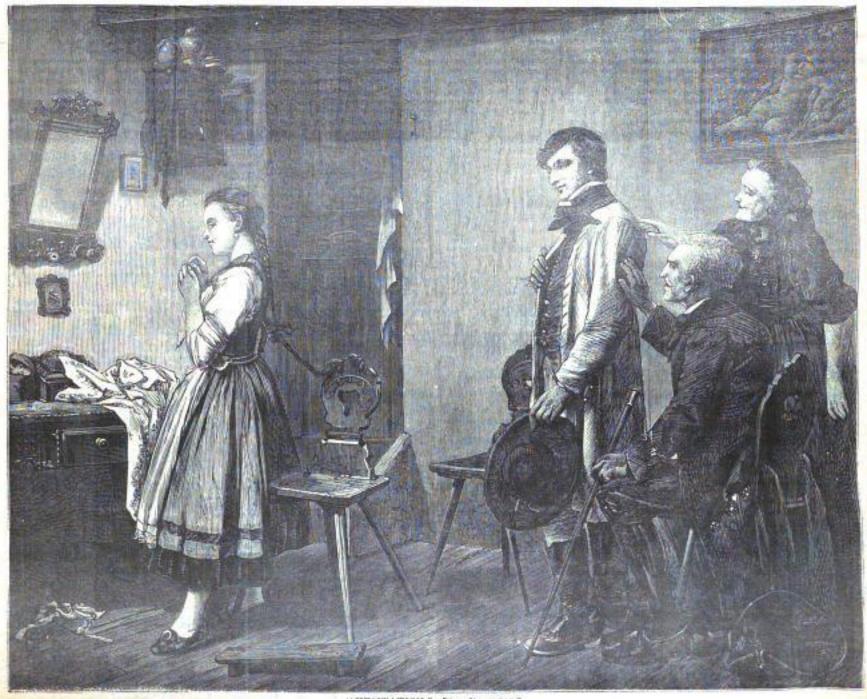

Digitized by Google

FLAMINGOES, PELICANS, AND DUIKERS, AT SANDWICH HARBOR, SOUTH AFRICA, -[SEE PAGE 715.]

A LEOPARD HUNT WITH, FOX-HOUNDS IN SOUTHERN INDIA .- [SEE PAGE 715.]

"HESITATION."-[SEE PAGE 715.]

THE COLOSSEUM.

Wirmour gazing with one's own eyes on the mighty fabric it is impossible to comprehend its vastness or its grandear as a ruin. On the spot where it was reared by Titus and Vespasian, on their return from the conquest of Jerusalem, a their return from the conquest of Jerusalem, a lake formerly existed, the work of the infamous Nero. Twelve thousand Jewish prisoners of war, brought to Bome to give éclat to a triumph of imperial dignity, in the year A.D. 72, goaded to labor by the whip, laid the foundation of the Colosseam. They worked many years at their task, till Vespacian died. Their descendants, the poor, crushed, despised Jewa, may be seen in the Ghetto by any traveler who has the curiosity to examine that quarter of the city. Titus dedicated the edifice in the year 80, and the imanguration lasted one hundred days. has the curiosity to examine that quarter or so-city. Titus dedicated the edifice in the year 80, and the inauguration lasted one hundred days. Fifty wild beasts were daily killed, and no less than five thousand were shughtered in combats in the areas. It was four stories high, oral, with-out a roof, and would sest comfortably 87,000, besides giving standing-room for witnessing the spectacles for 22,000 more. An awning pro-tected the audience from sunshine and rain. Palaces of amazing size, public and private edi-fices, and structures without number, have been both out of brick taken from its walls for sevbuilt out of brick taken from its walls for several hundred years, and yet the remaining mass is one of the wonders of the world. Happily all further depredations have been interdicted, and some attempts made to repair the weakest parts, so that the Colosseum may perhaps remain in-tact, ruin as it is, one or two thousand years

QUARRELING.

THE tendency to let any dispute drift into a quarrel is very much a matter of habit; but it is a habit which may be greatly modified, if not wholly cured. We should teach ourselves, to begin with, that moderation in language and temper is evidence, not of weakness of charac-ter, but of the reverse. While a dispute is yet in embryo, moderation and self-control may remove it; but when it passes that stage-when it developed into a quarrel—then all hope of setting the matter to rights is at an end. The prudent man will now simply withdraw himself from the affair, instead of needlewly embittering himself in a useless struggle. Of course, it requires some discretion to know when the dispute has reached the point of being irremediable; and has reached the point of being irremediable; and it is at this point that it should be thrown up. Considerations of false pride should not be allowed to interfere. No matter how just your cause is, there is nothing to be gained by declaiming against the injustice of an obdurate opponent, who sees only right on his side. A man ought to study the history and development of former quarrels in which he has been engaged, in order to see how resultless they were, and what an enormous waste of time and temper they involved. He will see the misunderstanding grow more definite, until it reaches that ing grow more definite, until it reaches that stage at which it is impossible to remove it without the most heroic abnegation on one side or He will perceive that neither side is the other. He will perceive that neither side is willing to take the lead in coming to an arrangement. The cause of dispute becomes, by argument, bigger. Each disputant is now more confirmed in his notions. By-and-by, they are not so asxious to prove themselves in the right as to punish each other for being quarrelsome and causing annoyance. The original ground of quarrel is lost sight of in this sense of mutual interest. They are annex with such other because jury. They are angry with each other because each has quarreled, and the quarrel is continued out of revenge. How does it end? Time, the great pacifier, smooths down their wrath; but look at all they have suffered and lost in the in-terim! It is fortunate, indeed, if one or other perceives the obvious lesson, and resolves theuceperceives the corrious season, forth to abandon any dispute which reaches the irretrievable and merely recriminatory stage.

A USEPUL HOUSEMOLD MACHINE.—The most perfect WRINGHR of which we have knowledge is the UNIVERSAL. We do our readers a real service when we recommend such a machine to their notice.—[Com.]

Tan Youve's Companion.—This is one of the most promising and readable Youths' publications with which we are acquainted. It is issued from Bostom, is most judiciously conducted, and has among its contributors such writers as Mrs. Brown, Rev. Mr. Hala, Elizaberm Study Publics, and others equally acceptable to the young people. Its antonneous for 1838 are more than ordinarily attractive.—[Com.]

"They Com!" What cures? Aven's CHEMRY Pro-roam for a Cough, Aven's Paule for a purgative, and Aven's Samaramina for the complaints that require an elterative medicine.—[Com.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

$10, $12, $15, $20, $25.

Watches and Imitation Brazilian and Australian Diamond Jewelry. New Styles Oroide Gold Chains, $8 to $10 each. Call or send for Price-List. JOHN POGGAN.

$1140 How I made it in Six Months. Secret and sample malled free. A. J. Pallars, N. Y.

Popular Music at Popular Prices.

HITCHCOCK'S

SHEET MUSIC FOR THE MILLION,

At Five Cents per Copy.

Sacred Music and New and Popular Songs

ARRANGED WITH PIANO ACCOMPANIMENTS.

Instrumental Pieces, Polkas, Waltzes, Schottisches, Marches, Duets, Operatio Airs, &c.

TO THE PUBLIC:

Believing that whatever tends to amme and instruct, to cultivate and develop the mind, or to elevate the character and diversity the nature of Home Enjoyments, is ever welcome to the American People, this Series is respectfully presented. Our object is to enable all chases—rich and poor—who have a desire for Music, to become possessed of all the popular productions of the day, without incurring an advect prohibitory expanse:

CHOICE MUSIC AT A PRICE WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL. HITCHCOCK'S HALF-DIME MUSIC.

HITCHC	DCK'S HA	LP-DIME MUSIC.
THE LABOR MARKET	AUVHOR.	NO. Washelmto Wall	AUTHOR.
Have You Seen Her Lately?	Barnshaw.	To. Bachelor's Hall.	Culver
The Hard to Give the Hand	Giover.	74. The Fairy's Well. 73. Oh would I were a Bird.	Blamphin
The Hard to Give the Hand. She Wore a Wreath of Roses. Spanish Muleteer. Within a Mile of Edinboro.	Enight.	12. Oh, you Pretty, Blue-Eyed Which. 11. My Angel. 10. The Prigety Wife. 40. Day and Night I Thought of Thee. 40. My Mother Dear. 41. Barney O'Hea. 42. Chartent Birney Wife.	Taylor
Spanish Muleteer.	Milliard.	fl. My Angel.	Taylor Guglielmo
Within a Mile of Edinboro.	Scotch.	70. The Fidgety Wife.	Cover
Coming through the Rye. The Peace of the Valley. I can not Sing the Old Bongs. Janet's Choice.	Beotch.	Day and Night I Thought of Thee.	Bhrive!
The Peace of the Valley,	Balfe. Claribel.	ol, My Mother Dear.	Love Love Raymond
James's Choice	Claribel.	64. Chestnut-Street Belles.	Revenue
Birangers Yel.	Claribel.	65. Boston Belles.	Raymond
Water Lily Police.	Borers.	64. Be Watchful and Beware.	Glove
Would You be Young Again?	Rogers. Clippingdale. borns. Sacr.	43. Where there's a Will there's a Way.	Fee
Would You be Young Again? Row, Brothers, Row. Buet and Cl Call Her Back and Kles Her.	borns, Seer.	61. The Foreign Count. 61. The Lancashire Lass.	Llore
. Call Her Back and Kiss Her.	Clifton.	61. The Lancashire Lase.	MAYERODO
The Stuckird Polks. There was a Simple Maiden.	Rogers. Macfarren. Wild.	60. Meet Me in the Lane, Love. 50. Mahel Walts. 58. The Smile of Memory.	Blamphin
Street Galon	Wild.	St. The Smile of Memory.	Ball
. Somet Galop. . Hamlet, Prince of Denmark.	Raymord. Guglielmo. Rogers. Virlant.	57. Sweetheart.	Balf
Heaven and Thee. The Emma Mazurka.	Qualielmo.	M. Boot-Black's Bong.	Waverin
. The Emma Mazurka.	Rogers.	100. Lady Mine.	WATER
. The March of the Silver Trumpets.	Viriant.	54. Five O'Clock in the Morning.	Claribe
. It Ought not Thus to Be.	Wallace.	52. Those Tassels on the Boots.	Raymone Waverly
. In Happy Momenta. Old Simon the Collarer.	Hatton.	50. Pretty, Pretty Bird. 51. Why Wandering Here? 50. Call me Thine Own.	Markery
The Pairs's Profit	Bedgwick.	86. Call me Thine Own.	L'Eclai
The Bridal Ring.	Bodwell.	49. Le Sabre de mon Pére. Inst'i.	Offenhack
The Patry's Frolic. The Bridal Ring. The Heart Bowed Down. The Love Light's in your Syes. Waverly Polks.	Balfe.	48. Woodside Walts and Police.	Bailer
The Love Light's in your Byes.	Bedgwick.	47. Home, Sweet Home. Inst'l. 46. Perichole's Letter. Inst'l.	Bailey Richard
, Waverly Polks.	Sedgwick.	46. Perichole's Letter. Inst'l.	Offenbaci
The Diswing-Room Schottsche.	Douglass. Gabriel.	40. The mooning bea.	Prov
The Skipper and his Boy. Bhe is not Fair to Outward View.	Sullivan	44. St. Nicholas Galop.	Balley
Lirie Bird Lirie Bird on the Tree	Claribal	40. Gene d'Armes Tourt de	Raymone
Then You'll Remember Ma.	Claribel. Baife.	41. Gems from Orphes, Violin and Plano	Baymone
Little Bird, Little Bird on the Tree. Then You'll Remember Me. When the Swallows Homeward Fr	y. AbL	40. Belles of Broadway.	Raymone
You and L	Claribes.	35. Plying Trapene.	Raymone
Only a Lock of Hair.	Claribei.	48. Velocityede Johany. 48. Velocityede Johany. 48. Gens d'Armes Duet. 40. Gens from Orphee. Violin and Piano. 40. Bellies of Broadway. 59. Plying Trapeze. 58. Power of Love. Inst'l. 58. Sasan's Storr.	Wad
Mary Emma Polks. O Take Me to Tay Heart Again. Bostch Lassie Jean.	Rogera.	81. Susan's Story. 86. I will not Ask to Press that Check. 85. The Rosy Wreath. 94. The Life Boot.
. O Take Me to Tay Beart Agun.	Peabody.	So. I will not Ask to Press that Cheek.	V. Gabrie
Themeters Shartoom	Rogers.	St. The Life Boat	Claribe
Tommy Dodd. Good Night. Never Mind the Rest. This World is Full of Beauty.	Raymond.	88. Light of the World, (Sacred Sorty.)	Hattor
Good-Night.	Flowers.		Waverl
Never Mind the Rest.	H. Pase.	38. Ixion Galop. 30. Olympic Schottlache. 39. Up in a Balloon. 39. There's a Charm in Spring. 37. See the Conquering Hero. Inst'l. 34. Take Back the Heart. 35. The Passing Bell. (Sacred Song.) 36. Skill I Love Thee.	Bole
. This World is Full of Beauty.	Waverly.	30. Olympic Schottlache.	Dobeon
. O that I were a Bong! . The White-Blossomed Tree,	Hime.	29. Up to a Balloon.	Raymon
. Smiles and Tears.	Musgrave. Chppingdale.	27. See the Consumering Horn. Tour'l.	Hande
I have a Rose.	Carrington	24. Take Back the Heart.	Claribe
. Go it while you're Young.	Waverly.	25. The Passing Bell. (Sacred Song.)	Claribe
. Guadalina Waltz.	Udenbach.	34. Still I Love Thee.	Dobeon
Molly Bawn.	Lovee.	23. Waltzing Down at Long Branch. 23. Riding Down Broadway. 23. She might not Suit your Fancy.	Andrew
Juanita.	Nortes.	73. Riding Down Broadway.	Andrew
. I'm not Myself at all. . Beautiful Hope.	Bard.	11. 866 might hot Sun your Pancy.	Birans
. The Cavaller,	Glover.	20. Arm-in-Arm. Polks Hassrks. 19. The Rose of Erin.	Benedic
. Continental Scottische.	Rogers	18. Bilver Chimes.	Charibe
. Of what is the Old Man Thinking?	Rogers Enight.	17. The Old Cottage Clock.	Mollo
. Sally, Sally.	Lover,	17. The Old Cottage Clock. 14. His Love Shipes over all.	Forbe
l. Ka-foode-um.	Stewart.	15. Maggie's Secret. 14. Little Maggie May. 15. The Danish Boy's Whistle.	Claribe
Nothing Elec to Do. Crescent-City March.	Hatton.	14. Little Maggie May.	Blamphi
Daldle soon own Canon	Rogers.	13. The Danish Boy's Whistle.	Wiene
. Paddle your own Canoe.	Hobson. Wallace.	12. Come Hither, my Baby, my Darling. 11. Genevieve Walts.	Wiene
i. Scenes that are Brightest. i. Castles in the Air.	Adams.	10. Skating-Rink Polka.	Wiene
The Rell mass a Hinging for Sarah	Hunt.	9. Champagne Charley.	Le
i. Kitty Tyrrell. i. School for Jolly Doga. i. Willie went a Woolng.	Glover.	9. Champagne Charley. 8. Praise of Tears.	Schuber
Behoot for July Dogs.	Copeland.	7. I Really don't Think I shall Marry.	Gabrie
. Wille went a Woolng.	Raymond.	6. Good-by Sweetheart, Good-by.	Hatto
	Hootoh.	6. Not for Joseph.	Llogs
Mary of Argyle, Larboard Watch, Duet.	Williams.	4. Bine Eyes. 2. We'd Better Bide a Wee.	Mollo
. The Bashful Young Lady.		1. Won't You Tell Me Why, Robin?	Claribe
After Dark.	Glover. Stewart.	1. Captain Jinks.	Maclaga
			337

The above can be obtained at the Music, Book, and Periodical Stores, or by enclosing the price, FIVE CENTS each. Other choice selections will rapidly follow.

BENJ. W. HITCHCOCK, Publisher, 24 Beekman St., New York.

GRANT, BONNER, & DEXTER.

By JOHN W. EHNINGER, N.A.

"It is a striking likeness of the horse, and, I have no hesitation in saying, the best representation of a borse in action that I have ever se-

"ROBERT BONNER."

This splendid photograph, embodying three life-like portraits, is 12% x 1% inches, exclusive of mount. Sent free of expense on receipt of $1.00.

Larger Edition, 3 x 21, beautifully mounted on India tint, at $8.00: Ten copies for $55.00.

Address PILEINOTON JACESON, Art Publisher, Copy of HADSER A MOVEMPER.

Cure of HARPER & BROTHERS Liberal Terror to Agents.]

FURNITURE.

WARREN WARD & CO.,

Nos. 15 and 17 Spring St., corner Crosby.

Wholesale and retail manufacturers of the latest styles of BEDROOM, PARLOR, DINING, and LI-BRARY FURNITURE, MATTRESSES, SPRING BEDS, &c., &c., suitable for city and country resi-dences.

ALL GOODS WARRANTED AS REPRESENTED.

MAGIC PHOTOGRAPHS, wonderful and Manual of Processing, should write for a Descriptive Price-List of Process and American Watches.

PATENT STEM-WINDING WATCHES.

Cors - Silven Huwress Casse, $31; Raire Pine, $38.

SOLID GOLD Renting-Case Full-Jeweled Lever Watches, $45, $48; Extra, $50.

Ladies' Size, $55; Extra, $40; Enameled, $45. COIN-SILVER

HUNTING CARRO, $14; Extra Quality, $16. AMERICAN MOVEMENTS, Every variety. Latent, Lowest Price

And Watches of every description, in fine Gold and Silver Cases, at Importers' Rates. Goods sent by Express, to be paid for only after they have been received, examined, and accepted.

S. H. MOORE & Co., Importers, Nos. 52 & 54 John St., N. Y. Pull Descriptive Price-Lists sent free.

L ACE CURTAINS, Styles for 1870.—

Ande efter our own designs, and imported by no other bouse in America. Nottingham Lace Curtains, over one hundred different patients, many of them now first introduced in this market.

Curtain Materials and Furniture Coverings of Breecielle, Rep. Terry, Dennets, &c. Curtains and Lamberquins made to order. Manufacturers of Tassels, Cords, Gimps, Fringes, and Trimmings. Window Shades of all kinds on hand or made to order. Wholessile or retail. G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO., No. 44 Broadway, between Howard and Grand Sts.

N. B.—FURNITURE STORE at No. 46 Broadway. N. B .-- FURNITURE STORE at No. 651 Broadway.

WATCH BUYERS,

Freeman & Burr.

138 & 140 FULTON St., NEW YORK, invite attention to the marnidcent stock of Men's and Boys' Clothing. It is of unparalleled extent and variety, made up in strict accordance with prevail-ing styles from the most fashionable materials, and for novalty of design and excellence in OVERCOATS for all seasons, $8 to $50.

SUITS for all occasions and occupations, $12

BOYS' SUITS for all ages, $6 to $20.

COUNTRY ORDERS.—Rules for self-measurement and samples of goods free. Freeman & Burr mell free, on application, their new rules for self-measurement, patterns of goods, and price-lists, which enable gentlemen in any part of the country to order clothing direct from them with the certainty of receiving per/ect-filling persuents.

S. W. GEERY,

Do W. GRERY,

IMPORTER,

Wholesale & Retail Dealer in Teas, Wines, Cigars, and CHORCE FAMILY GROCKRIES,

Permerly I. & W. Geery, No. 119 Broadway,

Established in 1804.

The selection of Choice Teas and Old Wines has been the special business of this house for years.

My stock comprises some of the Oldest Liquors in the country.

the country.

Constantly on hand, a full assortment of every thing apportaining to the Grocery Trade. Catalogues sent by mail. Orders will be called for (in the city) every morning, if desired.

Goods ahipped to all paris of the country.

IMPROVED ALUMINIUM BRONZE HUNTING-CASED WATCHES.

The Improved Alaminium.

The Improved Alaminium.

Bronne is a metal differing eatirely from any ever offered to the public. Its qualities and resemblance to Gold are such that even judges have been decrived. It has seriously occupied the atlantion of actutific men, and has not only called forth the calogiums of the press in consequence of its paculiar properties, but has also obtained a Gold Medal
at the Paris Exposition.

The movements are well fa-

The movements are well fa-labed, perfectly regulated, and as all these goods are manufactured in my own factory, I am enabled to warrant them as excellent time-keepers. Factor ruos $16 vo $20. Further details will be found in my pamphlet, which will be sent, postpaid, on demand.

ill be sent, postpaid, on demand.

Goods sent by Express, C. O. D., with charges,
Address JULES D. HUGUENIN VULLEMIN,
No. 44 Nassau Street, New York.

FRENCH CLOCKS.

PARIS AND VIENNA

WEDDING PRESENTS.

Alex. M. Hays & Co., No. 23 Maiden Lane, New York,

The above goods comprise one of the largest va-ctics to be found in the city, and are offered at ow Prices.

IF Sign of Gold Telegraph,

CATARRH.

RELIEF AT ONCE !-- A PERFECT CURE! NORTON'S NEW REMEDY FOR CATARRE

AND MODE OF TREATMENT
Is an improvement, and a perfection never before attained. It consists of the atternated thankation of harmless liquids—they are paintess, cleanaing, deodorizing, soothing, and powerful curatives. Relief and comfort follow from the first day's me, and a permament cure in due course of time. It penetrates through the absorbents to the very seat of the disease—breaks it up at its fountain head—removes all the westched symptoms, such as pain in the temples, noises in the head, obstruction of the air passages, offeasive discharges from the nostrils, and dropping of morus into the throat, "cold in the head," smearing, dixmess, loss of memory, dimness of vision, and restores the sense
of memory, dimness of vision, and restores the sense of memory, dimness of vision, and restores the sense
of memory, dimness of vision, and restores the sense of memory dimness of vision, offer stamp for Pamphiet to GERRET NOETON, office it Ann St., N. T.,

WELLINGER TO NO SECUT. AND MODE OF TREATMENT

BELONGS TO NO SECT.

BUT GIVES THE NEWS OF ALL THE CHURCHES.

NEW YORK OBSERVER. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

SIDNEY B. MORSE, JR., & CO., SI PARK ROW, NEW YORK.

"A GOOD BARGAIN!" "CHEAP READING."— A The October, November, and December Numbers, PICTORIAL PHRENOLOGICAL HAGAZINE worth to contame and gratis to new subscribers who result $3 for the volume for 1970, during October or November. Address S. R. WELLS, $39 Broadway, N. Y.

THE MYSTERIOUS PUZZLE, A Great Bensation. Sent for 10 cents. WALTER HOLT, 109 Nassan St., N. Y. Box 1888.

The New Books of the Season

PERSONAL BY

HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

Sent by Mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the Undted Males, on receipt of the price.

GEORGE ELIOTS NOVELS, Complete. Harper's Bustrated Library Edition, Complete in 6 vols, 12mo, Merocco Cloth, 15 cents per volume. Half Calf, $5 00 per volume.

THE MILL ON THE PLOSS.
FELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.
SCENES OF CLERICAL LIPE and SILAS MARNER. ADAM BEDE.

WRECKED IN PORT. A Novel. By Engust Yaves.
Anthor of "Eissing the Rod," "Land at Last,"
"Black Sheep," &c. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

B. THE HISTORY OF JOSEPH BONAPARTE, King of Naples and of links. By Jone S. C. Amsow, Author of "The History of Napoleon Bonaparte," "The French Revolution," &c. 1600c, Cloth, $1.20. Uniform 1222.

ABBOTTS ILLUSTRATED BISTORIES. 16mo, Cloth, $1 30 per volume.

Cyris the Great, Darios the Great, Kerers, Al-rianser the Great, Roweles, Hardinal, Perr Rus, Julies Crear, Carotaura, Neso, Alfred the Great, William the Conguston, Richard I., Richard Richard, Carolles L., Carolles H., Josephen Mania Astronette, Maniare Ediam, Harri IV., Peter the Great, Gregors Krian, King Philip, Harriando Corter, Maniare of Amou, Joseph Bonaparte.

A BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK; or, A County Fam-By. A Novel. By the Anthor of "One of the Fam-By," "Carlyon" Year," "Found Dead," &c. Svo, Paper, 45 cents.

PICTORIAL FIELD-BOOK OF THE WAR OF ISIS; or, Illustrations, by First and Pencil, of the History, Biography, Sensory, Reites, and Traditions of the Last War for American Independence. By Busson J. Lessuss, Anthor of "The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution." With 892 Illustrations, engraved on Wood by Lessing & Barrilla, chiefy from Original Sketches by the Author. Complete in One Volume, 1984 pages, large 300. Price, in Clock, §1 60. Skeep, §5 50; Full Roam, §5 60; Half Calf or Half Morocco extra, §10 50.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Octavawe, Author of "Chronicles of Carlingford," "Perpetual Carate," "Life of Edward Iving," "Brownioms," "Agnes," &c. 8vo, Paper, Is cents.

DPHAM'S MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. Mental Philosophy: embracing the Three Repartments of the Intellect, Sensibilities, and Will. By Threes 47. UPHAM, D.D., Professor of Mental and Mend Philosophy in Bowdoin Callege, In Two Volumes. Vol. L.; Intellect, Language; Vol. II.; Sensibilities, Will. Ermo, Choth, $1.79 per volumes.

8. IN SILE ATTIRE. A Novel. By William Black, Author of "Love or Marriage?" Svo, Paper, 50 cls.

COUNTESS GISELA. A Novel, By E. Mariott. Translated by A. Nahmer. Svo, Paper, 55 cents.

A GREEK GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS, By William Haway Warderl, Professor of Ancient Languages in the University of Georgia. 18mo, Cloth, $1.00.

POUND DEAD. A Novel. By the Author of "Carly-on's Year," "One of the Family," &c. 8vo, Paper, on's Year," 50 cents.

THE SEVEN CURSES OF LONDON. By James GREENWOOD, the "Amathur Careal," Author of "The True History of a Little Regionnitis," "Burben Day-idget," "Wild Sports of the World," &c. Sep. Pa-

PALSE COLORS. A Novel. By ARRIE THOMAS. 5vo, Paper, 50 conts.

MOORE'S BYRON. The Letters and Journals of Lord Byron. With Notices of his Life. 2 vols., 8vo., Cloth, $6 00.

GUICCIOLE'S LORD DYRON. My Recollections of Lord Byron, and those of Eye-Witnesses of his Life. By the Cours russ Guiconcu. Translated by Hussus E. H. Junyanegans. Portrail. 16mo, Cloth, $1 to.

MY DAUGHTER ELINOR. A Novel of American Society. New Edition. Svo, Paper, $1 25.

17.

META'S FAITH. A Novel. By the Author of "St. Clave's," &c. Svo, Paper, 50 cents.

THACKERAY'S NOVELS: New Edition, beautifully printed, with the Author's own Histrations. VANITY FAIR, 88 filestrations, 8vo, Paper, 60 cts.

PENDENNIS. 119 Hinstrations. 8vo, Paper, 15 etc. THE VIRGINIANS. 150 Hinstrations. 8vo, Pa-per, 75 cents.

THE NEWCOMES, 162 Blustrations. Svo, Paper, THE ADVENTURES OF PHILIP. Perirals of Author and 64 libratrations. See, Paper, 50 cents,

HENRY ESMOND AND LOVEL THE WIDOWER.
18 Illustrations. Svo, Paper, 86 cents.

RHETORIC: a Text-Book, designed for Use in Schools and Colleges, and for Private Singly. By Rev. E. O. Haves, D.D., L.L.D., President of the Northwestern University. 11mo, Cloth, $1.50.

CHARLES READE'S NOVELS: HARD CASH. Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 55 cents. GRIFFITH GAUNT; or, Jealousy. Illinetrated.

IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND, 870, Pa-

LOVE ME LITTLE, LOVE ME LONG. Svo, Paper, 25 cents.

FOUL FLAT. Sto., Paper, 25 cents.
WHITE LIES. Sto., Paper, 25 cents.
PEO WOFFINGTON, CHILISTIK JOHNSTONE, and Other Stories. Sto., Paper, 50 cents.

THE MALAY ARCHIPELAGO: The Land of the Creag-Ucan and the Bird of Paradise. A Narrative of Travel, with Studies of Man and Nature. By Altrach Resent Wallaca, Author of "Travel on the Amazon and Rio Negro." "Palm Trees of the Amazon," &c. With Ten Haps and Fitty-one elegant Hinsteadions. Crown 870, Cloth, $3-50.

THE CELEBRATED IMITATION

Gold Watches and Jewelry. THE COLLINS METAL, THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY

GENUINE OROIDE.

The $15 Watches, in appearance and for time, are equal to gold ones conting $100. Those of extra fine fin-h, at $20, are not surpassed by $300 gold watches. For TIME, ELEGANCE, FINISH, and DURABLETY, o inditation of gold can begin to compare with the Collins Metal. Excepting the intrinsic value, it is equal or gold. Every watch fully warranted by certificate.

CHAINS FROM 22 TO 88.

CHAINS FROM 22 TO 38.

JEWELRY.—We are manufacturing all kinds of Jewelry of the Collins Metal.—Pins, Ear-Rings, Siecee-Buttous, Lockets, Sinds, Finger-Rings, Bracelect, Charms, Odd-Fellow and Masonic Pins, &c., all of the laired and most elegant styles, and fully equal to gold in appearance and wear.

TO CLUBS:—Where Six Watches are ordered at one time, we will send the seventh Watch free of charge. Goods sent to any part of the United States by express, to be paid for on delivery. Money seed not be sent with the order, as bills can be paid when goods are taken from the express offics. Customers must pay all express charges. We employ so agents; orders, therefore, must be sent directly to us. In ordering, write pictury the name, town, county, and state. Customers in the city will remember that our own corner is Ne. 325 Broadway, cor. Worth St. (up states), New York.—C. E. COLLINS & CO.

HENRY WARD

${f BEECHER'S}$

SERMONS IN PLYMOUTH PULPIT

PLYMOUTH PULLPIT

Are being read by people of every class and drawwingtion all over this country and Europe. They are full of vital, beautiful religious thought and feeling. Physical Polysis is published weekly, and contains Mr. Bechrick Propis is published weekly, and contains Mr. Bechrick Sermons and Prayers, in form swinels for perservation and Madriay. For saie by all Newsdealers. Price 16c.
Yearly subscriptions received by the publishers, 22,
giving two handsome volumes of over 400 pages each.
Balf-yearly, $1.73. A new and superb Sized Portrait of Mr. Beccher presented to all yearly subscribers.
Retraverience Offer | Plymouth Pulpis (40), and The Christian Union (400), an Uncertain at, Independent, Christian Journal—16 pages, cut and attiched, clearly printed, ally edited, rent to one addrain for 20 weeks for four dellars. Special inducements to canvissions and those getting up clabs. Speclinen caples, postage free, for 5c.

J. B. FORD & CO., Pub's, 39 Park Row, N.Y.

Bloomington Nursery.

500 Acres. 18th Year. 10 Green-Houses.

Foult, Ornamental and Nursery Stock, immense and reliable assortment, very low for cash.

Apples—including most magnificent stock of year-lings; size hardy Northern serie, such as Duchess, Oddenburg, Husboy, Transcendent, and other Crab Apples—1, 3, and 3 year.

Procket, Paras, Caerries, Planas, Quin a, Grapes, Forest and Energymen Trees, Nursery Stocks, Osape Ornase Helps Planas, Roses, own roots; Thilps, Hyacmith, Streetsmay, Fris, Spelials, Lilies, Speciesces, Auratre, &c. Also superior colored plates of Fruits and Flowers. Send 19 cents for Catalogues.

P. K. PHCENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

P. K. PRIENIX, Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill.

GREAT INDUCEMENTS TO SUB-GREIBERS.—Let these who want a fewt-clase Lady's Magazine and a fewt-class Wockly Paper send at one for a sample copy of THE LADY'S FRIEND and THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, and see the unequaled indocements offered. 2: 50 a year for each. 54 for both. Four copies for $6, with a spiendid presslum engraving. Five copies (and one gratts), $8. Sample copies of both will be sent (post-paid) for fifteen cents. Address

DEACON & PETERSON,

No. 310 Welman St. Philodolphia De-

No. 319 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

444444444444

TO THE WORKING CLASS.—We are now preserved to darreight all classes with constant employment at hears, the whole of the first or for the spare moment. Evaluates now, light and the first or for the spare moment. Evaluates now, light and recording, and a proportional sum in the develop that who have to the best now. Boys and girls even nearly as much as most. That IS who ever this best in may not find earlier as we make the products, we make their naives and field earliers, and on the products, we will such a stage for the best best for their scaled, we will send it to pay for the best best of writing. First particulars, a valuable enzypic, which will do to consensor work on, and a carry of The Posylet Literary Cossumentons on the largest and heat family newspapers published—all sections by suits. Besides, if you went present content, problable moch, addiese E. C. All.EN a CO., Anguses, Masse.

FURNITURE.—Now designs and new styles; I low prices for first-class warranced goods. Original drawings furnished, with estimates for finishing dwellings with hard wood and furniting alegated to the style of house and rooms. Only scanned and steam-dried lember used; none other will stand farance heat. G. L. & J. R. KELTY & CO. 641 Frontiery, near Annity St. N. B.—Cartain and Furniture. Covering Store at No. 641 Broadway.

DO YOUR OWN PRINTING. Cheanest and Best Portable Presses.

MEN AND BOYS MAKING MONEY.

Price of Presses, $1, $12, $13. Offices, $15, $20, $80. Send for a circular to LOWE PRESS CO., 15 Spring Lane, Boston, Mass.

THE CHURCHMAN.

THE BEST and LARGEST Weekly Newspa-per, with the LARGEST direction to the Protestant Episcopal Church. Sent FREE for one munth for examination, and till Jan. 1, 1870, to new subscribers for that year. 50 a year, in advance. M. H. MALLORY & CO., Hartford, Coun.

BOOSEY'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

A Complete Catalogue now ready. Sent free.

Boosey's "Bulled Ninger," the new Half-Dime Series of the Best Souge. Sold every where, or specime number mailed for Five Cents.—644 Broadway, N. Y.

MAPLE LEAVES, enlarged and improved.

The best, the most popular, and the cheapest Magnazine published. It will be sent from now to the and of 1876 for 50 cents. Send in your subscriptions thout delay.

O. A. ROORBACH, 100 Nassau St., New York.

THE MAGIC COMB will change any colored halr or beard to a permanent Black or Brown. One Comb ent by mail for $1. For sale by Membants & Braggiets generally. Address Magic Conb Co., Springfield, Mass.

and is more general are than any other in the United States. For Sale by all first-class Hardware Dealess. Made by the LIVINGSTON MANUFACTURING CO., 56 BREKMAN ST., N. T.

CIRCULATION 86,000 COPIES:

The greatest success is attending the publication of BALLOU'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE of any periodical in the world. Each number contains the Brenarin Paous of the choicest Stories, Poens, and Engravings, or Twave Hossess Paous every year for $1.00—being faily three fourths as large as either of the four-deliar Magazines, at about one liked their paice.

IF Now is the Time to Subscribe. 41 Trame_$150 a year; 7 copies, $9: 13 copies, $15. $87 Send stamp for specimen copy and prospectus to ELLIOTT, THOMES, & TALBOT, Programme, Boston, Mass.

WATERS

WATERS

NEW SCALE PILANOS.

Fish Iren Pranse, Overstrong Brass and Agrafe Bridge.

The location and Cabinet Organs.

The best manufactured. Warmated for 6 years.

Planos, Melodeons, and Organs.—Prive greatly replaced for Cast. New 1-acture Planos, 272 and upward. New Cabinet Organs, 355 and upward. Second-band instruments, 362 and upward. Monthly installments received. Warnerouse, 481 Broadway, N.Y.

HORACE WATERS.

FOWLE'S PILE AND HUMOR CURE.

The greatest and only medicine in the world that is Karrynated a Profect Core for all kinds of Purse, Ler-boer, Schort L., Salt-Butte, Catassu, and all Dis-cases of the Skin and Blood. Internal and external use. Entirely regestable. In case of follows, f-request all dealers to return money, and charge it back to me. No failure for ever ten years. H. D. FOWLE, Chem-let, Boston. Sold every where. Send for Circulars.

WOLIDAY JOURNAL POR 1870. Containing a Fairy Story for Christmas, Plays, Pus-ries, and Wonders. 16 large pages, Blostrated. Sent PREE on receipt of a 3-cent Stamp for postage. ADAMS & CO., 35 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN PRINTER.

With one of our presses, and the material accompanying it, every men one do his own printing, there earling near time and expense. Circulars containing full information about these Presses, prices, recommendations, &c., smalled free on application. Specimentations, &c., smalled free on application. Specimen-books of types, cits, borders, &c., &c., 10 cents, ADAMS PRESS CO., 55 Murray Street, New York,

$2000 A YEAR AND EXPENSES

To agents to sell the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machines. The best machine in the world. Stack afthe on both side. First machine on trial. For further particulars, address

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE CO., Cleveland, Obio; Boston, Mass.; or St. Leuts, Mo.

WANTED-AGENTS-To sell the Ameri-can Knitting Machine, Price $25. The simplest, cheopest, and best Knitting Machine ever lo-vented. Will kink 25,000 stitches per minute. Libergi infracements to Agents. Address AMERICAN KNIT-TING MACHINE CO., Poston, Mass our St. Lenix, Mo.

$50,000 worth of Furniture Cover-lags, purchased at recent anctions, for sale at whodosedo or retail, for less than gold cost. G. L. & J. B. KELTY & CO., Broadway, hear Grand St.

$200 to $300 PER MONTH made by any man and selling Rubber Monthly and Worther Stelle for Does and Windows. Instructions and Vision-Lie of Motorials fermished. HEA BRADSTREET, Boston, Mass.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED FOR PRIEST and NUN.

Apply at once to CRFTTENDEN & McKENNEY, 1906 Chestnat St., Philadelphia, Pa.

VINEGAR -- HOW MADE FROM CIDER, 10 hours, without using drugs. For stroulars, address F. I. SAGE, Vinegar Maker, Cronswoll, Cours.

CAME FOWLS, - Coper's Work on Game Of Powls, now out. 850 pages, Shastrated. Sports-men should have it. Seast by mask, prepoint, for 35. Address Da. J. W. COOPER, West Chemer, Pa.

A WATCH FREE -others products overy live man who will act as agent in a new, light, hoperable business paying $20 a day. No gift enterprise, un huntup, no money in advance. R. Monroe Kennedy, Pitteburg, Pa.

SALENMEN, -Wanted, a few reliable, energetic Salesmen, to sell by sample mandard goods.

Address H. H. HICHARDS & CO.,
483 Cheetnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

$25 A BAY. -- 13 pew articles for ... rote. Samples few. B. E. SHAW, Alfred, No.

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

THE PERIODICALS WHICH THE HARPERS PUBLISH ARE ALMOST IDEALLY WELL EDITED .- The Nation, M. Y.

"A complete Pictorial History of the Times."

Harpers Weekly. OURHAL OF CIVILITATION

Hatrra's Weener is an illustrated record of, and commentary upon the events of the times. It will trent of every topic, Political, Hissocical, Literary, and Schendide, which is of correct taterest. In Screenber will be commenced the new story "MAN AND WIPS," by Wiener Channe, the Author of "The French in White," "No Easte," "Armedials," and "The Monatore." Subscribers will be furnished with the Wessers from the commencement of the story to the close of 1870 for $4.00.

Published Workly, with profess Hinstrations.

The young lady who buys a single number of Han-PER's Baxan is made a subscriber for life, ... N. Y. Stening Post, Harrin's Banan is a Journal for the Home. It is especially devined to all subjects pertaining to Domestic and Social Life. It furnishes the invest Fashistan in Dress and Companint, describes in-dross and out-drost Amsternents; contains Stories, Hanys, and Pressan-every thing, in brief, calculated to make an American Home attractive.

Published Weekly, with profess Binstrations.

The most popular Monthly in the world .- N. Y. Ob-

HARPER'S LINE.

The Number for Neverther completes the Thirty-nieth Velence of Haurent's Madazusa. While an change is contemplated in the general character of the Magnitude, the Conductors will not full to avail themselves of any suggestions which may add to its present intention with he given to the departments of Popular Science and Industrial Aris. Papers on these self-jets will be profusely libratened. It is proposed that he arrives Billionia Departments shall give a complete resums of the times. The Eng Chair will contenent upon topics relating to switch life and manners. The Box Table will criticise the important banks of the day. The Monthle Recent will note all important policical events. The Journal will present the facetiss and annotheries of the time.

Hauren's Madazune contains from fifty to one hundred per cent, mere matter than any similar periodical issued in the English language. Thus the simple space at the disposal of the Conductors will enable them to treat fully of all the hopics embraced in their plan.

The Politishers feel themselves warranted in asking and anticipating for the fister a conditionate of the favor which has been accorded to their enterprises in the past.

Published Monthly, with profuse Illustrations.

TERMS for BARPER'S MAGAZINE, WEEELY, and BAZAR.

HARPER'S MASARINE, ODE YEST. $4 00 Hander's Wresly, One Year..... 4 00 Hander's Barar, One Year..... 4 00

The Volumes of the Manageme coursence with the Manageme to fact year. Subscriptions may commence with any Number. When no line is specified, it will be understood that the subscriber wishes to begin with the first Number of the current Volume, and linck Numbers will be cent accordingly.

the current Volume, and luck Numbers will be cent accordingly.

The Volumes of the Warsely and Baran control or with the year. Which no time is specified, it will be rederated that the enberthet wishes to constrol on with the Number text after the receipt of his under. So been found to the Managers, Warsely, of Baran will find on each weaport the Number with which their subscription captures. Each perfection is stopped then the term of wheating the character with which their subscription captures. Each perfection is stopped after the term of wheaten the name. It is not necessary to give testice of discontinuates.

In remaining by read, a Post-Office Order or Peach people to the order of Raman & Storman is preferable to Stark Posts, store, should the Order or Peach be lost or shown, it can be removed without less to the sender.

In cordering the Managine, the Warsely, or the is sender. In ordering the Managine, the Wesselv, Bazar, the name and address should be clearly writ-ten. When the direction is to be changed, both the old and the new one must be given.

pp" See Subscribers to either of Harper's Periodi-culs furnished from the present time to the close of 1870 for Four Bollans.

TREMS FOR ADVERTISING IN HARPER'S PERSONGALS. Harper's Mascriss.—Whole Page, $550; Haif Page, $125; Quarter Page, $50—each insertion; or, for a less space, $150 per Line, each insertion.

Harper's Westly, Inside Pages, $150 per Line; Outside Page, $200 per Line—each insertion.

Marper's figure, $1 00 per Line; Cone and Display, $1 25 per Line, each insertion.

Address HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

$20 A DAY! Business new. Samples and Circu-

$3600 a Year overestral in Agents. Address J. Address J. Address J. A. Avenue, Bullimore, Md.

A NEW DISCOVERY !! PHALON'S

Salvation for the Hair.

For Restoring to Green Hair its Original Colon

PHALON'S "VITAMA" differs "colorers," and "restorers"

(?) in use. It acts on a totally different principle. It is limpid, fragrant, and per-fectly innocuous, precipitates no muddy or flactulent matter, requires no sharing up, and communicates no tain to the skin or the lines. No paper curtain is necessary to conceal its turbid appearance, for the simple reason that it is not turbid. It is, to all intents and purposes, A NEW DISCOVERY in Toiler Chemistry.

Pharen's "VITALIA" is warranted to effect a change in the color of the hair within 10 days after the first applica-tion, the direction being carefully observed

IT IS AS CLEAR AS WATER! AND MAS NO SEDIMENT.

Price, One Dollar per Box, MORNE COO SOUTHERS.

SOLD BY ALL QRUGGISTS.

If your Druggist has not "Vitalia" on hand! write, enclosing $1.00 and we will forward it immediately.

> PHALON & SON, 517 Breadway, N. Y.

STEREOPTICONS

MAGIC LANTERNS, and over 5000 Views. Catalogues sent free.
W MITCHELL MALLISTER,
Tra Cheshnot St., Philadelphia

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY lies in the use of HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM for the complexion.

Roughness, Redness, Blotches, Sunbarn, Freckles, and Tan disappear where it is applied, and a beautiful complexion of pure, satin-like texture is obtained. The plainest features are made to glow with healthful bloom and youthful beauty.

Remember, HAGAN'S MAGNOLIA BALM is the thing that produces these effects, and any lady can secure it for 75 cents at any of our stores.

To preserve and dress the Hair use Lyon's

ENOCH MORGAN'S SONS'

SAPOLIO,

FOR CLEANING AND POLISHING.

Saronno will make This resemble Silver.
Use only Saronno to clean White Point.
From Marble Saronno removes all Status.
For polishing Knives Saronno is unsurpassed.
For cleaning Brass State-Rode Saronno has no equal.
If you would have clean windows, use Saronno lample cake cent by mail on receipt of Depot, 211 Washington St., New York.

Established 1809.

Particular attention is called to our SOAPS for family use.

E. HOLMES' BURGLAR-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

This one Bell, located in the sleeping-room, rings upon the opening of each window and door of the house. An experience of nine years writing a failure proves that it is perfect, reliable, and solicitative. Thousands who are using it tentify to inturitie, as will be seen by a pomphier obtainable at the office. The public are ranifored against infringerson, cutter in using or vending. The law will be applied to all each cases. E. HOLMES, T. Marray No. N. Y.

Dr. JNO. V. BURTON'S TOBACCO ANTIDOTE. Cartion - Dever of hearing inches [Trudestank & Copyrighted.]

FISHERMEN! TWINES and NETTING.

WM. E. HOOPER & SONS, Baltimore, Md. THE SHOOT FOR TWICE LAST 1

A LL WANTING PARTIE, Gold and mill The literate, and brushly, as more such at Philo-dellair. Price and per Acre. The place is the U.S. The more are settling. Address CHARLES E. LANDER, Vinsiand, New Jersey.

The Reason why Every One should buy a Haines Piano:

The reputation of these Planos is fully established as being unsurposed by any for a rich, fall tone, elasticity of touch, long standing in tune, and elegance of style and finish

Every article used in the construction of the Haines Piano is of the best quality and of thoroughly seasoned materials.

The prices being reasonable, they can not fall to sait any who may destre to purchase. Circulars and information sent on application to

HAINES BROTHERS,

46 East 14th Street, New York,

Or to Sastu & Nexos, Chicago, Els.; H. N. Hearortan, Milwarkee, Wis.; Louis Thior, Louisville, Ky.; J. A. McCuure, Nashville, Tenn.; Euncere Bros., St. Louis, Ma.; C. M. Meruni, Cinclusoit, Orbo; J. R. Jackson, Sandinsky, Ohlo; Brainard & Sors, Cleveland, Ohlo; H. D. Munson, Zanceville, Ohlo; J. E. Gorle, Philadelphia, Pa.; Mes. C. Batrer, Pittsburgh, Fa.; L. B. Powell, Scraston, Pa.; Curry & Sors, Albany and Troy, N. Y.; J. T. Hammor, Ethinsberk, N. Y., J. H. Hintermanners, Rhees, N. Y.; H. S. Macker, Rochester, N. Y.; H. Utley, Buffalo, N. Y.; Exinguis & Howe, Syrachee, N. Y.; Whitz, Shitu, & Perry, Booton, Mass.; Concy Buces, Providence, R. I.;
C. M. Louis, New Haven, Coun.; Mayrimas Gray, San Prancisco, Cal.; A. & S. Nontonner, Toronto,
C. W.; E. Pirman & Bio., St. John, N. R.

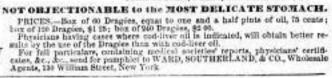

OD LIVER DRAGEES

Barrier mount

SENT POSTPAID ON RECEIPT OF PRICE.

SUGAR-COATED PILLS OF COD-LIVER EXTRACT.

CURES COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, &c.

hatter, furrier, and Importer of English Hats for Gentlemen's wear. Ladies' Riding Hats, entirely News. Ladies' Fine Fure in every variety.

DANIEL D. YOUMANS, 717 BROADWAY,

New York Hotel.

UNION ADAMS & CO.

For Ladies.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drawers, Flocey Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Merino Hosiery, Kid and Castor Gloves.

For Misses.

Patent Merino Vests, Patent Merino Drasvers, Patent Union Dresses, Fleecy Cotton Hosiery, Fancy Cashmere Hosiery, Roman and Fancy Sathes.

No. 637 Broadway.

THE ONLY WRINGER which has the PATENT STOP, to prevent the cogs from entirely

 PATENT OFFICE AND THE GOOD THAT CAN BE SAID OF THE TRANSPORT OF THE TRA

Simpson, Hall, Miller, & Co.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

IMPROVED ELECTRO PLATE.

PURE SILVER.

The experience of FURTY YEARS on the part of our Mr. Simpers, and the new of new and impulses into results machinery, there as to offer to the trade a line of pools in

ORIGINAL AND ELEGANT DESIGNS, which, for BEAUTY, FINISH, and DURABILITY,

Can not be Excelled. All goods beering our trade-mark, "Improved Electro Treble Plate,"

ARE OF THE BEST QUALITY PRODUCED, and, if found disference of antique represented, can be returned, and programs will be entigrated. (OTTOP AND PACTORY, WALLINGTOND, C.

SAMELS AND SALES BOOM, OF JOHN ST., N. Y.

E DWARD SEARS:
S BEEKMAN STREET, New YORK

Two Months

FREE! FREE!!

The Most Popular Juvenile Magazine in America.

THE

Entirely Original and Pirst Class.

All new subscribers for THE LITTLE CORPORAL for the new year, whose names and money are sent in before the last of November, will receive the Novem-ber and December Nee, of 1860 FREE! THE LITTLE CORPORAL has a larger circulation than any other Juvenile Magazine in the world, and is better worth the price than any other magazine pub-lished.

Because of its immense circulation, we are enabled Became of its immense circumton, we are entous to furnish it at the low price of One Bealan a Year. Single number, it cents, or free to any one who will try to raise a club. Beautiful premiums for clubs. Subscribe NOW. Back numbers can always be sent. Address

ALFRED L. SEWELL & CO., PUBLISHERS,

CHICAGO, ILL.

ANTED — AGENTS—275 to 2200

per mouth, every where, male and fousie, to introduce the GENUINE IMPROVED COMMON - SENSE FAMILY SEWING MACHINE. This Machine will selich, hem, fell, tack, quilt, cord, bind, braid, and empriser in a most superior manner. Frice only 218. Fully warranted for free years, we will pop giote for any machine that will sew a stronger, more beautiful, or more elastic sewn than ours. It makes the "Hastic Lock Stitch." Every second stitch can be cut, and still the cloth can not be pulled spart without tearing it. We pay Agents from $25 to $200 permenth and supersees, or a commission from which where that amount can be made. Address SECOMB & CO., Petrasermon, Pa., Boerros, Mass., or Sr. Leen, Mc. CACTION.—Do not be imposed upon by other parties painting off worthless cant-fron machines, under the same name or otherwise. Ours is the only genue and ready practical cheep machine mannfactured.

A GENTS WANTED,—AGENTS WANTED.

A GENTS WANTED,—AGENTS WANTED,
A 575 to 5700 per mouth, male and female, to sell the celebrated and original Conzon-Stream Faster Sevetron Machine, improved and perfected; it will here, fell, stitch, inck, blod, braid and embraider in a most superfor manner. Price out; $15. Yer simplicity and dimability, it has no rival. Do not buy from any parties acting machines under the same name as cars, unless having a Certificate-of agency signed by us, as they are worthless Cast-fron Machines.
For Circulars and Terms, apply to or address,
C. BDWERS & CO., 466 Sprace St., Fhiliadelphia, Pa.

INVENTIOUS who wish to

TATENTS

-INVENTORS who wish to take out Letters Patent are advised to counsel with MUNN Accordant, who have presented claims before the Patent Office for Twenty-three Years. Their Americal and Enropean Prient Agrency is the most extensite in the morth. Charges less than any other reli-

A Parallel, containing full instructions to Levents or, is stategards. Address. MUNN & CO., 37 Park Row, New York.

The largest and oldest depot in America. Fresh Procedure by needy every Steinler. Fine Supply of Pract Goods, France Williams, J. J. PAFL LARD & CO., 4 so Bloca PWAY, N. Y.

CATALOGUES TEN CENTS EACH. NATICAL EXTRUMENTS, 117 Mages. L. INSTRUMENTS, 70 pages. LANTEUMENTS, 70 PAGE ASS, 100 pp. TOPHICAL INSTRUMENTS, 94 pages.

A GENTS WANTED for William's School and Panally Charles,
To course every state in the Union. Men of ability, are not reconstanted, two realine handsome purion. For particulars and berms, address HARPER & BIOTHURB, Franklin Square, N. Y.

"OLD FOGY" LOST his lead-pencil. On the Naturally Provid-Holders, and avoid losing pencils.

HARPERS WEEKLY. OURNAL OF CIVILIZATION

Vol., XIII.-No. 672.]

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1869.

SINGLE COPIES, TEN CENTS. $4.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year 1868, by Harper & Beothers, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Southern District of New York.

THE LINCOLN STATUE,

PROSPECT PARK, BROOKLYN.
The bronze statue of Abraham Lincoln, in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, was unveiled October 21, and dedicated with imposing ceremonies.
Prospect Park is one of the most beautiful in the world; and it has this advantage over Central Park, that is everlooks a large expanse of water. It is creditable to the patriotism of the citizens of Brooklyn that the first monament erected in their Park is one dedicated to the memory of the Saviour of his Country.

The statue is nine feet

The statue is uine feet in height, and is mounted upon a massive pedestal of granite. Mr.
Lixcotx is represented as pointing to the Constinution of the United States, which be holds in his left hand. His head is uncovered, and a cloak thrown back from the breast hangs gracefully over his shoulders. This statue is the result of dollar subscriptions; it was executed by the sculptor Mr. H. K. BROWN.

A large number of citizens were present. Within the inclosure about the statue were officers of the army and officers of the army and navy, and just outside the Twensy-third regi-ment formed a glitter-ing line along the slope, Mr. A. Low, the presiding officer, deliv-ered a brief but eloquent address. Then the statue was unveiled. Mr. J. P. Wallace, in behalf of the War Fund Committee, formally presented the statue to the Park J. S. T. STRANAHAN PRplied in behalf of the Commissioners. He said that three sites had been chosen for statues, and that he trusted the two yet unoccupied would be filled by stat-ERROues of Warmington and Jackson. The oration of the day—an eloquent and impressive one— was delivered by Rev. Dr. Stohas, of Brook-Letters were read President GRANT Governor Hopp-MAN.

THE SECRET OF THE AURORA.

May of science have long felt that a strange secret lay hidden in the brilliant folds of the amrors. The magic arch, with its pointed streamers, shifting silently but swiftly across the heavens, palsating mysteriously as though illaminated by the fitfully changing glow of some concealed furnace, and rendered surpassingly beautiful by the brilliancy of its colors, had always had strange iancy of its colors, had always had strange charms for men of thoughtful mind. And gradually a series of laborious researches had revealed the laws which associate this beautiful apparition with disturbances affecting the economy of our whole earth, and not indisturity connected with the habitudes of the solar system itself. But recently a discovery has been made which is even more remarkable than any which had before rewarded the labors of physicists—a discovery at once instructive and perplexing, revealing a bond of union between the aurors and a phenomenon hitherto thought to be quite different in character, but leaving us still to learn what the exact nature of that bond of union may be.

tion brilliant displays of the auromi streamers had been witnessed in both hemispheres on the night following the solar disturbance. This circumstance teaches us the true character of the aurom as strikingly as any which astronomers and physicists had patiently been gathering toger'ier during the past half century. We learn mystle influence which rouses into activity the phenomena we term magnetic. Over the whole realm which it rules the central orb sends forth the strange electric impulses. When our skies are illuminated by the magic streamers, we may be sure that those of Venus and of Mars, of Jupiter and of Saturn, may, even the skies of those unseen orbs which travel far out in space beyond the paths of Uranus and Neptone, are lit up with auroral displays. When once it has been shown that we one our auroens to solar action, we recognize the cosmical character of the display, and that, in a sense, the terrestrial magnetism on which it depends is a bond of uffinity between our earth and its sister orbs.

But while we were thus taught the true significance of the aurora, we were left in doubt as to the way in which the solur action areased the electric luminosity in the upper regions of our air. We could not even tell at what elevation the light was suspended above our earth. The most eminent physicists differed in their views as to the possibility of learning where the imagic streamers really wave when we see them most distinctly. While Arago had held that to attempt to measure the height of a minbow, Sir John Herschel considered that precisely the same laws of measurement might be applied to the aurora as to any object raised high above the earth.

One point, however, was well determined. The auroral lights are undoubtedly to be ascribed to electric action taking place at a very considerable height, where the air is very rare indeed. It become, therefore, a question whether any thing could be learned by amalyzing the auroral light as to the condition of that particular part of our atmosphere in which the electric action takes place.

Spectroscopic analysis, that strunge and powerful mode of research which has revealed so many unlooked-for facts, was accordingly applied to the light of a brilliant aurora. The result was rather surprising. Instead of a rainbow-colored streak of light, such as would have appeared if the aurora were due to the existence of particles excited to luminosity by electric action, a single line of colored light appeared. This indicated that the light is due to the incandescence of some gas through which electric discharges in upper air take place.

In upper air taxe place.

But this was not the circumstance which attracted surprise. Rather, this was to have been looked for. It was the position of the line which astonished our physicists. If the gas had been one which chemists are acquainted with, the bright line would have occupied the position proper to that gas, and would at

THE LINCOLN MONUMENT IN PROSPECT PARK, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK,-(Subtrume by Stanlby Fox.)

We had occasion recently to point out that a sudden disturbance in the sun, in 1859, had been presently followed by intense magnetic action, the whole electric system of the earth quivering, so to speak, under the influence of the solar forces educed by the disturbance. And we mentioned that among the signs of this magnetic acat once that a relation subsists between the aurora, terrestrial magnetism, and the central luminary of our scheme.

And even if we were to pause here, we should have learned enough to indicate the significance and importance of the aurora. Our earth, we may be sure, is not the only recipient of that once have indicated its nature. But there is no known element whose spectrum has a bright line where this one appeared. The observation has been repeated over and over again, by Ang-ström, by Otto Strave, and recently by Mr. Plum-mer, slways with the same result—we can not tell what the substance may be to whose incan-descence or luminosity the aurora owes its brill-

But now a most remarkable discovery has been effected. Angstrom has found that the myste-rious line of the auroral spectrum exists in the spectrum of another object which had been thought to be wholly different in character. Ever its discovery by Cassini, the sodiaral light has been an object of interest to astronomers. Gradually a theory had been formed respecting it, which had been sanctioned by the authority of such men as Humboldt and Sir John Herschel. It was held that this appearance is due to the light reflected from a multitude of minute control of the state o mical bodies traveling around the sun within the orbit of our earth.

This theory had never been tested by sportroscopic analysis. Indeed, the zodiacal light shines so faintly that it was hardly hoped that its spectrum could be rendered visible. But it was confidently anticipated that if the zodiacal light ever were thus analyzed, its spectrum would be that which the theory required; that is, a very faint reproduction of the common solar spectrum.

Now, at length, we hear from Augström that the spectrum of the zodiscal light has been ob-I, and instead of being, as had been expected, a faint rainbow-colored streak, it presents but a single line. That line is the same that we see in the spectrum of the aurora! In other words, the light of the zodincal glean and that of the auroral streamers are due to the same sort of electric discharge taking place in the same

HARPER'S WEEKLY.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1869.

TO In November will be commenced " MAN AND WIFE," a new Serial Story, effendidly H-lustrated, by Wilkin Collins (Author of "The Woman in White," " No Name," " Armadale," and "The Moonstone"). New Subscribers will be supplied with Hanven's WEERLY from the commencement of the Story to the end of 1870 for

AFTER THE AUTUMN ELECTIONS.

NOW that the New York election is over, there is a singular colm in the political world. Until the last week of the canvass there was very little excitement in the State; and it was remarkable, as Mr. GREELEY observed in one of his speeches, that, while the chief Republican orators confined themselves to a fair discussion of the great principles upon which the party is planted, the Democratic speakers were evidently at a loss to know how to arge their claim to public confidence.
Indeed, it was a Indicrous situation for them.

They wanted to denounce corruption, and the gentlemen chosen for the work were the masters of the Tammany Ring, assisted by Mr. Fax-NANDO WOOD. It was an edifying spectacle, that of the Mayor, the District Attorney, and the Corporation Attorney launching invectives against extravagence and demanding purity in policies. Or it was necessary to found the claim to confidence upon the character of the candidates; and thereupon the supporters of Judge M'COSS and of Mr. WILLIAM M. TWEED WERE amaged that there were some Republican condidates whose reputation was clouded. Indeed the World, which could not enough soold the Republican journals last spring for not protesting against the appointment of General Stektan by the President, was enriously silent about those whom it had proviously stigmarized by name as corruptionists of the Ring and unthers of shameless and canning frauds. That putking relols be wenting to complete the comedy of the Democratic causes, Mr. FERNANDO Wood, the gentleman who formerly wept that he was not able to send rifles to Mr. Romany Toomes, to be used against Union citizens, arrived from Europe just in time to weep afresh over the melancholy fact that the President's brother-in-law was implicated in the late gold scondal.

The effort to make any single State issue prominent fulled. It was strenuously declared that the Republican ticket was framed to suit both the friends and the foes of lager beer. But, as a fact, the torket exactly represented the position of the party upon the subject. The party does not make it an issue. It embraces prohibitionists like Mr. GREALEY and non-probibitionists like General Siere, and leals closest agree, with both of those gentlemen, that it is not a subject to be dealt with by the party. So, also, Mr. GREEZEN is in favor of sciling the counts as the true policy for the State, and on anompt was made to exche hostility to him open this ground, as if the Comparelfor could dispuse of the canals at his pleasure. There was, however, really very little spirit in the convey, as the registration showed; nor is there likely to be any great political interest or excitement until the morting of Congress and the first message of President Grass.

There will be certain topics of especial inportance for his consideration in that paper. Of these the Cuban question and the Ale question are perhaps the chief. The formal work of reconstruction will have been substantinlly closed. The general financial policy will be expounded by the Secretary of the Treasury. But we shall have some foreshadowing of the probable course of the Government toward Cube : and such is the quiet good sense of the Administration that it will probably amount to a declaration, that, when circumstances or " acron plished facts" authorize the recognition of belligerency or independence, they will be recognized, and not before. And so firm is the confidence of the party and the country in the sagacity and probity of the Administration, that Congress is not very likely to urge any other policy. If General Banus, during his European vacation, has carefully informed himself of the situation at home, or returns in time to ascertain it, he will go to Washington, conscious that the public sentiment of the country, wishing well to any people honestly fighting for independence, does not demand that the United States take an active part in the Cuban revolution. As for the English question, it is most probable that the tone of the President's message will imply that the little Alabama bill must be settled.

Of course it was during these first few months of the new Administration, under the pressure of the great reaction that inevitably followed the great triumph of last year, that the Democratic party hoped to prore at the autumn polls that the country was utterly discontented with the President and his general policy. This ex-pectation has been wholly buffed. The Re-publican line is unbroken. The elections have shown that the people, who last year expressed their faith in General Grant and the principles he represents, trust him with undiminished confidence. The Democracy have lost the buttle which is often apt to seal the fortune of the day. They must reflect in time, that, if they hope to persuade the people of this country to give them power again, they must not attempt to do it by parading the Tammeny Ring and Mr. FERRARno Wond to denounce corruption, nor by electing Judge M'Cusse to the judicial bench. They were beaten in 1868 because they were seen to be the same old party, with the same old spirit and the same old leaders. As long as this is evident they will continue to be beaten.

THE FENIAN AMNESTY.

As we write, Mr. GLADSTONE's letter to the Town Council of Dublin has not reached us; and we must, therefore, wait for a full exposition of his reasons for refusing the Fenian amnesty. At this distance, and with our information, it would seem that the Government of Great Britain has done unwisely; and Mr. GRAY'S assertion, that Mr. GLADSTONE'S personal wish was for an amnesty, will be readily believed. The London Times, in defending the Government, says that rebellion was for meety regarded in England as a transcendent crime, and that it is now considered more fraught with ruinous consequences to the country than ordinary crimes. Might it not fairly be asked, then, whether a Government, so pe colisely sensitive to the enormity of rebellion, onght not to be a little less hasty in the recognition of the belligerent rights of rebellion against a friendly nation, and rebellion for the worst of purposes?

It is not, however, surprising that, remem bering 1715 and '45, and the endless Irish insurrection, the British tradition should be a horror of rebellion. But statesmanship deals with facts and principles; and is it not very dealerful whether the riggers that have always followed the suppression of rebellions by England either did or could tend to provent them so surely as a more merriful policy? People in England may, as the Times says, choose to consider reheltion the greatest of crimes. But erime in the moral sense it will never be felt to be, unless its ends are base or its means intentionally erucl. No English trader of the Times, who is not a more Sir Roger de Coverley or Squire Western, and who is familiar with the long tragedy of Ireland, will ever regard the rising of any part of the population as criminal in the same sense as the Partix murder. Hopeless and stepod and fotal it roxy he, but not wirked and dastordly.

New dealing with ignorant or deluded tonatics, if the English choose to take that view, who venture their lives in hope of an Irish republic, what should the Government do? If aggravated, individual, and promeditated excelty in any rose is proved, the laws would probebly naturally be left to their course with general assent. But if there be a general spirit of disaffection in Iroland-nee ill-founded, as every Englishman knows-and if the country has, rightly or wroughy, come to consider England its latter enemy, when a ministry is raised to power upon the ery of justice to Ireland, and begins by an act of justier which every Irishmon can appreciates if that get were insuediately followed by one of mercy, would it not be truly said in Incland that at lost there was a Government which Ire! and ought to trust; and, vast as Irish ignorance and hote of England are, would not the up a and benev frishmen be strengthened by such a course as nothing else could strengthen them?

Certainly we, who have subdued a more ap-palling rebellion than England ever encountered, yet who have not executed nor imprisoned a rebel, have the right to wonder whether England does not feel strong enough to be magnanimous, or is not sagacious enough to know the policy of clemency.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIA-TION.

Tuz late meeting of the American Social Science Association in the city of New York was very significant as well as interesting. The audiences, indeed, were not very large, but the reports of the proceedings in the newspapers were ample and accurate; and the essays were by gentlemen most of whom were especially connectent to treat the topics selected, and treatod them with a care and ability which made the papers of permanent value. There is a great deal of special study and research upon subjects embraced by the plan of the Association for which there is no method of expression so admirable as that furnished by these meetings. The papers, if originally published in pumphlets, magazines, or volumes, would be very likely to be neglected. They are generally too grave and compact, and sometimes even statistical, to be acceptable as Lyceum lectures; and the invaluable result of investigation in the most important directions might long appeal in vain for public attention, if it were not for the platform of the Social Science Association. It invites special students to prepare carefully the substance of their research and thought, and offers them an andience which any man might be proud to address, and a full report under circumstances sure to arrest public attention and affect public cyanion.

The President of the Association, Mr. Sam-UKL ELEOT, of Boston, in his most admirable opening address, described the simple structure of the society. Its object is social science, hecause it devotes itself to promoting the well-be-ing of society by a careful study of facts and intelligent application of principles. It would give an impulse to public action, founded not in emotion only but in knowledge, and would as carefully consider the means as the end. Indeed. the Association would draw to a focus for the common benefit those scattered rays of light and beat which, concentrated, become the greatest force of civilization.

The organization of the Association is very simple. There are a President, Secretary, and Tressurer, and four Department Committees of Education, Finance, Health, and Jurisprudence. The chairmen of these committees and the officurs first-named compose the Executive Committee, which has charge of the general or mechanical management, the places and details of meetings, publications, etc. But the Department Committees are the important element of the organization. They are composed of ex--of persons who have devoted themselves to the special study of subjects embraced in the department, and every question proposed to the Association is referred to the proper committee to decide if it be a subject for the Association usefully to enter upon. There are also two local committees, one in New York, and one in Albany; and there will soon be one in Philodelphia, and another in New Haven. These serve as centres of action. The expenses of the Association are very small, for there is but one salaried officer. Besides public meetings for the purpose of hearing carefully prepared papers, the Association has issued a volume containing those read at the Albany meeting last winter, and it proposes to publish certain manuals of an immediate practical value, such as a resume of the lortures and course of study at the University of Berlin, to help students in this country, and again a manual for immigrants, full of the information they most need, to be put into their hands before leaving Europe. In a word, the Association is an organization to utilize, for the common good, private and individual thought and experience.

Its work is well begun. The character of persons interested, and of the proceedings thus for, promises an influence as profound as the scope of action is wide and wise, sociation blows no trumpers and grinds no axes. It moves modestly and noiselessly; and it ap-peals to the sincerest sympathy and the heartiest support of all who believe that human progress, if inspired by faith in God and love to man, is to be secured by a careful investigation of all moral and material laws.

THE MISSISSIPPI TRAGEDY.

THE recent steambout disaster upon the Misissippi was so appulling that there seems nothing to be said. The pitiful story is read with horses, there is a rague exclamation of helpless indignation, a ferling that there is nothing to be dene, and a hope in the reader's mind that he may not be the victim of the next tragedy, and that is the end of it. Of course, there is a stern demand for investigation, and possibly a jury denounces culpable carelessness and holds somebody responsible. But in a country where culpable carelessness murders scores of victims every year we have yet to hear of any punish-ment whatever. If a railroad train is thrown from a precipice, and suspicion points to the negligence or ignorance of the engineer or of any other responsible officer of the train, he may quietly withdraw from observation until wrath subsides; but whoever heard of an adequate penalty inflicted?

It is not possible to avoid all accidents, but it is possible to do something to prevent them. The want of more stringent laws in regard to responsibility and care upon the part of steamboat and railroad companies has a twofold source: the good-natured indifference or reluctance of the American to insist upon his individual rights, and a feeling that the do-nothing policy is demanded by enlightened political economy. Regard for his individual rights of a certain kind, indeed, the American does not lack; but he certainly asserts his public rights of personal salety and convenience much less strenuously than those who have not his political liberty. The first thing that he may just-ly demand of every company that undertakes to transport him is proper provision for care of life and limb. But upon how many steamers, large and small, by which he travels does he see such provision made? Where is the hose, the supply of water-filled buckets, the life proservers, in case of extremity? He is not to be put off by being told that they are somewhere, for to be serviceable they must be in full sight, When the alarm of fire is given, for instance, half of the panie would be saved if every passenger saw at the same moment the means of escape and safety. But how many passengers who do not see the conveniences which may at any moment be needed ever mention the want of them? In a manner they condone in advance the negligence which may cost them their lives. It is not agreeable, indeed, and it is inconvenient to take the trouble to make complaints. Moreover, a man is sure to be derided as an old Betty who does it. Very well, We must all elect. If it is worse to be called an old Betty than to risk the burning or drowning of his children, a man will probably save himself from that dreadful imputation by saying and doing nothing.

As for the laws regulating the transportation of passengers, they belong to the public order, and, like all laws, are to be founded upon ex-perience. When, for instance, it is a public conviction that the managers of railways and steamboats are so anxious to make money that they will not be admonished of the relation between safety and profit, it is time for the publie to act. There is no reason why the public should consent to be burned and mangled, in the hope that at some time stupid people will learn or heartless people wince. Let the law do what it can to secure what private interest and duty will not secure. The law protects the citizen against the thief who willfully steals, let it also guard him from the manager who carelessly kills,

But there is a still more radical remedythat upon which all hope of particular improvement and of wise laws ultimately reses, and that is a higher standard of public morality. While success is popularly accepted as the only criterion of conduct, and even of character, we merely teach those to whom we intrust our lives to care only for dividends. A railroad company can afford to use poor rails, for instance, and cheap material of every kind, and to economize in proper care, if it has to pay only a certain amount of damages yearly for slaughtering and maiming passengers. If we insist upon bringing every thing to that standard our popils will better our instructions. Here was a steamer upon the Mississippi piled with hay, and the passengers smoking and playing cands by candle-light. A spark dropped, a candle tipped over, and the boat is presently in flames. There was time to throw canvas or torpanlin over the fire, to empty backets of water, to escape to the shore, a hundred yards off, with boats or life-preservers, had there been these conveniences, and an organized erew well managed. But, upon the whole, it is doubtful if the company loses enough to produce the slightest change in the method of management. The remedy for these nuspeakable tragedies is in our own hands. It is the public, not the companies, that are really responsible.

THE WOMAN'S PARLIAMENT.

THE 'Woman Question" continues to present itself in many different aspects. Thus, within the last month, there has been a Massachusetts Working Women's Convention in Boston; a Woman's Parliament in New York; a call for a Convention to found a National Woman's Suffrage Association, and a Convention in Hartford of what is popularly called the Womau's Rights party. At the latter, which was very fully attended, the usual argument for the enfranchisement of women was powerfully pre-sented by Mr. BERCHER. The Woman's Parliament which met in New York was, however, very anxious not to be confounded with the party which In. BERGHER represents. The organizing Committee have published a statement of their purposes. "The proposed object of this organization," they say, "is the associa-tion of women among themselves for the development of their own economical, educational, and moral interests, and by this means to accomplish woman's work in woman's way. It disclaims all connection with the Woman's Rights party."

We have a sincere respect for the ladies who are engaged in this movement, and a sincere sympathy with their hopes and aims; but we must say that they seem to misunderstand their own position. They disclaim all connection with the Woman's Rights party, but they propose to do woman's work in won, an's way. Now this is exactly what the Woman's Rights party propose to do. They insist, and most justly, that as man's way is every honorable way for which nature has given him intelligence and desire, so woman's way is precisely the same. They declare—and we do not believe that the most resolute member of the Woman's Parlisment would care to dispute it—that as man's way could not possibly be known if women alone should be allowed to define it, but can be ascer-tained only by perfect freedom of choice, so woman's way can not be known from the interpretation of men only, but only by the same liberty of choice. If, indeed, the ladies of the Executive Committee assert that they are women, and that they know what is woman's way, we certainly shall not contradict them; but merely remind them that whatever our individual opinions may be, they are not final like natural laws; and that it is an immutable law that the proper sphere of human activity is determ-ined only by free choice.

The Committee add that the Parliament promittee add that the Parliament prooses to make a profound study of the evils of society, with the view of curing or ameliorating them; and that when it lacks means or authority to act, it will appeal to the governing power sty to set, it will appeal to the governing power already in existence. This is always the privilege of a disfranchised class. The peasants & France, under the old regime, might ask the existing governing power 10 relieve them. But the question for a Parliament of American Women to answer is, Why, being members of the political society, with no less vital interest in its welfare than men, with an equal intelligence its welfare than men, with an equal intelligence and espacity with men, and with the knowledge that no existing governing power is ever fully just to those who have no share of its authority-why, under such circumstances, they propose to acquiesce in a usurpation of the govning power by a class in the commonwealth? really wish to affect the evils of society in which their own sex so deeply shares, why not insist upon their equal voice in the regulation of society? Why should any citizen of this ecuntry be content to be the political sup-pliant instead of the political equal of another?

English women confided in "the good judgment and kind feeling" of the existing governing class to regulate that most vital subject to women—the divorce laws. But does the Ex-ecutive Committee of the Woman's Parliament doubt that if the English laws regulating marriage had been made by both parties to marriage, they would have been wiser and more human than they were and are? Lord BROUGHAN denounced them as a shame to civilization; and it seems late to remind any body of intelligent American women that the legislation of a class is always partial and selfish. The purposes of the Woman's Parliament are unquestionably excellent. But a more excellent purpose is the equal liberty of every member of society. With that gained all other reforms are made easier. When, therefore, the Parliament takes pains to senarate itself from that movement, it labors to nate the sympathy of those who would naturally be its best friends. It hopes to escape the odium of the "Woman's Rights party," but it can not do it. Those who condemn that party will condemn this in a less degree. In the eyes of such critics the offense lies in a woman's not confining herself to the "domes-tic sphere;" and the presiding officer of an ex-scutive committee of a Woman's Parliament is only less repugnant to the sentiment which that committee would propitiate than the President of a "Woman's Rights" Convention.

A GLANCE AT THE FINANCES.

Sours of the features of our financial condition just now are worthy of particular attention. Although our imports continue to exceed our exports, gold, the medium to pay the balance against no, has steadily fallen. On the 1st of November it was quoted at 128, which is the lowest quotation since the spring of 1866, when it fell to 125. The present fall in price is sup-posed by many to indicate a return toward spetie payments. Is this idea correct?

While we write the Treasury Department is engaged in paying off the November interest, amounting to about twenty-five and a half millons in gold, on a portion of the Five-Twenty bonds; but although the coupons, to a large ex tent, are held here on foreign account, instructions were given in many cases to reinvest the proceeds in the same class of securities. If the interest paid to foreign agents had gone abroad, gold would have increased in firmness; but as the reinvestment called for more bonds it gave some firmness to them. The London and New York markets, influenced by telegraphic annonncements, instantaneously sympathized with each other.

HARTING A Design

The same of the sa

The state of the s

Mr. Bourwell's management in purchasing over sixty millions of the public debt mainly to go into the Sinking Fund, and in anticipating the November interest, has improved the credit of the Government in foreign countries, and no doubt induced these reinvestments, which are favored not only by the languid condition of trade in England and on the Continent-whereby capital is liberated-but also to some extent by political uneasiness in England and France, and by the constant stream of valuable immi-gration to this country. The feature is noticed by capitalists abroad with increasing interest.

It is undoubtedly desirable that our creditas we have in view a four or four and a half per cent, investment in lieu of our bonds at five and six per cent,—shall stand high in Europe, although it will not be possible to make such a change until our present securities advance to nsiderable premium in gold; but the question ought to be maturely considered whether the transfer of our bonds from American to European enpitalists, to be held abroad as a permanent debt, is done with advantage to this ountry.

The amount of our public debt now held in Europe is variously estimated at from seven hundred to one thousand millions of dollars, and the floating debt represented in what are called "options" in Wall Street, and in other forms of indebtedness, is supposed to be nearly a hundred millions. Bonds and stock of corporations and others are also held extensively in Europe; and it is thought that over one hundred millions in gold must annually be paid by us-over and above what is brought in by im migrants-to meet interest, dividends, and balances due abroad.

The major part of this foreign indebtedne has arisen since the creation of our public debt; and, although it is common to say that we have received full value for it, it must be admitted that a very large portion of it has arisen from the extravagance of portions of the United

The manufacturing industry of Europe, since the explosion in England in 1866, has been largely in excess of the demands of trade, and much of the surplus produced by foreign menufacturers has been sent to us. Part of it has been consigned to commission-houses for sale in our markets, and as the lesses upon these consignments have probably exceeded the profits, to this extent the foreigner is the loser

Our importations for the year ending June 30, 1869, amount to $437,026,541, valued in gold, which stood at an average premium of, say, 35. In this import there was $19,654,776 gold. Our exports for the same time amount to $413,869,182, which included $42,915,966 in gold. The belance is in currency. But $300,561,284 of our imports and $276,975,602 of our exports were brought or shipped in for-eign bottoms. A charge of from twenty to thirty millions of dollars for freight on imports arises from this source. Our re-exports were valued at $25,130,167 in gold. By adding the premium of 35 per cent, to the imports, and making allowance for the fact that a portion of our exports and all of our re-exports are in gold, it will be seen that a heavy balance against us arises upon the trade for the year ending June The improved credit of the United So, 1880. The improved create of the United States in Europe unquestionably enables us to go on in this dangerous policy, by which they become holders of a permanent debt upon this country, and we the rapid consumers of their surplus of goods. The more we improve our credit abroad the larger are our imports. The fall in gold has taken place notwithstanding that our paper circulation remains undiminish-ed, and that we continue to be imprudent in our purchases from foreign countries.

It will be borne in mind that Congress repealed the act which authorized contraction of the currency in a way to indicate very decisive objections to that policy. Although Mr. Bour-well has lately purchased a small amount of the three per cent. certificates, it is probable that nience of some bank this was done for the conve that was at the time pinched for currency, and ns lool contraction as long as the tone of Congress on that head remains unchanged. Indeed, as the January interest amounts to over thirty millions of dollars, and the balance in his hands is being diminished, it is scarcely to be supposed that the Treasury can exert any unusual upon financial affairs between this and the opening of the next session. But although we have just commenced to send forward our splendid erop of cotton, and although the demand for breadstuffs will be large, it will appear, from the statement of what we have annually to pay to the other side, amounting perhaps to nearly a hundred and twenty millions, even if the imports and exports balance themselves, that the fall in gold is owing to temporary causes, and that our large purchases in Europe, due to the improved credit of our bonds, remove us further and further from specie payments.

In parts of Lancashire a further reduction of five per cent, on the wages of cotton operatives has been made. There is no present apprehen-sion that the balances on English account invested in Wall Street for the moment in "op-tions" will be collected, or that bonds will be sent back from England, inasmuch as trade in England and on the Continent is not sufficiently active to induce a recall of surplus capital. These circumstances favor still larger imports, and it may be additional investments in our bonds, although the rates of interest in Germany and Holland have improved. The fall in gold has also been encouraged by the con-siderable demand upon this market for currency to go to the West, and particularly to the South. But as our large shipments, which for the year ending June 30, 1869, amounted in cotton to the value of $162,633,052 and in breadstoffs and provisions to the value of about $85,000,000, were, with our other exports, overbalanced by our extravagance, there would seem to be good reason for the apprehension that our folly this year will not be less conspicuous than it was To all we commend strict economy as the only safeguard to meet the contingency, which may come suddenly, when the foreigner will ask us to settle.

NOTES.

Ms. Environs, whose admirable large photographs of "Sheridan's Ride" and "The Decisive Moment" (FARRAGUT at Mobile Bay) we warmly praised a few months since, has now re-produced them, at 58 East Eighteenth Street, in "Taking the Reins," a drawing of General Grant seated with Mr. Ronner Bonner in his wagon and driving "Dexter." Mr. Bonner test-ifies that it is the most natural representation of a horse in action that he has ever seen. The fidelity, spirit, and interest of all these works, and their cheapness, should make them prominent among the desirable holiday gifts.

A store is echoing through the press, which is said to have been first told by Mr. VERTLANCE at Albany, who stated that Dr. Liebers had told at Albany, who stated that Dr. Lixburn had told him that he happened to go into some German quarter in the city of New York, where German is exclusively spoken, and found that he could not make himself understood in pure High-Ger-man by those who were used to the corrupt lingo of the quarter. The story has occasioned some severe criticism of the Doctor, who, however, it appears, is guildloss of any such remark, which probably Mr. Varilance has merely attribated to the wrong resear. Yet sundoubtedly. Dr to the wrong person. Yet, undoubtedly, Dr. Lezare would be willing to be held as authority for the general remark that both in Germany as well as in this country a man, knowing High-German only, can not readily understand those Germans who speak one of the strougest dialects; but the latter, without exception, understand the Almost all the books that the people in Germany read — the catechism, the sermons they hear—are in High-German. There are many familiar incidents of this ignorance of the patois such as that of a high officer in a charitable so-ciety who was unable upon important subjects to understand certain Alsatian widows who had claims upon the society. Dr. Likner himself doubtless found that when he was a student making pedestrian journeys in Germany he was always understood by those whom he frequently could not understand when they were talking among themselves, especially in Mecklenberg, Baden, and Suabia. Every German is familiar with such facts.

Victor M. Rica, who died recently after a short librors, was for some years Superintendent of Public Instruction in this State. His interest in the school system was most sincers, and his efforts were constant to elevate it. He had cer-tain reforms at heart, some of which he effected, and his knowledge upon the general subject was and his knowledge upon the general subject was very large. His last report upon leaving office two years ago was a survey of the present con-dition of the school systems in Europe, and is a valuable document full of information not readily accessible elsewhere. Mr. Rroz was not a high ly educated man; but his office demanded an organizing and administrative faculty, rather than scholarship, with a profound interest in the than scholarship, with a profound interest in the general subject, and these he had. His faith in common school education as the bulwark of popu-lar liberty was inextinguishable. The actual freedom of all the public schools of the State is very greatly due to his exertions, and no man rejoiced more sincerely at the article of the new Mr. Rice was a natural politician—a man of humans sympathies and cordial manner, who will be kindly remembered by those who knew FRANCE is evidently uneasy. Louis Napo-LEON seems unwilling to prove beyond doubt his own fidelity to the new system that he has proposed, or is it impossible for the author of the cosp of star to escape suspicion in the public mind? The disposition to concede great suggetty to Lowis Narolnox is constantly aroused by his proposi-tions, and as surely chilled by his performance. His late proposition was substantially constitutional government; at least, if it were not that it was nothing. It was so understood, but at the beginning he hesitates. It was said of the famous President of one of our colleges that he insisted it should cease to be a mere school; he was tired of being a pedagogue. So the whole system was changed; but the good Doctor for-got to change himself, and remained a school-Louis Naros non changes many things —but he does not change himself, and that makes all the other changes abortive. He makes no masterly movements. One of his journels suggested, probably by "Inspiration," that the country should be called to vote upon the succession of the Prince Imperial. It would be an extraordinary step, and of course illegical. But his own position being illegical, the Emperor might prolong his empire for many years by such a measure. Yet undoubtedly be has not the sugacity, nor the nerve, to adopt it. If he should die to-morrow disorder would be almost sure to follow.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

DOMESTIC INTELLIGENCE.

Decrease the first six months of President Grant's administration the receipts from internal revenue were $50,000,000 more than those for the corresponding portion of the year 1985.

The President has appointed George H. Butler, of New York, son of the late A. J. Butler, and nephew of General Butler, to be Consul-General for British India, to reside at Calcutta.

The Boston Treas estimates that the Labor Beform party will poil 19,435 voics in Massachasetts.

A terrible accident occurred on the Massachasetts.

A terrible accident occurred to the Massachasetts.

A terrible accident occurred to the Massachasetts.

A terrible accident occurred on the Massachasetts of the shore, where she was grounded on a sand-har and burned to the way found to the shore, where she was grounded on a sand-har and burned to the was upprovided with oars. A proper quantity of life-preservers would have prevented the conormons leve of life. The first originated from the careless handling or a candle by gamblers.

Papers were read before the Becial Science Association, in this city, on the afternoon and evening of October 31, by Prederick Kapp, on Inamigration; by Professor Pruncts Bacon, of 14s College, on Vacchastion; by Charles F. Adams, Jun., on Prantdential Elections; by George W. Cartis, on the Referm of the Civil Bervice; and by James A. Garfield, on the Census of 1870.

tion: by Charles F. Adems, Jun., on Presidential Elections: by George W. Curtis, on the Reform of the Civil Bervice; and by James A. Garfield, on the Census of ISTO.

The Message of Governor Campbell to the first legislative assembly of Wyoming contains some interesting fasts about this new Territory. The net creating the Territorial government was passed July 35, 1866. The slection for the First Assembly and a delegate to Congress was held on the 2d of September last. There have been three raids by the Shour Indians within the Territory during the pre. est year, in which eleven white men have been killed. Wyoming Territory contains 97,000 square miles. Little is said about its a, ricultural advantages, and a lack of rain and of trees is mentioned. Stock rabeing is very promising. The mitting resources are incalcable. Coal takes the place of wood as a fuel. The gold discoveries have been very encouraging that far, Curicosty enough, all criminals of the Territory are now transported to Detroit. Michigan, for imprisonment under contract, An entire code of laws is to be adopted by this Assembly.

The Minimal Istalligener and Express, by Washington, has become the property of Bensier Sprages, of Rhede Island.

Miss ids Lewis, the Newport heroise, is said to be about to establish a rowing school for ladies.

On October 26 there was a grant streple-chase at Jerous Fark. It was won by D. Mithight how howe "Oysterman, Jan."

"American Girl" won the large pures at the Benevales Park Meeting at Troy, October 29, heating "Lacy" and "George Wilkes" in three straight heats. Time, 2.8, 2.8, 2.84, 2.84.

It is estimated by Superviser Presbury, of Virginia, that the revenue from tobacco is that State this year will be $3,000,000 more than the income from the same source last year.

The Presbyterian Syned of Virginia met at Eichmend October 21, at the o'clock v.s. From this the occurrence of a violent earthquake in some distant part of the Pacific Ocean may be inferred, of which new will doubtless reach here before long. The ea fathers.

Brigham Young has enspended Mr. Stenhouse, the editor of the Soil Leke Triegraph, and all the editors and proprietors of the Una Magarine.

The preliminary report of the Department of Agriculture on the state of the crops makes the startling decisration that the actual reduction in value the past season alone, from the "alternate drowning and scorching" of farm crops, has been not less than $200,000,000!

In California there are $900 Calmamen out of employment.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Panis underwest the dreaded Mila of October without any difficulty. There was no rising of the "reda," nor any soup d'état. Marshal Banaine had been pet at the head of the Imperial Guard, and had been opet
at the head of the Imperial Guard, and had been opet
at the head of the Imperial Guard, and had been opet
at the head of the Imperial Guard, and had been opet at the head of the Imperial Guard.
The Spanish Cortas appears to be divided upon the choice of a king. The Imac of Genos and the Duke of Montpensier are the most prominent candidates.
At last accounts the former had the larger number of woten. The merchants had sent in a petition in behalt of Montpensier. The Duke of Montpensier is in his forty-dirth year. He is the 5th and youngest son of the late King Louis Philippe of Praces, and inshand of the only sister of leabells, are Queen of Spain. The Duke of Genoa is nephew of the King of Indy, being the son of Victor Rannon's brother Ferdinand. The Duke, who was born in Pebruary, 1854, is in his statesach year. His tender age, moring a regency nece perchand. In the latteenth year. Ha tender age, rendering a regency necessary, is a circumstance in his favor.

The decree of the Spanish Cortes, establishing unrestricted therty of religion in the colonies of Cuba and Porto Rico, was promolgated in Cuba October 16, and has gone lists effect as he law of the land. The document is exceedingly liberal in its tarna. It deciares that Spain can not remain removed from the general morement of Burope and the world, and adde that this consideration is the more powerful for the Antilies because they like near a continent where liberty of religion is recognized by law. One clause of the decree provides that no person shall be prevented from holding office under the Government by reason of his religions belief.

The First Scotch Presbyterian church, St. Andrew's, is Montreal, was destroyed by fire on the night of October 21. It was one of the threst editions in Canada.

The Marquis of Sallabury succeeds the late Earl of Derby as Chancellor of Orford University.

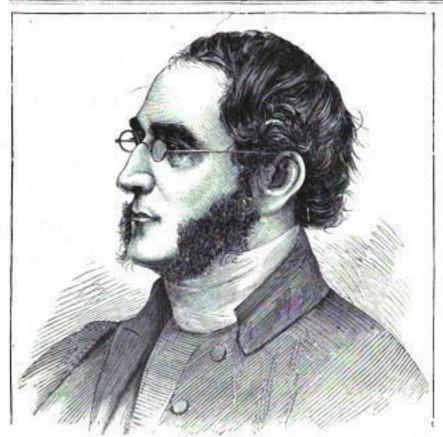

John Conducton, the Latin Professor at Orford, died October 24, aged 44 years.

The discoverer and estitor, Anstin Henry Layard, has been appointed Minister to Spain from England.

Jonne Brecome is the fair Levies of Dieppe. She has caved the lives of fifteen sealors, and wears free medials and the cross of the Legion of Boson.

It is exid that a bost of the Protestor philauthrepiet, George Peabody, is to be placed in the Valican.

M. De Lessepe, the originator and engineer of the Bost Canal, is to be united to a young lady twenty-two years of age shortly after the hasquestion of his work. The grocen is start-four; but 14 in heavy-water of the Bost Canal, is to be united to a young lady twenty-two years of age shortly after the hasquestion of his work.

THE REV. JOHN CUMMING, D.D.

DR. CUMMING.

THE Rev. JOHN CUMMING, D.D., F.R.S.E., minister of the Scotch Church in Crown Court, Covent Garden, London, the eminently popular preacher and author of numerous works on di-vinity of a controversial character and expository preacher and author of numerous works on divinity of a controversial character and expository of prophecy, was born in Aberdeenshire, of a Highland family, on November 10, 1810. Dr.
Cumero came to London in 1833, since which time he has been preaching to a very large congregation, including the leading Scotch families in London. On the platform he is distinguished for his decided and untiring opposition to the esrors of the Papacy. Dr. Cumero had the distinction of preaching before her Majesty at Balmoral, and the sermon was afterward published under the title of "Salvation." His publications are too numerous to be separately mentioned in this place. Among the most popular are "Apocalyptic Sketches, Lectures on the Book of Revelation," "Daily Life," "Voices of the Night," "Voices of the Day," etc. More recently, Dr. Cumero published "The Great Tribulation," a volume of upward of 500 pages, treating of the prophetic descriptions of the coming of Christ and end of the world, which has had a sale of upward of 13,000; and a companion volume, published in 1861, called "Redemption Draweth Nigh," has already exceeded 7000.
He has since published "The Destiny of Nations," or the fature of Europe as delineated in the Bible. Dr. Cumero belongs to the Established Church of Scotland, and opposed alike to the principle and policy of those who felt it their duty to secode in 1843, and form a separate com-munion in that part of the island.

The latest phase in Dr. Cumerno's career is his correspondence with Dr. Mannino and (through the latter) with the Pope in reference to the Œcumenical Council and the claim Dr. Cum-MING made to be heard there in vindication of his opinions as a Protestant. As is already known, the answer returned by his Holiness was to the effect that Dr. Cumming would be welcome at the forthcoming council, but that he must appear there, if at all, in the character of a penitent and a convert. Of course, the Rev. Doctor declines these conditions; and consequently is little likely to make his appearance at Rome.

THE OLD NORTH DUTCH CHURCH.

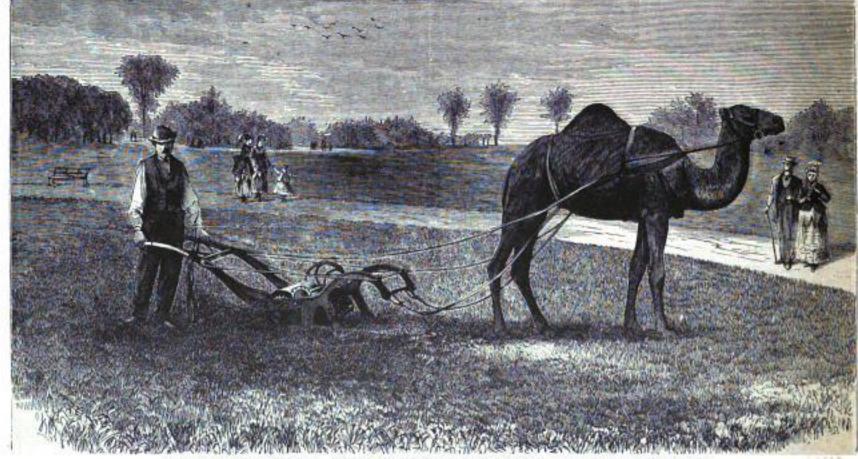

ONE of the saddest of the results of the de-One of the saddest of the results of the destructive fire in Fulton Street, this city, on the morning of October 27, was the destruction of the steeple of the Old North Dutch Church, at the corner of Fulton and William streets. This steeple was one of the few relics of the early history of New York city. Nearly all the old landmarks contemporaneous with it have been obligated. marks contemporaneous with it have been oblit-erated. A reporter in one of our morning jour-nals thus commemorates the departed steeple; "What has it seen? Some communicative bird would say, perhaps, this: 'That the steeple was built when Peter Stuyverant came, under or-ders from the States General, to be the Governor of their province of New Netherlands; that in those stirring days Holland had just been acknowledged as an independent nation; that war with England was going on, and that Van Tnour, the plucky Dutch admiral, was blustering around the British coast, carrying a broom at his mast-head, with which he proposed to sweep the Channel; that he had several fierce fights with BLAKE, the English admiral, and in the last one he was killed, the English triumphed, and peace followed; that the old steeple knew this, and knew PETER STUTYERANT, the wooden-legged Governor, who resigned by treaty the sword the British-ers could not take, and retired in lofty indigna-tion to his splendid farm, where he growled out the remainder of a useless life in cursing the fate that had Anglicized his good Dutch city. When hard-headed Payer was gathered to his fathers the steeple was left entirely alone. It saw the gradual demoralization of its adopted city by the intrusion of barbarians from England and Scot-land and Ireland, and—worse than all—from Yankee land; it saw the fugitive Huguenot and his colder brother, the Puritan, pass under its shadow on their weary way to or from witch-burning New Haven; it saw the undisciplined troops of Wassetsorron flying across the island from the wild hills of Brooklyn; it saw that same Wassetsorron, seven years after, ride down the Old Bowerie more like a demi-god than a man; it was the bonfires that proclaimed peace and independence, the fire-works that hailed the inauguration of the man whom Providence left childless that his country might call him father."

BURNING OF THE STEEPLE OF THE OLD NORTH DUTCH CHURCH, NEW YORK.

In the old church there have been daily noon prayer-meetings since September 23, 1857. These meetings are still continued; even while the fire-engines were working—amidst the dripping of water and the bustle of a crowd of curious spectators—a prayer-meeting was held on the noon of the 27th.

The North Dutch Church was built by the Consisteey of the Reformed Dutch Church, since familiarly known as the Collegiate Reformed Dutch Church—a religious organization coeval with the first colonial settlement by the Hollanders, in the first part of the seventeenth century. The corner-stone of the North Church was laid in 1767—the same year that the old Brick Presbyterian Church was opened. The expense of the edifice, when opened in 1769, was estimated at £12,000. The first regular paster was the Rev. Dr. Jours H. Levingerox. During the occupation of this city by the British in the Revolutionary War the North Church was used as a hospital, and for storage. A new and beautiful pulpit, which had just been placed in the church, was carried away by the British, and placed in an English country church. The church was reopened in 1784. Dr. Livingeron resigned his pasteral charge in 1810.

In 1856 there were in the ministry of the Collegiste Dutch Reformed Church in this city Drs. Josin Knox, Wm. C. Brownler, Thomas Dr. Witt, Thomas E. Vermilte, and Talbot W. Chambers.

Among the collegiste churches in the lower

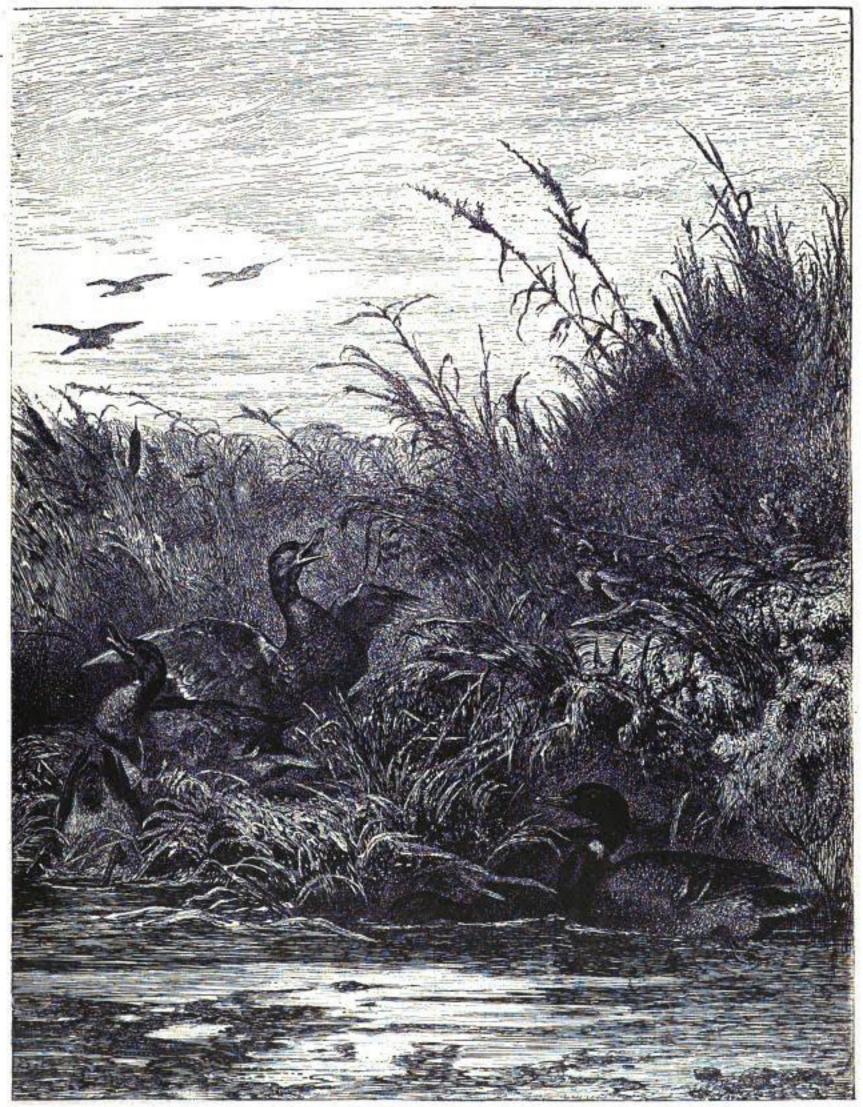

CHAMBERS.

Among the collegiate churches in the lower part of the city, the Old North Church has maintained its original site for the longest period. A large warehouse many years ago took the place of the Old South Church; and in 1843 the Old Middle Church was transformed into the City Post-office.

CANVAS-BACK DUCK ON CHESAPEAKE BAY.

ON CHESAPEAKE BAY.

We have in this country as many as thirty different varieties of duck. The season for hunting this game is at its height in November and December. To the sportsman the shores of Chesapeake Bay afford peculiar facilities for duck-shooting. Our illustration on this page shows a number of ducks feeding on the wild celery plant in the vicinity of this bay. The shores and inlets of Chesapeake Bay have been portioned off in sections, and either bought or leased by numerous Ducking Clubs, for the more convenient parsuit of their favorite sport. The canvas-back duck is probably the best known of our water-fowl. Early in October it begins to arrive from its northern breeding-grounds, and soon swarms in flocks of countless thousands all soon swarms in flocks of countless thousands all along the coast. The Delaware and Sunque-hannah rivers, Long Island Sound, and Chesa-peake Bay seem to be the favorite resorts of this delicions fowl; and although they are annually alanghtered by means of all the devices which human ingenuity can suggest, the above-named places, during the entire season, are fairly alive ith them. The presence of this game in such numbers in these waters may be accounted for by the fact that the favorite food of the wild duck—the rethat the favorite food of the wild duck—the va-keneria, or wild colery—grows abundantly in these localities. The usual manner of obtaining the food is by diving, and as the root is the only part of the plant that is devoured, a large flock will leave abundant relics of its prowess in the gastronomic line behind it. The blades of the celery, according to Wilson, are often found strewn over the entire surface of the water, or blown into wind-rows, reminding one of a new-moun field.

CANVAS-BACK DUCK ON CHESAPEAKE BAY.

The almost constant companion of the canvasback is the fine, though somewhat mischievous, duck known as the American widgeou—Ansa ericus. - as thorough a rascal as was ever discreta. — as thorough a rased as was ever created; a perfect parasite in the true sense of that term — living almost entirely off of the ex-ertions of others. Like the canvas-back, the widgeon is extremely fond of the roots of the va-fameria, but, being no diver, does not possess the means of obtaining them, except by the exercise of its strategic powers. It is extremely amusing to watch the manipulations of the thief; quietly adding itself near to a selected victim it rations. edging itself near to a selected victim, it patiently waits until that unwaspecting creature disappears in quest of its food. A violent commotion now goes on under the water; it is the struggle of the duck with the plant; finally the luckless canvas-back emerges, blinded, momentarily, by the water; the widgeon "gibbles" quickly forward, snatches the morsel, and is off ere the dupe has got the water out of its eyes. These interrupted dreams of gastronomic bliss are the causes of much contention between the two parties; but, leaving this minor point of difference out of view, they are very good friends.

Another, but a far more congenial companion edging itself near to a selected victim, it patient

Another, but a far more congenial companion than the last, is the "red head," a duck very nearly allied to the pochard of England. Fortunately for our friend the canvas-back, this bird tunasely for our friend the canvas-back, this tird is an excellent diver, and consequently is not obliged to resort to the harmless little eccentricities of the widgeon. It is the inferior of its congener, both in excellence of flesh, game spirit, and stateliness of appearance. This bird is not unfrequently paimed off on unsuspecting gentry from the "rural destricts" as the tose fide canvas-back; and these deluded creatures will protest that it is worth a "hull load of spreeng chicken," devouring it with great gusto, occasionally varying the performance by amackings of the lips and rolling of the eyes.

The enormous prices which are offered for canvas-back birds are becoming the cause of their rapid extermination.

The unprincipled, and we may say cowardly, manner in which the canvas-backs are usually obtained is certainly, to say the least, shameful.

manner in which the canvas-backs are usually obtained is certainly, to say the least, shameful. No true sportsman will descend to or countenance the wholesale systems of murder to which these delightful birds, and all of our water-fewl with them, are subjected; nay, we will go further and say that no true sportsman will descend to the use of decoys, and by so doing degrade himself to the level of the pot-hunter.

The game should always be allowed a chance for life; it should be shot in a scientific and sportsmanike manner, though, we presume, it is of little difference to it in which manner it loses its life; but the point is, that but few men can handle water-fewl in a scientific (so to speak) manner, and by this means the destruction is stopped. ner, and by this means the destruction is stopped. Decoys, blinds, disguises, and ambushes should become an abomination in the eyes of our sport-

There are many stratagems practiced, by mean of which the gunner is brought within range of his gunner. A method much practiced on the Delaware, during the winter months, comes under the head of that class of operations technically designated as "disguises." It consists of decking out the boat with white substances so as to reasonable it to a large sake of ice. The history resemble is to a large cake of ice. The birds will allow this to float very near to them; at least, close enough to allow the workers of this singular craft to spread death and devastation

Another and very common method of approach-Another and very common method of approaching, as practiced on Chesopeake Bay, is that of sailing on the ducks. A light, strong sail-boat is procured, in which the gunner places himself, and allows the boat, seemingly without consciousness of doing so, to drift out upon a flock. He can usually approach within fifteen or twenty words, which is near encerth for his purpose.

yards, which is near enough for his purpose.

The decoy method, which is well known, is the poorest excuse of any of these. There is no skill required in the manipulation of the images. An infant could kill enough with them in one day to last a week.

It is customary among the sportsmen of Chesapeake Bay to provide themselves with trained dogs, which, by grotesque actions, decoy the birds within range of the hunter, who is hidden in the bushes. Some glaring object, as a red handkerchief, is fastened around the body of the canine, and he is then placed in full view of a flock. They notice the strange, and, to them, unaccountable antics of the dog, and their curiosity overcomes them. They draw timidly near to the place of death, and the souls of a large proportion of their number his to the "happy feeding-grounds," which, no doubt, seconding to their traditions, is stocked with the eplieneria roots, and is free from all interlopers, such as the widgeon.

THE FAITHLESS FAIR. A LOVE BALLAD.

Ou! Francis was a nice young man, He was his parents' joy; And pleasant 'twas to see how they Did Anater on their b(*)oy.

Now he was born in troublous times, When kings could ne'er agree; There was no friendship on the land, Though French ships on the sea.

His little cars soon beard about War's terrors and alarms; He early joined the infant-ry— A little child-in-arms!

IV. He soon grew up, his chin grew down, When, grievous to relate, He found he had no property,

About this time his parents died, And Francis made his moan; They gave him nothing when they left, Though be was bill a-lose!

Now Francis loved a pretty maid, And Sarah was her name; And in her tinder beart this spork Had kindled up a flame.

Now Sarah saw he looked distressed-His face was drear and blank-And so she said, "Oh, tell me all; My Francis, pray be frank!

viii. Oh, Sarah, all my money's gone, "Tis that which me dejects; And certain men, without a cause, Have seized on my effects !

"A sailor's life were death to me, Salt beef alone to est: And so I'll join the army, lest I'm taken to the Flort?

"And don't be jealous, though I swid For Susan, as you know; She cruelly bade me "go a-long!" And that was dong a-go.

"There's William, once your suitor, love, And others, say you will To Love's accounts are give a check, And never meet a Bill!"

"Ob, Francis, listen ere you 'list, One favor don't refuse: Don't think of Susan, for, you know, A Frank's worth twenty Sous!"

Well, then, they tried a change of hair,
He pressed a golden curl,
She subbed, and whispered low, "Good-by!"
And he exclaimed, "Good girl!"

XIV. He took leave of his grandmother, And wiped away each tear,
And said, "Don't grieve, dear gransy,
I shall be a green-dier!"

When Francis left her for the wars, Of suitors she'd a score,
And sighing youths throughd Sarah's doors,
All coming to a-dore.

XVL.

And William sued; his parts of speech ble ought to have declined, But thought she shouldn't mind the change, And so she changed her mind!

XVII.

And at the alter, faithless maid, She aftered all her vows, And gave her hand, with all her heart, To William, as his spouse.

She may not be this man's?"
A hollow voice said, "I forbid
The blessing and the beas!

"Oh, Sarah, Sarah, you did vow You true to me would stick; Though I was dead your conduct false like stung me to the quick!

"The Frenchmen's bullets pierced me through, A dozen in the fight;

I juzzled them, and so they made A riddle of me quite!

XXI.

"And afterward they buried me All undermeath the sod; My spirit koneward recesed as soon As it could room abroad.

"Oh, grievous fault! I find you're false; Now listen to me, both: Your troth you'd plight, you'll find you're in A pretty plight, in troth! XXIII.

"Henceforth your ghost, like mine, shall walk, And roam around at night; No longer sprightly, you shall be A melancholy sprite."

EXIV.

He said no more, all looked around, But nobody was there, And on the alter-steps they stood,

All terrified, they gazed around, And tried in vain, meanwhile, To bring the fickle Sarah to, All with sed volatile!!

Alsa, alsa! 'twas all in vain; The Doctor shook his head, And said the erring Sarah was As any herring dead.

And after, in the cold church-yard, They laid her in the ground; Her tomb, lest idle folks should scoff, With reclings fenced around.

And still they say that she is seen, Each night throughout the year, A-walking in the spirit, though She's lying in the bier!!

MORAL A little moral you may glean From all that you have heard: Mene'er your now you give away, Mind-alware nere rous wond!

OTTILIA'S PILGRIMAGE.

By JUSTIN M'CARTRY.

OTTILIA WESTFELDT was a Swedish girl who might, indeed, have been fairly taken as a femi-nine symbol of Sweden and the fair-haired North. I think if an artist were to seek for a type and emblem of Swedish womanhood he could hardly find a purer and more charming representative of it than this handsome girl. She had smooth golden hair, not of the tawny tow which has golden hair, not of the tawny tow which has grown to be so great a favorite just now; but so smooth and yellow that it really looked like dead gold-leaf on each side of her white forehead. Her face had a clear, decided outline, with features regular, but somewhat large; and her eyes were deeply blue, a genuine and unmistakable blue. One finds it hard to think of a Madouna in a northern climate; but if there could be such a thing conceivable, Outlin might have passed as a fair embodiment of a Scandinavian Madouna. She lived in Stockholm with her father, and had now no mother, brother, or sister. Her father had married very young, and was still so far removed from any appearance of age, and was so constant a companion of his daughter, that people said he might have passed for her elder brother; and he was always pleased to hear this said, and rather proud of it.

Ottilia's father had one or two marked peculiarities. He was, for one thing, an ardent repub-lican. Not that he had any objection to the gov-ernment of Sweden or to the descendant of Bernadotte—Oscar the First—who sat on the throne during the early manhood and prime of Christian Westfeldt; or to Charles the Fifteenth, who sucwestness; or to Charles use research and im-positioned votary of republicanism. Being a vo-tary of republicanism he was naturally a devoted admirer of the United States. At all times and admirer of the United States. At all times and in every civilized country, since the days when Washington, Lafayette, and Koscinsko fought side by side, there can be found a group, or groups, or masses of thinking men, to whom the republic of America has always shone like the pole-star of freedom. For there are two distinct classes of republicans in monarchical, and more especially in despotic, countries. The one class have always been captivated by the glitand more especially in despects, countries. The one class have always been captivated by the glitter, the lyrical spiendor, the lofty, vague aspirations, the majestic, unsubstantial pageant of haman brotherhood, which belong to what I may call, for want of a better phrase, French republicanism. The other have always found their ideal in the simple acid, unsurestanding always licanism. The other have always found their ideal in the simple, solid, unpretending, almost prosaic truth and reality of the American repub-lic. I wonder if all Americans are aware of the fact that in every European state, however small, there are, and for generations always have been, men bound together, often unconsciously, in the bonds of a brotherhood almost like that of freemasoury - the brotherhood of devotion to the American republic. Christian Westfeldt was one of these, and his daughter Ottilia imbibed all his sentiments, and reproduced them with even a more passionate and romantic tinge around them. Moreover, her father and herself were intimate friends of the good and true Fredrika Bremer, that sym-bol in literature and life of the simple benefibol in literature and life of the simple, bench-cent womanhood of the North; and Ottilia, rought up almost at the feet of Miss Bremer had learned from her to love many places and people in America as if/she had seen and known them.

Ottilis led a singularly calm and happy life up to her eighteenth year. Indeed existence seem-ed to lie before her smooth and calm as a quiet inland lake. Her father's modest means sufficed to keep them becomingly in the unpretentious, intelligent, cultured, social circle to which they belonged. She was soon to be married to one whom she dearly loved—a gallant, brave young Swede, who had been educated in one of the military academies, and was to have been an officer of engineers, but had given up a military career at the express desire of Ottilia and her career at the express desire of Ottilis and her father, and was now becoming a successful man in railway and other engineering of a civil kind. Nothing whatever occurred which even threatened a danger to the happiness of those tranquil lovers until the early part of the year 1861.

Do you remember that fine passage in one of Macanlay's essays in which he illustrates the wide-spread, almost universal discord and slaughter caused by the reckless ambition of Frederick the Great, and declares that red men on the shores of Ontario, who had never heard of Frederick's name, scalped and tortured each other because of his quarrel? Not quite so remarkable, yet still remarkable, is the fact that the political ambition of Jefferson Davis and his colleagues shattered in a moment the whole carthly scheme of a happy, tranquil little group living in a picturesque suburb of the capital of Sweden.

The excession was bland out and Ostilia and Sweden.

The secession war blazed out, and Ottilia and her father saw their long-cherished idol apparently about to be bruken. They felt the news as they might have felt a Russian or French invasion of Sweden. It was an evening of early spring that Eric Swenson, the lover, stood with Ottilia and Westreldt in a room as yet only lighted by the moon and the glittering stars, and spoke of the treasceable conspiracy against the American Union; and there was one thought, yet unspoken, in the breast of all. Yet a few, a very few months, and Ottilia and Eric were to be married. Eric looked at her—was about to speak out his thoughts, then hesitated and shrank from it. Their eyes met. Then it was Ottilia who spoke:

from it. Their eyes met. Then it was Ottilia who spoke:

"Can we do nothing, any of us," she said, impetuously, "for the great republic?"

"I can do something," cried Eric, "Until you spoke I hardly dared to offer—"

"I can do something," the elder man broke in. "I have honored and loved the republic all my life. Thank Heaven I am not too old or too weak to fight in her cause to-day. She has given a home to many of our Scandinaviana. It is right we should all try to do something for her. Ottilia, you shall many Eric at once; he will right we should all try to do something for her. Ottilia, you shall marry Eric at once; he will take care of you; and I will go out to America and fight for the Union."

"Never!" cried Eric. "I will go. You must stay and take care of Ottilia. I could do some good there. I could turn my training as a military engineer to some account, for the first time. I will do something worth doing, and make Ottilia proud of me."

tilia proud of me."
"You foolish boy, don't you think Ottilia would rather have you with her than in dan-

Let us ask ber. Let Ottilia decida!"

"Let us ask ber. Let Ottilia decide."

"Agreed, my boy. Ottilia shall decide."

"Oh no, dear father; no, dear Erie. Don't ask me to decide! Oh, I wish I had not spoken! I am afraid now, of what I have done! How could I possibly part with either of you? How could I bear to see our happiness broken up? It is a great cause. I wish I could give myself up to it; but how could I give up my father and my Eric?"

Indeed. Ottilia's sudden horst of chivalrie en-

Indeed, Ottilia's sudden burst of chivalric en-

Indeed, Ottilia's sudden burst of chivalric energy had for the moment almost collapsed. She dreaded the thought of parting, really parting, from her father or her lover; and her eyes were filled with tears and her limbs trembled.

But the father and the lover persevered. One or other would go; and each urged more and more vehemently his own claims. Both combined in pressing a decision upon Ottilia.

"Come, Ottilia, iny child," said her father at last, in an urgent and decisive tone, "we expect a little firmness and a little sacrifice from you. Don't ask us both to draw back from a good cause to which we feel in our hearts that one at least ought to be dedicated. This is the true cause of all free men, and all men who wish to be free every where ever the world. Truly America could well do without us. But that is not the question; our duty is not the less clear. She could probably have done without Rochambean and even Lafayette. One of us must go—decide, Ottilia—and remember Eric is to be your husband."

"Yes decide, Ottilia!" extend the accomment

"Yes, decide, Ottilia!" cried the young man; "and remember that my rival in this dispute is your father."

Ottilia's heart beat fiercely and her eyes grew dim, and for a moment she could not see or speak. But, if she must choose, her decision was clear. She made one or two efforts to speak and failed; then at last collected all her strength and sense, and said:
"Father, dear father, you must not go. Eric, my own love, I send you."

ic sprang forward and caught her in his For the effort had overtaxed her, and she Arms. was falling in a faint.

Before a week was out Eric had sailed from Bromen. A brave little handful of sturdy young Swedes went with him, all eager to offer their strong arms to the service of human freedom and of the American Union. Eric, who had been many times in England on engineering projects, and spoke English fluently, occupied himself a and space Engine Intentry, occupied insiser a good deal during the voyage in teaching his com-patriots a little of the language. He hoped by his and their exertious among Swedes in Ameri-ca to raise a distinct Swedish regiment, which should make its mark on the battle-fields of the republic.

republic.

He was to have written to Ottilia ever so often; and he did write many letters full of love and high spirits and hope. Then there came a long blank. She expected, poor girl, every day to find the papers full of some wonderful exploit performed by her young here; but the stories of lattles brought no record of his deeds or his name. The last letter she received from him was written on the eve of the great fight at Antietam. Ottilia and her father followed on the map every movement of the war. She knew more of its scenes and its progress than many a New York girl did. Indeed, her whole soul was

So the days, and weeks, and months were on, and Ottilia never heard of her lover. She and her father hardly dared to speak the doubts and fears that tortured them. Westfeldt wrote to fears that tortured them. Westfoldt wrote to the Swedish consul in New York, who made careful inquiries, but could find no trace of Eric's movements or even of his existence after Autic-He had served in the German regiment, and his name was returned with those of the The only serap of comfort was, that missing. The only scrap of comfort was, that the list of the killed or the wounded had no name

"I ought to have gone," said Westfeldt to himself very sailly one day, "I ought not to have left it to her decision"—he was gazing at the pale face of his daughter—"I ought not to have allowed him to go. She would have got over the loss of me, and been happy with her husband. Him she can never forget, Her life is ruined from its very spring-time.

He thought for a few moments, and then he went over to his daughter, and took her hand in his.

"Otsilia, my child, let us go in search of A flush of light that seemed almost joyous came in her deep blue eyes. She pressed her father's hand rapturously, and cried, "Oh, father, dear father, let us go!" Let us leave this place at once. We shall find him—I know we shall."

Their preparations were not very trouble and they hoped to leave Stockholm on their love pilgrimage in a few days. But Fate sharply in-terposed, and dealt them both a heavy, sudden

Westfeldt, who had always seemed in noble health, was seized with convulsive spasms one day, and appeared to be stricken with something like paralysis. His condition apparently bat-fied the doctors, and he became steadily worse and worse. The very morning of the day when and worse. The very morning of the day when he and his daughter were to have left Stockholm for their voyage he suddenly called her over to him, clutched her hand, murmored convulsively, "Oh, Ottilla, my daughter! O God, watch over her!" and then sank back—and Ottilla was alone in the world. Her grief, his burial, her utter prostration when the excitament of fresh agony was over, kept her long in Stockholm. Then her friends sept ner long in Specialism. Then her friends endeavored to retain her with them, and dissuade her from carrying out alone the enterprise she had resolved on with her father. The American war was by this time obviously drawing to a close. Even the London Tisses was beginning to be less confident about the utter failure of Grant and the dissatrous retreat of Sherr One of the young Sweder who had sailed and served with Eric actually came back to Stock-holm wounded and wasted; and he reported that Eric had long been given up by such of his compatriots as still survived. There seemed little use, indeed, in Ottilia's quest; yet go to Amer-ica and seek for her lost lover she would. At last, to escape the advice and the importunity of ber friends, she literally broke away from Stockhelm; fied, without giving any one notice, or say-ing a word of farewell, to Bremen; and thence sailed away across the Atlantic, more lonely and less hopeful than the wife of Cameralzumar, in the "Arabian Nights," when she starts on her beave, sad pilgrimage, to find the husband who had so mysteriously disappeared from her side. When Ottilis arrived in New York the war was all over, and President Lincoln lay dead. What was this poor, solitary Swedish girl, who spoke but little English, to do in this strange, vast city—in this almost limitless land—where she had come to find an obscure young man who had dropped out of the sight of the living world years ago? She took an odd, girlish, romantic course. She sought out an American poet and scholar whom Frederika Bremer had known well, and flung herself down before him, and told him her story. He listened with interest, com-passion, admiration; he offered her a shelter with his family; and he threw all his energy and influence into the effort to find her lover, Some trace of Eric was found at last. He had beyond doubt been taken prisoner, and confined in the fearful Libby Prison. He had even been there until a comparatively recent period. But whether his wasted bones filled one of the numberless nameless graves of the prison; whether he was among the living skele deemed from bondage; whether he was one of a few men who had succeeded, under extraordinary difficulties, in making their impossible now to know. Ottilia's new friend and protector did all he could to get further ti-dings, but in vain. The trail of the missing lover lost, utterly lest, amidst the smoke and dust and blood of the war's last convaisions.

"Stay with us; let this be your home—live with my wife and daughters, and be one of our family," said Octilia's friend to her in tender, paternal tones one evening when all hope seemed to have gone of the restoration of her lover. The poet and his wife, and the young Swedish The poet and his wife, and the young Swedish girl, stood together outside the porch of a beantiful country house, and on a lawn which aloped gently to the banks of a noble river.

"Oh, you are generous and kind—who ever was so generous?"

"Nay! as an American I owe you much. You sacrificed all for our cause; do we not owe you at least a home?"

"But, dear friends. I can also be a last a home?"

"But, dear friends, I can not stay. that I ought to go back to where my father is buried, and where my Eric, if he be alive—and oh, I still believe he is alive—will surely one day come to seek for me." "But you have written home—you have told your friends—they know where you are?"

"Alse! no. I have written to nobody; I have not had the heart to say any thing. I have been absorbed only in the one thought. I fear I spoil your happy home with my sadness and my anxiety.

1

"You shall not go back," said the poet's wife, throwing her arm affectionately round the girl's waist. "You can have no very close and dear friends in Stockholm, or you must have written to them; and we have, therefore, the first claim on you. Come, now, don't say any more. You shall be my daughter. I will never give you up to any one but Eric; for, dear Ottilia, I, too, believe you will see Eric once more.

Ottilia threw herself into her friend's arms and sobbed; but felt, for the first time since her fadeath, a gleam of returning brightness

While she was thus clasped in the protecting embrace of her friend, the poet, who stood look-ing on with moistened eyes, was approached by a servant, who brought a message for him. The poet loved to be free frum interruption at home, and was always making stern and futile yows that he would see nobody; he was always being importuned by strangers or beggars, whom the fame of his poetry or the fame of his benevo-lence attracted; he was always sending people hastily away unseen, and then sending the serv-ant after them to call them back. "One may," "One may, he used to say, "be visited by an angel some day in the disguise of a beggar or an antograph-hunter; and it would be a dreadful mistake to send the heavenly messenger away unseen." So this time he winced a little, frowned, grambled a little, shrugged his shoulders, and, finally, told the servant he would see the unknown and nameless intruder.

Ottilia and the poet's wife did not observe his going—only saw after a while that he was gone. Presently he came back, looking strangely excited:

"My dear," he said to his wife, "the angels love sent a visitor at last." And he drew her away and whispered something to her—whereon she started and almost broke into a scream, and glanced involuntarily at Ottilia.

The husband and wife walked up and down a turn or two on the lawn, and talked in low tones.

turn or two on the lawn, and talked in low tones. Then they approached Ottilia.

"Dear Ottilia," said the poet, in a grave, sweet voice, "you have borne much sorrow and anxiety and disappointment nobly. Is your spirit strong and brave enough to sear with tidings of joy?"

Ottilia clasped her hands, and a wild cry broke from her live.

from her lips:

"Oh, my dear friend, tell me, tell at once!
Have you news of Eric? Is Eric living?"

"Eric is living. Eric is here!"

Ottills made a sudden movement as if she would rash to meet her lover, then her knees trembled, her strength gave way, and she faint-ed. When she recovered her consciousness Eric, rown, worn of face, and bearded, held her in his arms. And so her long quest and her long sorrow were over, and her lover lived and had found her again. His story was easily told. He had languished through a long imprisonment in Richmond, where he never had a chance of writing to her or sending her a message. Just toward the close of the war he had contrived to escape, and made his war first leaves a little like. and made his way, after immense difficulties, to the North, whence he sailed for Europe in a slow, old, lumbering vessel, which gave him a passage cheaply. Having got nearly half way scross the Atlantic they were driven back to New Brunswick, and thence he sailed again, and at last reached Stockholm only to find that Ottilia had long left it to seek him in the United States. No one in Stockholm knew any thing of her whereabouts. He raised what money he could and returned to New York. The very first day of his arrival he heard some vague story about a Swedish girl living under the shelter of the ventral heart and the story about a second story about a second story about a second story and story and story are second story. erable poet and scholar's roof, and he lost no time in seeking the poet in his country home. He could hardly put his question into coherent words when, half distracted with the conflicting tortures of hope and doubt, he stood in the poet's

There is nothing more to be said, except that Ottilia and Eric are married, and are settled in the United States; that the poet and his family hold them always in the warmest and closest friendship; and that there is far more of truth in this little story than its readers perhaps would at first be inclined to suppose.

SEA-SICKNESS. Tury immediate cause of sea sicky

due amount of blood in the nervous centres down the back. This being true, the malady will be avoided by preventing such a condition; and when it exists it will be cured by lessening the amount of blood in those centres. In doing cither the one or the other, the vertebral and sympathetic nervous systems must be included in the remedial measure, for both are concerned in the production of the disorder. To cure sen-sick-ness, then, if these opinious are correct, nothing more is necessary than to reduce the temperature of the nerve-centres. This, according to Dr. Chapman, an English physician, is best done by the application of ice in an India rubber bag along the spine. The remedy may appear a des-perate one; and in some states of atmospheric temperature the thought of such an application will have a chilling influence upon the expectant traveler; but, instead of its having a cold, depressing, uncomfortable effect upon the patient, it is really a pleasant, agreeable application, giving quickly a sensation of warmth where most needed, and acting with a seething influence upon the disturbed system. To prove this, compare the condition of a traveler who has accepted the remedy with that of the man who has not. The sick passenger sits helpless, retching and vomiting on a winter's day, with the spray dashing over him-cold, faint, depressed and ready to die. The man with a column of ice on his back moves from place to place with a healthy brain and stomach, suffering no more inconvenience than is brought about by the difficulty of sup-porting his centre of gravity. The comfort or discomfort felt by a traveler in the use of ice as a preventive to sea-sickness is more in the mode application than in the nature of the specific. If the India rabber ice-bag be kept in the centre of the back, and in contact with the spine, without extending far on either side from the spinal column, the lag is worn without inconvenience. It is not even necessary, in all cases, to wear it next the skin. A far more important considera-tion is the application of it when employed as a remedy in other nervous disorders, that the required effect may be obtained in the greatest de-gree, and with the least loss of time.

CURIOUS MECHANISM OF THE THYSANURA.

Ar a late meeting of the British Association Sir J. Lubbock read a paper on the singular anatomy of the thysauura, an insect of extreme delicacy of organization, which has an apparatus for locomotion totally unlike any other known to entomologists. They have six legs, but no wings. The tail is provided with two long appendages which are bent forward under the body, forming a spring, by means of which the creature is em-bled to leap with such force as to go twelve inches at each jump. The power is not in the action of muscles or muscular fibres, but actually in a bent elastic spring. Minute muscles draw it for-ward and under an actual latch, where it is confined like the spring of a gun-lock, until, by the will of the insect, the spring throws the little be-ing rapidly forward, foot after foot, in pursuit of game or to escape from enemies.

A spring constructed and acting on a different principle, but equally surprising when anatomic-ally studied, exists in the mechanism of a kanga-roo's tail. As the animal rises up on its long hind-legs, the tail is a powerful instrument for throwing the body onward with a bound. When put to their speed they vault with surprising en-ergy, so that they can outran a swift horse. Every principle known in the domain of the ic arts is merely a humble imitation of what nature has always exhibited in animal structures.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

HUMORS OF THE DAY.

The following curiously-mixed poetical effusion was written by an inmate of the Lorsalic Asylum at Utics, and in certainly a peculiar specimes:
Gayly the tiger tened his guitar,
Seconding the magpie with feathers and tar;
Seconding the magpie with feathers and tar;
Second to the second at her, accept he alghed:

"Lady-bird, lady-bird, will be my bride?"
the first the elophant sadly had pixed,
Ate but an ox, and then wowed she hadn't dired;
Carried up a photograph close to her heart,
Wrapped up in lobsters, bank-noise, and plum tart.
At midnight the rivals met in the whale,
And fought by the light of the grasshopper's tail;
The elephant stood on his trunk to take breath,
And the tiger on costly hugged him to death.
Then with a cabbage-scale beldy he wrote.
"Come, love, and tread on the tail of my cost;
See thy own crocedile a-whistling for thee."
See thy own crocedile a-whistling for thee."

A Frenchman for twenty years loved a lady, and never missed passing his evenings at her house. Sie became a widow. "I wish you joy." cried his friend; "you may now marry the woman you have so long adored." "Alsa!" said the poet Frenchman, professoridly dejected, "and where should I spend my evenings?"

Once upon a time, before the negro had acquired any other than a pecuniary value, an old colored divine, who was noiding forth to an andiance of his own race on the watchful care and goodness of the Almighty, and endeavoring to impress upon his bearen the value of a Christian darkey in the syss of Heaven, illustrated the point thus;
"My Bedrea, though
you can bey seven aparrows for a furthing, de Almighty hab a book to put down whar ebery
one of dem falls. Now if de Almighty take so much care ob de sparif de Almighty take so much care ob de sper-row dat costs only one-seventh ob a farthing, war you s'pose he do fur you, a thousand-dollar nigger?"

A woman from the rural districts brught some mounting goods at a store a few days are, saying her bushend waselfk and tould not live more than a week, and adding: "I thought I had better be gettin the funeralizing and make 'em my, cause it's a real bother to get 'em made when there's deed folks in the house, an' I hate to berrow."

A baptism was to be solemnized in our block-acting fleet off North Carotina in 1848, and notice was to be given to the facet by signal. The book contained no symbols for "baptism," and the order was signalized thus: "There will be religious diving on shore at 1 r.w."

KNOW YOU! Know you the hour when Fhorbus sicals From where Aurora binshing lise, And mounts the heaven on glowing wheele, And gilds the gray of dawning ektes?

Know you the time when the birds begin. To cared to the rising sun— When from the woods their jounnd din Proclaims the reign of night is done?

Know you the moment when the dew Kahakas in allrey sighs from blooms Whereon il slops the whole night through, Till Phubus the rapt earth flumes?

Know you the moment, time, and hour Of daybreak? Well, you do, mayhap. Well, that's the time I feel a power Of pleasure in "that other may."

A little boy had his first pecket-knife, and for several days used it blimself, and extended the privilege of the occasional use of his treasure to his little playmates. One evening he was kneeding at his nother-kasee, saying his customary prayer, which he closed in these words: "And please, Ood, give little distribute blinds and a knife of his own, so he won't want to borrow mise all the time."

An old lady, recently, in some court before which she was brought as a witness, when asked to take off her bounes, obstitutely refused to do so, saying, "There is no law to compel a woman to take off her bounes." "Oh!" impredently replied one of the judges, "you know the law, do you; perhaps you would like to come up and sit here, and teach us?" "No, I thank you, Sir," said the woman, tartly; "there are old women enough there now."

A coeler-monger, meeting one of his own frateristy the other day, whose peny might be considered as a specimen of an equine skeleton, remonstrated with the aware, and asked him if he ever fed him. "Ever feel him i Come, now, that's a good 'on," was the reply: "be's got a bushed and a half of cats home now, only he sin't got time to eat 'on."

A new arrival at Sweetwater, Wyoming, was waited upon by a gentleman as soon as he had registered his name at the hotel, with the offer of the position of deputy-sheriff. On inquiring why he was so much favored, he learned that the last incumbent was shot the night before, and his producessor on the day preceding. "How long does a deputy-sheriff live in three parts?" "Oh, about twenty-four hours." The stranger declined the appointment.

"Is Mrs. Blinking at bome?" asked Mr. Saunders of the Irish girl who answered his ring at the door.
"Yes, I blinve she is, Sir," "In she engaged?" "Ah, is it engaged, you say? Faix as I can't tell you, Sir; hat she kissed Mr. Thorent hat evening as if she had never seen the like av him, and it's engaged I bliave they are, Sir."

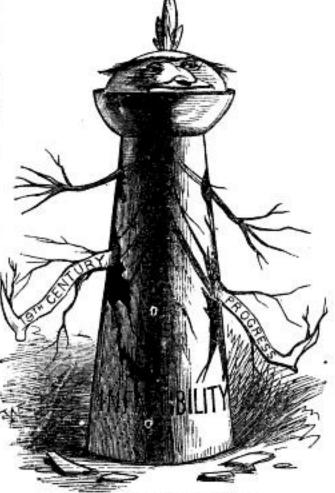

A young lady was slighting from an omnibus, when a ribbon foli from her bonnet to the floor of the stage. "You have left your how behind," remarked a lady passenger.

"No, I haven't; he's gone a dahing," innocently ex-claimed the dames.

What shoes should a man wear while at sea?—Navy-galters (maxigators), of occurse.

An old lady, who had not been religiously instructed, attended a Methodist "meeting" in the West, After hearing the minister describe the sufferings of our Seviour in the meet pathetic manners she was professed as a second of the second of

As Profesor H——was taking a walk one day in the besuifful, plettresque environs of Edinburgh, be met one of those beings annully termed ficels, and the profesor accounted him thus: "Bow long can a person live without brains?" "Odd, I dinns week ken, Sir; bull teratrining his head) "how long have ye fived yersel", Sir i"

A HYACINTHE BURSTING ITS CONFINES.

Digitized by

AN INVALID GOING SOUTH FOR THE WINTER-SCENE ON BOARD A SOUTHERN-BOUND STEAMER FROM NEW YORK.-[DRAWN BY W. L. SHEFFARD.]

"RUINED."-DRAWN BY C. G. BUSH.-[SER PAGE 732.]

THE SONG OF THE MILL.

WHEN summer airs are fresh and sweet, And clover blossoms new, And hirds rejoice, and young lambs bleat, And skies are clear and blue: How merrily the mill goes round, How merrily goes the mill, As the hopper clacks with a cheery sound, And echoes o'er the hill!

When age sits shivering by the fire, And wintry wolds are white, And youth doth chill his warm desire, And frosty north-winds bite: Still merrily the mill goes round, And merrily goes the mill, As the hopper clacks with a cheery sound, When all the world is still.

We know no strife that plagues the great, No care that kills the small; We live above the reach of fate, And the efore fear no fall: So merrily the mill goes round, So merrily goes the mill, As the hopper clacks with a cheery sound, And rings across the hill.

VERONICA.

By the Author of "Aunt Margaret's Trouble."

En Ofbe Books.-Book ##.

CHAPTER IV. ZILLAN'S STORY.

THE widow's reflections as she thought over her interview with Mr. Frost were bitter enough, Her situation was that of one who, in endeav-oring to reach a wished-for goal, has chosen the speciously green path over a morass, rather than the tedious, stony way, which, although painful, would have been safe. Now the treacherous bog quaked beneath her faltering feet. But it was vain to look back. She must proceed. To go forward with a step at once firm and light was, she felt, her only chance of safety. And it was

Years ago, when Ziliah Lockwood was a young woman and a newly-married wife, Sidney Frost had—through the knowledge of certain passages in her life which he had gained accidentally come to have a socret power and influence over

He had need his knowledge at first to protect her against the persecutions of a rufflen, and in so doing he had acted disinterestedly. Afterward he was tempted by circumstances to avail himself of the power he held over Zillah Lockwood in order to help himself forward in

The case stood thus:

Robert Lockwood and Sidney Frost were ear-ly and intimate friends. When the former marry and internate frience. When the former mar-ried Miss Zillah Fenton—a governess in the fam-ily of a rich merchant, named Blythe, who liked pictures, and sought the society of the painters of pictures—Frost had still been cordially welof pictures—Frost had shift been covering wer-comed at his friend's house.

Miss Fenton was an orphan, without a rela-tion in the world. Her early life had been pass-ed in Paris; and Mrs. Blythe said she had reason to believe that her father, Captain Fenton, had been a needy adventurer of disreputable charac-ter. But against the young lady no one had a word to say.

At first the young couple were entirely happy. To the day of his death Robert Lockwood adored his wife. He believed in her with the most absolute trust. He admired her talents. He was guided by her advice.

But when, within a few months of their marriage; Zillah became melancholy, nervous, and silent, Robert was painfully puzzled to account for the change in her. She declared herself to be quite well; but her husband insisted on her seeing ductor after doc-for, in the bope of discovering some cure for the unaccountable depression of spirits under which she was suffering.

It was all in vain, however. Hobert was in despair; and seriously contemplated sacrificing his connection and daily-rising reputation as an artist, in order to take his wife abroad for total change of air and scene.

A mere chance, connected with his professional business, gave Sidney Frost a clew to the cause of the mysterious malady under which his friend's wife was pining. The clew was furnished by a few words dropped by a man of very vile character, a professional black-leg, who had come to London for a time to escape the too vigilant attention of the Parisian police, and from whose clutches Mr. Frost was endeavoring to extricate a foolish young scape-grace, the son of one of his

His professional and natural scuteness enabled Sidney to make a shrewd guess at the real state of the case. He surprised Ziliah one day, when her husband was absent at his studio, into a confession that she knew this man. And after a little gentle cross-examination, the trembling woman burst into tears and revealed the whole Zillah's motherless youth had been passed in l'aria, in the home of a father for whom it was impossible for her to feel either affection or respect. His associates were either men of his own character, or young scions of rich or nolde houses, who frequented Fenton's shabby, tawdry little salon for the purpose of enjoying the excitement of high play.

Amidst such surroundings Zillah grew to be sixtoen; little more than a child in years, but a woman in one sad and sordid phase of world's lore. Her notions of right and wrong were sole-ly derived from her own untutored instincts. These were, in the main, good and pure. But she was ignorant, uncared for, motherless—and she fell.

Coarse appeals to vanity or greed would have been-powerless on Zillah. But the poor child was unable to resist the impulses of an undisciplined heart. She scarcely eve it behooved her to resist them. She scarcely even conceived that

She believed the passionate protestations of love—protestations not wholly insincere when uttered—of a noble gentleman whom she looked up to as the ideal of every thing splendid and

The story was trite. Its denouement was trite also, save in one particular. This one exceptional particular was the unexpected and ab-surdly unreasonable despair of Zillah when she perceived that her god was an idol of clay—that he had ceased to love her; and when he informed her, with a good deal of well-bred dexterity, that be was about to make a mariage de conve-nance at the argent solicitation of his noble family, he was quite amased at the girl's violence. He was willing to behave handsomely. But when Zillah started away in horror from his offers of mosey, like one who suddenly sees the flat, cruel head of a snake rear itself from a flower he has been caressing, M. Is Vicconte was re-ally shocked. In what Fool's Paradise had the girl been living, to give berself such mock-heroic sirs? The daughter of le vieux Fenten! Que diable! His lordship began to look on himself as a victim, and to pity himself a good deal; which state of mind had the desirable effect of quenching the pity for Aer, which the girl's pale, passionate face and streaming eyes had aroused passionate face and streaming eyes nad aroused to a quite uncomfortable degree.

Then came a second blow. Captain Fenton was willing to receive his daughter back again, but on conditions against which the girl's whole nature rose up in revolt. He had discovered that his daughter was attractive. Why should that his daughter was attractive. Why should she not assist him in that devil's recruiting service, which he still carried on zealously, but with very fluctuating success?

very fluctuating success?

In brief, to return to her father's home would be to plunge into a black gulf of shame. Zillah told herself that she was desperate; that she cared not what became of her; but from her father and her father's associates she shrank with a shuddering, invincible repulsion.

Then Then The state of the shrank with the shuddering invincible repulsion.

Then the extraordinary reserve force of cour-age and endurance with which nature had endowed the girl made itself felt. She was eighteen years old, alone in Paris, and almost penniless. But she struggled like a strong swimmer buffet-ing the waves. She thought that she wished to die; that the waters should close over her wretched head, and let her be at rest. But her youthful, vigorous limbs struck out, as it were, invol-

Then one watching on the shore stretched out -not a hand, not a warm, comforting human clasp, but—a staff to her aid. A dry, hard stick held to her, and she clusped it. It was was held to her, and she clusped it. It was something to cling to. A woman who knew her history engaged Zillah to attend on her chikhren, and to teach them English.

For five years the poor girl was a drudge whose physical fatigues and privations were the lightest and least regarded part of her sufferings. But she pursued her solitary way inflexibly. In teaching she learned. She worked with amazing industry to making herself for a heter remission. industry to qualify herself for a better position; and she succeeded. Her blameless life and unwearying activity had softened even her mistress's lry heart toward her; and when Mess Fenton left her employment this woman gave her such recommendations as procured for her a situation

From that time her worldly prospects seemed clear and tranquil.

After a year or two she had known Robert ckwood, and the world was changed for her.

"I loved him so!" said Zillah, sobbing, to Sid-"I had thought I should never love any human being more, and that men were all faise, sensual, and selfish. But he came to me taise, sensual, and sellish. But he came to me like God's sunshine after the long, black winter. I felt young again, I who had deemed myselfold at five-and-twenty. I ought to have told him all my miserable story. I had many a struggle with my conscience about it. But—but—Robert honored me so highly. He had such an exalted ideal of what a woman ought to be. I was a coward. I dored not risk losing him. I had been so unhappy, so unhappy! but a woman can understand what I had suffered. And here was a glimpse of Paradise. Was I to speak the word which might bur me out for-ever, back into the desolate cold to die? I could not do it. I thought 'when we are married, when he has learned to believe in my great love for him, and to trust me as his faithful wife, I will kneel down and hide my face on his knees, and tell him.' But as I learned to know him better, I found what a fatal mistake I had made in delaying my confession. You know Robert. He says that he could never again trust any one who had once deceived him. The first time he said so a knife went into my heart. Oh, if I had but told him at first, he might have pitied, and forgiven, and loved me! for, God knows, I was more sinned against than sinning. I was but sixteen. Think of it! Sixteen years old! Well, this concealment bore bitter fruit. My father has been dead three years; but recently one of his old associates, the man you have been speaking of, came to London, found me out, and came to me for assistance; being always, as all his kind are, either flush of money or a beggar.

My horror at sight of him; my dread lest Rob-ert, who was at the studio, should return and find him, showed him, I suppose, what hold he had upon me. From soliciting alms, he came to demanding money like a highwayman. I gave him what I could. Since then he has persecuted me, until life is almost uncedurable. I see Rob-ert's anxiety; I am tormented for him. But I dure not tell the truth. This wretch threatens me, if I do not comply with his demands, that he will tell my proud English husband all the be will tell my proud English busband all the history of my youth. You, who know something of the man, can conjecture in what a hideous light he would put the facts he has to relate. If Robert were to spurn me and despise me, I If Robert were to spure me and despise me, I should die. Oh, I am afraid! It is so borrible to be afraid!"

Sidney listened sympathetically. He was (as bothey instead sympathetically. He was (as' is not uncommon) better than his creed, which was already a somewhat cynical one. He soothed and encouraged Mrs. Leckwood; prom-ised to rid ber of the scoundrel forever; and adroitly said a word or two to the effect that she had better not trouble her husband with so an noying and contemptible a matter.

"I know Robert very well," said he; "and I am sure he would not rest until he had thrashed our French friend soundly. Now a kicking more or less in his life would not matter to him at all. It would put Robert in the wrong too, and dis-trees you. I undertake to punish the miscreans much more effectually."

How he managed to get rid of her termentor Zillah never certainly knew; but the man dropped out of her life never to reappear in it. Sidney Frost was actuated chiefly by motives of kindness toward the Lockwoods. this woman's past might have been, she made his friend a good wife. Robert idolized her. He was happy in his unfaltering faith in her. But he would not have been able to be happy had his faith once been shaken. That was the nature of the man. Frost would serve both husband and wife, and would keep his own counsel.

and wife, and would keep his own counsel.

Added to all these considerations, there was another incentive influencing his conduct: the professional sest, namely, with which he contemplated bulking a rascal's schemes—a zest quite as far removed from any consideration of abstract right and wrong as the eagerness of a fox-bunter is removed from moral indignation against the chiefith recognition of the district right and wrong as the eagerness of a fox-bunter is removed from moral indignation against the thievish propensities of the fox.

The two years that ensued were the happiest

Zillah had ever known or was fated to know. She was the joyful mother of a son. Her husband's fame and fortune rose day by day. Sid-ney Frost never reminded her of the secret they shared between them by word or look. had grown almost to regard the days of her misery and degradation as something nureal, like the remembrance of a bad dream.

But a change was at hand. Robert Lockwood fell ill. His was not a rap Robert Lockwood fell ill. His was not a rapid, alarming disorder, but a slow wasting away, as it seemed. A short time before his health began to fail be had yielded to the urgent solicitation of his friend Sidney Frost, and had confided to the latter a large sum of money—the savings of his life—to be invested in certain speculations which Sidney guaranteed to be highly flourishing; and, as has been previously stated, Sidney, in accepting the trust, honestly meant to falfill it with a single-minded view to his friend's advantage. advantage.

a came temptation; a combination of temptatious. He needed a large sum to com-plete the amount necessary for the purchase of a share in a flourishing legal business. On his ob-taining the share depended his marriage with a woman whom he passionately loved. He used the greater portion of Lockwood's money for this purpose. He described the transaction to him-self thus: "Robert shall find this a better investment than any I proposed to him. The business is as safe as the Bank of England. With an infusion of skill and energy such as I can bring to it, wealth, great wealth, is absolutely certain. I former Robert's money at handsomer interest than he could easily obtain in any other way !"

All the while he was desperately ashamed and troubled in his immost heart.

Zillah had been told by her husband of his having confided his money to Frost. She had almost as undoubting faith in their friend as Rob-ert had. But she asked, "You have a formal acknowledgment for the money, of course? "He wrote me some kind of receipt, or I O U. I don't think it is what you call a "formal ac-knowledgment," little wife. But from Sidney it

"You will keep it carefully, dear Robert?"

Oh yes; of course "Because you know if Mr. Frost were to-to Zillah's quick intelligence discovered that something was wrong with Sidney after be had undertaken her husband's trust. He kept away from their house more than had been his wont. He was going to be married. He had obtained his long-coveted partnership. A suspicion of the truth darted into her mind. She endeavored to take him off his guard by adroit questions. But her woman's cunning was no match for Sidney

He confronted the matter boldly and with outward coolness, although he inwardly writhed with mortification to be abased before this woman who had been so humbly grateful at his feet, He told Zillah how he had applied her husband's money.

"It is not exactly the investment I had pro-posed, but it will be, in the end, a far better one than any other for you all. I have not mentioned my change of plan to Robert. He is not well enough to be bothered about business. He is the best-hearted, dearest fellow in the world, but you know that it is sometimes necessary to hoodwink him for his own good."

At the word the hot blood rushed to Zillah's face, and her temples throbbed painfully. She understood perfectly the kind of bargain that was being made. She reflected that her first deception was now bearing its legitimate fruit.

She was helpless. She carefully locked Mr. Frost's informal receipt into her writing-desk, and submitted in silence.

"When Robert gets better," she said to her-

"When Robert gets better," she said to ner-self, "I will summon resolution to tell him ev-ery thing. I will!"

But Robert never got better; and within a few mouths he was laid in his grave.

CHAPTER V.

A MORNING CALL

Mr. Frost drove home to Bayswater after siness hours, on the day on which Mrs. Lockwood had visited him, very weary in body and sick at beart.

Mrs. Frost had the most stylish of tiny broughams, drawn by a pawing steed, whose ac-tion gave one the idea that it had been taught to dance on hot iron, like a bear.

Mr. Frost used a street cab when he drove at all. Very often he returned home on foot. On this special afternoon he was thoroughly tired. He had been into the City, into offices wherein his partner would have been much amazed to see him, and on business of which that partner had not the faintest suspicion.

As the cab jingled and rattled along the busy streets toward Bayswater, Mr. Frost leaned his head back against the fromy cushion and closed his eyes. But he could not deaden his hot brain. That was alive, and feveriably active. He ground his teeth when he thought of Zillah Lockwood. And yet he pitied her.

"If I could coin my blood into guiness she should have her own," said be, mentally. But if Mr. Frost could have coined his blood into guineas—in one sense he did coin flesh, and blood, and health, and life into lucre—it is probable that still Mrs. Lockwood would not have had her own; for Mrs. Frost had an insatiable had her own; for Mrs. Frost had an insatisble appetite for guineas, and would have received any amount of them with the greedy immobility of a gaping-mouthed Indian idol. She was an idol that had cost her husband dear, and yet he still worshiped her—worshiped her and did not respect her! Like the poor sav-age of the south, who alternately rails at, and grovels before, his tawdry Madonna.

Georgina Frost was a magnificently beautiful woman. Her face and figure were noble and majestic. She was graceful, elequent, dignified. "Mrs. Frost looks every inch a duchesa," some one said, admiringly. But Mrs. Frost had once stood for ten minutes side by side with a real duchess at a picture show, and after that she told her hushand, with a superb, languid smile, that she should decline to be likened to a duchess any

A little, skinny, painted, flaxen-haired creature in a short gown, and with the most atrecious bonnet that ever was perched on a human head," said Mrs. Frost, disdainfully. "I am not at all like a duchess, if she is a fair specimen of the

But nevertheless Mrs. Frost was pleased to be likened to a duchess.

Mr. Frost did not reach his home until a few simutes before seven. Seven o'clock was his dinner hour.

"Dinner ready?" he asked of the man who opened the door to him. "Whenever you please, Sir. Shall I tell the Where is your mistress?"

"My mistrees is dressing, Sir. She had an early dinner at three o'clock."

Mr. Frost walked into the dining-room, bidding the man send up his dinner directly. He threw himself into a chair, and sat still, with a gloomy face. The complex lines in his forehead were twisted and knotted tightly together. He had got half-way through his solitary re-past, eating little, but drinking a good deal, in a feverish way, when the door opened, and his wife came into the room.

She was in full evening costume. A rich silk dress, of the brownish-golden hue of ripe wheat, enhanced the clear puleness of her skin. The dress was simple and ample, as became the majestic figure of its wearer. Its only ornament was a trimming of white lace round the sheres and becom; but this lace was antique, and of the costliest. In her dark wavy hair she had placed a branch of crimson pomegranate flow-ers, and on one marble white arm she wore a broad thick band of gold with a me opal set in the midst of it.
"Ah, you are there, Sidney!" she said, not looking at him though, but walking straight ward a large mirror over the mantle-piece. stood there, with her back to her busband, con-templating her own image very calmly.

ed his eyes and stealthily looked at her in the glass. "Where are you going?" he asked, surlily.

"You told me nothing about going out this evening.

"Oh yes, I did; but I might as well have omitted it. You never remember. I am going to the opera. Patti sings the 'Sounambula,' and the Maxwells made me promise not to fail

Mr. Frost sat looking at his beautiful wife with a strange expression of mingled discon-test and admiration.

Suddenly his face changed. he said, sharply. She obeyed leisurely.

"Let me look. Is it possible? Yes; you have—you have—taken that bracelet, despite all I said to you!"

"I told you when the man showed it to me that I must have it. It is the finest single opal

Mr. Frost dashed his hand down on the table | with an cath. "By Heaven, it is too bad!" he cried. "It is incredible! Georgina, I wonder, upon my soul I do, that you can have the heart epen my soul I do, that you can have the heart to go on in this way!"

Mrs. Prost looked down at him with a slow Jano-like turst of the threat.

"Don't be silly, Sidney. What is the use of your getting into peassons? Nothing would go either with this dress or my black velvet but opals. And this matches the exercings so well."

"And how, pray, do you imagine I am to pay for this jewel? Mrs. Frost shrugged her shoulders.

"How should I know? How you are to pay for it is your business, not mine! When you married me I suppose you were aware of the responsibilities you were undertaking! Oh, is the carriage there? Tell him to drive first to Lady Maxwell's, Edward. And—ask my maid for the ermine clock to put into the carriage in for the ermine closk to put into the carriage in case I should want it coming home."

He walked angrily up and down the room after she was gone; breaking out now and again into half-uttered sentences and ejaculations.

"I will not stand it; I will not. Heavens ad earth! To think of her coolly taking that opal, whose fellow it would be difficult to find in London, as though it were a glass head! She cares no more for me than for the stone pavement she sets her dainty foot on! I am a money-That's all ! But it shall come to end. I can not live so, I will not, Why should I grind my very soal out for a woman with no vestige of heart or feeling? I'll send her to live in the country. I'll sell bor wandrobe by section. Milliom wouldn't suffice for her extravagance. I have told her that I don't know which way to turn for money—and people think me a rich man! Well they may when they see me a rich man! my wife decked out in finery worth a king's ran-som. Good Henvens, that opal! To-morrow I will make the revoler take it back. She shall not keep it. It is too monstrous.

The next day Mrs. Frost, who occasionally made small concessions that cost her nothing, when it became apparent that she had rouse her husband's indignation too far, offered to drive with him to Bedford Square and call on drove along eastward - Mrs. Frost hat they drive along aggressia — Mrs. Frost looking very levely in a meeting toilet, for the perfection of whose freshness and simplicity the had paid more to a fashionable milliner than Mrs. Loregrove had ever expended on her finest gown—Mr. Frost I ctured his wife as to the necessity of comporting herself with civility toward

Mrs. Lovegrove.

I'm sure I don't know how to conciliate Mrs. Lovegrove, "said the fair Georgina. "Unless, perhaps, by rigging myself out from top to toe in Tottenham Court Road, and arriving at her door in the dirtiest backney can to be found! I really would have borrowed Davis's bornes and shawl to come in, if I had thought of it: only, to be sure. Davis is always three months never the sure, Davis is always three months shion than the Lovegrove women!' Davis was Mrs. Frost's cook.

Mr. Frost went into his office, saying that he would open his letters and go up to pay his respects to Mrs. Lovegrove by-and-by. His wife was ushered into the drawing-room, and waited while her card was carried to the mistress of the

Mrs. Lovegrove's drawing-room was hot. The was a large fire in the grate. There was a stuffy fragrance in the room from two enormous jars of pot-pourri which stood one on each side of a gilt cabinet. On the cabinet were ranged what Mrs. Lovegrove called her nick-nacks: namely, a huge dish of wax fruit under a glass cover; some Dresden figures; a Chinese puzzle; a Swiss chalet in card-board; two or three cups of eggrian ware, representing a Spanish lady clothed entirely in lace flounces, and with a feet about the same length as her nose; and a blue satish how marked with white head; worked with white beads.

The furniture was drab, with red satin stripe The furniture was drab, with red satin stripes in it. The curtains were the same. The curpet was also drab, with splotchy cabbage-roses strewn over it. On the mantle-piece stood a French clock, flanked on either side by a cut-glass lustre whose pendent prisms jingled and shook whenever a foot crossed the floor. There was a grand pinne in the room, dark and shining. There was also a barp, muffled up in brown holland. On the round cantre-table, covered by a red vel-On the round centre-table, covered by a red vel-ves cloth, were disposed with geometrical accu-racy several books. The middle of the table was rupied by a silver card-basket full of visiting-ds, on the top of which was conspicuously displayed a large ticket, setting forth that General Sir Thomas Dobbs and Lady Dobbs requested the honor of Mrs. and the Misses Lovegrove's company at a ball, bearing date two months back.

Mrs. Frost waited. The house was very still. Mrs. Frost waited. The house was ver She peeped into one book after the other. tograph albums. A third was a little well postograph and May verses in celebration of the mouth of May, which the Pussyire writer looked on exclusively from an occlesiastical point of view, and styled the "Mouth of Mary." There was likewise a Peerage, bound in red and go Mrs. Frost waited. She had enscored her-self in a comfortable corner of the couch. It Mrs. Frost waited. was hot, and the end of it was that Mrs. Prost fell into a doze, and woke with a sensation of being looked at.

Mrs. Lovegrove stood opposite to her. Mrs. Lovegrove had a pale, smooth fa

Company of the second a, smooth face, with pale, smooth, and very high forehead, features were not uncomely. Her eyes must have been pretty in youth; well-shaped, and of a soft dove-gray. Her teeth were still sound and white. They projected a little, and her upper lip was too long for beauty. It gave one the idea, when her mouth was closed, of being I stretched too tightly, in the effort to cover the long, prominent teeth.

Mrs. Lovegrove was lean and flat-chested.

She were a lead-colored merino gown, and a small cap with lead-colored satio ribbons. She affected drubs, and browns, and leaden or iron grays in her own attire. She said they were

How do you do, Mrs. Frost? I am so shocked to have kept you waiting. Your visits are such unexpected and rure favors that if I could have come instantly I would."

Mrs. Lovegrove spoke in a very low voice, and with pedantic distinctness.

"I almost fell asleep, I think," said Mrs. Frost, with much nonchalance. "You were—excuse me—snoring," replied

Mrs. Lovegrove, in her gentlest and most dis-

Mrs. Frost did not at all like to be sold that she had been snoring. But as this is an accu-sation against which we are all helpless, seeing that in the nature of things we can not be con scious whether we have smored or not, she did not attempt to rebut it.

not attempt to rebut it.
"Don't you think you keep your room rath-ar-stuffy?" she said, wrinkling up her hand-

Stuffy? If I apprehend your meaning, I think act. You see, you live in one of those new lath-and-plaster houses that really are barereather-proof. No doubt you find a pensating advantage in doing so. But I confess that for myself I prefer a solid, well-built, old-fashioned mansion. How is Mr. Frost?"

"Quise well, I believe. He said he was com ing to wait upon you by-and by."

"Is be quite well? Now is he? I am rejoiced to hear it. Mr. Lovegrove has been thinking him looking rather fagged of late. We live in high-pressure times. The friction on a railway, for instance, is so much more tremendous than the friction on an old mail-coach road. And yet it may be doubted— Is any thing the matter?"

"No: I-I-only want to sneeps. How very sungent the stuff in those jars is! You don't at souff in it, do you?"
"Souff! My dear Mrs. Frost—!"

"I feel as though I had some grains of snuff up my soes."

"My pot-pourri is prepared after a recipe that was always used down at our family place."

"Ah!" said Mrs. Frost, languidly. "I daru say it is very nice when one gets a little—sea-sound to it."

Then Mrs. Lovegrove led the conversation into her own ground. She discoursed of ritualism, of stoles, tapers, and censers. After these subjects came the British aristocracy, collectively and individually. Thence, she aild easily to the immense number of invitations her girls had received this season. Finally, reserving her bonne bouche to the last, she spoke of their dear young friend, Miss Desmond, Lady Tallis-Gale's mice, and hereaff connected with some of our most on-reelf connected with some of our m cient families.

"I am no leveler," said Mrs. Lovegrove, in a kind of self-denying way (as who should say, "If I did but choose it, I could lay existing institutions as flat as a bowling-green!"). "No. I approve and reverence the distinctions of rank berth. You may tell me that those are inborn prejudices—"

"Not at all," drawled Mrs. Frost, checking,

"Not at all," drawing Mrs. Freet, enecang, but not concealing, a yawn,
"Well, I will not deny that there may be some tinge of early prejudice. But when we lived at our family place pape always impressed on us to pay the same respect to those few persons who were above us in rank as we exacted from who were above us in rank as we exacted from our inferiors. Pape was a stanch Tory of the old school. But he had no arrogant pride of birth. He used to say— Ah, here is Mr. Frost. How do you do, Mr. Frost? We were speaking—or, at least, I was speaking, for I do not think your wife knows her—of our dear Miss Desmond. You can not think how the girls have taken to her. She is not here half as much as we could wish, though. For her attendance on Lady Tallis is most unremitting. But we feel toward her as a daughter. As to But we feel toward her as a daughter. As to my son Augustas—! Well, do you know, I scarcely know how to describe the impression the sweet girl has made on Augustus!"

Mr. Frost smiled very graciously, and seemed much interested.

"We are going to have—I won't call it a par-ty—a little social gathering, to which we have persuaded Miss Desmond to come, on the Feast of Saint Werewelf—that is," added Mrs. Love-grove, with a melancholy smile, "near Saturday, I days are you are not familiar with the mist." lare say you are not days? I don't know any thing about Saint Werewulf," said Mrs. Frost.

wulf," said Mrs.-Frost.

"We shall have music, and endeavor to be innocestly gay: none the less gay for having attended a matin service in honor of the saint. Our religion is not gloomy and mirth-fortidding. If you and Mrs. Frost would join us we should be unaffectedly glad."

Mrs. Frost had opened her mouth to decline

Mrs. Frost had opened her mouth to decline the invitation, but her husband interposed. You are extremely good, Mrs. Lovegrove, id. "We will come with pleasure."

"Why in the world did you say yes to that oppressive woman's invitation, Sidney?" asked his wife, as he was handing her into the carhis wife, as he was handing her into the car-riage. "I sha'n't go. She really is too much. If you had heard the stuff she was talking about her family place! And she devoured me with her fishy eves. If I had not had the conscious-ness of being thoroughly well dressed she would have given me a nervous fever."

"Well, that consciousness must support you on Saturday next. For we must go. And-listen, Georgy-make yourself pleasant to Miss Desmond." HOME AND FOREIGN GOSSIP.

Av the present time American silk fabrics are co peting successfully with goods imported from Euro-pean countries. American manufacturers are as eppeace consides. American manufacturers are as enterprising and ingenious as those of any other country, the multer p-tree will thrive in any temperate climate, and experiments perce that the silk-word can be reared successfully in many of the States.
Hence, silk cultivation and silk manufacture promise to be most important temoches of American industry.
The climate of California is particularly favorable to the culture of silk, and the business is now in a highly prosperous condition. In France and Italy the silkworm has been affected by a fatal disease which has interfered seriously with rearing them; but on the Pacific coast the aggs are sound and the worms healthy.
At the last Paris Exposition the finest occome anhibited were from California of the second anhibited were from California. Orders have been sent from Except to California silk growers for all the eggs they can produce for years to come, so perfectly estifactory have been the samples aiready sent. Yet, as soon as there are exough manufactories established in this country there will be less temptation to expert them.

Not long sen it was stated that an American rear

Not long ago it was stated that an American man-nfacturer made a lot of ribbons, and purchased a right to use an importer's label—such things, unfortunate-ly, are frequent in trads. One half of the ribbon be ly, are frequent in trade. One half of the ribbon he inbeled as of a foreign make, the other half as of American. In the anction-room the goods under foreign labels brought 17 per cent, more than the other half? Nevertheless sewing-elik, triumlings, and ribbons of home manufacture have almost driven foreign importations in these goods from the market: and the weaving of broad silks has become a specialty, to which many manufacturers are devoting their carnest attention. According to statements made in a recent address at the American Institute Pair, the greatest silk centre in this country is Paterson, New Jersey, sidiness at the American Estitute Fair, the greatest cilk centre is this country is Paterson, New Jersey, where there are now sixteen factories, remning IR, 600 aphiddes, preparing silk threads—that is, throwing silk, mostly for waving. The hands employed are 3500; the wages paid per annum, $000,000; the capital invested, $6,000,000. In Pallisdelphia there are twenty factories, employing 400 men and 1500 girls and women, whose wages amount annually to $000,000. In the city of New York there are 5000 to 8000 hands ompleyed in making trimmings, weaving ribbons and dress goods, the invested capital being $5,800,000. Besides these there are factories in Youkers, Hobokes, Scheharie, and other places in New York State; at Hartford, Manchester, Manafield, Willimantic, in Connecticut; at Northampton, Florence, Williamburg, Cantos, in Massachnetts, as well as in other places. Thousands of yards of gros grain silks are manufactured every week of excellent quality, some of which can scarcely be distinguished from the best imported articles. re in this country is Paterson, New Jersey, orted articles.

An excellent thing is it for young ladies to use their influence against tobacco but it is well to be sure that it is tobacco, and not something more valuable, that one is opposing. A young lady in a certain town in this State refused to marry her sweet-heart unless is stopped thewing tobacco. He agreed, and the wedding came off in due season. Returning from the bridal tear in the cars, the other day, he pulled out a roll of semesting from his pocket. She thought it was tobacco, clutched it, and threw it out of the window. Alse! It was a roll of money, $2200 in all, and it has not here recovered. and it has not been recovered.

Seechi, the Roman astronomer, thicks he has tected water in the neighborhood of the spots on t enn : and M. Japasen writes from India to the Paris am; and M. Jansson writes from India to the Paris Academy to say that he has detected aqueous vapor in some stellar atmospheres; that is to say, be has found certain says of light weating in certain stars, and the missing beams are just those which he knows water intercepts. The stars which arhibit this peculiarity are the red tlery-looking lights.

this peculiarity are the red dery-looking lights.

The marriage of the eldest daughter of Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, made quite a stir recently among the quiet people of Philadelphia. Many notable guests were present, among whom were President and Mrs. Grant. The church was filled with the chosen witnesses of the ceremony, and the adjacent streets decestly througed with those who longed to see all that was visible outside. The bride, though elegantly, was mosteristically dressed in white corded sife, the skirt perfectly plain, and terminating in an elaborate train. The waist was made high in the neck, with ellik buttons to the threat, and trimmed with point lace. The The wast was made high in the neck, with silk but-tons to the threat, and trimmed with point hac. The steeres were long and plain. Her rich brown hair was braided and secured with wreaths of erange blossoms, with an elegant tulle well depending. She also wore a brantiful set of posris. The bridensids were white bries, with high occasges. Mrs. Grant were an ele-gant blue silk, also made high in the neck—from which facts we are happy to infer that an appro-priate style of cocage is to be fashionable this sea-son. The array of processes enhibited at the recordion m. The array of presents exhibited at the reception as magnificent. Colonel James R. Weaver was the fortunate bridgeroom; and the newly-married couple have sailed in the Pereirs, as route for Italy.

A Ettle girl or five years old was exhibited as an "infant predigy" not long ago in a large music-hall in England. It was asserted that she was acquainted with several languages, could represent three hundred characters, and repeat an indefinite number of post-ical quotations. The poor victim was forced through her performances to the admiration of a num ce of intelligent Britone, who, probably, never thought to what cruelty they were thus accessory. Similar exhibitions have been made in this country. The forcing system to which many children, not "prodigies," are sarrificed, is a great and growing orth. To cram tender intellects with knowledge for To cram tender intellects with knowledge for w at examinations, for the sake of competition and for pride's sake, is both folly and wickedness.

An English journal states that after the death of Byron, at Mesoloughi, in 1972, his body was em-halmed and sent to England, but the heart was begged and obtained by the Greeks, who inclosed it in a sit-ver case. Four years later, after the protracted slegg-of Mesoloughi, a sallying party, carrying the relic with them, out a way with great sacrifice of life through the

A trip around the world can now be made in eighty A rep arceles the west can own so made a edge, though little pleasure could be experienced in such a heaty tour. A year is certainly little time enough to devote in such a journay. It is recommended that the traveler plan to be in Central and Bouthern China in November, India in December and January, Egypt in February, and Pulestine and Sysin.

In March and April, which will bring him to Europe, to travel northward up the Dambe, or to Greece and Italy, with advancing seasons. By a diligent study of routes, the trip can be made with ease and comfort, and enough seen to give one comprehensive ideas of the other side of the globs. A low estimate of the probable amount required for fares, recknosed at gold rates, is $100. Throughout the whole journey them are only a bundred and furty miles (the distance between Allabahed and Bunbary) in which steam can not be used in assisting the transport; not a railway is being rapidly constructed which will soon join bases piaces, and then, truly, steam will have put a girdle in March and April, which will bring him to Europe and then, truly, steam will have put a girdle

The "Aurilave" is a povel invention recently patened, and will prove a useful addition to the toilet. Its object is to cleanse the ear pleasantly and safely, with-out the use of the hard instruments hitherto employed for that purpose. It is especially adapted to the nursery, and is said to be beneficial in agral affections.

A clergyman's daughter has recently obtained the royal license to publish a weekly newspaper in Nortellia, Sweden. Her name is Miss Frederika Hallin. The Swedish editmus "can not only write her article, but set it up and work it off; and is, in fact, the practical directross of these operations. She learned printing from a certain Miss Soderquist, who is now in ing from a certain Mass Boderquist, who is now in business as a printer in Stockholm, under her married natso of Fran Flodia." Miss Stderquist once edited and published a brace of papers in Arboga. Remov-ing to Stockholm, Miss is set up a large printing-office, the present first Flodia, every man of which was a we-man. In addition to these offices there are two others in Sweden carried on exclusively by famaics Hadiksvel and one in Christianscad.

Armand de Beaupré-whose real name la Gipon, Armand de Beaupré—whose real name le Gipcu, only this was not emphonious enough for his purposes—is a French journalist of singular ability and reputation. He had, when younger, no special fondness for literature, but he was fond of spending money, and he wrote to fill his pocket. One day an article he had written was accepted by a promisent journal. It was an article on the Deluge, and it so much astonished the editor that he printed it out of curiodity to see what the public would say. The public were see what the public would say. The public were snazed, and woudered what it meant; whereupen the oditor sent for Glpon and asked him whether he was in the habit of looking at every thing else from the same curious aspect as the Delings. Gipon an-swered that to the best of his belief the views he took of the Delines were those which he took of most. took of the Deinge were those which he took of most other things in life, and he produced an article on the art of government. The editor took powersion of this decument, which was even more astenishing this decining, which was even shore ascensing than the paper on the Deluga, and from that day young Gipon, with his name revised and edited as Armand de Beaupet, took runk in Paris as "un original." When Armand de Beaupet is at a loss for a subject be tolis his readers how he amuses himself of an evening, where he lives, who are his friends, and the like. Burnetimes he arrives at the office of and the like. Sometimes he arrives at the office of the paper in a state of excitement verging on fary. He has been overcharged by a cabman, dunned by his tallon, or misditted by his shoemaker. Down he sits with his eye faming, and writes an article in three columns, which is intended to strike horror into the sout of the offender. The editor node ap-resident at the article. Facture he would exist. min the sout of the offender. The editor node ap-provingly at the article. Perhaps he would rather have had something see, but he knows his French public, and is quite aware that an article directed against a bestmaker, and recounting the trials of a journalist, will always please them better than a paper on the differential calculus or the international wometany commission.

Sixton bundred and thirty-five soldiers have been admitted to the Royal Victoria Hospital within the last six years as undit for duty from disease of the heart. It is tobwed that this prevalence of heart disease is caused by the fashion of accordance, and that it is incurable. A new system of according soldiers would prevent this secrifice of Ilfa.

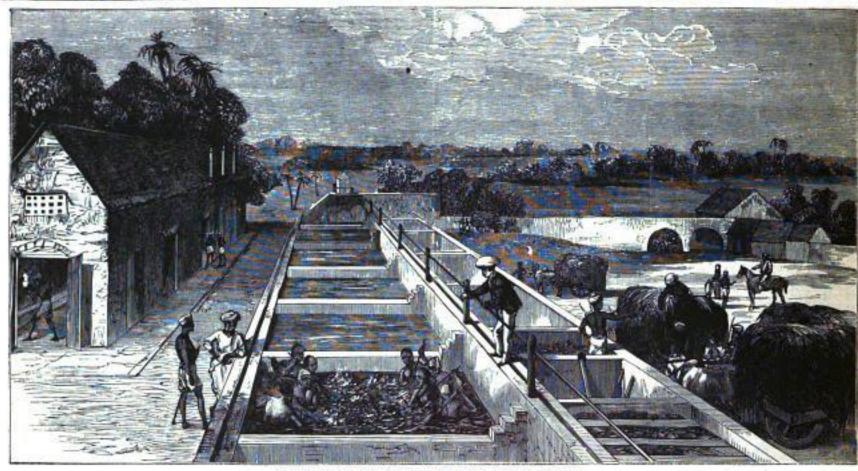

Lovers of coffee will not thank a French physiciogist for discovering—as he believes—that the coffeige of coffee is twice as poisonous as the fheire of tea. These, he states, will only produce spasms and para-justs. Well, gradually most bvery thing we sat or drink will be discovered to be more or less poisonous, ous, and then it will only be a choice between evils.

Sir Sannel Baker, the well-known Egyptian ex-piorer, writes from Egypt that his fotilla of steam-ers and boats is making way up the Nile, bound for Khartoum; that he has eight bundred camels waiting to carry the iron steamers sent out from En-gland across the Treort to their destination, where the well is not steamers and the property of the second of the secon they will be put injether and employed in the naviga-tion of the Albert Nyanza and other lakes; and that his own route will be from Sees to Sonakim, thence with camels to Berber on the Nile, and so up the river to the rendezvous at Khartoum. Trading in some places, territying in others, and exploring wherever it can, this will be a noteworthy expedition, full of promise for the Hoyal Geographical Society, if not for the Panha of Record. not for the Pashs of Egypt.

Some of the latest applications of electricity Some of the latest approximate or escentialy are worth budgeting, at instances of our resoliness to ride a willing horse to death. We shall have likeral-ly, if not logically, ridden electricity to death when we apply it to destroy life; and the suggestion of this manufacture has results been made, both accinet man and beast. Instead of the barbarous system of banging offenders, a humane philosopher proposes that we should give them an electrical shock, powerful enough to kill without pain. There is no denying the fitness of this system for a scientific nation. But if the law will not take beense life by lightning, it might compet cattle slaying thereby; a battery and coil would be far more effective, and far less creek tools than the pole-ax or the sticking-knife. The angler would con-sider his occupation gots if he had to the with an electric line and a torpos-producing balt; yet the whaler has a notion that he can catch his monetons upon an analogous plan. From experiments upon lesser fish, it is anticipated that a whole would be supprised by such a shock as could be given from a moderate battery carried in a boat, with the sid of harpoon with double points connected to the battery by conducting wires. The harpon, upon striking the schole would exceed to the chartery by conducting wires. The har-the whale, would complete a cirpoints, and electrify the fish to __por point, thus exa-dering his capture easy : at least, so the inventor says.

A disaffected wife has j: cloped from Seratoga. She left the following specie for her bushead's con-solution, which is indeed a fiterary model, to say the least: "My dearest yes have not carried as much money as you ought to said when I ask you for it you always say you also got any Good by dearest for this time."

INDIGO MANUFACTURE IN TIRHOOT, LOWER BENGAL.

INDIGO CULTURE IN BENGAL.

NDIGO CULTURE IN BENGAL.

Duarso the last three years the planters in the districts of Tirhoot and Chumparun have experienced much inconsenience, and often great loss, as well as trouble, from the disaffection of the "ryots," or native peasantry. There are frequent disputes about the terms of the agreements made between these people and the capitalists who advance the money for the sowing of indigo. This question in Bengal is almost as difficult as the land-tenure question in Ireland. The manufacture of indigo, or mahai, as it is called in the vurnacular, commences about the first week in July, when the indigo is cut and carted into the factory. It is then steeped in wats from twelve to sixteen hours, the time which is calculated to be sufficient to extract the virtueis calculated to be sufficient to extract the virtue of the plant. The water in which the plant has been steeped is next let off into a lower or "beat-ing vat," where it is left to settle. The vat is now beaten off by eight or ten men, as shown in the illustration. The process of "beating off"

(by which the grain is separated from the water) having been completed, the vat is left a sufficient time for the grain to sink to the bottom, when the water is gradually drawn off. The indigo settled at the bottom of the vat is transported to the "boiling-house," whence it is poured on to what is called the "table," where it is well strained; it is carried thence and placed in pressure of about the fortunes. All notices having strained; it is carried thence and placed in press-es of about six feet square. All moisture having been extracted, the indigo is cut into square cakes and placed on shelves to dry, and at the end of the season it is packed and sent down to Calcutta for sale. The life of a resident indigo planter or manager is full of toil and anxiety; and he is frequently obliged to appeal to the magistrates to enforce the ryots' contracts.

SMOKERS ON THE HIMALAYAS.

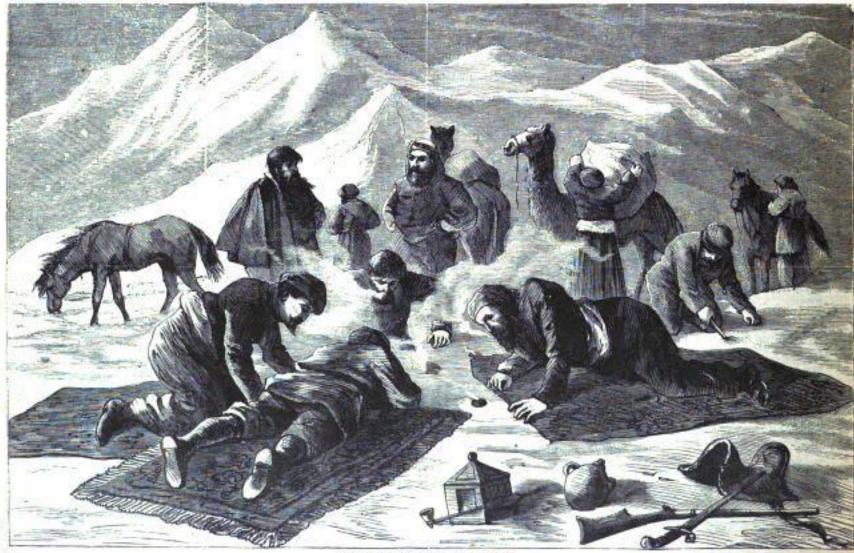

Various are the instruments that have been devised for smoking tobacco; some of them plain, others expensive and elaborate. But perhaps the most novel and curious method of enjoying the narcotic plant is that illustrated in our en-graving on this page. This method is in vogue among travelers on the high table-land of Thibet and in the Himself of the high table-land of Thibet among travelers on the high table-land of Thibet and in the Himalaya Mountains. M. R. vox Schlaghtweit, the famous German traveler, gives the following description: "The inhabitants of the lower plains, when traveling in the mountains, have a peculiar mode of smoking. They can not indulge in this kind of luxury in their own hourse, but have to postpone it till they come to the regions where a solid and compact glacier may be found. Then they proceed to dig or cut a hole three-fourths of an inch deep in the solid block, and at a distance of a few inches dig or cut a hole three-fourths of an meh deep in the solid block, and at a distance of a few incloss other holes one inch deep around, so that the largest hole is in the centre, and connect these by introducing a piece of iron wire underneath the ice, forming in this way so many funnels communicating with the hole in the centre. This is filled with tobacco and covered with ignited coals, and the smokers, lying down on blankets to keep off the cold, adapt the'r mouths to the various holes. In a short time they send forth enormous clouds of smoke, which, arriving ice cold, is charged with all the narcotic substance of the plant. The solidity of the glacier is such that only very little is melted, just enough to farmish a certain amount of humidity to the burning tobacco." M. Schlaghywest assures us that all other modes of smoking are not worth mentioning in comparison with this, and that no instrument of any kind, invented to refine and enjoy the tobacco-smoke, can supply the place of the primitive but ingenious method adopted by the Penjab and Thibet natives.

"RUINED!"

THE drawing by Mr. C. G. BURH, from which our illustration on page 729 has been engraved, is a very pathetic illustration of the effect of extravagance or of speculation. How many such scenes as our artist has depicted were enacted just after the recent bursting of Wall Street bub-

SMOKERS ON THE HIMALAYAS.

THE NEW STEAMSHIP "CITY OF BRUSSELS."-[SKETCHED BY THEO. R. DAVIS.]

bles! It is reported that the terrible disappoint-ment experienced by daring gold brokers on the 24th of September has driven five or six of them to the insane asylum; but how many who were not made mail were driven to despair! How many, with their families, were utterly and irre-trievably "ruined!"

THE "CITY OF BRUSSELS," JAMES KENNEDY, COMMANDER.

Tura magnificent new iron steamship belo to the Inman line. It is truly said of her that "she beats the Cunarders," if we take her last trip as a test of her powers. She arrived in this port on the morning of October 23, her voyage across the Atlantic having occupied eight days and twelve hours, including three stoppages, caused by disarrangement of machinery.

The City of Brussels was built on the Clyde, in Scotland. Her length is 405 feet; length of keel, 375 feet; beam, 40‡ feet; and depth of hold, 28 feet. Her engines are of 600 horsepower, and her registered tonnage is 3000. She can comfortably provide for nearly one thousand passengers.

passengers.

This steamship is fitted up in superb style. Her cabin is of oak, elaborately finished, and inlaid with gold; the seats are cushioned with plush, and the floor is carpeted with the finest of Brussels. The ladies cabin is finished and furnished in a style even more superb. She makes 15 knots with case, and 164 with fair steaming. For five consecutive days she made from 340 to 358 miles without sail.

GUEBRES WORSHIPING THE SUN.

GUEBRES WORSHIPING THE SUN.

Our illustration on this page recalls one of the earliest forms of nature-worship—one, however, which is still maintained among the Cuebres of Persia and the Parsees of India. The term Guebre was applied by the Mohammedan conquerors of Persia to the disciples of ZOROASTER in that country. The Guebres now number about 100,000, dwelling chiefly in the city of Yead and the province of Korman. They are ignorant but industrious, and they bear a high character for virtue in comparison with other Persians. The persecutions which they suffered after the Mohammedan conquest drove a large number of them into India, where they are known as Parsees. The latter are very much respected by Europeans, are the richest and most influential of citizens in Bombay, and form about 115,000 of the population of Bombay and Colabba Islands. They do not worship idols, but revere the sun (and fire, as its symbol) as an emblem of the glory of the one Supreme Deity. They often build their temples over subterranean fires, one of their holiest spots being at Bakoo, on the shores of the Caspian Sea, where for ages, without interruption, flames have issued from calcareous rocks. The Parsees place their dead upon a latticed frame-work on the top of lofty towers. The birds of the air devour the coepses, and the bones fall understeath through the grating.

Every form of polytheism had its origin in nature-worship. Thus the ancient Norsemen identified the storm with Odin, the thunder with Thor, and flame with Loki. In ancient Gaul and Britsin pillars were raised to the sun.

GUEBRES PAYING HOMAGE TO THE SETTING SUN.

BENEFACTIONS.

Tun benefactor always retains some affection for the person whom he has benefited. No extent of ingratitude succeeds in utterly effacing this kindly feeling on the part of the benefactor.

Now, no doubt, a Swift or a Rochefoucauld would, in his cynical way, give a very unpleasant reading of this patent fact. But, in reality, it is a beautiful arrangement of Nature, or, as it is a beautiful arrangement of Nature, or, as we ought to say, of Providence. The benefic-tor, just in proportion as he has done his work lovingly, has his "exceeding great reward" in an increase of lovingness; for there can not be a doubt that it is a far happier, and, if we may say so, a more divine thing, to love than to be loved.

TWO SIDES TO A STORY.

L-OUR SIDE.

"War you naughty, ugly, vicious thing!" screamed nurse, "you've pulled the dishes all off the table. What will your mummer say? off the table. What will your nummer say? There—take that! [a shake]; and that!! [a siap]. Now, go away! You are always up to some mixhoef, and not as high as the table yet.

"Susan! what's the matter? Charlie, dear! what have you done? Come to me. There, don't cry; it's all over now. Susan, bow did he do it's the matter?

do it?"
"Yes, more, he did it; he's always up to some mischief; and it isn't my foult the best china is broke and the silver coffee-pot banged in just like a bandbox that has been set on; and the coffee all over the floor, with the salt and suger too. See, mum, what he's done, and I a watchin' of him all the time and never took. my eyes off him, and then the minute my back was turned, up he goes and kitches the table-cloth, and off it comes, and all your nice set with it, and six pieces broke, and all done a pur-pose; and he's always a making of trouble when we don't know what he's about, nor can't goess, for he's as sly as a fox, and I knew he would, for I just took him away from there, and back he scrabbles again as fast as he could go, for he don't know no better, and he copie to be whipped and give him something to cry for, for I've told him not to touch the table a hundred times, and I'm glad of it, and I don't care if he is hort,

"Why, Susan! Susan!" "And I dow't, muen; and he might have been burned to death a minute ago, for I just took the chaling-dish off, and then what would have become of your new carpet? He will have his hand in every thing that's a going, and if there's a state of the cap's and he cap's nothing a going he'll set it a going, and he can't let it alone for the life of him, and he's just like let it alone for the life of him, and he's just like his father, blways trying experiments, and won-dering how things would be if they was a little different from what they is, and trying of it on, and making a muse like his father has in the laboratory, what I don't like to see nor smell of nor any body else, and nothing but mischief comes of it, and I n picking up after him all day long like a chip of the old block as he is; and it's a creat pit, too, for thems as buys the formiture great pity, too, for thems as buys the farmiture and clothes and things, only it's none of my bosiness, and I don't care, only my new dress is all greased with the cream; but never mind me while he's a crying, for he did it right afore me while he's a crying, for he did it right above my very face and eyes, quick as a flash the minute I told him to come awny."

"There, my dear—Charlie, my dear—hish: don't cry, my boy, any more. Wipe your tears. Let me wipe them, and let me look into your eyes and see how it was."

"Look into his eyes, mam—fiddle-sticks!—look into your coffee-pet and your chima and my deep and your expent. Look into his eyes! He dress and your carpet. Look into his eyes! He did it a purpose, I know he did. Look the other way, and give him a spanking, say I!"

"Susan, be quiet. You are engry. Go down

Exit Seam, purple with rago.

IL. THEIR SEDE.

"Now, Charlie, look up. You have done me mischief."

So Charlie's eyes looked up, half tearful, half fanny-impetetive, but sty and sorrageful—and this is what his mother read in them.

Yes, mamma, I did it. But did I do it? I slide's know I could do such things. What a terrible crash! I stood up by the chair, and I walked as straight as I could over to that great high table. I didn't tumble down once. The table was covered with bright things shining in my eyes like stars. I could not see what was on it because it is so high. Once I sat way up on top of a chair, and saw things, and had some of top of a chair, and saw things, and and some of them in my mouth with pape and you. And pape took my finger and wet it in my mouth, and touched it to something, and put my finger in my mouth again, and I ent my finger and it was sweet and good. So I wanted to see something; but my eyes only come up to the edge of the table. I stood on tip-toe, and I took hold of the dress of the table, just as I take hold of you dress when I want my dear mamma to take me up in her arms; but the table didn't take me up. So I pailed, just as I pull on yours when you don't attend; and the dress of the table legan to grow longer, and come off. I thought that was funny, so I pulled again, and it came off some and then I saw the things all began to come toward me and look at me over the edge of the table. They did not fly away as the pig-eons do when we go sear them, but they came right toward me. This is such a queer world. I don't understand it. So I pulled again, and the knives and forks came tumbling down on the floor, just as you showed me how to make my blocks tumble down with a crash. Then Susan said, "There now-you do that again, if you So I pulled again, and down came the cups and sancers, and then Susan gave a great scream and frightened me, and the dress of the table came all off, and all the smell came out of the coffee-pot, and I sat down backward into the butter-dish.

What makes things do so?

Morel. -To hear both sides is essential to instice. But when children are the culprits we never hear "the other side," unless Sympathy searches for it and interprets it; and even then the half is not told.

12 THE UNLOYED WIFE," a very beveriful lose story, from the pen of Heller Conwin France, has just been commenced in that excellent literary paper, the New York WERRLY.

Ir your hair is coming out or turning gray, do not murmer over a misdortune you can so easily evert. Aver's Harn Vison will remove the cause of your grief by restoring your hair to its natural color, and therewith your good looks and good nature.—(Com.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

